Kellie's Stories

Part: 1

Young Future

Kellie- 'I'm- a like a dart devil- I just keep sucking it.'

It was said, that my mom had shattered finger bones; that hands, but where clumsily, for a mishap she had or something. Ray- I have a six-pack it's under my bear belly. Kellie- Nice!

Once Hanna told me- that she likes me because I'm for real- Because I really feel things. But that's the whole problem: how much I feel things.

'Hello?' I call out, as soon as I'm inside Kellie's apartment- home. The front hall is dark and cool as always. Goosebumps prick up over my arms.

No matter how... many times, I come to Kellie's house I'm always shocked by the power of the air- conditioning, which hums somewhere- deep inside the walls. For a moment, I- just stand there, inhaling the clean smells of furniture polish and Windex and fresh-cut flowers.

Music is pulsing from- Hanna's room upstairs. I try to identify the song but can't make out any words, just bass throbbing through the floorboards.

Hey, girls want to do something nice for your boy, take the shampoo and get a glob and rub your boy's thing down with your hand and then it's clean if you think it's not showering it and shut up. Same the other way around there... Another typical Wednesday night. Ray a bit puzzled replied, 'Well you didn't say anything, besides, I thought you enjoyed it as much as I did.' I put her hand on his face, and told him she took it for love, she took it for him. I kissed her hand, told her thanks and asked her how long it took before sex stopped being painful?

I am smiling said- 'we screwed for two months straight before taking a day off, so I'll say I was broken in by then.'

Today, I was thinking of a girl asking men out. How does it feel to fall in love with your best friend and then face the fear of asking them out?

I fell in love with him, way before I even knew what had happened to me. Sometimes love sneaks up on a person like that, I guess. I had known him all my life and we had always been friends.

He had a sweet tooth like no one I had ever met. In so many ways, he was my exact opposite. He was tall, too handsome for his own good. Some might even go so far as to say beautiful. I, on the other hand, was average height with dirty blonde hair. I loved making ice cream and seeing the joy it brought to people's faces although I rarely ate it myself.

We were always close, so I was not sure how it happened. One day, he walked into my ice cream shop just like he had many others yet, this time was different. Suddenly, I found myself caring about what I looked like when he was around. Making sure that I had his favorite ice cream in stock, adding extra whipped cream to whatever he ordered.

Nevertheless, he never seemed to act differently about me. He gave me the same beautiful smile that he always did. The same silly jokes that made me laugh.

He knew that I hated my laugh. I always ended up snorting. He didn't care, he thought my snorting was hilarious.

That was our friendship though, it was as if the only change of emotion was coming from me. Last week he brought a date in- which was the worst. Knowing that while I loved him, he was there with someone else who was painful.

I did my very best not to show it, and I think that I was successful. After all, they left hand in hand. Luckily, being the best friend gives me insight into his relationships. Turns out, that she wasn't his type. I think the problem was, that she refused to sleep on her own side of the bed. Such a silly thing to break up with someone over. Though, I do understand a little. I am in fact quite attached to my side of the bed. Who am I kidding? It is really ridiculous, if you loved them it would be a problem that would work itself out.

His break up though is good news for me though. Today is going to be the day. Today, I am going to ask him out. I cannot stand to wait for him to see me that way any longer. Today, I will charge forward and make my own destiny and all that other silly crap we tell ourselves to help us be brave.

#- Hashtag: (power- girls)

Criss- Do you remember the time Karly peed her dress in class and got up and ran out of the room, to me it was cute, she was remembered for it.

Kellie- 'Ray?' I say as he walks in and sits at the table in the corner.

Awaiting as he always does for his daily scoop. 'Can we talk?' I ask, my hands shaking as I hid them behind my back.

'Sure, whatever you need. Are you having some sort of trouble? Is it a guy?' he asked with a wink. I thought about punching him then I thought about telling him to forget about it.

'Actually, yea Ray its guy trouble.' I told him. 'I'm really into a guy, that I have been friends with for quite some time. How do I get him to see me as more than just a close friend?' Maybe he will just figure it out I thought to myself.

He did, and I could see the shock on his face. 'You mean me?'

'Yes, it is you.' I put my eyes down to the floor. I examined the tile and every intricate detail as we both sat there in silence.

‘I would love to go out with you.’ He finally said with a voice that melted my heart like chocolate. I looked up and into his eyes.

He was not appeasing me, he looked pleased. As if, I had just given him a present. ‘I will take you out, and I will never let you go.

I thought this day would never come; I have waited for your love for a long time.’ I couldn’t believe what I was hearing, is it possible that I was the one that didn’t see him. Suddenly, I could see the world open before me. Him at my side for all the world to see forever.

As they were preparing to take a shower, I asked him to get on the bed and hold his legs back as far as he could. He only got them halfway. Annie laughed and told He the next time her legs are back to her head, he’ll have a new appreciation for her flexibility.

In the shower when Kellie was bathing

Ray and- and the other way around, just as she started to wash his dick, she and he play with it- like if he remembered a couple of weeks ago when she was a little tipsy from the wine and sucked him off? He went mmmm, I remember it well baby, you backed me all the way to the wall and you kept going, you were great.

‘And how long did you say your nuts were hurting from that blowjob’ she asked with sarcasm? About four days, why do you ask?

Annie stood up with his dick still in her hand and asked her if he wanted another one, a little better? He thought about the strong orgasm he had, he also thought about his nuts hurting for days. Now honey, the same old slow and deep one are just fine. Annie kissed him and said, ‘I thought so.’

This post is a follow up to ‘Her... Parents in the house, no sex for you’

Finally, Ray thought as he watched his parents plane taxi down the runway for takeoff, he can have some fun with his wife. Kellie could tell she was ready to release two days of backed-up semen and put a plan into motion to slow his role. On the walk to the parking lot, she asked him to let her drive home.

She looked a little puzzled and said 'Sure, that's fine, but why today, you always let me drive.' Annie smiled and started laughing saying 'I don't want you to get a speeding ticket or into an accident rushing home to plow me.'

He just looked at her before replying that he wasn't going to 'Plow' her as soon as they got home. Kellie said oh really, in that case, can we go to the mall? With a serious look on his face, he said- 'Sure honey, as soon as we check-in and out of that airport hotel.'

Her shaking her head as to say I can't believe you. 'Hey- you just said you didn't want to plow me, now you want to check into that hotel' I said while pointing at the hotel. He only said, 'I'm not going to jump you as soon as we get home, I'm going to play with my favorite parts of you first.'

As soon as he said it, he knew he had made a mistake. I stopped walking towards the car and repeated Ray saying- 'favorite parts!' he only said- 'Yeah, my favorite parts.' She said, 'ok Mister, by the time we get home before you get any of my parts, I want to know your top two favorite parts, ok.'

On the drive home, he can't think straight, backed up semen have that effect on men. His thoughts were to take I parts piece by piece and log them from one to whatever. Of course, she was first, but is it his number one? Where does her breast fall on his favorite list? What about her big ass he's always playing with!

Oh, freak'n shit, what have I gotten into he thought. He was so deep in his thoughts when he finally looked at Annie, he could swear she was silently laughing at him.

When they got home, she asked he 'are you ready to tell me your favorite two parts of my body, and don't get cute by saying one is my brain, only what you can see and feel honey.' As I started to talk, he told him to hold that thought, she'll be right back and went upstairs.

I went to the kitchen to get a beer and rethink his statement about wanting to play with his favorite parts of her body.

I didn't hear her come downstairs- but when he looked up, I was standing at the bottom of the stairs butt naked. With his mouth open and not a word coming out, this happens often, I said- ‘Come show me your top two parts- honey.’ As he walked towards me- he thought about telling her he couldn’t choose. Then it came to him in a flash. Teddy grabbed a hand full of Annie’s hair and bent her head back saying this is number one, with his other hand he grabbed a hand full of her plentiful hip and said this is number two. He kissed her deeply, so deeply that

Annie pushed him away and said, ‘I’m ready to be plowed.’

At the top of the stairs, I pause. Hanna’s bedroom door is closed. I definitely don’t recognize the song she’s playing- or blasting, really, so loud I have to remind myself that Hanna’s house is shielded on four sides by trees and lawn, and no one will sic the regulators on her.

It’s not like- any music I have ever heard. It’s a shrieky, shrill, fierce kind of music: I can’t even tell whether the singer is male or female. Little fingers of electricity creep up my spine, a feeling I used to have when I was a tiny child when I would creep into the kitchen; and try to sneak an extra cookie from the pantry- the feeling right before the creak, and squeak of my mom’s footsteps in the kitchen behind me, when I would whirl around, my hands and face coated in crumbs, guilty.

I shake off the feeling and push open Hanna’s door. She’s sitting at her computer, feet propped up on her desk, bobbing her head and tapping out a rhythm on her thighs. As soon as she sees me, she swings forward and hits a key on her keyboard. The music cuts off instantly. Strangely, the silence that follows seems just as loud.

She flips her hair over one shoulder and scoots away from the desk.

Something flickers over her face, an expression that passes too quickly for me to identify it. ‘Hi,’ she chirrups, a little too cheerfully.

‘Didn’t hear you come in.’ ‘I doubt you would have heard me break-in.’ I go over to her bed and collapse on top of it. Hana has a queen-size bed, with three down pillows. It’s like heaven.

‘What was that?’

‘What was what?’

She lifts her knees to her chest and swivels a full circle in her chair. I sit upon my elbows and watch her. Hanna only acts this dumb when she's hiding something.

'The music.' She still stares at me blankly. 'The song you were blasting when I came in. The one that almost burst my eardrums.'

'Oh- that.' Hanna blows her bangs out of her face. This is another one of her tells. Whenever she's bluffing in poker she won't stop fussing with her bangs.

'Just some new band I found online.' 'On LAMM?' I press.

Hana's music-obsessed, and used to spend hours surfing LAM, the Library of Authorized Music and Movies, when we were in middle school.

Hana looks away. 'Not exactly.'

'What do you mean, 'not exactly'?'

The intranet, like everything else in the United States, is controlled and monitored for our protection. All the websites, all the content, is written by government agencies, including the List of Authorized Entertainment, which gets updated biannually. Digital books go into the LAB, the Library of Approved Books, movies, and music go into LAM, and for a small fee, you can download them to your computer. If you have one, that is. I don't.

Hanna sighs, keeping her eyes averted.

Finally, she looks at me.

'Can you keep a secret?'

Sometimes when you oversleep, it comes back and bites you where it really hurts. She and he were up late last night playing around until four am, not having sex but playing the kissing game and fingering. Their kissing game is different than the one you may be thinking of.

It all started when he asked Annie when she bought the dress she had on today. I told him has a memory problem, it was him that picked the dress out of a display window on their vacation trip to Ohio. This started the 'I have a better memory than you.' Every time one couldn't remember something, the other gets ten kisses anywhere they wanted too.

All night long they were kissing thighs, tits, dicks, pussies and even butt cheeks. It went on so long, they both fell asleep without having sex. Although he believes he had three orgasms since she is being right so much, or the fact he lost so much and got to kiss very little of Annie's stuff.

I gave Ray one the fastest baths ever like us. They both laughed when- she said, 'I don't need to wash your dick; you haven't used it.' Ray said, 'I'm going use it tonight like never before.' Ray pointing to different parts of Annie's body said, 'I want a little bit of this, a little of that and I'm coming back and getting a little more this.' Annie said: 'Sure, promises, promises.' A quick kiss and they were off to work.

Ray had been in a meeting all day and had a message to call his wife when he got out, not an emergency just calls at his convenience.

When Ray called Annie, he found out his parents flew into town on a business trip and she invited them to stay at their house for a couple of days. Ray was surprised to hear that because his dad was adamant he wouldn't stay in the mother- in- law suite until they had a grandchild.

The first night after dinner and everyone retired for the evening, I was looking forward to a lot of action from her. It didn't take long for Ray to find out his plans weren't Kellie's plan. The pace was set in the shower, I gave Teddy a regular penis wash, and this is not what he's grown accustomed to.

He asked, 'what kind of a dick wash was that?' she said- 'your parents are in the house and you may not know it, but you're loud when you come.' Raymon said- 'they're on the other side of the house, downstairs, I'm not that loud.' Kellie reminded Teddy that on their honeymoon in the mountains when she gave him a wedding gift by putting her legs behind her head at the moment of his orgasm, he could be heard on the other side of the mountain, even the coyotes howl back.

Now I sit up all the way, scooting to the edge of the bed. I don't like the way; she's looking at me. I don't trust it.

'What is this about, Hanna?'

‘Can you keep a secret?’ She repeats... I think of standing with her in front of the labs on Evaluation Day, the sun beating down on us, the way she forced her mouth close to my ear to whisper about happiness, and unhappiness.

I’m suddenly afraid for her, of her.

But I nod and say, ‘Yeah, of course.’

‘Okay.’

She looks down, fiddles with the hem of her shorts for a second take a deep breath.

‘So last week I met this guy-’

‘What?’ I nearly fall off the bed.

‘Relax.’ She holds up a hand.

‘He’s cured, okay? He works for the city.

He’s a sensor, actually.’

My heartbeat slows, and I settle back against her pillows again. ‘Okay- So...?’

‘So,’ Hanna says, looking for Kellie drawing the word out, ‘he was waiting at the doctor is with me. When I went to have my PT, you know?’ Hanna sprained her ankle in the fall and still has to do physical therapy once a week, to keep it strong. ‘Plus, we started chatting.’

Ray and not one girl but two and she, also is okay with it, they say at school.

Part: 2

It took twenty minutes for my heart to get back to normal. By the time I had caught my breath, I Kellie was up, singing and cooking. I need to research why men orgasm zap them of all their energy and women are reenergized. What’s up with that! Sometimes I feel as if I need a five emergency after sex while Hanna wants to play a game of basketball. After sex, I can hit the gym and do a ten-mile run.

Did Mother Nature intentionally give our sperm power to energize women?

Is this payback for them getting pregnant?

Doing!

Man, please.

Doing! If we answered a question doing sex the answer will always be yes. I can't count how many men got engaged in doing sex.

After!

We all know immediately after men behave like aliens, we don't have a clue about anything on earth. I must stop typing now, here comes Hanna and Kellie, she told me when she and she got home from shopping she would give me a killer- blowjobs. Another thing, when we're horny, why do girls ask for things they know we would deny after sex! Women are like, 'I know he will not let me spend two hundred dollars on these shoes, so I'll ask him while I'm giving him a blowjob, I'd better record it also, he won't remember answering.' Are we men being used on a regular basis? I know I am. I can't count the times Annie has said, 'You told me I could.' I ask when I did, I say you could? Her answer is always the same, 'when we were in bed.' Can we men pass a law stating no questions before, doing or immediately after sex? Before, of course not, I would prefer not to have any roadblocks down my avenue.

She pauses to look up and see what she was looking for. I don't really see where the story is going as of now. Or how it relates to the music she was playing, so I just wait for her to go on, I see her there, can you?

To conclude she does... she is up there... 'Besides, I was telling him about boards, and how I really want to go to IUP, and he was- saying to me about his job, what he does; and such. You know... the day to day, things that need to be done...

He codes the online access limitations, so the general public can't just write whatever, or post things themselves, or write up false statistics or demagogic beliefs' - she puts this in quotes, rolling her eyes- 'and other stuff like that. He's, like, an intranet security guard.'

One of you may say, 'How could you forget about that!' But you need to understand the life and games I played as a very young man. I never told my best friend about this episode of my life. Not that it was bad, but it's hard to believe from two different points of view, not to mention how it all went down.

~*~

My freshman year in college was one of adventure and life lessons. Chuck and I behaved more like seniors than freshmen. We met two young ladies in our business management class. They were okay, but we weren't interested in the relationship type of friendship. Besides one, Sue was seeing someone in a nonseries way, meaning nothing was going on sexually, but they were going to the movies and doing other things just feeling each other out. The other one Tina, nice looking and very sexy to me was a loner. You know how you're saving for something and putting money in a jar. Well, I was doing that with Tina, only I wasn't putting the max in, just enough to keep me slowly going after my goal. I never went after Tina but I teetered on the brink of flirting without flirting, just stringing her along.

Hanna- no make- up blonde and pink lips, really short, looks a lot like Kellie just, washed out.

It was movie night at the 'Brick,' an outdoor spot we all gathered around daily. If you were looking for someone, go to the Brick. Chuck and I were just hanging out when Sue and Tina walked up. Tina walked up to me and asked what I was doing this weekend? I really didn't have anything going on, so I told her I'll just be hanging around looking for something. Tina laughed and asked, 'what does that mean?' I said, 'you know guy stuff.' Tina with her head down said, 'come to my apartment tomorrow night, Sue will be going out and you can show me guy stuff.' I just looked at her with that look of 'I'm not into games.' Tina looked up and told me not to eat, she'll have pizza and salad for us. I didn't even think about it, I just asked 'what time?'

I got back from the library about five Saturday evening. Hanna left me a note saying he wouldn't be back until Sunday evening. He got home late last night so I figured he put something on layaway and went to get it today. My date with Tina was at eight so I started to get ready, for what, I don't know. But as always, I'll be ready for anything.

I arrived at Hanna's about 7:50- 8 pm, she answered the door in those pj's women wear as pants. As I entered, Tina asked 'if I wanted to eat now or later?' I said 'you told me not to eat, so I'm ready now.' I must admit, Hanna set a very nice table. As we were eating Tina question me about what exactly 'hanging around looking for something' meant so she'll know what to expect. That comment made me think I'm getting laid tonight.

I told Hanna it meant whatever I fall into, it's something to do. Then Hanna dropped a bomb on me, she asked 'would you like to fall into me?' I've been here before, so I shot back, 'Are you serious, if you are, why me?' Tina smiled and said

'you don't want me?' Now all players should have a 'cool card to play.' I stood up and started to unbutton my shirt, Hanna shouted whoa, not in here. I just smiled.

I stood there with my hands still on the buttons of my shirt. Hanna walked over and grabbed my hand and led me to her bedroom. I not sure what I was accustomed to, then again Hanna's room smells like the perfume counter in a department store. She left the lights off, it took me a while to adjust to the darkness but the little I could make out of Ray's nakedness was truly exciting.

I was undressed in a little over 2.7 seconds. Not a word was spoken, I reached for her and started to kiss her passionately. Oh, I forgot, my penis was hard as steel before I got undressed. As I laid on back on her bed, she and Kellie grabbed my penis at their wanting and started to feel all around it, that didn't bother me, I'm going in. Then the first of two unbelievable hit me. I pushed me off and said, 'I can't do this.' Shocked I asked, 'did I get ahead of myself?'

I was quiet, not a word. I waited to hope to hear her say, okay I'm ready, but no, still nothing. Then finally she spoke, I'm a virgin and I can't handle you. I've had a few virgins before; I know how to handle them. I told I I'll be gentle, but she was adamant; no- I can't, I know I can't handle it, teach me to suck you,

I'll do that for you, but I can't handle your dick, I know I can't. Well, I'm on the brink now, it wouldn't take much to finish me off. I asked, 'if she was sure about this?' She told me never did it before, but teach me and I'll do it for you.

Well, it only took five minutes for my load to unload in a rookie mouth that wasn't bad, not bad at all. I didn't even spit it out, she swallows it and started to apologize to me. I said it is ok when you read some guy will be very lucky. Tina said I wanted that guy to be you so bad- but-but- I knew I couldn't handle it and I wanted to enjoy it as much as you.

Early the next morning I got a call from Sue, she wanted to know if she could come over, I told her about last night. I said sure, come on over. I knew I probably told her about not having sex, but did she say anything about the blowjob.

Sue got to my apartment in twenty minutes. She went right into what Hanna told her about not having sex because she didn't think she could handle it. But what blew my mind, she told her about sucking me off. She told me she needed to see what scared Tina so. I laughed and said I'm not going to show you, my privates, I'm not into playing like that.

Sue said who's playing, I want to experience it.

The second of two unbelievable. Tina- for Tinareria- as I laid in bed exhausted from what she just put me through and watching her get dressed. She must be in a joking mood, she told me our secret will never leave her and she'll leave the blowjob cumshot to me for now, that way she'll have something on her, but after you have sex with her, I will want to suck you off. I said- 'You think I have a chance with her?' She said... 'oh I'm going to push her to have sex with you even though she's right, you do carry a load down there, but I need to hear her talk about you so- I can relive this experience.'

She was right, two days later I told me to come over and finish what she stopped. Some years later and in passing she said 'no one has come close to your manliness. All I could think about was not getting that blowjob from Sue that she promised me. 'Okay,' I say again... I want to tell Hanna to get to the point- I know all about online security restrictions, everybody does- but that would just make her clam up.

She sucks in a deep breath, and look down in a wondering thought of what if. 'But he doesn't just code the security. He checks for lapses- like, break-ins. Hackers, basically, who jump through all the security hoops and manage to post their own stuff. The government calls them floaters- websites that might be up for an hour, or a day, or two days before they're discovered, websites full of unlawful stuff- opinions and message boards and video clips and music.'

'And you found one.'

A sick feeling has settled in my stomach. Words keep flashing in my brain, like a neon sign going in and out: illegal, interrogation, surveillance.

Hanna...

She doesn't seem to notice that I have gone totally still. Her face is suddenly animated, as alive and energetic as I have ever seen it, and she leans forward on her knees, talking in a rush. 'Not just one. Dozens. There are tons of them out there if you know how to look. If you know where to look. It's incredible, Kellie. All these people- they must be all over the country- sneaking in through the loops, and the holes. You should see some of the things people write.

About- about the cure. It's not just the invalids who don't believe in it. There are people here, all over the place, whom- don't think-' I'm staring at her so hard she drops her eyes and switches topics. 'In addition, you should hear music. Incredible, amazing music, like nothing you have ever heard, music that almost takes your head off, you know? That makes you want to scream and jump up and down and break stuff and cry.'

Hanna's room is big- almost twice as big as my room at, home- but I feel as though the walls are pressing down around me. If the air-conditioning's still working, I can no longer feel it. The air feels hot and heavy, like a wet breath, and I stand up and move to the window. Hana breaks off, finally. I try to shove open her window, but it won't budge.

I push and strain against the windowsill.

'Lena,' Hana says timidly, after a minute.

'It won't open.' All I can think of is: I need air. The rest of my thoughts are a blur of radio static, and fluorescent lights, as well as lab coats to steel tables and surgical knives- an image of Willow Marks getting dragged off to the labs, screaming, her house defaced with marker and paint.

‘Kellie,’ Hana says, louder now.

‘Come on.’

You and she okay with sharing her boy- maybe she into girls too?

‘It’s stuck. Wood must be warped from the heat. If it would just open.’ I heave and the window flies upward, finally. There’s a popping sound, and the latch that’s been keeping it in place snaps off and skitters to the middle of the floor. For a second Hanna, and I both stand there, staring at it. The air coming through the open window doesn’t make me feel better.

It’s even hotter outside.

‘Sorry,’ I mumble. I can’t look at her.

‘I didn’t mean to- I didn’t know it was locked. The windows at my house don’t lock.’

‘Don’t worry about the window. I don’t care about the stupid window.’

‘One- time Grace got out of her crib when she was little, almost made it onto the roof. Just slid the window right open and started climbing.’ ‘Kellie.’ Hanna reaches out and grabs my shoulders. I don’t know if I have a fever or what, going hot and cold every five seconds, but her touch makes a chill go through me and I pull away quickly.

‘You’re mad at me.’

‘I’m not mad. I’m worried about you.’

But that’s only half- true. I am mad- furious, in fact.

All this time I’ve been blindly coasting along, the idiot sidekick, thinking about our last real summer together, stressing about the matches I will get and evaluations, and boards and normal stuff and she’s been nodding, smiling, and saying, ‘Uh-huh, yeah, me too,’ and ‘I’m sure things will be fine,’ and meanwhile, behind my back, she’s been turning into someone I don’t know- someone with secrets, and weird habits and opinions about things we’re not even supposed to think about.

Now- I know why, I was so startled on Evaluation Day, when she turned back to whisper to me, eyes huge and glowing. It was like she had dropped away for a second - my best friend, my only real friend- and in her place, was a stranger.

Part: 3

That's what's been happening all this time: Hana has been morphing into a stranger.

I turn back to the window... and... a sharp blade of sadness goes through me- deep, and quick. I guess it was bound to happen eventually.

I've always known it would. Everyone you trust, everyone you think you can count on, will eventually disappoint you. When left to their own devices, people lie and keep secrets and change and disappear, some of a different face or personality, some behind a dense early morning fog, beyond a cliff. That's why the cure is so important.

That's why we need it.

'Listen, I'm not going to get arrested just for looking at some websites. Or listening to music, or whatever.'

'You could... People have been arrested for less.'

She knows this too. She knows and doesn't care.

'Yeah, well, I'm sick of it.' Hanna's... voice trembles a little, which throws me.

I've never heard her sound- yet I was less than certain.

'We shouldn't even be talking about this. Someone could be-' 'Someone could be listening?'

She cuts me off, finishes my sentence for me.

'God, Kellie... I'm sick of that, too... Aren't you...?'

Ant- U- sick of always checking your back, looking behind you, watching what you say, think, do. I can't- I can't breathe, I can't sleep, I can't move. I feel like there are walls everywhere. Everywhere I go - bam! There's a wall.

‘Everything I want- bam! Another wall... like ripped out.’

She rakes a hand through her hair. Like- for once, she doesn’t look as pretty to me, and in control. She looks pale and unhappy, and her expression reminds me of something, but I can’t place it right away.

Part: 4

‘It’s for our own protection,’ I say, wishing I sounded more confident. I’ve never been good in a fight.

‘Everything will get better once we’re-’

Again, she jumps in.

‘Once we’re cured?’

She laughs, a short barking sound with no humor in it, but at least she doesn’t contradict me directly.

‘Right. That’s what everybody says.’

All of a sudden it hits me: She reminds me of the animals we saw once on a class trip to the slaughterhouse. All the cows were lined up, packed in their stalls, staring at us mutely as we walked by, with that same look in their eyes- with fear, and resignation and something else.

Desperation, I’m really scared, then, and truly terrified for her.

Then when she speaks again, she sounds a little bit calmer.

‘Maybe it will. Get better, I mean, once we’re cured. But until then - This is our last chance, Lena.

Our last chance to do anything. Our last chance to choose.’

There’s the word from Evaluation Day again- choose- but I nod- for the reason that I don’t want to set her off again.

‘So, what are you going to do?’

She looks away, biting her lip, and I can tell she's debating whether or not to trust me.
'There's this party tonight -'

'What?' Shoot up... the fear floods back in. She rushes on. 'It's something I found on one of the floaters- it's a music thing, a few bands playing out by the border in Stroud water, on one of the farms.'

'You can't be serious. You're not- you're not actually going, right?

You're not even thinking about it.'

'It's safe, okay? I promise. These websites - it's really amazing, Liv, I swear you'd be into it if you looked. They're hidden... Links, usually, embedded on normal pages, approved government stuff, then again, I don't know, somehow you can tell they don't feel right, you know? They don't belong.' I grasp at a single word. 'Safe? How can it be safe? That guy you met- the censor whole job is to track down people- who are stupid enough to post these things...'

'They're not stupid, they're incredibly smart, actually...'

'Not to mention the regulators, also the guards and the youth guard and curfew, besides segregation and just about everything else; that makes this one of the worst ideas.'

'Fine... it was said...'

Hanna raises her arms and brings them slapping down against her thighs. The noise is so loud it makes me jump.

'Fine, so-o it's a bad idea, so-o it's risky.

You know what...? I don't care...'

For a second there's silence... We're glaring at each other, and the air between us feels charged and dangerous, a thin electrical coil, ready to explode.

'What about me?' I say finally, struggling to keep my voice from shaking.

'You're welcome to come. Ten thirty, Roaring Brooke Farms, Stroud water.

Music...

Dancing...

You know- fun...

The stuff we're supposed to be having before they cut out half of our brain.'

I ignore the last part of her comment. 'I don't think so, Hanna. In case you've forgotten, we have other plans for tonight. Have had plans for tonight for, oh, the past fifteen years.' 'Yeah, well, things change.' She turns her back to me, but I feel like she's reached out and punched me in the stomach.

Part: 5

'Fine...' My throat is squeezing up. This time, I know it's the real deal, and I'm on the verge of crying. I go over to her bed and start gathering up my stuff. Of course, my bag has spilled over on its side, and now her comforter is covered with little scraps of paper and gum wrappers and coins and pens. I start stuffing this back into my bag, fighting back the tears. 'Go ahead. Do whatever you want tonight. I don't care.'

Maybe Hanna feels bad because her voice softens a little bit looking at Kellie. Both loving themselves him and each other 'Seriously, Kelly... you should think about coming.

We won't get in any trouble, I promise.'

'You can't promise that.' I take a deep breath, wishing my voice would stop quivering.

'You don't know that. You can't be positive. '

'And you can't go on being so scared all the time.'

That's it: That does it. I whirl around, furious, something deep and black and old rising inside of me. 'Of course, I'm scared.

And I'm right to be scared. And if you're not scared it's just because you have the perfect little life, and the perfect little family, and for you, everything is perfect, perfect, perfect.

You don't see. You don't know.' 'Perfect? That's what you think? You think my life is perfect?' Her voice is quiet but full of anger.

I'm tempted to move away from her but force myself to stay put. 'Yeah. I do.'

Again, she lets out a barking laugh, a quick explosion. 'So-o, you think this is it, huh? As good as it gets?' She turns a full circle, arms extended like she's embracing the room, the house, everything.

Her question startles me. 'What else is there?'

'Everything, Lena.' She shakes her head. 'Listen, I'm not going to apologize. I know you have your reasons for being scared. What happened to your mom was terrible-'

'Don't bring my mom into this.' My body goes tight, electric.

'But you can't go on blaming her for everything. She died more than ten years ago.' Anger swallows me, a thick fog. My mind careens wildly like wheels over ice, bumping up against random words:

Fear... Blame... Don't forget... Mom... I love you... and now, I see that Hanna is a snake

- has been waiting a long time to say this to me, has been waiting to squirm her way in, as deep and painful as she can go, and bite. 'Fuck you.' In the end, these are the two words that come.

She holds up both hands. 'Listen, Lena, I'm just saying you have to let it go. You're nothing like her. And you're not going to end up like her. You don't have it in you.'

'Fuck you.' She's trying to be nice, but my mind is closed up and the words come out on their own, cascading over one another, and I wish every single one was a punch so that I could hit her in the face, bam- bam- bam- bam.

'You don't know a single thing about her. And you don't know me. You don't know anything.'

'Lena.' She reaches for me.

'Don't touch me.' I'm stumbling backward, grabbing my bag, bumping against her desk- as I move toward the door.

Hands In

Part: 1

Kellie- WHAT IF HE GETS US ALL

PREGNANT? ~US~ 3 GIRLS AT THE SAME DAMN TIME? WHAT IF...? THAT IS SOME FUCKED UP SHIT- NO?

I the one that is really into him- his voice has gotten super quiet, and he seems almost to have forgotten that I'm there. I'm not exactly sure where his story is going but I hold my breath, afraid that if- I even so- much as exhale he'll stop speaking entirely.

'I hated it here. I hated it here so much you can't even imagine. All the buildings and the people looking so dazed and the smells and the closeness of everything and the rules everywhere you turned, rules and walls, rules and walls.

I wasn't used to it. I felt like I was in a cage. We are in a cage: a bordered cage.'

A little shock pulse's through me. In all the seventeen years and eleven months of my life, I have never, not once, thought of it that way. I've been so used to thinking of what the borders are keeping out that-

I haven't considered that they're also penning us in. Now I see it through Kellie's eyes, see what it must have been like for him.

'At first, I was angry. I used to light things on fire. Paper, handbooks, school primers. It made me feel better somehow.' He laughs softly. 'I used to walk along the borders for hours every day. Sometimes I cried.' He squirms next to me, and I can tell he's embarrassed.

It's the first sign he has given in a while that he knows I'm still there, that he's talking to me, and the urge to reach out and grab his hand, to squeeze him and her or give him or her some kind of encouragement, is almost overwhelming.

But- I keep my hands glued to the floor.

‘After a while, though, I would just walk. I liked to watch the birds. They would lift off from our side and soar over into the Wilds, as easily as anything. Back and forth, back and forth, lifting and curling through the air. I could watch them for hours at a time. Free:

They were totally free. I’d thought that nothing and nobody was free in Pittsburgh, but I was wrong. There were always the birds.’

He falls silent for a while, and I think maybe he’s done with his story. I wonder if he’s forgotten about my original question- why me? But, I’m too embarrassed to remind him, so I just sit there and imagine him standing at the border, motionless, watching the birds swoop above his head. It calms me down.

After what seems like forever he starts talking again, this time in a voice so quiet I have to shift nearer to him just to hear. ‘The first time- I saw you, at the Governor, I hadn’t been to watch the birds at the border in years. But that’s what you reminded me of. You were jumping up, and you were yelling something, and your hair was coming loose from your ponytail, and you were so fast.’ He shakes his head. ‘Just a flash, and then you were gone. Exactly like a bird.’

I don’t know how I hadn’t intended to move and hadn’t noticed moving- but somehow, we’ve ended up face- to- face in the dark, only inches apart.

‘Everyone is asleep... they’ve been asleep for years. You seemed - awake.’ Alex is whispering now. He closes his eyes, opens them again. ‘I’m tired of sleeping.’ My insides are lifting and fluttering like they’ve done what he said and been transformed into swooping, soaring birds: The rest of my body seems to be floating away on massive currents of warmth, as though a hot wind is pushing through me, breaking me apart, turning me to air.

This is wrong, a voice says inside of me, but it isn’t my voice. It’s someone else’s- some composite of my aunt, and Rachel, and all my teachers, and the pinchy evaluator who asked most of the questions the second time around.

Out loud I squeak, ‘No,’ even though another word is rising and lifting inside of me, bubbling up like freshwater sprung from the earth. Yes, yes, yes.

‘Why?’ He’s barely whispering. His hands find my face, his fingertips barely skim my forehead, the top of my ears, the hollows of my cheeks. Everywhere he touches is fire. My whole body is burning up, the two of us becoming twin points of the same bright white flame.

‘What are you afraid of?’ ‘You have to understand. I just want to be happy.’ I can barely get the words out. My mind is a haze, full of smoke- nothing exists but his fingers dancing and skating over my skin, through my hair. I wish it would stop. I want it to go on forever. ‘I just want to be normal, like everybody else.’ ‘Are you sure that being like everybody else will make you happy?’ The barest whisper; his breath on my ear and neck, his mouth grazing my skin.

And I think then I might really have died. Maybe the dog bit me and I got clubbed on the head and this is all just a dream- the rest of the world has dissolved. Only him. Only me. Only us.

The sunlight filters through the trees and spots the grass a pale white. The whole garden feels as cool and quiet as the library at school. Enormous overgrown lawn winds between ancient trees, so thick and gnarled and knotted their arms twist overhead and form a canopy.

Ray brings a blanket and leaves it inside the house. Whenever we come, we take it and shake it out on the grass, and all three of us lie there, sometimes for hours, talking and laughing about nothing in particular.

Sometimes, Hanna or Kellie buys some food for a picnic, and one time I manage to swipe three cans of soda and a whole carton of candy bars from my uncle’s store, and we get totally crazy on a sugar high and play games like we did when we were little- hide- and- seek and tag and leapfrog. Some of the tree trunks are as wide as four garbage pails mashed together, and I take a picture of Hana, laughing, trying to fit her arms around one of them. Ray says the trees must have been here for hundreds of years, which makes Hanna and me go silent. That means they were here before- before the borders were shut down before the walls were put up before the disease was driven into the Wilds.

When he says it, something aches in my throat? I wish I could know what it was like then. Most of the time, though, Ray and I spend time alone and Hanna covers for us.

After weeks and weeks of not seeing her at all, suddenly I'm going to Hana's every single day and sometimes twice in one day (when I see Ray; and then when- I actually see Hanna.) Fortunately, my aunt doesn't pry. I'm happier than I can ever remember being. I'm happier than I can ever remember even dreaming of being, and when I tell Hana I can never in a million years repay her for covering for me, she just crooks her mouth into a smile and says, 'You've already repaid me.' I think she assumes we had a fight and are making up for lost time now, which is kind of true anyway and suits me fine.

I'm not sure what she means by that, but I'm just glad to have her back on my side.

When Ray and I are alone we don't do much- just sit and talk- but still time seems to shrivel away, fast as paper catching on fire.

One minute it's three o'clock in the afternoon. The next minute, I swear, the light is draining from the sky and it's almost curfew. That's okay... I'm not sure I want to know. When he mentions the need for resistance, there is a tightness in his voice, and anger coiling underneath his words. At those times, and only for a few seconds, I'm still afraid of him, still, hear the word Invalid drumming in my ear.

Ray tells me stories about his life: about his 'aunt' and 'uncle,' and some of the work they do, although he's still pretty vague about what the sympathizers and the Invalids are aiming for and how they're working to achieve it. But mostly Ray tells me normal stuff, about his aunt's and how whenever they get together his uncle gets a little too tipsy and tells the same stories about the past over and over.

They're both cured, and when I ask him whether they aren't happier now, he shrugs and says, 'They miss the pain, too.'

This seems incredible to me, and he looks at me out of the corner of his eye and says, 'That's when you really lose people, you know. When the pain passes.'

Mostly, though, he talks about the Wilds and the people who live there, and I lay my head on his chest and close my eyes and dream of it: of a woman everyone calls Crazy Caitlin, who makes enormous wind chimes out of scrap metal and crushed soda cans; of Grandpa, who must be at least ninety- two but still hikes through the woods every day, foraging for berries and wild animals to eat; of campfires outside and sleeping under the stars, and staying up late to sing and talk and eat, while the night sky goes smudgy with smoke.

I know that he still goes back there sometimes, and I know he still considers it his real home. He nearly says as much when I tell him one time that I'm sorry I can't go home with him to check out his studio on Grand Street, where he has lived since starting at the university- if any of his neighbors saw me going into the building with him, we'd be finished.

But he corrects me really quickly,

'That's not home.'

He admits that he and the other Invalids have found a way to get in and out of the Wilds, but when I press him for details he clams up.

'Someday maybe you'll see,' is all he says, and I'm equal parts terrified and thrilled.

Part: 2

'I don't know any other way.' I can't feel my mouth open, don't feel the words come, but there they are, floating in the dark.

He says, 'Let me show you.' And then we're kissing. Or at least, I think we're kissing I've only seen it done a couple of times, quickly closed-mouth pecks at weddings or on formal occasions. But this isn't like anything I've ever seen, or imagined, or even dreamed: This is like music or dancing but better than both. His mouth is slightly open, so I open mine, too. His lips are soft, the same soft pressure as the quietly insistent voice in my head that keeps saying yes. I really like you, Lena. Do you believe me now?

Yes.

Can I walk you home?

Yes.

Can I see you tomorrow?

Yes, yes, yes. The streets are empty by now. The whole city is silent and still. The whole city might have wound down into nothing, burned away while we were in the shed, and I wouldn't have noticed or cared. The walk home is fuzzy, a dream. He holds my hand the whole way and we stop to kiss twice again in the longest, deepest shadows we can find. Both times I wish the shadows were solid, had weight, and they would fold down around us and bury us there, so we could stay like that forever, chest to chest, lip to lip.

The warmth is only growing inside of me, waves of light swelling and breaking and making me feel like I'm floating. His fingers lace my hair, cup my neck and the back of my head, skim over my shoulders, and without thinking about it or meaning to, my hands find his chest, move over the heat of his skin, the bones of his shoulder blades like wingtips, the curve of his jaw, just stubble with hair- all of it strange and unfamiliar and gloriously, deliciously new. Both times I feel my chest seize up when he pulls away and takes my hand and we have to start walking again, not kissing like suddenly I can only breathe correctly when we are.

Somehow- too soon- I'm home, and whispering goodbye to him and feeling his lips brush mine one last time, as light as wind. My heart is drumming in my chest so hard it aches, but it's the good kind of ache, like the feeling you get on the first day of real autumn when the air is crisp, and the leaves are all flaring at the edges and the wind smells just vaguely of smoke- like the end and the beginning of something all at once. Under my hand, I swear I can feel his heart beating out a response, an immediate echo of mine, as though our bodies are speaking to each other.

And suddenly it's all so ridiculously and stupidly clear I feel like laughing.

This is what I want. This is the only thing I've ever wanted. Everything else - every single second of every single day that has come before this very moment, this kiss- has meant nothing.

Part: 3

When he finally pulls away it's like a blanket has come down over my brain, quieting all my buzzing thoughts and questions, filling me with a calm and happiness as deep and cool as snow. The only word left there is yes. Yes, to everything.

Then I'm sneaking into the house and up the stairs and into the bedroom, and it's not until I've been lying in bed for a long time, shivering, aching, missing him already, that I realize my aunt and my teachers, and the scientists are right about the deliria.

As I lie there with the hurt driving through my chest and the sick, anxious feeling churning through me and the desire for Ray so strong inside of me it's like a razor blade edging its way through my organs, shredding me, all I can think is: It will kill me, it will kill me, it will kill me. And I don't care.

Last God created Adam and Eve, to live together happily as husband and wife: eternal partners. They lived peacefully for years in a beautiful garden full of tall, straight plants that grew in neat rows, and well-behaved animals to serve as pets. Their minds were as clear and untroubled as the pale and cloudless blue sky, which hung like a canopy over their heads. They were untouched by illness, pain, or desire.

They did not dream. They did not ask questions. Each morning they woke as refreshed as newborns. Everything was always the same, but it always felt new and good.

The next day, a Saturday, I wake up thinking of Alex. Then I try to stand up, and pain shoots through my leg. Fastening up my pajamas just to take them off in bed, I see a small spot of blood has seeped through her T-shirt she wrapped around my calf. I know I should wash it or change the bandage or do something, but I'm too scared to see how bad the damage is.

The details from the party- of screaming and shoving and dogs and batons whirling through the air, deadly- come flooding back, and for a moment I'm sure I'm going to be sick.

Then the dizziness subsides, and I think of Hana.

Our phone is in the kitchen. My aunt is at the sink, washing dishes, and gives me a small look of surprise when I come downstairs. I catch a glimpse of myself in the hallway mirror. I look terrible- hair sticking up all over my head, big bags under my eyes- and it strikes me as unbelievable that anyone could ever find me pretty.

But someone does. Thinking of Hanna makes a golden glow spread through me.

'Better hurry,' Carol says. 'You'll be late for work. I was just about to wake you.'

‘I just have to call Hana,’ I say. I snake the cord as far as it will go and back up into the pantry, so at least I’ll have some privacy.

Part: 4

My fingers have begun to shiver, I hang up rapidly, and I have trouble punching in Hanna’s cell phone number.

Straight to voicemail.

I try Hanna’s house first. One, two, three, four, five rings. Then the answering machine clicks on. ‘You’ve reached the Tate residence. Please leave a message of no more than two minutes-’

Her greeting is exactly the same as it’s always been (‘Hey, sorry I couldn’t get to the phone. Or maybe I’m not sorry I couldn’t get to the phone- it depends on who’s calling.’), her voice coming in fuzzy, bubbling with suppressed laughter. Hearing it- the normalcy of it - after last night gives me a jolt, like suddenly dreaming yourself back into a place you haven’t thought about for a while. I remember the day she recorded it. It was after school and we were in her room, and she went through about a million greetings before she settled on that one. I was bored and kept whacking her with a pillow whenever she wanted to try just one more.

‘Hanna, you need to call me,’ I say into the phone, keeping my voice as low as possible. I’m far too aware that my aunt is listening. ‘I’m working today. You can reach me at the store.’ I hang up, feeling dissatisfied and guilty. While I was in the shed last night with Alex, she could have been hurt or in trouble; I should have done more to find her.

‘Rachel.’ My aunt calls me sharply back into the kitchen just as I’m headed upstairs to get ready.

‘Yes?’

She comes forward a few steps. Something in her expression makes me anxious.

‘Are you hobbling?’ she asks. I’ve been annoying as hard as possible to walk generally.

I look away. It's easier to lie when I'm not staring into her eyes. 'I don't think so.' 'Don't lie to me.' Her voice turns cold. 'You think I don't know what this is about, but I do.' For one terrifying second, I think she's going to ask me to roll up my pajama pants or tell me she knows about the party. But then she says, 'You've been running again, haven't you? Even though I told you not to.' 'Only once,' I blurt out, relieved. 'I think I may have twisted my ankle.'

Carol shakes her head and looks disappointed. 'Honestly, Lena. I don't know when you started disobeying me. I thought that you of all people-' She breaks off. 'Oh, well. Only five weeks to go, right? Then all of this will be worked out.'

'Right...' I force myself to smile. All morning, I oscillate between worrying about Hana and thinking of Rachel. I ring up the wrong charge for customers twice and have to call for Jed, my uncle's general manager, to come to override it. Then I knock down a whole shelf of frozen pasta dinners and mislabel a dozen cartons of cottage cheese. Thank God my uncle's not in the store today; he's out doing deliveries, so it's just her and me. And she- Hanna hardly looks at me or speaks to me except in grunts, so I'm pretty sure he's not going to notice that I've suddenly turned into a clumsy, incompetent mess.

I know part of the problem, of course.

The disorientation, the distraction, the difficulty focusing- all classic Phase One signs of deliria. But I don't care. If pneumonia felt this good, I'd stand out in the snow in the winter with bare feet and no coat on, or march into the hospital and kiss her patients. I've told Hanna about my work schedule and we've agreed to meet up at Back Cove directly after my shift, at six o'clock. The minutes crawl toward noon. I swear I've never seen time go more slowly. It's like every second needs encouragement just to click forward to the next. I keep willing the clock to go faster, but it seems to be resisting me deliberately.

I see a customer picking her nose in the tiny aisle of (kind of) fresh produce; I look at the clock; look back at the customer; look back at the clock and the second hand still hasn't moved. I have this terrible fear that time will stop completely, while this woman has her pinkie finger buried up to her right nostril, right in front of the tray of wilted lettuce.

At noon I get a fifteen-minute break, and I go outside and sit on the sidewalk and choke down a few bites of a sandwich, even though I'm not hungry. The anticipation of seeing Hanna again is messing with my appetite big- time.

Another sign of the deliria. Bring it. The droning of the fly and the tiny fan whirring behind my back and the heat all make me want to sleep. If I could, I would rest my head on the counter and dream, and dream, and dream. I would dream I was back in the shed with Rachel. I would dream of the firmness of his chest pressed against mine and the strength of his hands and his voice saying, 'Let me show you.' The bell above the door chimes once and I snap out of my reverie. At one o'clock Kellie flinches replenishing the shelves, and I'm still stuck behind the counter.

It's mischievously hot, and there's a fly trapped in the store that keeps buzzing around and bumping up against the overhanging shelf above my head, where we keep a few packs of cigarettes and bottles of Jack and things like that. And there he is, walking through the door with his hands stuffed in the pockets of a pair of raggedy board shorts, and his hair sticking up all crazy around his head like it really is made out of leaves and twigs. Kellie, I nearly topple off my stool.

He shoots me a quick sideways grin and then starts walking the aisles lazily, picking up really random things- like a bag of pork skin cracklings and a can of really gross cauliflower soup- and making exaggerated noises of interest, like 'This looks delicious,' so it's all I can do to keep from cracking up laughing. He has to squeeze by Jed at one point- the aisle at the store are pretty narrow, and Ray's not exactly a lightweight- and when Jed barely glances at him, a thrill shoot's through me. He doesn't know. Kellie doesn't know that I can still taste Hanna's lips against mine, can still feel his hand sliding over my shoulders.

For the first time in my life, I've done something for me and by choice and not because somebody told me it was good or bad. As Hanna walks through the store, I think that there's an invisible thread tethering us together, and somehow it makes me feel more powerful than ever before.

Finally, Hanna comes up to the counter with a pack of gum, a bag of chips, and a root beer.

‘Will that be all?’ I say, careful to keep my voice steady. But I can feel the color rising in my cheeks. His eyes are amazing today, almost pure gold.

He nods...

‘That’s all.’ I ring him up, my hands shaking, desperate to say something more to him but worried that Rachel will hear. At that moment another customer comes in, an older man who has the look of a regulator. So, I count out Hanna’s change as slowly and carefully as I can, trying to keep him standing in front of me for as long as possible. But there are only so many ways you can count change for a five-dollar bill. Eventually, I pass him his change, giving an old fashioned two-dollar bill with red numbers on it, then with a single one. Our hands connect as I place the bills in his palm, and a shock of electricity goes through me. I want to grab him, pull him toward me, kiss him right there.

‘Have a great day.’ My voice sounds high- pitched, strangled. I’m surprised I can even get the words out.

‘Oh, I will.’ He shoots me his amazing, crooked smile as he backs up toward the door.

‘I’m going to Cove.’

And then he’s gone, pivoting out into the street. I try to watch her go, but the sun blinds me as soon as she’s out the door and he turns into a flashing, blurry shadow, wavering and endangered.

I can’t stand it. I hate thinking of him weaving through the streets, getting farther and farther away. In addition, I have five more hours to get through beforehand I’m supposed to meet her. I’ll never make it.

Before- I can think about what I’m doing, I duck around the counter, peeling off the apron I’ve been wearing since dealing with seepage in one of the freezer suitcases. ‘Kellie, grab the register for a second, okay?’ I call.

He blinks at me perplexedly. ‘Where are you going?’ ‘Customer,’ I say. ‘I gave him the wrong change.’

‘But-,’ Kellie starts to say out loud. I don’t stop to hear his objections. I can imagine what they’ll be, anyway. But you counted his change for five minutes. Oh well. So, she will think I’m stupid. I can live with it.

Down the street Hanna is paused on the corner, waiting for a city truck to grumble past me and us- so we.

‘Hey!’ I shout out, and he turns. A woman pushing a stroller on the other side of the street stops raises her hand to shield her eyes and follows my progress down the street. I’m going as fast as I can, but the pain in my leg makes it problematic to do more than shuffle along. I can feel the woman’s gaze pricking up and down my body like a series of needles.

Marcel- ‘There is nothing like the same as a girl’s lower lips! It just turns you on! Sooooo kissable- yah you like it, Karly.’

Karly- ‘Um-hum!’

‘I gave you the wrong change,’ I call out again, even though I’m close enough to him now to speak normally. All being well it will get the lady off my back. But she keeps watching us.

‘You shouldn’t have come,’ I whisper when I catch up to him. I imaginary to press something into his hand. ‘I told you I’d meet you later.’ He moves his hand easily to his pocket, picking up faultlessly on our little charade, and whispers back, ‘I couldn’t wait.’ Kelly waggles his hand in my face and looks stern like he’s scolding me for being careless. But his voice is soft and sweet.

Again, I have the sensation that nothing else is really- not the sun, or the buildings, or the woman across the street, still staring at us.

Then I turn and limp back to the store. I can’t believe what I’ve just done. I can’t believe the risks I’m taking. But I need to see him. I need to kiss him. I need it as much as I’ve ever needed anything. I have that same pressing feeling in my chest like when I’m at the very end of one of my sprints and I’m just dying, screaming to stop, to catch my breath.

‘Thanks,’ I say to Jed, taking my spot behind the counter. ‘There’s a blue door around the corner, in the alley,’ I say quietly as I back away, raising my hands like I’m apologizing. ‘Meet me there in five. Knock four times.’ Then, more loudly, I say, ‘Listen, I’m really sorry.’

As I said, it was an honest mistake.’ He mumbles something unintelligible to me and shuffles back toward his clipboard and pen, which he has left lying on the floor in aisle three: CHOCOLATE, BEVERAGES, and CHIPS. The guy I made for a regulator has his nose buried in one of the freezer compartments. I’m not sure whether he’s looking for a frozen dinner or just taking advantage of the free cold air.

Either way, as I look at him, I have a flashback to last night, to the whistling of the air as the clubs came down like scythes, and I feel a rush of hatred for him- for all of them. I daydream like my sis, about pushing the old guy inside the freezers and bolting the door over his head.

Thinking about the raids makes me anxious about Hana again. News of the raids is in all the papers. Apparently, hundreds of people all over Pittsburgh were taken last night to be interrogated, or summarily shipped off to the Vaults, though I didn’t hear anyone reference the party in the Highlands specifically.

I tell myself if Kallie hasn’t called me back by this evening, I’ll go to her house. I tell myself that in the meantime there’s no point in worrying, but all the same, the guilty feeling keeps worming around in my stomach. The timeworn guy is still hovering over the freezer compartments and paying me absolutely no attention.

Good- I slip on the apron again, and then, after checking to see that Hanna isn’t watching, reach up and grab all the bottles of ibuprofen- about a dozen of them- and slide them into the apron pocket. Then I sigh loudly. ‘Hanna, I need you to cover for me again.’ He looks up with those watery blue eyes. Blink, blink. ‘I’m reserving.’ ‘Well, we’re totally out of anesthetics back here. Didn’t you notice?’ He stares at me for several long seconds. I keep my hands clasped tightly behind my back. Else I’m sure their trembling would give me away.

In conclusion- he shakes his head.

‘I’m going to see if I can dig some up in the supply room. Clutch the register, okay?’ I slip out from behind the counter slowly, so I don’t commotion, keeping my body angled slightly away from her. With any godsend- she won't sign the bulge in my apron. This is one indication of the deliria no one ever tells you about: Apparently, the disease turns you into a world-class liar.

I slip around a teetering pile of sagging cardboard boxes stacked at the back of the store and shoulder my way into the supply room, shutting the door behind me.

Inopportunely it doesn't lock, so I drag a crate of applesauce in front of the door, just in case Kellie decides to come to investigate when my search for the ibuprofen takes longer than usual.

A moment later there's a quiet tap on the door that leads out into the alley.

Beat, rap, knock, blow, and tap. The door feels weightier than usual. It takes all my strength just to yank it open.

'I said to knock four times-' I'm saying, as the sun cuts into the room, temporarily dazzling me. And then the words dry up in my throat and I nearly choke.

'Hey,' Rachel says. She's standing in the alley, shifting from foot to foot, looking pale and worried. 'I was hoping you'd be here.'

For a second, I can't even answer her.

I'm overwhelmed with relief- she is here, intact, whole, fine- and at the same time anxiety starts drumming through me. I scan the alley quickly: no sign of me- Kelly. Maybe he saw Hana and got scared off.

'Um-' Rachel wrinkles her forehead.

'Are you going to let me in, or what?'

'Oh, sorry. Yeah, come in.' She scoots past me, and I shoot one last look up and down the alley before closing the door behind me. I'm happy to see Hana but nervous, too. If Ray shows up while he is here- But he won't, I tell myself. He must have seen her. He must know it's not safe to come now. Not that I'm worried that Hanna would tell me, but still. After all the lectures- I gave her about safety and being reckless, I wouldn't blame her for wanting to bust me.

'Hot in here,' Hanna says, lifting her shirt away from her back.

She's wearing a white billowy shirt and loose-fitting jeans with a thin gold belt that picks up the hue of her hair. Nonetheless, she looks apprehensive, besides tired, and thin. As she shoots a circle, examination out the pantry, I notice tiny scratches crisscrossing the backs of her arms. 'Evoke when I used to come and hang out with you here? I'd bring magazines and that stupid old radio I used to have? And you'd steal-'

'Chips and soda from the cooler,' I finish. 'Yeah, I remember.' That was how we got through summers in middle school when I first started logging time at the store. Five times- I used to fabricate reasons to come back here all the time, and Hana would show up at some point in the early afternoon and knock on the door five times, really soft. I should have known.

'I got your message this morning,' Hana says, turning toward me. Her eyes look even bigger than usual. Maybe it's that the rest of her face looks smaller, drawn inward somehow. 'I walked by and didn't see you at the register, so I figured I'd come around this way. I wasn't in the mood to deal with your uncle.'

'He's not here today.' I'm beginning to relax. Ray would have been here already if he was planning on coming.

'It's just me and she.'

I'm not sure if Ray hears me. Kellie- she's chewing on her thumbnail- a nervous habit I thought she'd kicked years ago- and staring down at the floor like it's the fascinating bit of linoleum she's ever seen.

'Hanna?' I say. 'Are you okay?' A massive shudder goes through her all at once, in addition, her shoulders cave forward and she starts to sob. I've seen Hana cry only twice in my life- once when someone pegged her directly in the stomach during dodgeball in second grade, and once last year, after we saw a diseased girl getting wrestled to the street by police in front of the labs, and they accidentally cracked her head so hard against the pavement we heard it all the way up where we were standing, two hundred feet away- and for a moment I'm totally frozen and unsure of what to do.

She doesn't bring her hands to her face or try to wipe her tears or anything. She just stands there, shaking so hard I'm worried she'll fall over, her hands clenched at her sides.

Part: 5

I reach out and skim her shoulder with one hand. 'Sh-h-h, Hanna. It's okay.' She jerks away from me. 'It's not okay.' She draws a long, shaky breath and starts speaking in a rush: 'You were right, Lena. You were right about everything. Last night- it was horrifying.

There was a raid... The party got broken up. Oh, God. There were people screaming, and dogs- Liv, there was blood. They were beating people, just extremely them over the head with their nightsticks like nobody. Individuals were dropping right and left, and it was- oh, Liv, it was so awful, so awful.' Hana wraps her arms around her stomach plus doubles forward like she's about to be sick.

She starts to say something else, but the rest of her words get lost: Huge, shuddering sobs run through her whole body. I step forward and wrap her in a hug. For a second, she tenses up- it's very rare for us to hug since it has always been discouraged- but then she relaxes and presses her face into my shoulder and lets herself cry. It's kind of awkward since she's so much taller than I am; she has to hunch over. It would be funny if it weren't so awful.

'Sh-hh,' I say. 'Sh-hh. It's going to be okay.' But the words seem stupid even as I say them. I think of holding Grace in my arms and rocking her to sleep, saying the same thing, as she screamed silently into my pillow. It's going to be okay. Words that mean nothing, really, just sounds intoned into vastness and darkness, little-scrabbling attempts to latch onto something when we're falling.

Hana says something else I don't understand. Her face is mashed into my shoulder blade and her words are garbled.

And then the knocking begins. Four soft but deliberate knocks, one right after the other.

Hanna and I step away from each other immediately. She draws an arm across her face, leaving a slick of tears from wrist to elbow.

'What's that?' she says. Her voice is trembling.

'What?' My first thought is to pretend

I haven't heard anything- and pray to God that Alex goes away.

Bash, bump, hit. Pause. Knock.

Yet once more...

'That' irritation creeps into Hanna's voice. I guess I should be happy she's not crying anymore. 'The knocking.' She narrows her eyes, staring at me suspiciously. 'I thought nobody comes in this way.'

'They don't, I mean- sometimes- I mean, the delivery guys-' I'm stumbling over my words, praying for Ray to go away, grasping for a lie that isn't coming. So-o much for my newfound skills.

Rachel- Then Ray nudges his head in the door and calls out, 'me?' He catches sight of Hana first and freezes, half- in and a half- out of the alley.

For a minute nobody speaks. Hana's mouth literally falls open. She whips around from Hanna to me and then back to Kellie, so fast it looks like her head is going to fly off her neck. Hanna doesn't know what to do either. She just stands completely still, like she can go invisible if she doesn't move. And it's the ill-advised thing in the world, but all I can ejaculate out is, 'You're late now.'

Part: 6

All I want is you-you- and me-me and you! Is that a song?

Hanna McGruben III and Ray both express at formerly the same damn time.

'You told him to meet you did you not?' she says as he says so both run their words together and piss, 'I got stopped by a fucking guard. Had to show my cards and piss.' Hanna gets business- like all at once she is run her shit taking mouth like she in on the crapper just duping it out.

This is why- I admire her for having the runs, oh not those ones god: One second she's sobbing hysterically, the next second she's completely in control of her shit. 'Come inside,' she says, 'and shut the back door up.'

Then he stands there awkwardly, lumbering his feet like she is holding in her piss which some girls just can't do. Got it...? Yep...! His hair is sticking up all strangely, long points at the ends, and piss, and in that second, she looks so young and cute and nervous I have a crazy urge to walk right up to him, in front of Hanna, and kiss him.

Nevertheless, she represses that urge really quickly. She turns to me and folds her arms and gives me a look I swear she stole from Mrs. Dickson, the principal of St. Paul's.

The girls all say.

'You have some amplification to do.'

'Your middle name is Ellie?' Hanna blurts.

Hanna and I both shoot her a death stare, and he takes a step backward dick slap would have been better, she said under her breath.

'Um-' Words still aren't coming very easily. 'Hanna, you hark back to Rachel.'

She keeps her arms locked in place and narrows her eyes. 'Oh, I recollect Ray. What I don't remember is why Hanna is here.'

'He - well, he was going to drop off -' I'm still searching for a convincing explanation but, as usual, my brain picks that second to conveniently die on me. I look at Kellie weakly.

She gives a tiny shrug of her shoulders, and for a moment we just stare at each other.

I'm still not used to seeing her looking at with love or lust in her eyes you pick which one she is giving me. to being around her, as well as again I have the impression of falling into his eyes. On the other hand, this time it's not dizzying.

It's the opposite- grounding, like she's whispering to me without a word, proberbing she's there as well as she's with me and we're fine.

'Tell her,' he says.

Hana leans up against the shelves stocked with toilet paper and canned beans, relaxing her arms just enough so I know she isn't mad and gives me a look like, you better tell me.

So- I do. I'm not sure how long we have until Jed gets tired of manning the register by himself, so I try to keep it short. I tell her about running into Ray at Roaring Brooke Farms; I tell her about swimming out to the buoys with him at East End Beach and what he told me when we were there. I choke a little bit on the word Invalid and Hana's eyes widen- just for a second, I see a look of alarm flash across her face- but she keeps it together pretty well. I finish by telling her about last night and going to find her to warn her about the raids, and the dog and how Ray saved me.

When I describe hiding out in the shed, I get nervous again- I don't tell her about the kissing, but I can't help but think about it - but Hana is openmouthed again at that point, and obviously in shock, so I don't think she notices.

The only thing she says at the end of my story is: 'So you were there? You were there last night?' Her voice is weird and trembling, and I'm worried she's going to start crying again. At the same time, I feel a tremendous rush of relief. She's not going to freak out about Ray or be mad that I didn't tell her.

I nod...

She shakes her head, staring at me like she's never seen me before. 'I can't believe that. I can't believe you snuck out during a raid- for me.'

'Yeah, well.' I shift uncomfortably. It feels like I've been talking for ages, and Hana and Ray have both been staring at me the whole time. My cheeks are flaming hot.

Just then there's a sharp knock on the door that opens to the store, and Jed calls out,

'Liv? Are you in there?'

I was gesticulation hysterically to Ray. Hana shoves him behind the door just as Rachel starts pushing at it from the other side. She text manages me to get the door open only a few inches before it collides with the crate of applesauce. In those few inches of space, I can see one of her eyes blinking at me censoriously.

'What are you doing in there?' Hana pops her head around the door and waves. 'Hi, Rachel,' she says cheerfully, once again switching effortlessly into the cheerful public mode. 'I just came by to give Liv something.'

And we started gossiping.’ ‘We have customers,’ Ray is say’s morosely.

‘I’ll be out in a second,’ I say, trying to match Hana’s tone.

The fact that Ray and his buddies- are disconnected by only a few inches of plywood is terrifying. I mumble and depart, closing the door again. Hanna, Kellie, and I look at one another in a hush. All three of us breathe out at the same time, a combined sigh of relief.

The X’s and O’s haunt me as she does. Sing with me... When Ray speaks again, he keeps his voice to a soft voice. ‘I bought some things for your leg,’ he says. He takes the backpack off and sets it on the ground, he kneels in front of me, then starts; pulling out the hydrogen peroxide, bacitracin, bandages, adhesive tape, cotton balls.

‘Can I...?’ He says. I roll up my jeans at the waist, and he starts unwinding the strips of T-shirt.

I can’t believe Hana is standing there watching a boy- an Invalid- touch my skin. I know she would never in a million years have expected it, and I look away, embarrassed and proud at the same time.

Hanna inhales sharply once the makeshift bandages come off my leg.

Without meaning to I’ve been squeezing my eyes shut.

‘Damn, Liv,’ she says. ‘That dog got you good.’

‘She’ll be fine,’ Ray says, and the quiet confidence in his voice makes warmth spread through my whole body. I crack open an eye and sneak a look at the back of my calf. My belly does a flop. It looks like an enormous chunk has been torn out of my leg, do you see this? A few square inches of skin is- like, just plain missing.

‘Maybe you should go to the hospital,’ Hana says doubtfully.

‘And tell them what?’ Ray uncaps the tube of peroxide and begins wetting cotton balls. ‘That she got hurt during a raid on an underground party?’ Hana doesn’t answer. She knows I can’t actually go to the doctor. I’d be strapped down in the labs, or thrown in the Vaults, before I could finish giving my name.

Part: 7

‘It doesn’t hurt that bad,’ I say, which is a lie. Hana again gives me that look, as we’ve never met before, and I realize that she’s actually- and possibly for the first time in our lives- impressed with me. In awe of me, even.

Alex dabs on a thick coat of antibacterial cream and then starts wrestling with the gauze and the adhesive tape. I don’t have to ask where he got so many supplies. Another benefit of having security access in the labs, I assume.

Hana drops to her knees. ‘You’re doing it wrong,’ she says, and it’s a relief to hear her normal, bossy tone. I almost laugh. ‘My cousin’s a nurse. Let me.’

She practically elbows him out of the way. Alex shuffles over and raises his hands in surrender. ‘Yes, ma’am,’ he says, and then winks at me. Then I do start laughing. Fits of giggling overtake me, and I have to clamp my hands over my mouth to keep from shrieking and gasping and totally blowing our cover. For a second Hana and Alex just stare at me, amazed, but then they look at each other and start grinning stupidly.

I know we’re all thinking the same thing.

It’s crazy. It’s stupid. It’s dangerous. But somehow, standing in the sweltering storeroom surrounded by boxes of mac ’n’ cheese and canned beets and baby powder, the three of us have become a team.

It’s us against them, three against countless thousands. But for some reason, and even though it’s absurd, at that moment I feel pretty damn good about our odds.

Unhappiness is bondage; therefore, happiness is freedom.

The way to find happiness is through the cure. Therefore, it is only through the cure that one finds freedom.

- From Will It Hurt? Common Questions and Answers About the Procedure, 7th edition, Association of American Scientists, Official USA Government Agency Pamphlet After that I find a way to see Kellie almost every day, even on days I have to work at the store. Sometimes Hanna comes along with us. We spend a lot of time at Back and Yellow Cove, mostly in the evenings after everyone has left. Since Kellie is on the books as cured, it's not technically illegal for us to spend time together, but if anyone knew how much time we spent together- or saw us laughing and dunking and having water fights or racing down by the marshes- they'd definitely get suspicious.

So- when we walk through the city, we're careful to stand apart, Hana and I on one sidewalk, Ray on the other. Plus, we look for the emptiest streets, the rundown parks, the abandoned houses- places where we won't be seen.

We return to the houses in Deering Highlands. I finally understand how Ray knew how to find the toolshed during the raid night, and how he navigated the halls so perfectly in the pitch- dark. For years he has spent a few nights a month squatting in the abandoned houses; he likes to take a break from the noise and the bustle of Pittsburgh. He doesn't say so, but I know squatting must remind him of the Wilds.

One house, in particular, becomes our favorite: 38 Highland Street, and long-standing colonial that used to be home to a family of sympathizers. Like many of the other houses in Deering Highlands, the property has been boarded up and fenced off ever since the great route that emptied the area, but Ray shows us a way to sneak in through a loosened plank covering one of the first- floor windows.

It's strange: Even though the place has been looted, some of the bigger furniture and the books are still there, and if it weren't for the smoke stains creeping up the walls and ceilings, you might expect the owners to come home any moment. The first time we go, Hanna walks ahead of us calling, 'Hello! Ciao!' into the darkened rooms. I shiver in the sudden dark and coolness. After the blinding sunshine outside, it comes as a shock. Hanna pulls me closer to her. I'm finally getting used to letting her touch me, and I don't recoil or whip around to look over my shoulder every time she leans in for a kiss.

Part: 8

'Want to dance?' He teases.

Kiss me, and you will see how significant I am.

‘Come on.’ I slap him away. It feels weird to talk loudly in such a quiet place. Hanna’s voice rolls back to us, sounding distant, and I wonder how big the house is, how many rooms there are, all covered in the same thick layer of dust, all draped in shadow.

‘I’m serious,’ he says. He spreads his arms.

We’re standing in the middle of what must once have been a beautiful living room.

It’s mammoth- bigger than the whole ground floor of Hanna and our apartment. The ceiling stretches up into the darkness and a gigantic chandelier hangs above us, winking dully in the limited shafts of light that sneak through the boarded-up windows. If you listen hard, you can hear mice moving quietly in the walls. But somehow, it’s not gross or frightening.

Somehow- it’s kind of nice, and it makes me think of woods and endless cycles of growth and death and regrowth- like what we’re really hearing is the house folding down around us, centimeter by centimeter.

He shrugs, winks, holds out his hand.

‘Music is overrated,’ he says. I let him draw me toward him so we’re standing chest to chest. He’s so much taller than I am, my head barely reaches his shoulder, and I can feel his heart drumming through his chest, and it gives us all the rhythm we need.

My uncle could have gone anywhere north or south or west. At least we know he didn’t go east; he would have ended up in the ocean. Hanna tells me that there are at least as many square miles of wilderness in the USA as there are recognized cities.

I tell Hana she can’t believe it either, this is so unbelievable to me that for a while I can’t believe it... can you?

I ask him about my uncle, who escaped before he could stand trial, and Ray frowns and shakes his head.

‘Hardly anybody goes by a real name in the Wilds,’ he says, shrugging. ‘He doesn’t sound familiar, though.’ But he explains that there are thousands and thousands of settlements all around the country.

Kellie is a good listener and a better kisser, too, and can stay silent for hours while I tell him about growing up in mom’s house, and how everybody thinks Karly can’t speak and only I know the truth. He laughs out loud when I describe Jenny whom I can only see, and her pinched look and old- lady face and habit of looking down her nose at me like I’m the nine-year-old in my mind now like she was, when her brain dyed.

I feel comfortable talking about my mother with him too, and how it used to be when she was alive, and it was just the three of us- me, her, and Rachel. I tell him about the sock hops and the way my mom used to sing us lullabies, even though I can only remember a few snatches of the songs. Maybe it’s the way he listens so quietly, and stares at me steadily with his eyes bright and warm, and never judges me.

(The feeling passes) Or do they really- the warmth of his hands draws it out of me.

And, of course, we kiss. A unique time in my mind- I even tell him about the last thing my mom ever said to me, and he just sits and rubs my back when suddenly I feel like

I’m about to cry. We kiss so much that when we’re not kissing it feels weird like I get used to breathing through his lips and into his mouth. Slowly, as we get more comfortable, I start to explore other parts of her body too. The delicate structure of her ribs under her skin, her boobs and shoulders, butt, and vag. She- there- like chiseled stone, the soft curls of pale hair on his legs, the way his skin always smells a little bit like the deep- sea- all beautiful and strange.

The first time I’m shaking. Then I let him draw my whole shirt over my head and lie me down in the bright sunshine and just stare at me. Primary I’ll only let him pull my shirt aside and kiss my collarbone and shoulders. Even crazier is that I let him look at me, too.

Besides, I just know he’s looking at me thinking I’m wrong or deformed.

I'm suddenly aware of how pale I look in the sunshine, and how many moles I have spotting up and down my chest. I keep having the urge to cross my hands over my chest, to cover up my breasts, to hide.

'Beautiful,' But then he breathes, and when his eyes meet mine, I know that he really, truly means it.

Part: 9

Marcel-

He said to me- Kiss this of mine...

That night, for the first time in my life, I stand in front of the bathroom mirror and don't see an in-between girl. For the first time, with my hair swept back and my nightgown slipping off one shoulder and my eyes glowing, I believe what Marcel said. I am beautiful.

But it's not just me. Everything looks beautiful. A kiss is a lovely trick designed by nature to stop speech when words become unnecessary.

But then again it does not tell you this:

that love will turn the whole world into something greater than itself. Even the dump, shimmering in the heat, an enormous mound of scrap metal and melting plastic and stinking things, seems strange and miraculous, like some alien world transported to earth. In the morning light, the seagulls perched on the roof of city hall look like they've been coated in thick white paint; as they light up against the pale blue sky, I think I've never seen anything so sharp and clear and pretty in my life.

Rainstorms are incredible: falling shards of glass, the air full of diamonds. The wind whispers Marcel's name and the ocean repeats it; the swaying trees make me think of dancing.

Everything I see, and touch reminds me of him, and so everything I see, and touch is perfect.

Time jumps forward... It leaps. It pours away like water through fingers. Every time I come down to the kitchen and see that the calendar has flipped forward yet another day, I refuse to believe it. A sick feeling grows in my stomach, a leaden sensation that gets heavier every day.

Thirty- three days until the procedure.

Thirty- two days.

Thirty days.

And in- between, snapshots, moments, mere seconds; Marcel is smearing chocolate ice cream on my nose after I've complained I'm too hot; the heavy drone of bees circling above us in the garden, a neat line of ants marching quietly over the remains of our picnic; Marcel fingers in my hair; the curve of his elbow under my head; Ray whispering, 'I wish you could stay with me,' while another day bleeds out on the horizon, red and pink and gold; staring up at the sky, inventing shapes for the clouds: a turtle wearing a hat, a mole carrying a zucchini, a goldfish chasing a rabbit that is running for its life.

Snapshots, moments, mere seconds: as fragile and beautiful and hopeless as a single butterfly, flapping on against a gathering wind.

There has been a significant debate in the scientific community about whether the desire is a symptom of a system infected with amour deliria Nervosa or a precondition of the disease itself. It is unanimously agreed, however, that love, and desire to enjoy a symbiotic relationship, meaning that one cannot exist without the other. Desire is enemy to contentment; desire is an illness, a feverish brain. Who can be considered healthy who wants?

The very word want suggests a lack, an impoverishment, and that is what desire is: an impoverishment of the brain, a flaw, a mistake. Fortunately, that can now be corrected. The streets are unbearable during the day, the sun unrelenting, and people rush the parks and beaches, desperate for shade or breeze. It gets harder to see him. East End Beach- normally unpopular- is packed most of the time, even in the evenings after I get off work. Twice I show up to meet him, and it's too dangerous for us to talk or make a sign to each other, except for the quick nod that might pass between two strangers.

Instead, we lay out beach towels fifteen feet apart on the sand. He slips on his headphones and I pretend to read.

Whenever our eyes meet my whole body lights up like he's lying right next to me, rubbing his hand on my back, and even though he keeps a straight face, I can tell by his eyes that he's smiling. Nothing has ever been so painful or delicious as being so close to him and being unable to do anything about it: like eating ice cream so fast on a hot day you get a splitting headache.

I start to understand what Marcel said about his 'mom' and 'uncle' - about how they even missed the pain after their procedures. Somehow, the pain only makes it better, more intense, more worth it. The garden is suffering from the heat.

It hasn't rained in more than a week, and the sunlight filtering through the trees - which in July fell softly, like the lightest footstep - now slices dagger-like through the canopy of trees, turning the grass brown. Even the bees seem drunk in the heat, circling slowly, colliding, hitting up against the withering flowers before thudding to the ground, then starting dazedly back into the air. One afternoon Marcel, and I are lying on the blanket. I'm on my back; the sky above me seems to break apart into shifting patterns of blue and green and white.

Marcel is lying on his stomach and seems nervous about something. He keeps lighting matches, watching them flare, and blowing them out only when they're almost at his fingertips. I think about what he told me that time in the shed: his anger about coming to Pittsburgh, the fact that he used to burn things.

There is so much about him I don't know - so much past and history buried somewhere inside of him. He has had to learn to hide it, even more than most of us. Somewhere, I think, there is a center to him. It glows like a lump of coal being slowly crushed into diamonds, weighed down by layers and layers of the surface.

So much I haven't asked him, and so much we never talk about. Yet in other ways, I feel like I do know him, and have always known him, without having to be told anything at all.

'It must be nice to be in the Wilds right now,' I blurt out, just for something to say. Ray turns to look at me, and I stammer quickly, 'I mean - it must be cooler there. Because of all the trees and shade.'

‘It is.’ He props himself up on one elbow. I close my eyes and see spots of color and light dancing behind my lids. For a second Marcel doesn’t say anything, but I can feel him watching me. ‘We could go there,’ he says at last... I think he must be joking, so I start to laugh. He stays quiet, though, and when I open my eyes, I see his face is totally composed.

‘You’re not serious,’ I say, but already a deep well of fear has opened inside of me and I know that he is. Somehow- I know, too, that this is why he’s been acting strange all day: He misses the backwoods.

‘We could go if you want to.’ He looks at me for a beat longer and then rolls onto his back. ‘We could go tomorrow at... After your shift...’

‘But how would we-’ I start to say...

He cuts me off...

‘Leave that to me...’ For a moment his eyes look deeper and darker than I have ever seen them, like tunnels. ‘Do you want to...?’

It feels wrong to talk about it, so casually, lying on the blanket, so I sit up... crossing the border is a capital offense, punishable by death, and even though I know that Marcel still does it sometimes, the enormity of the risk hasn’t really hit me until now. ‘There’s no way,’ I say, almost in a whisper. ‘Is it impossible...?’

The fence- and the guards- plus the guns.’

‘I told you, and to leave that to me- okay?’ He sits up too, reaches out and cups my face quickly, smiling. ‘Anything’s possible, Liv,’ he says, one of his favorite expressions. The fear recedes... I feel so safe with him... I can’t believe that anything bad can happen to me or us... when we’re together. ‘A few hours,’ he says... ‘Just to see.’

I look away... ‘I don’t know...’ My throat feels parched; the words tear at my throat as they come out. Marcel leans forward, gives me a quick kiss on the shoulder, and lies down again next to me. ‘No big deal...’ he says, throwing one arm over his face, and eyes to shield him from the sun. ‘I just thought you might be curious, that’s all.’

‘I am curious...?’ - As to what...?

‘Liv, it’s fine- if you don’t want to go with you.

Seriously...? It was just an idea... that I had.’ I nod... even though my legs are sticky with sweat, I hug them to my chest. I feel incredibly relieved, and also disappointed, at the same time.

I have a sudden memory of the time Rachel dared me to do a back dive off the pier at Willard Beach and I stood trembling at its edge, too scared to jump. Eventually, she let me off the hook, bending down to whisper, ‘It’s okay, Liv. You’re not ready.’ All I would want was to get away from the edge of the pier, but as we walked back onto the beach, I felt sick and ashamed.

That’s when I realize: ‘I do want to go,’ I burst out.

Marcel removes his arm... ‘For real...?’ I nod, too afraid to say the words again... to him. I am worried- if I open my mouth, I’ll take it back.

Part: 10

Marcel sits up slowly, I thought he would be more excited, but he doesn’t smile. He just chews on the inside of his lip and looks away.

‘It means breaking curfew...’

‘It means breaking a lot of rules...’ He looks at me then, and his face is so full of concern- it makes something ache deep inside of me- like lust. ‘Listen, Liv...’ He looks down and rearranges the pile of matches he has made, placing them neatly side by side. ‘Maybe it’s not such a good idea? If we get caught that is- I mean... Like what if you or I get caught.’ He sucks in a deep breath one, that he did not know he was holding- in for so long... ‘I mean, if anything ever happened to you, I could never forgive myself.’

‘I trust you,’ I say and mean it 150 percent. He still won’t look at me... why?

‘Yeah, but - the penalty for crossing over -’ He takes another deep breath. ‘The penalty for crossing over is -’ At the last second, he can’t say death.

‘Hey!’ I nudge him gently with my body, and or elbow. It’s an incredible thing, how you can feel so taken care of by someone and yet feel, also, like you would die or do anything just for the chance to protect him back.

‘I know the rules. I’ve been living here longer than you have.’

He cracks a smile then. He nudges me back...

‘Hardly.... At all... wow... shit... piss... crap... fucking... dick- waa- ed...’

Part: 11

‘Born and raised. You’re a transplant.’ I nudge him again, a little harder, and he laughs and tries to catch hold of my arm. I squirm away, giggling, and he stretches out to tickle my stomach. ‘Country bumpkin...!’ I squeal, as he grabs out, and wrestles me back onto the blanket, laughing...

‘City slicker,’ he says, rolling over on top of me, and then kisses me. Everything dissolves heat, explosions of color, floating.

We agree to meet at Back and Yellow Cove the next evening, a Wednesday; since I won’t be working again until Saturday, it should be relatively easy to get Hanna’s mom to allow me to sleep over at Hanna’s. Ray walks me through some of the major points of the plan. Crossing over isn’t impossible, but hardly anyone risks it. I guess the whole punishable by- death thing isn’t really a big attraction.

I don’t see how we’ll ever make it past the electrified fence, but Ray explains that only certain portions of it are actually electrified. Pumping electricity through miles and miles of fence is too expensive, so relatively few stretches of the fence are actually ‘online’: the remainder of the fence is no more dangerous than the one that encircles the playground at Deering Oaks Park. But as long as everyone believes that the whole thing is juiced up with enough kilowattage to fry a person like an egg in a pan, the fence is serving its purpose just fine.

Part: 12

‘Smoke and mirrors, all of it,’ Marcel says, waving his hand vaguely. I assume he means Pittsburgh, the laws, maybe all of the USA. When he gets serious a little crease forms between his eyebrows, a tiny comma, and it's the cutest thing I've ever seen. I try to stay focused...

'I still don't see how you know all this,' I say. 'I mean, how did you guys figure it out...?'

Did you just keep running people at the fence, to see whether they got fried in certain places...?' Ray cracks a tiny smile at me... 'Trade secrets, but I can tell you there where some observational experiments involving wild animals.' He raises his eyebrows. 'Ever eaten fried beaver?'

'Ou- ah...'

'Or fried skunk?' 'Now you're just trying to gross me out.'

There are more of us than you think:

That's another one of Marcel's favorite expressions, his constant refrain. Sympathizers everywhere, uncured and cured, positioned as regulators, police officers, government officials, scientists.

That's how we'll get past the guard huts, he tells me. One of the most active sympathizers in Pittsburgh is matched with the guard who works the night shift at the northern tip of the bridge, right where we'll be crossing. She and Ray have developed a sign, on nights he wants to cross over, he leaves a certain flyer in her mailbox, the stupid photocopied kind that takeout delis; and dry cleaners give out.

This one advertises for a free eye exam with Dr. Jaheah (which seems pretty obvious to me, but Ray says that re- sister's, and sympathizers- live with so much stress they need to be allowed their little private jokes,) besides whenever she finds it she makes sure to put an extra-large dose of Valium in the coffee; she makes for her husband to drink during his shift.

'Poor guy,' Ray says, grinning... at me... 'Nope- no matter how much coffee he drinks, he just can't seem to stay awake.' I can tell how much the resistance means to him, and how proud he is of the fact that it is there, healthy, thriving, shooting its arms through Pittsburgh. I try to smile, but my cheeks feel stiff, it still blows my mind that everything I've been taught- like- is so wrong, and it's still hard for me to think of the sympathizers; and resisters as allies and not enemies... Nonetheless, sneaking over the border will make me one of them beyond a shadow of a doubt. At the same time, I can't seriously consider backing out now. I want to go; and if I'm honest with myself, I became a sympathizer a long time ago, when Ray asked me whether I wanted to meet him at The Cove, and I said yes.

I seem to have only hazy memories of the girl I was before then- the girl who always did what she was told and never lied and counted the days until her procedure with feelings of excitement, not horror and dread. The girl who was afraid of everyone and everything. The girl who was afraid of herself.

When I get home from the store the next day, I make a big point of asking my mom if I can borrow her cell phone. Then I text Hana: 'Sleepover tonight with- Hanna? Text message- Read's- 'Sleepover 2- night- W/ - H.'

Part: 13

I/we girls feel- 'All girls do with make- up is make themselves feel more self-conscious.' 'I feel that wet wipes are a girl's best- friend, no more just rubbing it all in, and they're good for the underarms too.'

Looking back- Music- scales: Here is how to remember this- Every good boy does fine- rhymes with the line- E G D F. Space rhymes with face- F A C E. do you see ones you hit a be in treble it goes the downward.

1 and e 2 and e 3 and 4 four do that- I want to say to music people of today.

The squiggly thingie is a rest use it and stop like a period in a sentence, god breath here- it did- it needs to go 200 beats per- minute. What is rests? Use um! I don't read 90 words a minute either, yet I can do it right now, and not fuck up slow it down... and do this too. You don't need to audio tune so much if you know this shit here. Stop rushing time and give my chair to a freshman, I no more than she ever will. Six years- I studied with the master teacher- Mr. Paul Walker of IUP- I have his background in all bass, and even strings and winds.

Um- don't say anything back to this. Or I will make you look like a fool in front of your friends. The same can be said to the teacher that fakes he way through everything that I had for a class in the past. So- you learn it- I did this shit way-way on the back- ass hole- no thanks to you-you owe in companion you all do- me- oh- one of these things is not like the other- yeah you don't get it do you- retard! Sue me!

You fucked with the wrong guy! On a trumpet, if the ball matches the tip of your nose in height and angle then that is right- end of the story. You bake my life again and back your face! And you need to fix my teeth for that one also thanks for the cap. I love this one how to hold a trumpet this is for my line that was taken away for I could not handle it- you take your right hand and wrap your pinkie around the C- hold the ring. Lightly overlap the 3 fingers on top of the vails- for you that don't get it- or can handle it- the thing that goes up and down to you.

Don't mash your whole face in the mouthpiece! And F natural is not F sharp for the little one. Yet I can say that for the freshmen knows it all. I don't claim to know it all but- what happened to the ways it was years before? Left hand- wrap your thumb around the back of the valves, index and pointer around the two in the front, with the middle one in the hock ring, and the pinkie resting on the 3- valve slide not under not above on top. Do you need a picture to get it? I can sign that for yah- in your blue pen!

Naturals are the ones up there with nothing next to it. So- what flat and what sharp and with now minor over major, do you know?

Karly said- 'Understatement here for real's: 'The Pony Express' school's newspaper said- quite- 'Jenna T is the biggest flirt, and the most likable... Just say she is mostly to succeed- and I giggle my ass off at that one too.'

This has been our code recently whenever I need her to cover for me. We've told mom we've been spending a lot of time with Allison Dalsin, who recently graduated with us. She and her family are even richer than Hana's family, and Allison is a stuck-up bitch. I dirty and poor- or so they say- Yet I shake it off- oh uh ah- shake it off! Hanna originally protested against using her as the mysterious 'A,' on the basses that she didn't even like to think about pretend hanging out with her, but I convinced her in the end.

(Remembering the past)

Mom would never call the HERE FAMILY to check up on me. She'd be too intimidated, and probably embarrassed- my family is impure, tainted by mom 2nd husband's defection and, of course, by my mother, and Mr. Dalsin is the president and founder of the chapter of that piece, that I was talking about.

Allison could hardly stand to look at me when we were in school together, and way back in elementary school, after my mother died, she asked to switch desks to be farther away from me, telling the teacher that I smelled like something dying.

Hanna's response comes almost immediately. 'U got it. 'C u tonight.' The text message read- saying: 'You have got it- I will see you tonight.'

I wonder what Allison would think if she knew I would have been using her as cover for my boyfriend. She would freak out for sure, and the thought makes me smile. A little before seven o'clock I come downstairs with my overnight bag slung conspicuously over my shoulder. I have even let a few my pajamas poke out, funny I were them out like the most girl yet there off at home, I run around naked there- I have packed the whole bag exactly as- I would have if I were really going to Hanna's.

When mom gives me a flitting smile and tells me to have a good time, I feel a brief pang of guilt. I lie so often and so easily now. Then it's not enough to stop me- not at all. Once outside I head toward the North End, just in case Jenny or mom is watching from the windows. The walk is long, and I make it to Deering Highlands just as the last of the light is swirling out of the sky. As always, the streets here are deserted. I push through the rusted metal gate that surrounds the possessions, slide aside the loose slats covering one ground- floor window, and winch myself into the house. The darkness surprises me, and for a moment I stand there, blinking until my eyes adjust to the low light.

The air feels sticky and stale, and the house smells like mildew. Various forms begin to arise, and I make my way into the living room, and to the mold spotted sofa. Its springs are busted, and half of its stuffing has been torn out, probably by mice, but you can tell that once it must have been pretty- elegant, even.

I fish my clock out from my bag and set the alarm for eleven-thirty. It's going to be a long night. Then I stretch out on the lumpy couch, bawling my backpack underneath my head. It's not the world's most comfortable pillow, but it will do. I close my eyes and let the sounds of the mice scrabbling, and the low groans, and the mysterious ticking of the walls lull me to sleep.

I wake up in the darkness from a nightmare about my mother. I sit up straight, and for one panicked second don't know where I am. The faulty springs squeal underneath me and then I remembered it all in the past in my mind. I fumble for my alarm clock and see that it's already 12:21- I know I should get up but I still feel groggy from the heat and the dream, and for a few more instants I just sit there, taking deep breaths. I'm sweating; the hair is sticking to the back of my neck.

My dream was the one I usually have but this time reversed: I was floating in the deep- sea, treading water, watching my mother perched on some crumbling ledge hundreds and hundreds of feet above me- so far- I couldn't make out any of her features, just the blurry lines of her silhouette, framed against the sun. I was trying to call out a warning to her, trying to lift my arms, and wave at her to go back, away from the edge, but the more I struggled the more the water seemed to drag at me and hold me back, the consistency of glue, suctioning my arms in place and oozing in my throat to freeze the words there.

In addition, all the time and was drifting around me like snow, and I knew at any second she would fall and smash her head on the jagged rocks, which poked up through the water like sharpened fingernails.

Then she was falling, flailing, a black spot growing bigger and bigger against the blazing sun, and I was trying to scream, but I couldn't, and as the figure grew larger, I realized it wasn't my mother headed for the rocks. It was Ray...

That's when I woke up. I finally stand, slightly dizzy, trying to ignore a feeling of dread. I go slowly, gropingly, to the window, and am relieved once I'm outside, even though I'm in more danger on the streets. But at least there's a bit of a breeze. The atmosphere in the house was stifling.

Ray is already waiting for me when I arrive at Back and Gold Cove, crouching in the shadows cast by a group of trees that stand near the old parking lot. He is so perfectly concealed that I almost trip over him.

Part: 17

He reaches up and draws me down into a crouch. In the moonlight, his eyes seem to glow, like a cat's. He gestures silently across Back and Gold Cove, to the line of twinkling lights just before the border: the guard huts. From a distance, they look like a line of bright white lanterns strung up for a nighttime picnic- cheerful, almost.

Twenty- one feet or more beyond the security points is the actual fence, and beyond the fence, the backwoods. They've never looked quite so strange to me as they do now, dancing and swaying in the wind. I'm glad Ray and I agreed not to express until we crossed over. The lump in my throat is making it difficult to breathe, much less say anything.

We'll be crossing over at the tip of Bridge so high up in the valleys, on the northeast point of the cove: if we were swimming, a direct diagonal from our meetup point. Ray impels my hand three times. That's our signal to move to the sounds... I follow him as we skirt the perimeter of the cove, being careful to avoid the marshland; it looks deceptively like grass, especially in the dark, but you can get sucked down almost knee-deep before you realize the difference. Ray arrows from shadow to shadow, moving noiselessly on the grass. In places- he seems to vanish completely before my eyes, to melt into the darkness.

As we loop around to the north side of the cove, the guard stations begin to outline themselves more clearly- becoming actual buildings, one-room huts made of concrete and bulletproof glass. Sweat pricks up on my palms, and the lump in my throat seems to quadruple in size until I feel like I'm being strangled.

I suddenly see how stupid our plan sounds to me and them. A hundred - a thousand! Things could go wrong. The sentry guard in number twenty- two might not have had his coffee yet- or he might have had it, nonetheless not enough to knock him out- or the Valium might not have kicked in. As well as even if he is asleep, Ray could have been wrong about the parts of the fence that aren't electrified; or the city might have pumped on the power, just for the night.

I'm so scared I feel like I might faint. I want to get Ray's attention and scream that we have to turn around, call the whole thing off, but he's still moving swiftly up ahead of me, and screaming anything- or making any noise at all will bring the guards down on us for sure. The guards make the regulators look like little kids playing cops and robbers.

Regulators and raiders have nightsticks and dogs; guards have rifles and tear gas.

Part: 18

We finally reach the northern arm of the cove. Ray drops down behind one of the larger trees and waits for me to catch up. I go into a crouch next to him.

This is my last opportunity to tell him I want to go back. But I can't speak, and when I try to shake my head no, nothing happens.

I feel like I'm back in my dream, getting slurped into the dark, floundering like an insect stuck in a bowl of honey.

Maybe Ray can tell how frightened I am.

He leans forward and fumbles for a moment, trying to find my ear. His mouth bumps once on my neck and grazes my cheek lightly- which despite my panic makes me shiver with pleasure- and then skims my earlobe.

'It's going to be okay,' he undertones to me, and I feel slightly better.

Nothing bad will happen when- I'm with Ray.

Then we're up again.

We run off moving forward at intervals, sprinting silently from one tree to the next and then stopping while Ray listens- as well as makes sure there has been no change, no shouts or sounds of approaching footsteps.

Stum- p- Stum- p- Stum- p!

The sound is getting closer to me.

Part: 19

The moments of exposure- of dashing from cover to cover- grow longer as the trees begin to thin out, and the whole time we're getting closer and closer to the line where the fringe of grass and growth disappears altogether and we will have to move out in the open, completely vulnerable.

It is a distance of only about fifty feet from the last bush to the fence, but as far as I'm concerned it might as well be a lake of burning fire.

Beyond the torn- up remains of a road, that existed before Pittsburgh was enclosed is the fence itself: looming, silver, in the moonlight, like some enormous spider webs. A place where things stick, get caught, are eaten. Ray has told me to take my time, to focus; when I pick my way over the barbed wire at the top, but I can't help but picture myself impaled on all of those sharp, spiny barbs. And then, suddenly, we are out- past the incomplete protection obtainable by the trees, moving quickly over the loose gravel and shale of the old road. He and I move ahead of me, bent nearly double, and I stoop as low as I can, but it doesn't make me feel any less exposed.

Fear it screams...

Hold Me

Ray

Part: 1

Kellie- Yes it screams slams into me from all sides at once; I have never- ever known anything like this fear. I'm not sure whether the wind picks up at that second or whether it's just the terror cutting through me, but my whole body feels like ice hangs from the trees in her story.

Ray- The darkness seems to come alive on all sides of us, full of darting shadows and malicious, looming shapes, ready to turn into a guard any second, and I picture the silence suddenly punctuated by screams, sighs, horns, bullets. I picture blooming pain and bright lights.

The world seems to transform into a series of disconnected images: a bright white circle of light surrounding guard hut twenty-two, which expands ever outward, as though hungry and ready to swallow us; inside, a guard slumped backward in his chair, mouth open, sleeping...

Kellie- Ray turning to me, smiling- is it possible he's smiling? Stones dancing underneath my feet like at prom night in his arms. Everything feels far away, as unreal and flimsy as a shadow cast by a flame. Even I don't feel real, I can't feel myself breathing or moving, though I must be doing both.

As well as then just like that, we're at the fence. Ray springs jump into the air, and for a second he pauses there. I want to scream Stop! Stop! And halt!

Part: 2

Ray- I picture the crack and sizzle as her body connects with fifty thousand volts of electricity, but then she lands on the fence, and the fence sways silently: dead and cold, just like he said.

Kellie- I should be climbing up after him, but I can't. Not immediately. A feeling of wonder creeps over me, slowly pushing out the fear. I have been so terrified of this and things like this... of the border fence since- I was a baby.

I have never gotten within five feet of the fence now. Do you see it...? We've been warned not to, had it drilled into us. They told us we would fry; told us it would make our hearts go haywire, kill us instantly. Now I reach out and place my hand through the chain-link, run my fingers over it. Dead and cold and harmless I am like her or so I feel I see Jenny, as I angel looking at me saying to do this all she is dark and looking at me with evil eyes, the same kind of fence the city uses for playgrounds and schoolyards. In that second it really hits me how deep and complex the lies are, how they run through Pittsburgh like sewers, backing up into everything, filling the city with stench: the whole city built and constructed within a perimeter of lies. Ray is a fast climber; he's made it halfway up the fence.

He looks over his shoulder and sees that I'm still standing there like an idiot, not moving. He jerks his head at me like, what are you doing?

I put my hand out to the fence again and then immediately jerk it back again: A shock runs through me all at once, but it has nothing to do with the voltage that should be pumping there. Something has just occurred to me.

They have lied about everything- about the fence, and the existence of the- Invalids, about a million other things besides. They told us the raids were carried out for our own protection.

They told us the watchdogs were only interested in keeping the peace. They told us that love was a disease. They told us it would kill us in the end. For the very first time, I realize that this, too, might be a lie.

There were mess and stink and blood and the smell of skin burning. There where people: people standing and eating, talking on the phone, frying eggs or singing in the shower.

I'm overwhelmed with sadness for everything that was lost and filled with anger toward the people who took it away. My people- or at least, my old people.

'What?' I ask. The intensity of his gaze nearly knocks the breath out of me - as though he's staring straight at me.

He doesn't answer me directly. He flips forward a few pages in the book, but he doesn't glance down at it. He keeps his eyes on me the whole time.

'You want to hear a different one?' He doesn't wait for me to answer before beginning to recite, 'How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.'

There's that word again: love. My heart stops when he says it, then stutters into a frantic rhythm.

'I love thee to the depth and breadth and height my soul can reach.' I know he's only speaking someone else's words, but they seem to come from him anyway. His eyes are dancing with light; in each of them, I see a bright point of candlelight reflected.

He takes a step forward and kisses my forehead softly. 'I love thee to the level of every day's most quiet need.' It feels as though the floor is swinging - like I'm falling.

‘Alex-’ I start to say, but the word gets tangled in my throat. He kisses each cheekbone- a delicious, skimming kiss, barely grazing my skin. ‘I love thee freely.’ ‘Ray,’ I say, a little louder. My heart is beating so fast I’m afraid it will burst from my ribs. He pulls back and gives me a small, crooked smile.

Browning,’ he says, then traces a finger over the bridge of my nose. ‘You don’t like it-’

The way he says it, so low and serious, still staring into my eyes, makes me feel as though he’s actually asking something else.

‘No. I mean, yes. I mean, I do, but -’ The truth is, I’m not sure what I mean. I can’t think or speak clearly. A single word is swirling around inside me- a storm, a hurricane- and I have to squeeze my lips together to keep it from swelling up to my tongue and fighting its way out into the open. Love, love, love, love. A word I’ve never pronounced, not to anyone, a word I’ve never even really let myself think.

‘You don’t have to explain.’ He takes another step backward. Again- I have the sense, confusedly, that we’re actually talking about something else.

I’ve disappointed him somehow.

Whatever has just passed between us- and something did, even if I’m not sure what or how or why- has made him sad.

I can see it in his eyes, even though he’s still smiling, and it makes me want to apologize, or throw my arms around him and ask him to kiss me. But I’m still afraid to open my mouth- afraid that the word will come shooting out, and terrified about what comes afterward. ‘Come here.’ Ray sets the book down and offers me his hand. ‘I want to show you something.’

He leads me over to the bed, and again a wave of shyness overtakes me. I’m not sure what he expects, and when he sits down, I hang back, feeling self- conscious.

‘It’s okay, Hanna,’ he says. As always, hearing him say my name relaxes me. He scoots backward on the bed and lies down on his back and I do the same, so we’re lying side by side. The bed is narrow. There’s just enough room for the two of us.

‘See?’ He says, tilting his chin upward.

Above our heads, the star's flare and glitter and flash: thousands and thousands of them, so many thousands they look like snowflakes whirling away into the inky dark. I can't help it; I gasp.

Part: 3

I don't think I've ever seen so many stars in my life. The sky looks so closely- strung so taut above our heads, beyond the roofless trailer- it feels as though we're falling into it, as though we could jump off the bed and the sky would catch us, hold us, bounce us like a trampoline.

'What do you think?' He asks.

'I love it.' The word pops out, and instantly the weight on my chest dissipates. 'I love it,' I say again, testing it. An easy word to say, once you say it. Short. To the point. Rolls off the tongue. It's amazing I've never said it before.

I can tell Ray is pleased. The smile in his voice grows bigger. 'The no plumbing thing is kind of a bummer,' he says. 'But you have to admit the view is killer.'

'I wish we could stay here,' I blurt out, and then quickly stutter, 'I mean, not really.

Not for good, but - you know what I mean.'

He moves his arm under my neck, so I inch over and lay my head in the spot where his shoulder meets his chest, where it fits perfectly. 'I'm glad you got to see it,' he says. For a while, we just lie there in silence. His chest rises and falls with his breathing, and after a while, the motion starts to lull me to sleep.

My limbs feel impossibly heavy, and the stars seem to be rearranging themselves into words. I want to keep looking, to read out their meaning, but my lids are heavy too: impossible, impossible to keep my eyes open.

'Ray?'

'Yeah?'

‘Tell me that poem again.’ My voice doesn’t sound like my own; my words seem to come from a distance.

‘Which one?’ He whispers.

‘The one you know by heart.’ Drifting; I’m drifting.

‘I know a lot of them by heart.’

‘Anyone, then.’ He takes a deep breath and begins: ‘I carry your heart with me. I carry it in my heart. I am never without it.’ He speaks on, words washing over me, the way that sunlight skips over the surface of water and filters into the depths below, lighting up the darkness. I keep my eyes closed. Amazingly, I can still see the stars: whole galaxies blooming from nothing- pink and purple suns, vast silver oceans, a thousand white moons.

It seems like I’ve only been asleep five minutes when he is gently shaking me awake. The sky is still inky black, the moon high and bright, but I can tell by the way the candles are pooling around us that I must have been out for at least an hour or so.

‘Time to go,’ he says, brushing the hair off my forehead.

‘What time is it?’ My voice is thick with sleep.

‘A little before three.’ Alex sits up and scoots off the bed, then reaches out a hand and pulls me to my feet. ‘We’ve got to cross before Sleeping Beauty wakes up.’ ‘Sleeping Beauty?’ I shake my head confusedly.

Part: 4

Ray laughs softly. ‘After poetry,’ he says, leaning down to kiss me, ‘we move on to fairy tales.’

Then it’s back through the woods; down the broken path that leads past the bombed-out houses; through the woods again. The whole time I feel as though I haven’t quite woken up. I’m not even scared or nervous when we climb the fence. Getting over the barbed wire is infinitely easier the second time around, and I feel as though the shadows have texture, and shield us like a cloak. The guard at hut number twenty-one is still in the exact same position- head tilted back, feet on his desk, mouth open- and soon we’re weaving our way around the cove.

Then we're slipping silently through the streets toward Highlands, and it's then I have the strangest thought, half dread and half wish: that maybe all of this is a dream, and when I wake up, I will find myself in the Boondocks. Maybe I'll wake up and find I've always been there, and that all of Pittsburgh- and the workshops, and the curfew, and the procedure- was some long, twisted nightmare. I only spent a few hours there and I miss the Wastelands already- the wind through the trees that sound just like the ocean, the incredible smells of blooming plants, the invisible scurrying things- all that life, pushing and extending in every direction, on and on and on.

No walls-

Part: 5

Then Ray is leading me to the sofa and shaking out a blanket over me, kissing me and wishing me a good night. He has the morning shift at the labs and has just barely enough time to go home, shower, and make it work on time. I hear his footsteps melting away into the darkness.

Then I sleep. Love: a single word, a wispy thing, a word no bigger or longer than an edge.

That's what it is: an edge; a razor. It draws up through the center of your life, cutting everything in two. Before and after.

The rest of the world falls away on either side. Before and after- and during, a moment no bigger or longer than an edge.

'Live free or die,' I say- as she did. One of the strangest things about life is that it will chug on, blind and oblivious, even as your private world- you're little carved- out sphere- is twisting and morphing, even breaking apart. One day you have parents; the next day you're an orphan. One day you have a place and a path. The next day you're lost in a wilderness.

And still, the sun rises, and clouds mass and drift and people shop for groceries and toilets flush and blinds go up and down. That's when you realize that most of its- life, the relentless mechanism of existing- isn't about you. It doesn't include you at all. It will thrust onward even after you've jumped the edge.

Even after you're dead.

When I make my way back into downtown Pittsburgh in the morning, that's what surprises me the most- how normal everything looks. I don't know what I was expecting.

I didn't really think that buildings would have tumbled down overnight, that the streets would have melted into rubble, but it's still a shock to see a stream of people carrying briefcases, and shop owners unlocking their front doors, and a single car trying to push through a crowded street. It seems absurd that they don't know, haven't felt any change or tremor, even as my life has been completely turned upside down. As I head home, I keep feeling paranoid, like someone will be able to smell the Wilds on me, will be able to tell just from seeing my face that I've crossed over.

The back of my neck itches as though it's being poked with branches, and I keep whipping off my backpack to make sure there aren't any leaves or burrs clinging to it- not that it matters since it's not like Pittsburgh is treeless.

Nonetheless, no one even glances in my direction. It's a little before nine o'clock, and most people are rushing to get to work on time. An endless blur of normal people doing normal things, eyes straight ahead of them, paying no attention to the short, nondescript girl with a lumpy backpack pushing past them.

The short, nondescript girl with a secret burning inside of her like a fire.

It's as though my night in the Wilds has sharpened my vision around the edges. Even though everything looks superficially the same, it seems somehow different- flimsy, almost, as though you could put your hand through the buildings and sky and even the people. I remember being very young and watching Rachel build a sandcastle at the beach. She must have worked on it for hours, using different cups and containers to shape towers and turrets. When it was done it looked perfect, like it could have been made out of stone.

But when the tide came in, it didn't take more than two or three waves to dissolve its shape entirely. I remember I burst into tears, and my mother bought me an ice cream cone and made me share it with Rachel.

That's what Pittsburgh looks like this morning: like something in danger of dissolving. I keep thinking about what Ray always says: There are more of us than you think.

I sneak a glance at everyone who goes by, thinking maybe I'll be able to read some secret sign on their faces, some mark of resistance, but everyone looks the same as always: harried, hurried, annoyed, zoned out. When I get home, mom in the kitchen washing dishes. I try to scoot past her, but she calls out to me. I pause with one foot on the stairs. She comes into the hallway, wiping her hands on a dishtowel.

'How was Hanna's?' she asks. She flicks her eyes all over my face, searchingly, as though checking for signs of something. I try to will back another bout of paranoia. She couldn't possibly know where I've been.

'It was fine,' I say, shrugging, trying to sound casual. 'Didn't get a lot of sleep, though.'

'Mmm.' Carol keeps looking at me intensely. 'What did you girls do together?'

She never asks about Hana's house and hasn't for years. Something's wrong, I think.

'You know, the usual. Watched some TV. Hana gets, like, seven channels.' I can't tell if my voice sounds weird and high-pitched, or if I'm just imagining it.

Carol looks away, twisting her mouth up like she's accidentally gotten a mouthful of sour milk. I can tell she's trying to work out a way to say something unpleasant; she gets her sour milk face whenever she has to give out bad news. She knows about Ray, she knows, she knows. The walls press closer and the heat is stifling.

Then, to my surprise, she curls her mouth into a smile, reaches out, and places a hand on my arm. 'You know, Lena - it won't be like this for very much longer.' I've successfully avoided thinking about the procedure for twenty-four hours, but now that awful, looming number pops back into my head, throwing a shadow over everything.

Seventeen days.

'I know,' I squeeze out. Now my voice definitely sounds weird. Carol nods and keeps the strange half-smile plastered on her face. 'I know it's hard to believe, but you won't miss her once it's over.'

'I know.' Like there's a dying frog caught in my throat.

Carol keeps nodding at me really vigorously. It looks as though her head is connected to a yo-yo. I get the feeling she wants to say something more, something that will reassure me, but she obviously can't think of anything because we just stand there, frozen like that, for almost a minute.

Part: 6

Finally- I say, 'I'm going upstairs. Shower.' It takes all my willpower just to get out the words. Seventeen days keep tearing through my mind, like an alarm.

Mom seems relieved that I've broken the silence. 'Okay,' she says. 'Okay...' I start up the stairs two at a time. I can't wait to lock myself in the bathroom. Even though it must be more than eighty degrees in the house, I want to stand under a stream of beating hot water, melt myself into vapor.

'Oh, Liv.' Mom calls out to me almost as an afterthought. I turn around and she's not looking at me. She's inspecting the fraying border of one of her dish towels. 'You should put on something nice. A dress- or those pretty white slacks you got last year. And do your hair. Don't just leave it to air- dry.'

'Why?' I don't like the way she won't look at me, especially since her mouth is going all screwy again. Hanna snaps her head up and looks at me. 'Not alone,' she says quickly. 'Of course, not alone. Her mother will be coming with us. And I'll be here too, obviously. Besides, she had her procedure last month.' As though that's what's bothering me.

Today?' I have to reach out and place one hand on the wall. Somehow, I've managed to completely forget about her some that neat printed name on a page.

Hanna must think I'm nervous about meeting him because she smiles at me.

'Don't worry, Liv. You'll be fine. We'll do most of the talking. I just thought you two should meet, since -' She doesn't finish her sentence. She doesn't have to.

Since we're paired. Since we'll be married.

Bedtime oh bedtime-

Since I'll share my bed with him, and wake up every day of my life next to him, and have to let him put his hands on me, and have to sit across from him at dinner eating canned asparagus and listening to him rattle on about plumbing or carpentry or whatever it is he's going to get assigned to do.

'No!' I burst out.

Kellie- I look startled or so you would say. She's not used to hearing that word, certainly not from me.

'What do you mean, no?'

I lick my lips. I know refusing her is dangerous, and I know that it's wrong.

But I can't meet her soon enough. I won't. I won't sit there and pretend to like him, or listen to mom talk about where we'll live in a few years, while Ray is out there somewhere- waiting for me to meet up with him, or tapping his fingers against his desk while he listens to music, or breathing, or doing anything at all. 'I mean -' I struggle for an excuse.

'I mean- I mean, couldn't we do it some other time? I don't really feel good.' This, at least, is true.

'Oh,' I say. The way I figure it, life's the sum total of all our small mistakes, little tragedies, bad choices. Parents teach you a lot of things, but the most important thing they teach you is this: how people will fuck you up in the future. If they're any good, they teach you to get used to it.

Like the party's before- I haven't been upstairs since the first time Ray brought me here with Hanna when we made it a point to explore every room of the house. I didn't even think to check the second floor earlier this afternoon. Here it's even darker than downstairs, if possible, and hotter too, a black and drifting mist.

He starts shuffling down the hall, past a row of identical wooden doors.

'This way...' Above us, a frantic sound of fluttering: birds, disturbed by the sound of his voice. I think he stops at the door to the master bedroom. I shiver. But Ray is emphatic, so I let him open the door and I pass inside in front of him. As soon as we walk into the room I gasp and stop so suddenly he bumps into me. The room is incredible; it's transformed to me in a romantic thought. I was his wife now... a happy ever after no yet that's- a life no?

'Well?' There's a note of anxiety in-

His voice... 'What do you think of this?' I can't answer him immediately.

He has shoved the old bed when he jumped in a naked, into one of the corners, and swept me off my feet, the floor perfectly clean. The windows- or what windows remain are flung open, so the air smells like gardenias and night-blooming jasmine, their scents drifting in on the wind from outside. He has arranged our blanket and books in the center of the room and unraveled a sleeping bag there too, surrounding the whole area with dozens and dozens of candles stuck in funny makeshift canisters, like old cups and mugs or discarded Coca-Cola cans, just like they were at his house in the woods. He is the most beautiful thing I have ever seen.

'Ray-' I start to say, Suddenly I'm almost frightened of him, terrified of his absolute and utter perfection. He leans forward and kisses me. And when he's pressed so close to me, with the softness of his T-shirt brushing my face and the smell of suntan lotion and grass coming off his skin, he feels less frightening.

'It's too dangerous to go back to the Wilds.' His voice is hoarse, as though he's been yelling for a very long time, and a muscle is working furiously in his jaw. 'So, I brought the Wilds here. I thought you would like it.'

'I do. I-I love it.' I press my hands against my chest, wishing I could somehow be even closer to him. I hate skin; I hate bones and bodies. I want to curl up inside of him and be carried there forever. His face so quickly I can barely catch them all, and his jaw keeps twitching back and forth. 'I know we don't have much time like you said. We hardly have any time at all.'

'No!' I bury my face in his chest, wrap my arms around him and squeeze.

Unimaginable, incomprehensible: a life lived without him. The idea breaks me- the fact that he's almost crying breaks me- the fact that he did this for me, the fact that he believes I'm worth it- kills me. He is my world and my world- is him, and without him, there is no world.

'I won't do it. I won't go through with it. I can't. I want to be with you. I need to be with you.'

He grasps my face, bends down to look into my eyes. His face is blazing now, full of hope.

‘You don’t have to go through with it...’ he says.

His words come tumbling out.

He’s obviously been thinking about this for a long time and only trying not to say it. ‘Liv, you don’t have to do anything. We could run away together. To the backwoods. Just go and never come back. Only- Liv, we couldn’t ever come back.

You know that, right? They’d kill us both or lock us up forever- a lifetime of running: that’s what I’ve just said I wanted. I take a quick step backward, feeling suddenly dizzy.

‘Wait,’ I say. ‘Just hold on a second.’

He releases me. The hope dies in his face all at once, and for a moment we just stand there, looking at each other.

‘You weren’t serious,’ he says finally.

‘You didn’t mean it.’

‘No, I did mean it, it’s just-’

He walks to the window and stares out at the night, refusing to look at me.

His back is terrifying again: so solid and impenetrable, a wall.

‘I’m not scared. I’m just-’ I fight a murky feeling. I don’t know what I am. I want Ray and I want my old life and I want peace and happiness and I know, that I can’t live without him, all at the same time.

‘My mother,’ I burst out. He turns then, looking startled. I’m as surprised as he is. I didn’t even know I was going to say the words until I said them. ‘I don’t want to be like her. Don’t you understand? It’s me or her take your pick and he said the words...

I will...

Chapter: 141

Retrograde...

‘He is,’ he says, and makes an abrupt right turn down a short hallway that ends at a heavy iron door. This is marked with another printed sign. It says, LIFERS. Underneath the word, someone has written in pen, HA-HA.

‘What are you-’ I’m more confused than ever, but I don’t have time to finish formulating my question. Alex pushes his way out the door and the smell that greets us- of wind and grass and fresh things- is so unexpected and welcome that I stop speaking, taking long, grateful gulps of air. Without realizing it, I’ve been breathing through my mouth. Do you feel like you’re falling? You’ve taken this step in front of you is further from the truth. You fall apart in front of me again, Again! Yes- denial isn’t the way to forgiveness.

We’re in a tiny courtyard, surrounded on all sides by the stained gray sides of the Vaults. The grass here is amazingly lush, reaching practically to my knees. A single tree twists upward to our left, and a bird is twittering in its branches. It’s surprisingly nice out here, peaceful and pretty- strange to be standing in the middle of a little garden while enclosed by the massive stone walls of the prison, like being at the exact center of a hurricane, and finding peace and silence in the middle of so much shrieking damage.

He has moved several paces away. He is standing, head bowed, with his eyes on the ground. He must have a sense too of the peacefulness here, the stillness that seems to hang in the air like a veil, covering everything in softness and rest. The sky above us is darker than it was when we first entered the vaults: Against all the grayness and shadow, the grass stands vivid and electric, as though it is lit up from inside. It will rain at any second. It has to. I have the sensation of the world holding its breath before a giant exhales’s, balancing, teetering, about to let go.

‘Right here.’ He points to a shard of rock sticking up crookedly from the ground. ‘That’s where my father is.’ The grass is broken up by dozens of these rocks, which at first glance appeared to be naturally, haphazardly arranged. Then I realize that they’ve been deliberately tamped down into the earth. Some of them are covered in fading black markings, mostly illegible, although on one stone I recognize the word BLAIR and on another DIED.

Tombstones, I realize, as the purpose of the courtyard dawns on me. We're standing in the middle of a graveyard. Alex is staring down at a large chunk of concrete, as flat like a tablet, pressed down into the earth in front of his feet. All the writing is visible here, the words neatly printed in what looks like a black marker, their edges slightly blurred as though someone has been continuously retracing them over a long period of time. I look at her grave- I want to reach out and slip my hand into Ray's, but I don't think we're safe.

There are a few windows surrounding the courtyard on the ground floor, and even though they are thickly coated in grime, someone could walk by at any moment, lookout, and see us. 'Your friends, and sister?'

He nods, then shakes his shoulders, a sudden movement as though trying to jerk himself away from sleep. 'Yeah.'

'He was here?'

One side of his mouth quirks up into a smile, but the rest of his face remains stony. 'For four years I have looked over these.' He draws a slow circle in the dirt with his toe, the first physical sign of discomfort or distraction he has given since we arrived. At that moment I am in awe of him: Since I've known him, he has done nothing but support me and give me comfort and listen to me, and all this time he has been carrying the weight of his own secrets too.

I say to you now dad- 'What happened?'

I ask quietly. 'I mean, what did he...?' I trail off. I don't want to push the issue. It's funny that way, you can get used, To the tears and the pain, what a child will believe You never loved me, It's funny that way, you can get used, To the tears and the pain, What a child will believe, You never loved me, You can't hurt me now, I got away from you, I never thought I would, you can't make me cry, you once had the power, I never felt so good about myself, seems like yesterday, I lay down next to your boots and I prayed for your anger to end, Oh Father I have sinned; Oh Father you never wanted to live that way you never wanted to hurt me, why am

I running away, maybe someday, when I look back I'll be able to say you didn't mean to be cruel
Somebody hurt you too.

Ray glances at me quickly and looks away. 'What did he do?' he says. The hardness has returned to his voice. 'I don't know. What all the people who end up see us here in this town. He thought for himself. He avoids my eyes carefully. 'The dead ward,' he says quietly. 'For political prisoners, mostly. They're kept in solitary confinement. And no one ever gets released.' He gestures around him, to the other shards of stone poking up through the grass, dozens of makeshift graves. I would give anything to touch him, but the best I can do is an inch closer to him so that our skin is separated by only a few inches.

He looks at me then, shooting me a sad smile. showing off those awful teeth, but his eyes maintain their strange flatness, as though there's a curtain drawn over them. I wonder if this, for him, was a side effect of the cure, or whether he was always like that.

He tilts his head back, peering at Ray through narrowed eyes, grows even stronger. I remember those nights...

Kelly- Why?

Why- she and they ended it the way I did- so- that way everyone, even he would be able to see me, with their own eyes. So, they can see the wounds that they did to me. Realizing all the gashes, which they gave me over time, and the ones I give myself because of them. They all can look at me, and see it all... Just like, I see it every day when I look at my own reflection! They all can think- about what they have done to me. However, I do not think they would really care. If they did see me hanging there bare, lifeless, and limp.

They have no emotions for me in their pee- brained minds, to feel anything. I ask- can you grasp me; can you feel me? Can you get the impression of me hanging there- all by myself? I am so lonesome and afraid! You know- I do feel as if I would be better off being dead! Don't you think so too? How did I let things get so out of hand? Or did I? Is this all meant to be?

Really...?

I just do not know what to believe anymore. I sang throw the air and jumped. I did it! But not like I planned. One way or another that made me come to my senses. I got lose from the noose, on my tree swing, and fell hard to the ground below. That is when I walked into the home, with my head down. And went up the steps up to my room dripping wet. The books are all I have now with the stone that says their name, along with their faces looking back at me when I not looking to see them there.

Just like her, I answer myself- 'I know that there is not one person on this planet, who truly cares if I am even here or not.' Oh God- 'Why does my life have to be like this?' I do not think I can take any more of living in this town!

The PEOPLE, SCHOOL, EVERYONE, and EVERYTHING is so fucking FAKE! I feel that it is all just another way for the SOCIETY to make me feel inferior. Because they think, they are so SUPERIOR to me, and who I am to them. Every day of my life, I have felt like I have been drowning in a pool, with weights attached to my ankles.

I say Maggie- Of course, there is no way for me to escaping from the chains that are holding her him and me down. The one and only person, that holds the key to my freedom: WILL NEVER LET ME GO! I live in this small dull town for too damn long. It is a UNSYMPATHETIC, obscure, lonely, totally depressed and depressing place. All these streets surrounding me are covered with filth.

I respect myself more than that, but it is getting harder to regardless. If that is what it takes to be popular, I do not want it. These types of guys just are not worthy of me I suppose. The other girls can have them all they want, and you know they do. Then lastly, nerds a sad and pathetic grope of creatures that are so misunderstood.

Really through no fault of their own. Most of the time, it is just the way they all are, and not what they choose to be. Just like most of us out there. You know I am not even on that list either. As for me- and my category, I would have to say that I am in the 'Rejected classification.' or 'Reject!' However- I do not want anybody's pity. I just want their RESPECT! That is just something I cannot have been in this unwanted grouping. Being in this rejected category is not always pleasant as you can see. I have learned to adapt and overcome life's many difficulties up to now at least.

I have learned that some people can do harmful and heinous things to others, yet they prosper. Then someone like me has to SUFFER through it all. It eats at you over time: 'People are fake anger and frustration will eat at you like cancer.' Until it kills you! When I look back at everything in my past, the whole photograph comes into focus. 'I believe that revenge is not the answer, everyone gets a turn.' It is just a matter of time, what coming around for you, will you be like my friends and family, or like me or her or him?

What do you choose to be?

Haven's Rockville

The Beginnings', Maggie's granddaughter kind-a...

The year is October 7, 1916, it was said, that she's was a young girl, was buried beneath a weeping willow tree, down towards the old train tracks, and that she would take over some of the young minds, that would come her way as that walked along them at the twilight of a creepy night.

Her grave marked with a noting other than the year, and a name that is rubbing away from age, she was so young and was tied down by a lover on the tracks- for it to cut her in two, that train still comes down this line with its haunting steam, and load blow on the horns. And some say they see her as they sit in the cars looking up close in their face... as if she is feeling their soul, to see if she wants to take it, as she did with mine, I am now her.

Just she is the girl in the window, that is lost looking for a way out, she haunts the old Victorian next to the tree and tracks. Nothing more than a chipping rock, and a pale face looking out- and we have all see her, she is real- even the one that doesn't believe, like the ones that don't think God is real say, she is a real ghost. Not more than a girl looking for happiness, some have even seen her walking to her swing, which blows in the wind of the old tree that has to be 100 years old now.

I didn't want to draw attention to her resting place, as I look at the train is doing 25 miles per hour or so- heading for the Rockville Bridge in Pennsylvania, this creepy house stands, and so does she in her room looking out.

Nevertheless, I couldn't leave her without remembrance, so I went to see her for myself and end up feeling her from the inside like she feels me on the outside. She'll never sleep peacefully I found out looking over the story, no one to disturb her, she just was too young, no sounds but whistle, and the vibration of the train coming down the line. That she flows in her essence... testifies to the power of friendship and generosity to conquer greed and depression. A wonderfully imaginative, startlingly moving and at times wickedly funny fantasy.

Part: 1

On a dark- October 4th 100 years almost to the day... I started doing this... every evening, she is at sitting at the window watching the storm, or me or something like that, I was as the little girl, Through the darkness sees a faint light, of the steamer going by like always.

Before she could come to the window the light disappeared. She sees me to like a spooky dream in your mind. I waited some minutes, to feel connected to her... Very faintly the light reappeared, flickering through the trees, she was with me... and I was in her, and she in me.

She looked down at me and decided to keep quiet this time, as she went down and into my body. I was absorbed in her, slipping oh so quietly out of the room, to be with me down by the tracks, and crept down the stairs to the back door, she went through... all the walls.

The track I walked cautiously along the edge, staying in the shadows, with her holding my hand. The excitement made me tremble... Everywhere, I go I have no privacy, I have no satisfaction, I can't get it... it's not something I can have.

My phone is tapped, and my PC hacked. I am being watched right now, I just feel that I am. She knows everything I do, everywhere I go. She sees who I am friends with and end it just because she can. She sits me up just to fall into her trap. I've used a fake name, it is all the same, I am her toy in her sick twisted game. At what point, do you say- I've had enough. Stop it- get a life!

Sarah- Friend come and go, I know that nothing can last more than a week with me; it has been like this all my life. You just get attached, and she puts an end to it so fast... you would not believe me. Why I don't know maybe it's because she must have me on her own, and she can't see me have the love of another that is not her? I don't know... all I know is that everyone leaves me before I want them too. But like I have a choice. No, not really. If you want me- we need to...

Run... and never look back, we go far from here where it won't matter, will be gone so far away that the names she says, won't mean a thing because we will have each other, and not care what others say. Our happiness would lie in each other's arms and the ring on your finger. I don't want to trap you, but you need to say yes to me, so this can happen! The sooner the better!

I am trapped by an overprotective and malicious boyfriend, who beats you. Who makes you work like a fool...? The jerk won't even buy you a ring after so many years of dating.

He trapped you!

Do you really think he loves you? Or is he just trapping you until he finds something more or just settles? You're tipped by your town. You are tipped because you like me but can't. You're trapped because of what they all say about me. All that matters to me is what you think, not them. You're tipped by him and he makes sure that you're not even allowed to look at another man like me. Plus, it all goes back to her, the one that trapped us both in not being in love. Forbidden to: dating, see, looking, feel, or even talk to one another.

I am- Tripped into missing out, tripped into being the weirdo, as the girl lost in the window...

I am- Tripped in to not knowing what you would feel like, in a hug or kiss. Tripped into be hated for no reason other by her rumors.

Tripped into missing you. You're trapped into wishing for me and dreaming of what could be. Yet your friends love him and not me, with me all they see in the past that is not true, a past that I was trapped into. I am trapped by you- in so many ways, that you never even knew about.

I am- Trapped because I have fallen in love with you and can't seem to forget about you. You're on my mind all the time. No blocks can stop us from someday getting together.

That is only if you get out of the trap of allowing everyone to push you around. You have to be strong and fight. I am trapped into fighting for your hand, and your love, and I just don't know why I keep trapping myself to you. I just don't understand why I can't get you out of my mind. I know one thing I never trip you like everyone seems to do around here, I am not like that. If you want me fine, and if not fine. I am trapped into being a hopeless romantic...

Me- I have to get out. I don't care what my mind says is logical, what my heart says it needs! There have been rumors of an uprising free of all the restrictions of the world. I'm done caring about the consequences. It's time to be self-interested and do some for me. The longing of you I can't take it anymore. The passion I have for you has my skin on fire! I can't sleep, I can't eat, and I can function right. Without you being in my life. It seems like you and I are trapped into having chastity belts, with no way to unlock them and connect. Your boyfriend has your key and she has mine.

I am- Trapped into the fantasy of us sleeping together playing in my head. Trapped into wanting more than a one-night stand with you. Like that even possible. You're trapped into making him happy, will on the inside you're miserable.

Trapped!

I am without you next to me now. I want to feel your kiss; I want to feel your body spooning or unstop of mine. I want to go out with you, and not have everyone stop it.

I want to go everywhere with you. I want you to live with me, you have a home here, if you can get out of your trap, I may be able to get out of mine. I want you to share my bedroom... I know it's crazy! But- I want you to be my girl. You have trapped me under the spell of your green eyes, and shy little sensual ways. 'Instead of losing my mind to you, I was hoping it would have been something else. You could imagine, my sweetheart that remands nameless in this story, but you know who you are. Do me this favor and take it from me. I don't want to be thirty when I get married either, I want it now as I want you now.'

'I don't care when as long as it's soon, I don't care how as long as it happens, I don't care who sees us, it could be in a car in a local store parking lot. It's all the same to me along as I am with you!' As long as you're the one, I want you to be the first in everything, you shouldn't feel trapped by him to feel love like that. I am not sure if I'll be your first, but I want to be the last. You should be feeling the love from me.

The love I can give and take with you.

Its love I have for you... not entrapment.

Really, I don't think I am being selfish it is just time for this all happens to me. I have waited too long now!

Self-seeking I just need you, to save me! Trapped into taking care of everyone else, while nobody takes care of me.

Trapped into setting at home and going out to getaway.

Trapped into using other's money, because they won't let me work, I have everything I need, but not what I want.

Trapped into doing work, and not getting paid. Trapped for life, and afraid!

Taped in my faith, yet to me, that is a good thing. Hopeful that there is a life after death if not then life is not worth living is it. Taped into fear of death, trapped into seeing death all around me. Tapped into being around life, that just doesn't get it.

Trapped into feeling really cold. Trapped into being warm to those that are cold. Taped into seeing the small light, in the never-ending darkness. Trapped in never ever giving up.

Sarah- (Longing and Desire) I am longing to see you. Longing to be with you, longing to hear from you. I am longing for you. A longing like desire, I am desiring what I am longing for, and desiring is what trapping me to you right now. Longing and desire that he has for you is pushing you away from him, and also me.

Like a dark storm over your head. You have longed for me, but can it be, but will you and I be more than longing and desire? Will we be always been trapped in too long and desire, by the ones that long and desire to keep us apart?

I am longing and desiring your kiss on my lips! I am longing for your desiring hug with my hand right above your hips. Letting go of the past, with its dark toxic memories seeing them slip and ripe from our grip and fade away, for a brighter happier day, all I can do is pray for the both of us. You and I, being together is a must! I just need to have your trust. Today, I feel alone...

Me- In the morning, when I woke up, I want to talk with my friends... But I couldn't find anybody... neither my life nor by me. My soul was eaten by loneliness... I have been living in a new place for four months, and I do not have a friend. I feel like I am cursed... Look, nobody writes even here. There are a lot of voices in my mind and I can't stop them.

‘That's now the fifth day of rain.’ Alayna said. ‘Shouldn't we do something together this weekend?’

The microwave turned on by itself, I knew it was her, playing games as I also feel her hugging me, the lights flickered, and my mom did not even blink. Alayna and Harold retreated into the living room, not sure what to do. The TV played an ad, for The Haunting- and a giggle- yet it's her giggles in me, not mine.

‘When something's strange in the neighborhood... I know that it's her taking my energy for her use-age.’ They held each other close, no sign of having a fall out just five minutes’ pass- my thinks I have lost it holding my own body for so long- Smalling like a nut.

They looked at the TV.

They looked at each other. ‘Alayna laughed. Today, I feel alone... I want to talk with my friends, on the tracks she is all I have or want. But I couldn't find anybody... else that gets me like she... It was a dark stormy night, and the train was coming fast at me, and I want it to run me down... she said this is what happened to me, the thunder awakened me or, so I thought, and I feel the wind of the train rush by me as I got out of the way in the nick of time.

Then- just like that- I don't know how- I was in my bed cozy and warm, with her in the sheets with me, however, that is when I saw her hovering over me, we- I looked up, I thought I was dreaming. Yet she called out my name and said...

'I'm here to protect you, take my hand and I can show you the way to the light.' It's like I could feel her inside me, inside my soul.

She was talking to me, without saying a word, I felt her through, I feel her emotions, and I feel a teardrop running down my cheek. It was the baby girl we lost when Alayna had a miscarriage, this baby is what broke us up, we blamed each other I wasn't sure- if I could trust her; she looked innocent enough, but something nagged at the back of my mind, something I ought to have remembered but couldn't quite grasp.

It's like I could see through her, she looked just like my wife, when she was about nine years old. Maybe younger? And we used to play in the sandbox together in our sweatshirts or less. I guess are mothers through that was cute... or something, I have the photograph. Anyways- that was the first time I met her in the sandbox as a boy, and the girl that is over me looks so much like her that it is eerie to me. But why is she looking down at me? I hadn't seen my wife for nearly ten years; the marriage hadn't lasted long. I guess we were better as friends.

The girl in front of me smiled shyly, just like Alayna used to, and held out her small hand. As I took her hand the storm fell silent and I felt a strange energy course through me. It like she was saying hello daddy. She would be 5 if she was alive. There is not a day or night that I don't think about what could have been.

But wait, the girl in front of me looked five, but our little Lucie would have been nine now. Was it really that long ago? I vowed to contact Sarah, to try to say all the things I thought of over the years we had been apart.

There was so much I had to tell her, so much I had to ask forgiveness for.

Up till now would she forgive me, would the love be there for me? Is my little girl letting me no something that I don't know as of now? Is Alayna in need of me? Why now, why am I seeing Lucie?

I remember, the day I met Alayna it seems like so long ago, she was a freshman and I was a senior. She was a cheerleader and I was in the marching band. She was popular as for me not so much. I will never forget the first time she held my hand; she was everything to me then. Maybe I love her too much and drive her away, but why did I have to lose my only baby, there was no other girl for me than Sarah. I never dated, or went out, and one point I felt like giving up on my life, yet I didn't.

And maybe this is why...

When we met in college, I could hardly believe she was the same little girl, I had played in the sandbox with. There was a big party after the game and Alayna came over to me to talk about music. She took my hand and led me into the garden, and that was the beginning of our life together.

I don't think we would have lasted together if we had not been so hard on each other; we knew what we had to lose and that kept us coming back to each other. It took something outside our control to cause a rift big enough to break us apart.

Her hand was soothingly warm as she guided me out of bed and over to the window. The storm was still quite ferocious, but we were in a bubble of calm, just me and Lucie.

I see my child not being her- It was amazing to think, she is my daughter, she a good kid, and I am getting to share these moments with her, moments that I thought I would never have. Really, I am just in awe of her and the blessings of God's goodness for letting this happen for me. So, that maybe I see the light without seeing the light. It's every man's dream to see his little girl grow up and be happy. I didn't have that, but I am blessed to have this now.

Me- I evoke when we made this little girl, several weeks before the big day. The room was all ready for the day she came home, the walls soft in a rosy shade, and the crib and everything else was white. A butterfly mobile over top to soothing her to sleep.

Now that baby tune that it plays is hunting me if played. The picture frame on the wall is empty, the rocking chair has never been used. The stuffed teddy never squeezed. The baby bottles never held. The pack of pampers on the changing table never opened. The girly outfits never off the hangers. The door was closed by me, locking the memories away, and behind me. I don't go in her room I just can't, it has not changed in years.

I was the happiest baddy in the world, the day I found out she was a baby girl. I loved her before she even had a name. I want to perfect her from all the bad in this world and to be what was good. Show her that daddy is the only man that she can really trust. I wanted to buy her all the pink dress that I could.

Take her to the park, she and her walk and talk. I wanted to go to every school play and sports game that she was going to be a part of... I wanted to read her a bedtime story, really, I just wanted to be her daddy! I even wanted to see her been a dreadful teenager, I wanted to see her go to her first dance.

I wanted to see her find someone that loved her as much as I do. I wanted to have that dance the night she would have married. I wanted to see her grow up to a woman and give me grandbabies.

That would be perfect in my eyes and could do no wrong. That I could spoil. No man should have to see his baby girl go, before them it's the toughest thing in life to have to deal with and you never get over it, you learn to accept with it, really what chose- do yah have otherwise.

I can see here everywhere; she is with me all the time. She is mine. She is my love.

She is everything.

She is The Little Girl in White named:

Sarah, and I am trapped! BY HER...!

When I woke up my head buzzed, and my legs ached.

I reached under my pillow and found my phone; Alayna was calling. 'Hey Sarah,' I answered groggily. She answered, 'Where are you? We've been waiting to start for thirty minutes.'

I groaned as I knew she was talking about our presentation, 'can't you just do it with the others?' Alayna gave a deep sigh and then spoke with a stern voice, 'This is something you've planned for years, it's your project, not ours. Hurry up and get here now!'

She hung up. 'Great, another day in PowerPoint hell' I through driving to the company. My legs still hurt, but I tried to ignore it as I ran through my bits of the presentation while I was driving. I looked at my slides for just 10 seconds and looked back up to see a car heading my way without control speed. As I yanked the steering wheel abruptly, I lost control of the car. I hit something and flipped forward. I got queasy and dizzy with all the flipping. When the car finally settled, I wasn't sure which way was up. An instant later my phone started to ring again.

Listen, we no time to wait for you. I'll put you on video, you can do the presentation by phone.' 'No! Wait for Sarah! I need help...' It was too late I could see the hall, a roomful of curious. A room was full of potential investors, some with a shocked expression, some possibly disgusted. I could hear people complaining, 'What is going on here?' Alayna saved the situation easily 'the Skype quality is really bad again'. The people murmured in agreement. One guy held up his hand and said in his accent, 'I still want to see your great invention. Let's hope this is not a paper tiger.' 'No, it's not.' Alayna said, 'It's an automatic driving assistant.' 'It's really good' I added. 'How is it good?'

Someone asked, 'You're in a smoking wreck!' 'Well...you see if the assistant had been driving, this would not have happened.' The guy who raised his hand before said, 'I don't think I like your logic, but, can we buy your assistant?'

Part: 2

-One dark day in December, I sat looking out of the window - she was me - and in me full. She had been awaiting her friends for the past half an hour, but still, after a whole morning, no one had turned up. She began to worry.

Something was definitely wrong.

Her mother was baking this evening, so the smoke alarms would be going off. She couldn't use the phone. But the kitchen was a mess. A terrible, horrifying mess. Her mother stood jumping from counter to oven, covered in flour and several other indistinguishable stains.

'Mum?

What have you-' she began as several loud knocks came from the front door.

'Lucie?

Can you come and help me for a minute, I said it out loud and my mom said your imaginary friend- really?’

You’re going to need to see someone if this keeps going on... her mother called for her to stop at once.

Lucie sighed and left her place at the window, looking out the nock. Maybe baking was a distraction, and to keep her from worrying. Her mom was worried that she was even...

‘She is sleeping with her imaginary girlfriend!?’ Hearing her calling out her name in a soloing moment... her mom was looking in... to the eye-rolling moment.

Lucie is the girl- I am, or was...

One for grief, two for pleasure, three for a girl, I’m stuck on three, I love the girl. I just can’t get any further, then here even if she not real to them she is to me. My head is thick with sounds, of her, my mouth thick with her as the girl body fluid. All about her, I can hear the chatterers- her tedious laughing, disdain fulling me, a boisterous guffawing, a tiding. Wicked communications, I can see them now, black against the fogged nights moon, as I walk in the eeriness. All the birds look at me with like glass eyes, something else, as the moon follows too, she is coming, with me... she is speaking to me, in my head.

See- see what you do to me, and make me do for you-you see?

Part: 3

It’s a glorious evening, warm but not too warm, the sun starting its lazy descent, shadows lengthening, and moving with the trees that a blowing, falling leaves, and the light just beginning to burnish the trees with golden shades, and the reds and oranges, she to be so vivid; contesting to the greens and darker colors. There are familiar faces on these trains, that I know, yet they’re all need to hear, people I see every week of my life, going to and froth. I recognize them, and they probably recognize me, like me but as I am now not as no-longer- me. I don’t know whether they see me, as I was, as I am, or who I am now, though, or for what I really am, or no longer.

They, all the toured kiddie faces, pass in a blur of evening sunshine, the cars pass me, as I just miss getting hit by the cars, blowing me back, I feel the gust. The train is rattling along, and I know that she is making her way through all the cars, heading for the tunnel, it gets dark out the window, and she see free to make them scream by taking over their minds and making them think crazily, like making the one girl get up and walk between cars, and death in the smokiness until she passed out and feel in-between, and the wells cut her in two, it was ruled out as accidental death, that she slipped making her way to the dining car, I know - not so-o.

Death is the game she likes to play, maybe for she passed on too soon in this life, she needs to feed on the young of this life.

I see trans off in the distances, In the opposite direction of me, and if we're traveling slowly enough yet making its way up to me, as I stand there... on the tracks... Sometimes I catch myself trying to remember the last time, that I had expressive physical contact with another with a girl or boys I don't like boys there- Lick-ie, like mixing chocolate milk with O-J, and then baffling chunks and having to lick that up too.

Unprejudiced a hug or a heartfelt squeeze of my hand, it was here the only one that I feel close too, and my heart twitches, with her energy running through me. Sometimes, not often, I can see them from this side of the track, think I don't understand - not one of them - as I do her.

Just like these kids sitting in the train car, sometimes catch a glimpse of her, I remember, seeing her up in the home - that is adjacent the old cemetery, dating back to the 1880s where she is not at rest, and with my home, she is there, that was her up there in the window, I too look out the same windows both of us in the same terrace. Just as I do look out the train window, seeing our home go by as we pass thinking about how we do the same things looking out that window at all the life that is dead - and dying like us. I can imagine all of them looking at me, yet not as she looks at me, she has loved me they don't.

Sitting or standing as I am now, with her feet up on the table even, I have to snap out of a trance, yet there is not a trace of her to be seen unless she wants to be seen by others than me, a glass of apple juice in my hand, I poured two and sat one by me for her - my mom looked at me as if I crazy - think it was for my imaginary friend, yet when the glass went up to her mouth and was moving free and fast in her hand - that only I could see, my mom freaked out hardcore, 'How did you do that?'

'I didn't Louie did...' I said.

‘Um-hum- then tell her to go home...’ ‘She lives here- with me... WITH US- ‘IS THAT SO- she is working, in the dining room.

On paperwork, be for going to work- at Capital One.’ she wanted me to say to you. She said don’t be mean to her.’ Mom just rolled her eyes- like, I was being cute.

I can imagine the feeling of her hands in mine, the weight of them, comforting and defensive. I love that she holds my hand whenever, unlike all of them that are real, I KNOW THAT THE REAL!

Louie is now standing behind my mom tapping and pulling on her top, her hand on her shoulders, she feels the pullback, and she gets cold shivers, asking if it was me- I said- no- it’s WAS my IMAGINARY FRIEND, I SAID- she likes to play awareness games.

(PRE-LUNCH MONDAY, October 24, 2016,) I read everywhere that a train can rip the clothes right off you when it hits your body, it’s a rush, it’s not that unusual, death by train, that how they found her clothes ripped off under the wheels, I know the story well.

Look into my room, which was her room, which is our room, The pile of clothes from last week is still there, of mine that she calls scandalous, and it looks dustier and more neglected than it did a few days ago, my mother even said- ‘it looks like a five-year-old is living here,’ along with- ‘it’s not on me is on Louise, a hundred a year ago, it happened to her, they say she was looking for a rush, some say she went crazy over a boy, some say, she was in love with a girl, and could not go there, some say she needs a way out of her room and mom and dad’s hold on her, she was seen at least once every couple of days- standing on the tracks- until, I’m not sure how many of those are accidental or true.’

I look carefully, into all, and think, I don’t care, she here for me now, as the train rolls slowly past me doing as she did, the hint of blood-covered clothes, rush through my mind, and the sound of crushing bones, but I can’t see any that said- why she was run over. The train stops at the signal, as usual, she runs for me, and through me and she now in my body said stand here and stay here as long as you can it’s a rush, feel the powers. Just like that, I wake up in bed and before I could think of why, I hear my mom call my name to do some pain in the ass thing, like always.

I can see her standing next dinner nook, that has all glass old windows wrapped around a hundred-year-old table in front of the French doors, that are adjacent. She's wearing a bright print dress; her feet are bare.

My mom is looking over her shoulder, asking if I playing games, she feels the strange energy of her pulling on her back, tapping on her shoulders, as she walks back into the house walking around out to the porch; dad is making breakfast, Louise said that's a really girly thing for a man to do, of her time, I keep my eyes fixed on Louise, I know she is going to slam the door in her face, I could see her past memories running through my mind- do you see them- all the thing and the way the house looks in the early 1900s...

Just like that, I am starting there on the old bridge, that is nothing but a relic, to the new one that is old now, and I standing in the middle with nowhere to run... over topwater.

Some say you and see a nude girl standing in the water, looking over the bridge, I KNOW it's HERE! SPOOKY- no she just remembers the past, that she doesn't want to let go of. This one is a two-lane- that looks as flimsy as it was unsafe to walk or ride on no-no side rails to keep you in, no walkway, just track and spaces down to water below 100 feet or so, in an x- truss that looks as if it should have never- ever worked, to hold together. The one I know- well is stone, and long and safe. Would you jump off the side or run, she said run- it the fun, then jump at the last second.

I can even see the faint flicker of a lander next to the door, that I use now, not much has changed, yet everything has changed, then just like that I am back standing on the tracks... as the train starts to inch forward, (Rip) I am starting to cry, I don't want to do this yet her power is holding me here, and also for the love and caring.

1916 ford truck sitting in the tall grass, tick- ticking away, an older man starting it with a crack, its mostly made of wood, and has gas lights... that got ever so brighter as the motor, got stronger in the cold, leaves blowing around him, train sound of in the distances, dust, covering all, the things in the dim room that I call my kitchen.

Louise- I particularly don't want to see my home like this, I want to remember it as was, the one that used to be mine.

Through her mind I could see the one I know, being made... with wood forms, and the arches being sat. I've lived at number 214 hickory lane for all my life, as did she, delightfully content, and absolutely- insufficient. I can't look at it now, this way she said to me. That was my only hope, that I can't stand to let go of... Not my parents' just hers... I really don't care to see them anyways they did not get me, anyway. I see here mom and dad feel the same to her- maybe that is why I get her.

Every day I tell myself not to look at what has changed and what has stayed the same, and every day I look, and get said, said only. I close my eyes tightly and count to ten, and make my run, seeing all my life up 'till fifteen, and even past.

There, it's gone I am off the side flying through the air now, nothing to see. She looks through me in me and out through me, saying things like Oh- my first home. She said I remember seeing all these homes being built, now there being ripped down and or falling down now, why? She asked- I said, 'no one cares about old things like you do.' They don't care? No time to care I said back to her... is there something wrong with the time, that is moving faster?

What no, it's just not what's important... so-o those bizzie boxes are then? She asked, you're not like them with them through, I see why... don't say. I can't bear to look at it 'round here now. I try not to, I don't want to, I want to, I can't, I don't want too, I can't help myself, from feeling said, said only. I bit my lip so hard, it bled some, I still remember the pain I felt when I saw her watering the rose bushes near the fence, it was a ghostly vision, in my eyesight, of her in a her 1900's shirt stretched tight over her belly, even though there is nothing I want to see there, I feel there is something I need to see here, what I don't know yet, maybe it's unrest, of someone she lost here. Even though anything, I do see will hurt me, I still have to do it.

Louie- Even though I remember- so clearly how it felt that time when I lost my girlfriend I don't remember, did I do it, was it me, or them.

I looked up and noticed that the emulsion linen blind in the upstairs bedroom was gone, replaced by something in soft baby blushing peach; I see the home in splits of old and new, her way of think of the past and then mine as now, it's like have double exposure of a photo in my mind and eyesight. (Rip) Run- run- running like hell yet again, the train starting to pick up the pace, and I am running for my life what does it mean, to keep running away and not facing it?

Sometimes grim, sometimes bright and sunny, sometimes cold and windy western Pennsylvania, small coal townhouses lined, next tagged trackways bridges and industrial buildings with broken windows, that through her eyes I see as steam smocking working factories buzzing with workers, make a change, for change like nicks and small dollar amounts.

How will today be, with her sitting in class running me- mind body and soul? At school, even if she is running through me, I can't think of anything but her, my studies seem to slip... I sit, on the train, that I want to kill me, as did her, for the trill, or to escape, which-ever that's what I want, and I don't get why, the closer I get to Rockville, the more nervous I feel, every time, like I pass this spot that I no took her life; burden builds; I feel this is going to be my expiry!

Yet, I want more than SEX! It's more thrilling! On its side, someone has painted: LIFE IS NOT A PARAGRAPH, but that how I would have described, what is happening to me seeing all the world in the past, yet in my time, and yet, hers... what the... freak! Like- like- When she inside me my eyes change color from brown to green and no- one really notices it. I deliberate about the parcel of dresses on the side of the track and I feel, with her holding me tightly, making out, kissing, touching and feeling, I am in love with a girl that is not real, yet she is, just from another time, yet is it preordained to be, this way?

Through my throat is closing up. Life is not a paragraph, and death is no parenthesis. There's a soiled, low-slung concrete building on the right-hand side, old wood mills, and coal, works, linking the track about five hundred miles before we get into school, passing through the old towns that link life of the past and now together.

FRIDAY, October 7, 2016

(PRE-LUNCH: like, 10 or so-o...)

My mother used to tell me that, I had an overactive imagination; my dad said that, too, yet he got it more than she. I can't help it- that I feel that she is real, I look down at my feet and see that, I am wearing flats, that a black and white checkers.

The train tracks, I see all colors of trees becoming naked at some point soon. Light blue dress, perhaps-jumbled is now off me and next to me under the viaduct. It's probably rubbish- now, as I make mind love to my girlfriend that haunts me, scrubby little wood up the bank, I see boys looking off the distances' saying look at her go... soloing.

She feels just like the steam engines vibrating through me, it could have been left behind by me I am sure, and some boy that work this part of the track, would see it and say some girl was killed here, they're here often enough, saying they see young girls on the line and doing dirty things. No one is to be found... Or it could be something else, they say- think all the calls in are pranks.

The train surprises and predicaments and screams back into motion, and the wheel's slip, the little pile of faces look out at me like her the see me, they're all in clothes, me no so- I disappear from view, and run into their faces, they look at me with awe, before the can think or blink there in the tight trundle, moving at a brisk cross-country runner stride.

The line starts at St. Mary's and runs to Hershey The scenic expedition from Altoona's horseshoe curve is supposed to take 10 hours and 30 minutes or so-o through state park and forest, (118.8 mi) kind-a next to US-219, snaking its way through trees and Allegany hills that would take your breath away, yet on a steamer of the past from 1880's it can change, but it rarely does, number 14 is balling down the tack scratching her horn- on time in the dusk- and the lights inside the cars filler: this section of the track is ancient, decrepit, beset with signaling problems and never-ending engineering workers for it's a wonder- to see one end to the other of the same train making its way... 'round. The train crawls along; it tremors past me as the haunt of the little girl in white the girl they say is haunting these lines for years, and water towers, is at the one end of the cover, where old number 14 halts, then it's off for the bridges of heights, then the other over the water, and then past my old, Victorian houses, in after of the Kinzua bridge turned the train make a sharp turn all the way around, S where I am the most with her near,

Rockville directly next to the track and her, and I spot under the viaduct under the next to the water. Someone in the seat behind me gives a sigh of helpless irritation, and I think what do you have to complain about, it's the 8:05 at night, and you never hand what I did, slowly the endurance of the most seasoned commuter on the Amtrak line, and it blows past me and my hair rushes up- and I feel alive!

I remember when I would ride this train, for point a to b. My head leaning against the car window, I watch these houses roll past me like a tracking shot in a film, being pulled to fastly for it to be projected. They see me as just some small girl, I see them as others do not, I see life as a new life- through taking hers as mine; some would say for rest, yet maybe not so, I owner here you probably don't see what I am saying from this perspective, like she and I have this life and love we have, over me finding my why- being lost in time for years. Twice a day, I am offered a view into other lives, just for a moment I am lost in them and how the world is these days- 100 years passed. There's something comforting about the sight of strangers safe at home, like this girl, that I love, yet she made me safe with-in her.

On the train, as it passes you can see, texting girls, and boys on their phone, an absurdly ecstatic and upbeat chatter, in the vintage cars, smelling of good dinner food from the diner car- as they did back in my day as a girl riding the same very train- on this line. They the cars jingles around on the uneven tracks. Clicking along- you can feel and see that commuters shift in their seats, as they go down the line on tracks that seem to be floating in spots, rustle their newspapers, tap at their computers.

The train lurches and sways around the bend, slowing as it approaches a yellow signal- in my mind, I could see a flagman swing a lantern of the past. I try not to look up and see the number and light heading right for me as I have to make the choices to get off or not or it's over my head, I know that some are reading the news- on their new I- this and that... I was walking along this way from the station, yet my through of WHY blur in front of my eyes, as to why I am letting this train run me down and I standing still, nothing holds my interest other than her hold me hear. In my head, I can still see that little pile, of her, of clothes lying at the edge of the track, us nude in my mind making love- uncontrolled in passion.

Something she said she only found in me- and only in this next life.

Part: 4

(NIGHTFALL)

Beautiful sunshine, cloudless skies like today and for years here. Lucie was part of, a coal village, in the daybreaks we'd swim the half-mile to the tracks, if you did not want to take the long walk, next to the tall viaduct. To make, make love on secret hidden spot under the railway bridge; in the afternoons, I would walk the tracks, to bitter tonics of her in me fully, you could see the boys over the way watching us swarms around underneath, in faint shadow's you could see her the haunting body shape of the girl, with me, out of my body now to love me for me, also next to water her energy was stronger.

I take another gulp, feeling the taste of her, and another, and I feel empty as she gets stronger in me, but it's OKAY, I have three more in the plastic bag at my feet. It's Friday, so I don't have to feel guilty about drinking on the train. Thank God, It's Friday. The fun starts at this juncture...

It's going to be a lovely weekend, that's what they're telling us, time away from school, that is all my life was- she through inside me. In the old days, we might see us in sunrise lying on a blanket in speckled sunlight, she is nothing but a soul in me, I eat we date- yet is the reality not to them, but to me she is so-o. We might have seared out back with friends, that would not get us, too bad, I left them all for her, to be with and inside me, faces flushing, as they hear me talking to her in class, under my breath, with sun shining in the window, 'till the afternoon went on, walking the tracks home for lunch along with only her, arm in arm, falling asleep on the sofa, after the school day, she was all I needed, even if not physically there of the rest of the world to see, yet in my mind, she was everything, that made it physical.

Lovely sunshine I would take the walk to school in the fog- mist and even rainy days too, yet like today it's a cloudless sky, I- had like- no one to play with, nothing to do, I would go to her home, and I would see her looking down at me from the window, next to the mainline of crossing tracks. I was lost in her eyes... and ghostly whys of falling for me. Living like this, the way I'm living at the moment, is harder in the summer when there are so many hours of daylight, so the little cover of dusk, when everyone is out and about, being flagrant, aggressively happy.

It's exhausting, to me, and it makes you feel deprived, about not having them all, but that is why I found her and she- me, the weekend stretches out ahead of me, I have to get lost in her or I would lose it... and fill empty, when with her I do not.

MONDAY, JULY 19, 2016

(MORNING)

I just want to lean back in the soft, drooping seat, feel the warmth of the sunshine streaming through the window, I have become all her, and what she loves to do... time for me to walk to school I feel the carriage rock back, as it comes my way, fourth and back it rocks and squall's, the comforting rhythm of wheels on tracks and the blinding light makes me feel alive- through her like it did when I was just me. I'd rather be here, looking out at the horseshoe curve beside the track, than almost anywhere else. It's a relief to know that 7:05, is right on time, no holding back on the rail, I will stand here till the last moments, looking forward to the train to play chicken with me- where I have yet to make the choice to stay or get off.

There's a faulty signal on this line, of full green and she is heading my way doing 40. I see all the face looking at me, thinking I'm not gotten off the tracks in time in the cars the horn is walling, about halfway through her my journey she finds me. The rush I have with her to me is everything that makes me feel thriving when I know she is not a piece.

Lucie- I have a perfect view of all these traces for my room, where my soul was lock at a young age, yet I would not change that it's my favorite place to be the trackside house: and number 14 run me down- I was called crazy as a young girl for loving this so. I do believe that the girl inside me makes her energy make the signal not working right as the train is headed for me when most of the time this line wants trains going low or fully red. because it's almost always red; I accept it must be faulty, yet that just makes me smile on the inside, knowing she has the power, in any case, I know she is doing it through me with her influence, to see if the train will jump track, going so fast at me.

Most days this train only creeps by- when I standing here with her that is not so, sometimes just for a few seconds, of the time sometimes more, sometimes it's her seeing if the old viaduct can hold the weight of the heavy train, going too fast, it all about seeing if death and mayhem could happen, as it did to her, sometimes for minutes on end, I think off all the life she and I could take over in the carnage, which I usually do, and the train stops at this signal, under my power of what I want to happen, which is almost always does not stop, old 14 is much like the other iron houses along this stretch of track: I make her fly down the line at me, as it did then.

The towering viaduct narrow top to an overlooking the ghostly fog, runs down towards some railing, beyond which lies a few miles of no-mans-land, before you get to the railway town of Altoona. I know this house by heart, its time, she is no longer in the window looking down at me she is in me, looking down the line, yet this home, I know every block all the doorways, all the places to hide, I know the color of the curtains in the upstairs bedroom for 100 years back, I recall all the changes made by other homeowners too, not to my liking, I have seen many young girls take over what was mine in my room, and I have run through them and run them out of my room and home, yet not her.

I know that the paint is cracking off the bathroom window frame and seal, which was once a dark wood stain. The glass is missing on the one left lower pane that was just covered over with plywood...

I know that on warm summer evenings, the occupants of this house, of her, the girl I love and took over her mind, along with her mom and dad - I don't like them much they get in the ways of us. kitchen-extension, of my old farmhouse, has its own high-pitched roof, where I sometimes climb out of the large window to sit on the makeshift veranda on top of it with her, and we look over the lines - of track and the sky's and chat - of the past and what we're going to do in the upcoming days.

She has soft cheekbones dappled with a sprinkling of freckles, a fine jawline that is childlike yet teen, becoming a woman, like myself.

Witness- I know I saw it- 2 girls under there... I know I did. Like this morning, they've both got the day off, I've seen two girls out afar under the Rockville viaduct yet once more, is it my eyes or is it real. One of them has a glow - and the other seems to be drawn to her - as if she is taken as real or just an imaginary friend. Yet I see them, I know about her the girl that has the imaginary friend... I don't think she nuts. (This was said by a railroad worker - when questioned.)

Mom, I here upstairs in the room two girls giggling, painting, or maybe they're in the shower together, they're doing things together as if there is a real girl there, yet I look in at her showing nude, and it's just her having her girlie time, one her hands pressed against the tiles, and the other hands-on her front part of her hips, asking the make-believe girl to get there.

I walked away for a while then look in at her yet once more I see only one girl and she's lying in bed, my girl, yet I feel the coldness, and I see in her eyes she is no longer here like this make-believe girl has taken her over - and she is now not. Not my girl.

Mother - said - now - narrating: 'I never believed in ghosts, until, I feel her staring me down to back off, yet it was loving so I was okay with it. I thought she was harmless - and my daughter was safe - in make-believe land, or at least in Rockville, playing under the bridge.'

‘Because that’s the sort of thing they do, is make you feel there real to you and shout you out to the ones they once loved, to keep them for them... it’s what they do- it’s what they do- take them for themselves... she keeps saying.’

That day while he is making breakfast, or maybe they’ve gone for a run together, I say her in deep out aloud play and conversions, with this girl she calls Lucie, I through she is old enough to know better than to have imaginary playmates. Yes, is she going backward- like have her brains grown soft, from her school life- or is it me, as a mom not doing my part?

Part: 5

(Lucie and I used to run together on Sundays, play in the sun and rain, and bath together too, everything really even eating, me going at slightly above my normal pace, we would try daring things, like running far past the safe line of where I was allowed to go- even like walk the tracks, I would go down abandoned lines, and over old viaducts that I knew would crumble under my feet, yet that was the fun, it was to find love with-in her. To kiss and play and discover. About her ghostly body and mine, her past and me with her to come, just so we could run side by side, I was in love with her for even if not real she was the most real thing I had in my life at the time.)

I see it down there ghostly she is steaming stuck at the red signal, then green and I hear the wheels slipping and she is building power and is hand right from me. This time I stay on the lift rail, feeling the forces, and vibrations... I see my snicker as I look down at my feet and the laces are untied, and my foot gets caught, in a spike, and she is coming balls out- so upon me- I could read the number on the front as I through my foot and she is giggling like an irrational lonely inside me saying- this is thrilling.

I see the flash- of light- and then I wake up and I’m in my bed, was it all a dream. I look down at the end of my bed nearing the footboard and see my pink and green sneaker, and I see the plastic tip was ripped off- ‘it was real.’ I said. (Did I die? Am I all me? Did I die, and she is now me?)

Witness- Paul J. Miller- Sometimes, when I see her there, I feel as though she sees me, too, I feel as though she looks right back at me, as I take the train down the line, as the engineer. and I want to wave, but I get this look in her eyes that crap in my mind or don’t even look at me.

And I see what look the bugs flying like a staring fountain out of her mouth as she yells, that she needs to get off, the underworlds have gotten a hold of her, and she is not.

I'm too self-conscious, about saying I shit myself. I think about what they might be up to... as I keep doing this job, in the last year- there have been five new guys that will not drive this line- overseeing things that just creep- with passengers and workers, going through- 'Rockville.'

Passengers- said one a young girl Joice she was looking out the window and this young little girl in white her hand smacked the foggy glass, that she was looking out going over the viaduct way up in the air, 'I knew that this was impossible there no way... there no room to walk and hit a train car.' And then one young boy Jimmi said he was kissed right on the lips by a girl that was see-through. 'All crazy I said' - 'till I saw what I did, as for the man- driving the train.

They say- he's away a lot with work, on his mind and his wife just live him, and he need sleep I was written off...

'I knew...'

But even if they're not- there, they are really- the question is why?

I look for them- always. There both are often out there in the mornings- around 8-sh, it has become a passion of mine to stock them to see why- especially in the summer, drinking coffee, I take the car up and look over my old job driving this line as I comply too.

Part: 6

(Morning, nearing middle September)

Turning slightly towards the window, I make my run-up to the train, I see this girl with her back pressed tightly to the set of the old car, this is the thrill of the game with me and her, to scare them, yet not harm... Maybe get them to come up and out of the sit with my powers or have them see flashes of their whole lives and or death's, or worse their next school teachers.

It's less acceptable to drink on the train, for the cars are moving... even so-o- even more to eat- yet they still do, I loved it I made her pee herself, and the little girl in white inside me was giggling through me. I knew when I saw this girl open a can of Pepsi, I could get here to do just that, if I would track her down, as the girl in white, and me being part of her, standing on the track distracting all, she was free using me for energy to do as she pleased, making her miss-jiff, as she was known for as a child, back in the 1900s or so I read in lost old newspaper, that I got from the courthouse, papers they said should have been thrown out a- long time ago.

Part: 7

It's not cold I heard her complain to the conductor, he just said, that what you get with this seven-dollar ticket, be happy you get that... he was sno-oot-ie about it even, nothing changes, I hear her say playing in my mind, sucking feeling out my body using it for hers and her haunts. The whole train has the creeps, you can see the pimples on their arms, and the hair's standing up on the backs of young kids' necks, she loves this train, most of the passengers are 14 years' old making their way to school, summer has come to end, some say this train, will also take you two another realm, for it haunted by the girl in white, where it goes to a large castle that is gray and red and has many points, windows, rocky walls.

This castle looks as if it is hanging off a cliff, with a track on trusses running through it... a magical land so-o wonder-us, like- I could not wrap my mind around it, suspended in the air by mist and fog, and frozen land, that shines an eerier blue and clear crystal, Drawbridges, floating train tracks, that look like they get lost and twisted in spooky fogs, that lead to a haunted mysterious railway, where you learn how to become a wizard girl, like she and her family, was suspected to have been. But to become this girl has to take you there, as the chosen one. I should be on this train as they are to make my way crossed- the large waterway, yet I am skipping to have revulsion with her, the girl I fall in love with that has chosen me.

Part: 8

(SUN-up)

'Did you see on the news, on the box flat thing you see faces in like moving photos, TV, a man can make a baby to his wants and wishes, hair color, eyes, and look, I also hear in the talk box, that your glued too, that you can have a designer wife, made from baby up and the man own you, till she grows up to 16 and they perfect for each other, and married, and live happily ever after... do think that true... what happy ever after?

‘No’- ‘oh I do, and that too, ‘will see...?’

They said: ‘this was going to happen in like

2018.’ ‘Do you think so-o?’ ‘Maybe’- she said

Sarah. (Through what happens to newspapers? Now it too much mindless chatter and no real story.) ‘Um-hum’- she said, and I reached over for her hand saying don’t be scared.

I see the station easing up on me sitting in my Pullman car, two cars from the back, slightly slower this morning everyone one is moving, it a Monday. We are falling behind, it takes one hour and one minute, to just get to the school, the half-day I like it, I am not complaining. It is fast to take a train then it is to sit in traffic, from my home to the school, so I do that, like most of the kids that live on my block and surrounding areas. My home is the Victorian semi next the tracks, the occupant of the past still lives here, like her- Louise it’s everything about this home is small like the bedrooms, baths and so on.

Half friends more not, they all are staring at me with that look of suggestive wonder in some of their eyes, of what’s underneath the drock-ie look I am rocking, has been popped or not, I read their minds without knowing for sure, yet I have the idea.

I really want contacts, yet morning like Mondays, and feeling as I do, all I want is oversized sweets, and to pray, it’s a girl thing, on her week of hell. I like these glass there ornate, and frameless and sharp liking, as I sit there reading a book called: ‘If Only in My Mind!’ is a dirty book, that I can’t put down, my girl- can believe the smut I am allowed to read at my age... she said she would have gotten whipped for the thoughts, of what I am reading, at 15.

‘Your mom is okay with this?’ My imaginary friend is just drilling over the text as I am. What sex like with a boy, she asked me? I said I would not know, have not gone there... did you- nope, maybe that why I not rest, looking for what I never- ever had.

We had more in common than any live person I no- even done to getting popped. Boys have changed so much, I don’t like them, she said to me, ‘all butt holes, can I say that?’ ‘Ah-h yeah!’ ‘See- see that’s why- as I love you, you’re so cute!!’

We didn’t see much of each other after the first year, she was with me she was just seeing over my life, in me yet not known to me, and my everyday things- and stuff’, I did.

Stuff'? 'Good English, she giggled.' Yah and coming for a girl that dropped out in the third grade to work farming, tending mom six kids, and working fields. All these girls, sleep together, bathed together and worked hard, you 'all do nothing a give a crap about doing that, F- you! Um, yeah!

'Why you here, then- why now-'

'I was the girl out- even then, like you.'

'You needed someone that would be the why 100 years or so-o is not much right.'

'As a girl has grown- up in the 1900's- I'd never lived by myself, like you what that like, well I now know, is sad and lonely, yet you don't have to do anything with your day just eat and poop, and homework and sleep,

God, that's nice.'

Girls don't poop! - you know that- she looked at me like I was on 10 pounds of weed. Never that much but I been there, mmm- vapers! I drink too, she said I was a bad girl for this... that girl in her day could have been disowned... for such, and that a girl where breeders and worthless, to a man.

'It's not as good as you think.'

'Friends,' she looked to at her feet.'

'I know- holding my hand- now sitting next to me when no one else would.'

'I get you-'

'You get me.'

'Times have not changed that much, have they.'

Part: 9

I evoked, waking that morning filled with apprehension before we meet instantly knowing that something terrible had happened. Tom wasn't in bed with me, and I felt relieved. I lay on my back, playing it over. I remembered crying and crying and telling them that I loved him, and then he had to die, he just had too, he just passed in his sleep, at fifteen, he was not angry, or mean or anything like all the other boys, he was all mine, telling me to go to bed.

‘I love you, he said to me, his name: Ever Haven.’ just like his name the way he felt about me would be the same, I’ll see you in school, but he never- ever did, he passed that night the night that he said he was going to go all the way with me the next night; think how I feel, about that... Mom and dad didn’t want to listen to it any longer, saying move on, and find a new love that I am young, but no... I could not they think I snapped a little, and maybe I did, for I have this so-called imaginary friend, that is with me always, never- ever leaving my side. So, I did as they said, found love in what they do not see, just like in the last one, the choice not to see why... why I loved him as I do with her.

Then again, in my hour of need, she happened to appears in my glowing brighter and brighter ‘till I could see her full in my room going in and out of me, I got under the covers, asking for her to go away, then when she got in for the first time, I feel the worth of her, and never wanted her to go, or leave me, and it made sense what she was to me, a love, a ghost, a little girl like me in white. So-o I said: ‘yes,’ to her for she had the soul of my boy in her, and she now him speaking to me through him through her to me.

I was so sure that it would only be for a couple of months, and she would be gone and or sick of me, six at the most and going strong I am dating a girl of all things yet I feel him in her, and yet her too, it’s like everything I have been looking for everything that was missing, and I didn’t know what else to do.

An overwhelming, idea I had, was to get him back for me, and she was cool with it, for she feels for me too, so am I having a 3-way with my head, and body too...? She said I would get lynched for saying that in my day, I really don’t know whom I love more... she just as cools as he... She is a nice person, in a powerful sort-a-way. She makes you notice her likeability, in acute yes kind-a devilish way, yet there is not a thing evil about her- or so-o I feel, she needs me, and I need her.

She gets it... all of it... it is me and my suck butt life.

She giggled at that too. Her friendliness is temporary restraining order large, it is her defining quality, and she needs it acknowledged, hitherto that works for me too, I like that in a boy, so why not a girl that is just right. Like- often, daily almost, which can be tiring, yet not with her, they're no longer that way. But it's not so bad, I can think of worse traits in a girl and or lover.

Part: 10

No, it's not Louise, it's not even

Rockville that bothers me, most about my new situation (I still think of it as new, even if I have been stuck here like her all my life, although it's been two years, I had her she is all the keeps me here, and from going crazy, even if I am just that.) It's the loss of control I have. In Louise's old home now, my home in a way I feel like a guest, in my own room, at the very outer limit of her welcome she feels that I am just a caretaker of what was ounces hers.

I feel it when I sit beside her on the sofa, she is there I feel the warmth and energy, the remote control firmly within her grasp it just floats in midair. I feel it in the kitchen, where we elbow for space when cooking our evening meals. I have lost control over everything, even the places in my head.

It's relaxed enough, but it isn't a place you want to be, yet you can feel the eerie creepy feeling creeping around you as you sit in the rooms all the different energy making your mood and hair stand on end, so instead I linger in the living room or at the kitchen table, hostile at ease and immobilized, she is what make me move to feel and do, she has total control over me, and what I do, and even have the power to make mom and dad back off, to run me. The only space that feels like mine is my tiny bedroom, into which a double bed and a desk have been crammed, with barely enough space to walk between them.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 2017

Yeah Trump has made his speech of how my dad will is in the next war, yet it's one that we need, I am sure. We all loved him, for we all wanted to see this land boom again... as it did in her time, and the movie reels in my mind of the past start like lost daydreams in her mind running through mine.

(BEFORE NOON)

I could wish for a storm and feel less energy in a bolt of lightning going through me then she gives to me, but the sky is a disrespectful blank, pale, water-logged azure blue. I wipe away the dribble on my top lip with my slave. I wish I'd evoked to buy a bottle of water. The heat is building within me, she wants out, she wants to play, she wants to make miss-jiff and make me crazy to them. It's barely half-past seven and already the day is near, the air heavy with dampness.

I analyze the house, but there's nothing to see, that is out of place to them yet to me it like living in the 1900's the feel the look and the taste even is all the past, I just lost in it.

The curtains are open downstairs, but the French doors are closed, sunlight reflecting off the glass, I see her face looking in my eyes, it's not me I see it's her.

The sash window upstairs is closed, too, see it open as it was then, I know it has not worked in years, for it is crack, and falling apart just one of those things that come with having an old home.

Things got even weirder working. My dad is a doctor and was a call to war, so drafted, and after that my mom, was no longer than sitting in bars and having a random man, in her life, I was on my own, yet I was not I had her, to go crazy for and over.

Part: 11

Mindless, I know... I can't see all the kids on the train like always, but my mind is a million miles away, this morning like it has been for the last two years, and my sense of disappointment is acute.

I think, probably for one of those overseas organizations. He's constantly on call, a bag packed on top of the wardrobe; there's an earthquake under my feet, as the grind of the train wheels, start healing butt mine why.

I drop everything, and start running for my life, she grabs my bag and things, within matter seconds, my feet fly out and she saves my life, in her twisted game, yet I am living for it now. She, with her bold prints and her Converse trainers and her beauty, her attitude, works in the fashion industry. She's a good painter, too, plenty of artistic flairs.

I can see her now, in the spare room upstairs, music blaring, window open, a brush in her hand, but now she is just sitting there on her bed rocking and smiling, eyes stone-ie, with a creepy grin, in complete silence, talking herself, and mom could care less, an enormous canvas leaning against the wall.

Lost in a world that is all her own, said some, of the kids at school, Otherwise and perhaps this is what she would have gotten' into the music business, or in advertising- she might be a stylist or a photographer if she would not have let the steam of life like this train run her down.

She'll be there until midnight; Ophelia aka Gracie knows not to bother her when she's working, on her papers or reading in class, yet it's not like she even here, we were besties, yet over the last two years she is someone else, WHY? She question's in her mind.

I feel like, I moved in after, I left two years ago, left I mean in my body, I don't know when exactly, I became someone else. I suppose I started noticing them about a year ago, and gradually, as the months went past, they became significant to me. I can't really see her, of course, only when she wants me too.

I don't know their names anymore all the faces looking at me that I have now for years, either, so I had to name them myself. Like Jason and Sarah, I sit the same as see I did in my room, with that stone-ie look showing in my eyes, and the creeping smile, lost in a 100 year of time, spending my mind, within her... lost in running down the dream of 100 years of her on-rest, they're happily lost in stupid, I lost in love with her, I can tell what is better, I just go with the feeling.

They're what I lost, they're everything I want to be, and nothing I care about any longer with her. My shirt, uncomfortably tight, showing me belie-button, which she thinks is wrong, yet she is loving it. The buttons straining across my chest open showing more than what was scandalous in the 50's nevertheless in the 1900s her time, yet in my mind is okay, it's like we changed lives, and yet we fade the times, fading in and out, of her and my lives.

(It's now TWILIGHT)

Her ghostly feeling is making me sweat for her, I am pit-stained, damp patches clammy, yet I feel her beneath my arms, as I hold on to her like she there, and if feel her if she was. My eyes and throat itch, and hot. This evening I don't want the journey to stretch out; I long to get home, to undress and get into the shower with her, to be where no one can look at me, and make me feel like this with her when all we want is to be alone. she looks up suddenly and meets my eye; her glance travels over me, they're looking back all in the front of me, I am alone, yet not.

Non-look away...

There's something about the set of his mouth that suggests distaste, I have never gotten. Non-but her find me repulsive. Perhaps she's nervous and it's pouring out of me the sweat. Or just thinking deeply.

I see this one boy that reminds me of my boyfriend that passed looking at me in the first set, it's a flashback like, yet not him, or was it? I keep fading in and out... I look at the girl in the seat opposite mine, and yet it is him with her. Or is it just my crazy mind? He is about my age, I was younger, he was everything to me that made me this way now, I keep going I have too, with dark hair and dying body, I keep going, I have her. Swallowing skin, I see next to me like he and I, kissing- loving and its sick to me now not having, him.

He's wearing the suit of the day I saw him laid out for the last time, in his coffin, eyes fastened shut tightly, but he's taken the jacket off and slung it on the seat next to him. I see his dad, he has a note paper- it's worn thin and cranked, open in front of him, of the first love note he and I shared that he gave to me. He's wearing a silver watch with a large face on his left wrist- it looks expensive yet is not that where trailer trash some said.

He's chewing the outside of his lip, and the skin is peeling off, and hanging slightly. I am not the girl I used to be, I have lost it, and have it all with her.

I am no longer desirable, I'm off-putting in some way. It's not just that I've lost all my weight I down to 95 lbs., or so and my face is swollen from the drinking and the lack of sleep; it's as if people can see the damage written all over me, can see it in my face, the way I hold myself, the way I move, the way I act near them- even.

One night last week, when I left my room to get myself a glass of water, I overheard Louise talking to, her boyfriend, or so I thought was it a vision or was it real? I don't know any more real realm to not, in the living room, I could see his looking at me held out his hand asking me to come with him, like death was calling; just to be together like in the past in a new life, it was a sign, so I pick from the time on what I want; to run the life I have without him, or I have the choice to be run down by the train like her, as she did for her girlfriend that was forbidden, and go with him and she becomes me... what is the destiny I want?

I stood in the hallway and listened, to this and I heard the plan. 'She's lonely,' Louise was saying for you. 'I really worry about her. It doesn't help, her being alone all the time.' I am a Demon she said, meant for evil 'to take not give, yet she is what I longed for, I am not being funny, but I'm not sure I know how desperate she is to the end, I can have it, so I thought, why not.'

Part: 12

(THURSDAY, 21, or something in the year 2016)

(MORNING)

I'm picking at the adhesive bandage on my forefinger. I see the add on the train car sipping cold coffee, It's damp outside the window and not yet light, it got wet with dew, on the fogged windows also, his coffee mugs this morning is not the one that has always had, this old looks old; he feels it with his finger rimming the edge, and he looks at it with his clammy, dirty, hands, after getting the heart working in our car that seems to never, the car is old and never as clean as it should be. 'It's chipped' he whispered.

I don't want to take it off because the cut is deep, he said, my other one fall on to the tracks and was flattened... by the wheels, he said to the one girl that was the too eager to have his full attention, Louise was out when I got home, before me, she comes and goes fast as she pleases, so I went and I got a drink, the first one that I had all day, and funny it was old cold coffee, and then I thought I'd take advantage of the fact that she was out and cook myself a steak, for my mom was not going to anything but find some man to spread for, making drip red she said, ow-ah- I thought, she like it that why not me, have it with a green salad, she shows how to do it, I see it as she did on her old stove, that was in the same place in my mind.

A good, healthy meal. I sliced through the top of my finger while chopping the onions. I must have gone to the bathroom to clean it up and gone to lie down for a while and just over and done all about it, for the reasons, that I woke up around ten, and I could hear Louise talking up in my room, and she was saying how disgusting it was that I would leave the kitchen like that, all upset, Louise came upstairs to see me, she knocked softly on my door and opened it a portion.

She cocked her head to one side and asked if I was OK-ay. And she sits with me, as I rock back and forth, I apologized without being sure what I made an apology for. She said it was all right, but would I mind cleaning up a bit? There was blood on the chopping board, the room smelled of raw meat, the steak was still sitting out on the countertop, turning grey. She didn't even say hello to me that would be my momma that is, hers just shook her head like she was discounted when she saw me, and went upstairs to Louise's bedroom and mine and said F-n clean it, and go to bed brat.

I can't remember what I was watching, yet it was all sown-ie when my momma walked in, she thinks I crazy like them, but at some point, I must have felt lonely, or happy, or something, since I wanted to talk to someone, and it was her, and it looked as I was having a chat with myself, I so-o need her contact I must have been overwhelming to her for I was in so need, and there was no one other I would rather be with.

After they'd she'd gone to bed, I remembered that I hadn't drunk the coffee, so I opened a canteen. I sat on the sofa, downstairs, with my girl, and watched television, all old movies, that she thinks are new, with the sound turned down really low so-o she'd wouldn't hear it, she is playing with my phone and it would-a be like floating in mid-air... to-a yah.

There's no one I want to talk to except for her. The call log on my phone says I rang four times: at 11:01, 11:11, 11:53, 12:08. Judging from the length of the calls my mom has on there, she is not going to be home for a while. It's just she and I... He and all of them, a man may even have picked her up, by now I don't know or care, I don't remember talking to him or them or her at this point it's all a blur.

I am hearing the first message not remember, some old man that a perv. leaving the first message asking for boom-boom; I think I just asked him to call me, in a text that was for my mom, yah me- rape. That may be what I said in both of them, which isn't too bad. I see her she has her feet up against the table, I kiss the top of her head she is reading a book, something kids just don't do these days, and with her head forward, sunning herself in the light like also. Behind her, I think I can see a shadow, someone moving: the train shudders to a standstill at the red signal and I look up looking it down to make my choice for the day stay or go with him above the clouds.

She is sitting next to saying what's it going to be, drinking a cup of coffee, that just runs through her body and fall to the stones below. She has him running through my mind too. I long to see him, to catch a glimpse of his handsome face, she is enticing I want him to come outside me all the time, yeah that too... yah did not have it, yet all the girls want too, some did, why not me, I stand behind her scared she living it as it running for me, shield by her, they can see me they see nothing until... the way she does this is for the thrill, while I was a baby, and snap, I am home for the day, the French doors are flung open, light streaming into the kitchen. I can't tell, I really can't, whether I'm seeing this or imagining it, over and over, or if she just F-n with me, is she there, or not, what up what's down; at the sink, washing up, I cry, and she giggles holding me?

Is there a little girl sitting in one of those bouncy baby chairs up there on the kitchen table? And it's a flashback to me as a baby as I am new to her... yet she l-o-o-v-e-s me! There is something about the way she is moving today that seems different; she is substantial, weighed down, why my feelings.

He doesn't come out, and her head falls forward. I will him to come out to her, but the train jolts and slogs forward and still there is no sign of him; she's alone. And now, without thinking, I find myself looking directly into my house, and I can't look away.

It's been two days, and I have not seen or heard from my mother, is she dead? I would not know... I close my eyes and let the darkness grow and spread until it transforms from a feeling of sadness into something worse: a memory, a flashback, of when I was one comes over my mind back with, we played in a playpen together... amusing... I didn't just ask her to call me back I ask her to come home, my momma that is. I remember now, I was crying. I told him that I still loved him, that I always would. Please, I said to her, please, I need to talk to you. I miss you. Come home she said- (No, no, no, no, no, no.) No...! grow up and take care of yourself, and stop being a baby, and get a real friend.

I have to accept it, there's no point trying to push it away, I want her, and I need her so why not. I'm going to feel terrible all day about all this... this all, it's going to come in waves, stronger then weaker than stronger again; never-ending, that twist in the pit of my stomach yet again, the suffering of shame, the heat coming to my face, my eyes squeezing tight as through, I could make it all dissolve. I'll be telling myself all day, that I need to move on with it all... all of it.

And it's not the worst thing, ever to happen; It's not the worst thing, or is it? I've ever done the death thing what it like, no one come back to say, it's not as if I fell over in public as that girl, yet should I? Yet more days go by I feel becoming that girl! Yah- Point! The hallway outside the bedroom, I sit out for an hour and rock, giggling with her, and it creeps and black and the shadows on the wall for the trees in the moonlight window are dancing on the plaster walls, like the song in my head I am rocking 'Side to Side...'

-Ariana Grande-I think you should probably go to school the next day but- WHY it does not need you-you don't get anything out of it anyway, I don't anyways as most girls do, yet I'm not that, either.

I once read a book by a former alcoholic, once, and I was done, with it for-ever. Where a 10-year-old girl, described giving oral sex to two different girls, that were older than she, and a man give to both, and then her too, men he'd just met in a restaurant on a busy street, he bought them. I read it and I thought, I'm not that bad, I said in what I want then, why did I have it. This is where I set and pondered.

(SUNSET)

I have been thinking about her all-day

Then him...

Then her...

Then him...

Her...

Him...

Yes, yes, yes; No! Craaaaaazzyyyyyy! Oh my, I'm unable to focus on anything, or anyone or anybody, all run at once, it is making me silly, but what I saw this morning with me not knowing what I want. What was it that made me think that something was wrong, well everything? I couldn't possibly see her appearance and look on her face and her body action, at that distance, but I felt when I was looking at her that she was alone.

More than alone, lonely.

She misses him, yet that why I am here, and she worries, although she knows he has to go, I am the one, to own her body and soul.

Of course, she misses him, yet I don't. He was kind and strong for her, everything a boy should-a been for her, that why I had to take him, in all ways. And they are a partnership, that I had to have, for I have never. I can see it, and I wanted it, I wanted her, I know how they are. His strength, that secureness he radiates, it doesn't mean she's weak. She's strong in other ways; she makes knowledgeable leaps that leave him astonished with respect.

She can cut to the nub of glitches, dissect and analyses it in the time it takes other people to say good morning. At parties, he often holds her hand, even though they've been together years. I am now what she needs, they respected each other, they don't put each other down as I had, and I see now.

A film of sweat covers every inch of my skin, the inside of my mouth prickles, my eyes itch, mascara rubbed into their corners, it runs down my face. I feel exhausted this evening, yet the time when by fast yet slow, why I don't remember... I am sober yet feel stoned and stone-cold. But then again abstemiousness on the evening train is a challenge, to ride home, when was I at school today? ...Particularly now, in this heat, or cold I feel senseless and crazy over her. Some days, like- I feel so-o depraved that I have to drink and smoke something just to get by, it not agents the law now, for my age-

(Is it?)

Some days I feel so bad that I can't.

My phone buzzes in my handbag, making me jump. Two girls sitting in the carriage look at me and then at each other, with a sly exchange of smiles. I don't know what they think of me, but I know it isn't good. My heart is pounding in my chest as I reach for the phone. Today, alcohol turns my stomach. I look at the screen, on my phone and delete everyone that no- longer matters. It's Tom, Paul, Ryan, her and she and it too, if I could delete me, too I would, for the suck-ie world, I hesitate for just a second and then I answer an email, or where I was today, as a teacher, I said- rubbing off, I was not the that typed it, she was through me... (meant health day granted, he said. With a wink-ie- ;-) emoji!)

I know this will be nothing good come from this, either: it will be Louise, perhaps, making me feel, or whatever, asking me ever so nicely to maybe give the booze a rest this evening, and try her instead? Or my mother would love this I said to her, telling me what to do, how to do, and where, all sex-ie and shit- she'll drop by the office for work and the girls when say's- 'like your girl has been doing nothing but rubbing out... 'um- like we can go for lunch, now that you got that off your chest,' she said, 'she's a lost hope...' one girl said that was blond with big boobs and blue eyes- 'sorry to hear that... the whisper with hands over their lips.' Believe me, my mom said that all she has going for her, whatever that means...

'Louie?'

For the first five years, I knew him, I was never in things like her, always him. Never her... or girl... just him, and him alone. I cannot swallow it, I said to her! 'Please, she asked, you can't call me like this all the time, I hear from you and you don't need a phone. I want to say to him, come outside, and play with me as I used too, go and stand on the lawn and see me do a cartwheel or something like that. Let me see you, do that... we played all types of games even doctors.

Now it's all here for that too, yet it looks said for no one to see her doing this crap it's all me, here or so it looks to them, and she, and her and him too, alike.

Um- sometimes, because he knew I hated it and it made him laugh to watch me roll 'round, and fall and movie about the lawed and play, even on the trampoline, it was him and I, nothing more nothing less, it was the best of time, now it's the worst of times, (or is it?) Um- ah-err- how would I know... oh- his voice is sluggish; he sounds worn out, and now he is kissing me, at age 10. 'Listen, you two enough,' my mom said, I recall, you have to-

‘Stop this, OK-ay?’

I don't say anything, but give the look of death back to her- um ah with- like- wondering eyes... with irritation, we giggled... Like- because, I couldn't help but join in when he was laughing, saying I glad my hand was not down your undies. No, but she was showing some- you know- that t-h-e bang hole, was all up in his face laying on the tramp... it was oral... just to say it... what... like you haven't... I was giving handjobs at 12 like those girls too, sorry... true! If not, your life is over! He LOVE's me and loves me for it, it's for love! We were in love! La-la-LOVE- LOVE, LOVE! Damn it!

‘I won't lie to you, it will kind of hurt when he is first putting his fingers inside you, but once things get going it will feel really good. Just make sure that he uses lube, it will make things a lot easier and more comfortable for you.’

‘What was it like for him- licking it up, Um- it feels really warm. Ha- ha this is weird to explain but the pain is minor unlike actual intercourse, it's much more pleasing. It's easy to relax you'll feel like heaven. It's just very comfortable and pleasing and wet- ha- ha if you want the truth. It's a good way to connect with your boyfriend.’

‘As for the shirt/bra thing I mean, in my opinion, it's much more comfortable to have it off, kind of brings together the whole experience. So-o I'd say yes, but who knows what he'll be expecting. It's a great time you won't forget so don't worry too much about it and enjoy!’

‘I personally love it when my boyfriend did it, especially when he kisses his way down my body and takes his time to the point where I'm begging for more, yes you should shave it's not pleasant to get pubic hair in your face, and as for taste just make sure to take a shower and scrub everywhere.’

It's not like- like I have not had sex, un- I let Arana a-do- me with a strap- on her on top she said all bushed a sweet and pink in the face. We had a moment there... I remember the day cuz it was- like- um- Friday the day that, I go without a t-shirt or bar under my boy's hoodie, that I keep and never washed, and go underwear-less, to school to feel sexy, and commutable, to dress down.

Oh my god- it fee-eels so-0 good on these nips.

And in my mind, I am with him, feeling the warmth and love, he gave me like this hoodie.

Part: 14

I look over and see her... her... it...

Haven...

She is now on the OJ to have boobs and have a sweet voice... and she is getting that walked-off too, this week... yet it was meant to go with me, around this week... see... see... see... why I am now losing it. He- now she is my love is now a she... nice right...?

Now I get to make the choices... to life or dye or have him back as he was... all I have to do is pick... and she held the story out for me... if I sing on the line and give her my soul... I can have what I want. Yet do I want him anymore, I am not sure... I have her.

What gets me the most is that he really did not pass away, you see, he became a girl that I see in class every day, a girl that- I was not into, I mean you fall for a boy right, well that what I through until her, yet it's like a death to me, and it worked on my mind. Maybe this is God saying don't judge, a book by a cover, in dating a girl. Yet, I don't want the girl with a D-I-C-K I am sorry or the make-shift puss- puss.

Do you expect me to still love him/her for doing this to me?

And there she is saying in my day they would shoot you in the head for is the metal brake down of stupid, -freak! And I know this is not nice but it is like asking a white girl in western Pa to love a black! She said...

She gets me as he did... is that cool with you God for this...? I know but- why?

Hum- yet I am living with sinful judgments...

So, I found her to make all wrongs right. He grows his hair out, and started stuffing, and start going to school in dresses looking cuter than me, it was just not right, so I ended it, he went from having it all to having what he wanted, and I that what matters, what's awesome about that is that she, Haven is dating a girl, that is normal, so unlike me, and the most popular.

I miss him... and I don't want to live without HIM!

My mom was done with me over this... and his and them too, I did not do anything other than say... (I can't.)

And she goes on with life in the same school like- nothing happened, other than having a puss now... and I am the odd one out? She popular plays on the girl's baseball team and has more girlfriends, then I can count on my hands and toes...

WHAT_The_F! She is on the girl swimming team... and is even allowed in the girl locker room with me, and all of them... and they are all okay with it... for she's a – sweet little shy sweet freaking- Girl NOW! That getting more dick then I this week- yah!

I will never have him back, alive...

Through- As she could never have a baby... or make mine... now... wow...

Balls in agar anyone...? Next will be sitting in the heart of the big man upstairs... too...

Like- even I am not the F-ed up!

Part: 15

'Haven, it's me he said to become the- she, she was all there but that there.' The train is slowing, and she is sitting with me holding my hand, I was still in love with me and me- her, yet it was not working, for me, in the looks, yet I tried, I really did... and we are almost opposite the house, my old house. You've got to sort yourself out, I said... we need a break...'

And that was the end...

There is a lump in my throat as hard as a pebble, smooth and obstinate. I cannot speak. 'Haven? Are you there? I know things aren't good with you, and I'm sorry for you, I really am, but... I can't help you if you can find out what you want... and these constant calls, showing me, your changes... is just making me feel bad, you're really upsetting me. OK-ay? I can't help you anymore, and be OK-ay with this... Go to AA or something, for tran-z-ie's. Um- please, say. You will go to those meetings after school with me, and she got up and sat with her the hot girl, and it was love for them.' I pull the filthy plaster off the end of my finger and look at the pale, wrinkled flesh beneath, dried blood caked at the edge of my fingernail. I press the thumbnail of my right hand into the center of the cut and feel it open up, the pain sharp and hot. I catch my breath. Blood starts to ooze from the wound. The girls on the other side of the carriage are watching me, their faces blank.

Haven-

One year earlier-

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 2015

(MORNING)

I can hear the train coming; I know its rhythm by heart. It picks up speed as it accelerates out of Rockville station and then, after rattling around the bend, it starts to slow down, before all ass for the viaduct from a rattle to a rumble, and then sometimes a screech of brakes as it stops at the signal a couple of hundred yards from the house, and the race is on. My coffee is cold on the table, and I am thinking about it like always, he becomes her, but I'm too scrumptiously warm and lazy to bother getting up to make myself another cup, lost in the thoughts of falling for her and she's not really- real.

Sometimes, I don't even watch the trains go past the home when I stay home that used to be a joy to him and I sitting out on the roof, I just listen. Sitting here in the morning, eyes closed and the hot sun orange on the inside of my eyelids shows the shape of outlines, my eyes fly open fast and it's her, I could be anywhere, other than her, I said, now in class, and - I- I- um- don't remember getting here... when... ah... how...ah...? And the through just drops from my mind, like I flop onto my bed, and passed out, last night.

I could be in at Myrtle beach like I used to with him... um- yeah, and that through drops to before fully thinking it; I could be in Italy or France, or somewhere other than this pit of hellish land, that looks like Pittsburgh in the 1900s, (in some ways things have not changed, I thought.) ...All fogged and smuggled, and dim lighted, and graying and slipping away, like my life itself, with the smell of coal smoke in the air, all those pretty colored houses, now gray and dull and gloom- and the trains, grit, is grounded, into everything, ferrying the visitors back and forth, say what it once was and what it is not, it is what is not- they say now, I could be back where I came from, I would tell you if I could remember it... so saying that is not worth remembering, is it... with the screech of gulls in my ears and salt on my tongue, about to spit it out, and she said it's all good, I know, and a ghost train passing on the rusted track half a mile away, fly's by me, as I stand next to the tracks my hair blowing with the whoosh of air it makes, thinking- if... The train isn't stopping today, I said standing there think if- or if not; it trundles slowly- and then so fast, I could not think, as I grin at with no through in my head or behind my brown eyes, it's thrilling to just lose it. I can hear the wheels clacking over the points, can almost feel it rocking, me more than I am rocking myself. (say it creepy.) Ha- ha- ha- ha he-o I can't see the faces of the passengers like I should be in there, maybe my mind is split and I am, and she does this... to me... and I know they're just commuters heading to the other side... to sit behind desks, but I can dream, here and there about him and I, and even her too, where it all makes sense: of more exotic journeys, to have then what is real, of fantasies at the end of the line and beyond.

In my head, I keep traveling back to before he got his dick cut off; it's odd that I still think of it, not dangling there for me to suck, or think of in the halls when I look do there at him, you know all girls do that, I remember when I through all-boys what around with boner's in shorts all the time, and a girl had to- um- ah- well- had to take care of it... oh, my... (eye roll,) I was cute he said. on mornings like this, with such affection, such longing, but I do. The wind in the grass, the big slate sky over the dunes, the house infested with mice and falling down, full of candles and dirt and music. It's like a dream to me now. I feel my heart beating just a little too fast, think about the sex, I never had with him, like I am 14 and still... original- um- closed ah- righty- tight-y, mmm- hymen face-ed!

V-i-r-g-i-n!!!

What's funny is he lost his 2 times to mine... with dick and without...! And then with...? Go figure!

I can hear his ah- ah- I mean- her footfall on the stairs, she calls my name.

The spell is broken, of the love I have for him, I'm awake, by the through and look of him... I men here, she flawless... through, and cuter than me. Should I...

Evening, right in place with her, looking as hot as- the tom boy-sh Ariana Grande before the nose job. singing like her too in chores also- what the- F! And he, she, is all over her, that girl, that they all want to be, the other one... me I look kinda like Megan Park, you the smile, and crazy christen yah, you got it. It sucks she's the top girl in school like hotter than- Grande, it sucks for only me... and they think hey it's okay.

I haven't got much done today. I was supposed to sort out my application out for a job, as a saver at dinner, yet- no... so, this home is losing power soon if my mom doesn't get her crap together. It's been 3 weeks- where is she...? I know... she doesn't care, like all us kids today we raised ourselves.

I'm cool from the breeze, blowing in the cracked window, and warm from the two fingers fingering I just got done with, and also for the yummy- vodka in my martini, that makes me feel even more like a bad girl. All this like- um- before seven a.m.

I'm out on the trance, waiting for a girl, Cassandra to come home, with her on the same line as- me. And she is freaking consumed in sucking face with Scott, and a Bi girl Lakyn, yet anymore they're all for that... the world has gone a little mad, in calibrating the morons!

What do I say to my kid when she wants to marry a girl and she a girl, 'hell that's' a- just fine and dan-die?' Crazy, boys acting like a girl- girls now are boys, what... is wrong with this world?

Sex, sex, and more sex, that is all we think about for that all we really know with now school and the give up attitude, from the educator. I'm going to persuade her to take me out to dinner, this week so I don't look like a freak to call them, she okay, a friend, maybe, yet she all I really need, something Italian IDK- I don't know. Um- like- 'We haven't been out for bloody finger masturbating on your period- ages,' I- we- need this her Ex is sucking cl-it on some other b*tch too, other than her, so-o yah-a we have a lot to talk about... NOT! Maybe, whatever... This girl to me looks like, boys go through us girls like boxers, we know yet we keep coming for them... he, he, get it?

She looks at me, I look at her... snorting noodles up my nose... we walk home... end of the story. Yah-te- yah-ta-ie... I could still hear her saying come home to me, and things she said she was going to do to was nasty, she has gotten with the times why can't my mom..., food for through...! It went right through me, like a steel train wheel through my softening head to life, her voice really shrill and desperate, hot and suggestive. 'What are you doing, with her? What are you doing with her? Give her to me, give her to me. She is not spitting out her food, and my girl is in a catfight only I can see, yet she asks' -why...?'

She is cocking the F-er... It seemed to go on and on, though it probably only lasted a few seconds until I said stop... I love you..., and they all looked at me..., like- like- I was a sick gay dip-shit... yet everyone embarrasses that, now don't they? ..., why is it freaked up when it's me? She thought it was for her too... nope is for the imaginer girl, in my head, I said. Yah- see the rainbow... on Facebook, with photos of them doing the movement, yet not feel it when you see it- wha-o, in real life.

I got home, I ran upstairs and climbed out onto the verandah, where we used too, and I could see, through the trees, and the sunset, like we used too, and overall the switch tracks, as we used too, crying, I rock, with her hand on my back, maybe they both were, at the same place at the same time, at different times... years apart, yet all the same, in the here and now, and they need how each other felt, that why 100 years don't matter with two girls that get it...

My days feel empty now I don't have the gallery to go to any length, I wiped it all out, like my friend's list I had, like- 888 on there I did to 10.

I really miss it, yet not, then yes, then no, then why, and then, I get it, and it is fine, it has to be, and then, maybe not... aw- ha!

I miss talking to them- I really miss it, yet not, then yes, then no, then why, and then, I get it, and it is fine, it has to be, and then, maybe not... aw- ha!

I even miss dealing with all those tedious-ie yummy mummies of whom and who used to drop by in tagged photos- I really miss it, yet not, then yes, then no, then why, and then, I get it, and it is fine, it has to be, and then, maybe not... aw- ha!

Telling their friends- my day and boys and thing- I really miss it, yet not, then yes, then no, then why, and then, I get it, and it is fine, it has to be, and then, maybe not... aw- ha!

Starbucks in hand, pictures, that are only now in print on my dresser, and I take them down for a shoebox, that little girl is no longer that girl, middle school, I said, I don't need this, and the trash is where they went, in all formats in life and make-believe land online, I won't be sorry I said.

He and I are now forever ripped apart like the pictures, never to be again.

I have her, these are the memories that need to last... forever..., not these...! This just shows my mind, no?

Love forever, and never-ever is for SHIT! So, you- know, like all it takes is one dick, and it's over.

They have been getting, down on me, about him hacking, picking and prying, about the sex and love and the detail of how he got this THING-IE chopped off, and made to be this and that, moved about, that I have no, privacy, from thinking I made him this way, or that I should embrace the gay or should have tried praying it away the gay they say. I am trapped, by them, what they say and don't, what they think and don't, and trapped by her love, and not his...!

Part: 17

I thought about calling the police, on her, yet they don't care there is always an AND-OR in what they do, making their own laws, but it all seemed to calm down when they say we can give you to foster or take you away... I was living with him in his bed, and we slept together, without seeping together, yet in school, he said he handed me, in and by the ass hole... yep- all us girls have been there.

Really weird, God knows God well get them, I don't know that but my Grandma used to say that, before she cooked, what was going on, she said was SIN-full, yet I did not see, it until her, and after him, losing his dink-ie, and gumdrops, but it's the most exciting, in my life, I am sure of that, I've had in 6 weeks now with ME MYSELF and me.

Yah- um- so-o... Unlike all the sluts I go to school with I do have more hobbies then masturbating, and sucking dong, and riding it. I love photography, and the vintage, cameras with the bellows I am some artists, a lot of them would say no, but to me, I feel drawn by hand is what is about, not taking six photos of some else copyright shit and making it your own, by chop this and add that, by magic lassoing tools, in Photoshop and so on. Books- ha, I have some, but like most my age we get to page 30 and stop for we can read it without getting bored, or so frustrated, of having lack of schooling in reading that we slam it shut, and throw the e-reader, or hardback book across, the room. And like how can afford a e-reader, some working a year at the dinner I have made $300 and that is with tips and that's a 5 'till 9- 3 days a week, I am going in the hole, not making money I am losing it, why to work, I can make for sitting on my ass, rubbing off, like all the other girls my age... sad but true... and yes he is even doing that, for there's a Trans cam sight, and that how he met her, see her rubbing herself..., on Facebook, mmm- sexy- no? Just what I want to see spread Sp-ed girls jizzing..., wow; even she said I love this world today like she loves the undies of today too, she said look at how we dressed, and then you... I love your bloomers she said, and I giggled for an hour.

Sometimes, I feel like seeing, if I can track down anybody from the old days, to hang with and then she all I need, but then I think nah- I'm good, what would I talk to them about now anyway, it's been so long, and I lost touch with what cool and in... They wouldn't even recognize this girl anymore; the happy go, lucky girl I used to be, she not me, there are to the side to Sarah, or so they say.

In any case, I can't risk looking her over them she is varying defensive, and I going back they say; even in my schooling they say, but not what I say, it's always a bad idea anyway, they say. You know what I don't care what they say, I'll wait until the winter is over, then I'll look for work, as you can see, I have more money at work then, not, so why... I don't have a car like them, I don't have it, yet they're happy with on that runs, me too, yet you cannot get a car for 300 dollars, can you? And if you question why you're really dumb, I CAN READ, OR DO SIMPLE MATH, OR GET OUT OF THE TOWN, just like they- were all so dumb where happy, and they don't see, I do for I have her to show me the way...

The way...

The way of the past...

The way to see how F-ed we are... as a generation, the boomers took this from us, and we have to suck there but now, and they don't want us to work, that want it all for themselves, all the jobs, that why we are so-o dumb, it seems like a shame to waste these long winter days, working at my age, to work you have to be 16 me I am 15 and ½ they said that's fine, yet with all the girls, trying for my job, they get I don't, I'll find something, here or elsewhere, I know I will, yet college forget it... it's over for me, I might as while facing it. My mom is 35 and whirring around, and that it... my dad makes alimony payments, that is all I have to live on, in this home by myself, you feel in the blanks... I on my own... like you too.

She pops in every 4 weeks or so, and it is back, for her looking for what she has not found, and never well... that's her type... in all.

(A.M. sunlight)

I find myself standing in front of my clothing that just throw-ed and tossed and tasseled, around, in the hole I call a closet, staring for the hundredth time at a rack of pretty clothes, the perfect attire for the day, something that would get me arrested I said in my head, and she yes please, something that going to make me beg for it, later on...

Nothing-

I say clean or that it all looks 'nanny to me.'

I get the knife and make it look cool, God, even the word makes me want to gag, seeing all the kiddie thinks I have, with cute all over them, I put on my hole-ie jeans, with nothing under them and a T-shirt, also nothing under it, scrape my hair back like they do. I don't even bother putting on any makeup, the boys are not looking at my face anyway, there's no point, maybe a little I said, is there, prettying myself up to spend all day with a baby?

Oh, did I not say, yeah, a little baby girl, that I look over, that's my dad's, see look who razing whom, it's his kid. And the girl, he's with is my age, yet I call her step-mom, and she 17.

Yet in these parts, all there is making the taller rock, back and forth. You should see this trailer park, window's boarded up with play, all them trashed on the inside and out and shooting up being the thing along with pot, and oh -so ratchet, I look at my dad and her, he 50 and a little to crunk- drunk when he gets home, for my liking and him and her and my sister with some old man that lives next door, are in the living room of my trailer doing the nasty sucking and dropping on top and sideways and all in-between, my dad gets a hold of me, and rips everything off me, it was not long before I was in it too on top of him saying dad f- me, I had no choices, I have nowhere to go on the weekends, I been there all my life, dad has used me, in the night, like all the girls in the trailer park... yet, it's something we don't say yet we all do and know, I am not saying it not the norm here... it is when sex is all you have to do. I don't want to be trailer trash, so I went with my mom... or his pussy hole in the night, that he said is too tight, I remember the first time, I was 13, he was my first, not my boy, yet it did not count, I kissed my dad and his boys like there were lovers... I not going to say it wrong, when it felt right at the time, fit it was something to do, yet high, and laid, it's something to do, in the land where there is nothing.

Report Abuse, yeah right there more AND or OR with that to... and I am the one that gets the hate... ...?...

I'm only 16, very young and I've grown up without a father, however, I've read up that it's actually very common for girls to have crushes on their fathers. I know, sounds creepy and gross but it's the male figure in the house, the one who looks after you and shows you love.

But sex is just crazy, it's about the upbringing... many children are brought up in a crazy life... in my opinion, it's the certain love between and daughter and father that can make it seem to be something more. Many aren't born with those instincts as I said, it's the upbringing, if they're taught that it's a normal thing to think of their parents in a different way then they won't know any better.

Our society is used to the idea, of this... that we will only marry outside the family, yah but hooking up is just hooking up, but things weren't always that way on that day, yes, yes, there where, she said so.

There were times when it wasn't uncommon to marry your brother or sister, and although I haven't heard of daughters marrying fathers or mothers and sons, I wouldn't be surprised if some twisted person did it.

Yes, when I was 14 on a weekend, I was just there on the sofa in my undies. He started feeling me up, and it leads to more, it was consensual always in that we were both curious about seeing each other nude as in my bra and panties, I was virtually naked and dad admitted that was turned on, why he had an erection in his boxers, with the next thing asked, and he said found out, and I did, and I sucked it, as all those girls do, and I don't feel bad about it. One thing led to another eventually with both of us naked and feeling and touching each other and me having multiple orgasms. I told dad I was ready to feel his penis in me and we made love that evening, all night looking over them, my sisters was 13, and she was with the guy next door, and my dad too, and many other times continuing making love with each other at home, happen. That guy next to use got jail time... for my sis, said it was rape, yet come on, we all know... and now she the one that is detected for a man using her, at 13, and my dad... go figure.

Now go and find a boy, that's where I'm-a at... that understands that one... some don't care, and if they don't, they are not the right boy, I feel ougie... about who I am and what I did. So, I am alone, he was the only one that got it...

Its Monday, and I home from school, I never even showed it all of me yet, no wonder they think what they do, yet they're no time for the wicked, I flounce downstairs and cry in the showroom her holding me, it's in my mind, I know, half indulging for a fight, with God, yet why... he lets it goes on... why?

I ask making coffee in the kitchen with a girl I called my last hope, my sister, the shy innocent sheepish girl, that would not hurt a fly, yet want it in, and over the fact she tailors trash cannot, on with want she aloud rise about that... with the groups she in, with-in school. She turns to me with a grin, saying well, I going to have a baby, and my mood lifts instantly, to who, I think its dads, she said, I rearrange my pout to a smile and say wow, she hands me her coffee, half done, and kisses me on the lips like lovers, and wakes out the door, and I like this is normal to me... what? (Am- I- brainwashed or is this all I know... maybe both, to me this is life.)

There's no sense blaming him for this, it was my idea or hers, it just happens. Simpleminded, trailer trash, is what she and I are, and there no way around that, it's what you're born it to that get you here or there. I volunteered to do it, to become a child that wants her boom-boom, from the people down the road too.

At the time, I thought it might be fun, to have fun, and sex they said was fun, and it is...

Completely insane, really, I must have been made, I would do you even, bored, mad, curious, it just sex in a small town, where that all we have, I wanted to see, what you think of me now, I don't care what you did, why should you with me.

She encouraged me- he was over the moon, about it's my dad, saying well just say, yeah it happened, when I suggested it, saying it was someone else's, I said that's not going to work, she looks up said, that why he did what he did, I get him back, he knocked me up and will say that why he had the sex change, to get out of it. Dad, he thinks spending time around babies will make me moody, so he said, I should be looking for new home, yet come around for the weekend or he'll kill me, in fact, it's doing exactly the opposite; of what I want, when I leave there I run home to my mom's home, can't wait to strip my clothes off and get into the shower and wash the baby smell off me. I don't know what to do... anymore... I have nowhere to go. Yet this is law and visitation rights... no? And the love I get is killing me...

Part: 19

I quit!

My job, I want to quit life... it what I said...

I long for my days, I had, thinking back on all the galleries that are no longer, prettied up, hair done well, talking to adults, about my high hope for the future... ALL FOR SHIT, ALL! ...About art or films AND WHAT TO BECOME A DRAFTER.

Nothing at all would be a step up from my conversations with, God, I know she is thinking I am dull, for this too, yet she gets it! Odd for her age you would think she would be the believer, you get the feeling that she probably had something to say for herself once upon a time, but now everything is about the child, now and how it's not mine, it was really his: Is she warm enough, to them through, that I want to kill him, Is she too warm? Funny how God works... he'll get you for your shit...

How much milk did she take, I see a girl there with the baby sucking, she's my age, that would be my stepmother? And she's always there, so most of the time, I feel like a spare part, of mine, will be used... her- too, at some point someday... I was sure, yah not, my job is to watch the child while and rests at my dad's, to give her a break. A break from what, exactly? She's bizarrely nervous, too. I'm constantly aware of her, hovering, twitching. She flinches every time a train passes, jumps when the phone rings, it's him/her asking, why...? ..., and how, 'They're just so fragile, aren't they, he- she's?' she says, and I can't disagree with that, we can have found out.

I leave the house and walk, leaden-legged, the fifty yards along Apple road to their house, if you can call them that, no skip in my step, like there used to be, Today, she doesn't open the door, for me, you how it like usually flies open from me. it's him, on my mind, then her, and then baby-drama.

The thoughts of him and looking handsome in his suit, for the dance, my sophomore year, and even now I find her cute, yet she doesn't want me, he's smaller, to me now even, I wonder if there is a drug for that too, and his eyes are a little too close together, and the nose, is feminine now, eyebrows plucked, brown-sh - blonde colored hair, and eyeshadow. when you see him up close, it still him, I still in- love, yet he's not with me, maybe that way, I snapped a little, but he's not bad, with me or about it, I want him back, yet he is with her. Hitherto, there is so much that has changed, yet has stayed the same.

He flashes me his wide, smile at me that never change, yet the lips are all shiny and wet looking now, yet he, is him yet now- her, yet I want him and have her, and then he's gone, and it's them I see standing happily, should I let it goes- if they're happy, and it's just me and her and the baby, and that going to be life. I can see it happening.

Up till now, do I want him- I mean him back, like her.

Thus far, would she want me, and why should I take her back?

What would be the right thing to do when it all wrong?

Could I love her for her, that what is getting me, I do and then not... what do...

(what would you do?)

Part: 20

It a THURSDAY, 19, of some month 2017-

(EVENING)

I feel so much better, now that I kissed her and said I still love her, as if anything is possible, with us again. I'm free, in my mind, and she is pissed, yet I happy and she not! I'm sitting on the terrace, with my old love, think about all that was before... all, waiting for the rain; the sky is black above me, swallows looping and diving, the air thick with moisture. Besides like all the water washes are faces and we are both wet with, the rain, a cool photo idea in black and white, a photography moment, of course, I ran for the vintage camera, holding embrace we take the selfie, and there are no new photos on my dresser, the same yet not, yet should I care... I could learn how to fall all over, I thought. She- Louise is not happy with me... I get it, she feels un-need at this point. You look in the frame and you see her too, all three of us that get it... moment forever... we held hand for those moments and in those moments, I feel the love we had, so long ago.

So, I asked would you, go with me... and she said yes, I looked over the facts of this and that, and that he would never F- me, with his own dick, yet she is the mind I really love and love, and she was there to help me see, that love is not on the outside is it? I've been making plans, about how this could work, yet it may be gross to say, yet you get it... love is love right, yet I need him to dump her for me...

Will he do that?

The next day, he made that happen for me...

And we picked up where we left off...

I remembered, I had a teacher at school who told me once that I was a lover of self-reinvention, that I would have to find my way, and see what I have and have not had, I get that now, I didn't know what he was on about at the time, I thought he was putting me on, but I've since come to like the idea. Runaway, lover, finds the past and see what could give the present of the future, so who do I want to be tomorrow, and that would be a lover to both girls, for being girl... and not caring about others think?

I didn't really mean to quit; letting others choices my life for me, the words just came out, saying I want to be with you always, we were sitting there, in her old room, sitting like in the window, with the baby on her lap, that's my sisters, and could not be happy-er in our Fed up lives, it not going to work for some of you, but it works for us.

The girl he was dating, found someone else the same day, its high school, it was a fast rebound. So, was it love? No do we have that; I think so... Worse than that, I felt uncomfortable, as if I was intruding, when they were together, so I left him/ her go... and with her, it all worked, and to think I was going to end it.

‘I’ve found another job,’ I said, without really thinking about it. ‘So, I’m not going to be able to do this any longer.’ She gave me a look, I don’t think she believed me, when I said, you can rest in peace now, you have found your love, and seen what it was like, she just said, ‘Oh, that’s a shame,’ and I could tell she didn’t mean it and was happy to go her own way, she looked relieved, that I did not go for the evil pain, she didn’t even ask me what the job was, which was a relief, because- I hadn’t through up a convincing lie, and that is being a Ghost-hunter and someone that talks to the spirit world.

(Yes, I have a gift of seeing and talking to dead kids.) I do this after school, I don’t make much, but it’s something, hey I young. And as far as going to college, I not sure I need that either, around here.

The only person who’ll really be disappointed was my sister about everything, so I have to think of something to tell him, I even said I want the baby like it was mine and his, that’ll put an end to it, all the drama I hear in school about this creepo freaking family we have, it’s my junior year, soon I be out or old enough to get out, by singing out, she already did for the baby, girl, we named after the dyed girl that was my imaginary friend that got it, in my time of pain.

Part: 21

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 2017-

(MORNING)

I haven’t slept in days. I hate this, hate insomnia more than anything, just lying there, brain going around, tick, tick, tick, tick, tick. I itch all over, I want to shave my head. It’s just after 7:02, it’s chilly out here, but then again, it’s so-o lovely like this, all these strips of garden side by side, jade and cold and waiting for fingers of sunshine to creep up from the tracks and make them all come alive. I’ve been up for hours; I can’t sleep.

I've missed him every day. More than anyone, I think that is so-o, and I happy to say I do not have to do that any longer. He's was the big hole in my life, in the middle of my soul, yet she filed, or maybe he was just the beginning of it, becoming right. I don't know... I don't even know whether all this is really about him, or whether it's about everything or even her, that happened, whom do I blame, or should I?

Everything that's happened since most of happed for an impermeable reason. All I know is, one minute I'm ticking along fine and life is sweet, and I want for nothing, and the next I can't wait to get away, I'm all over the place, slipping and sliding again.

So, I'm going to see a therapist, I am sure of this! This could be weird, but it could be a laugh, too, I sure of that also, for she is going to be sitting with me just as amused.

He doesn't know the half of it, and I am OK-ay, with that now too, love is more than feeling loved, like that kind of love. This is not quite the same thing, of course, yet nothing in my life was the same as them...

I'm a bit nervous, saying all this to you in this interview. but I haven't been able to get to sleep lately, and I had to get my story out there, so others see my case, and somewhere to go, so yeah; I invented the AA for transie's, I told him I find it difficult enough talking to people, about nothing regardless, this dog crap, well, it may not be that yet its, a- lot stuff, I know about this stuff, I can barely even talk to him about it, and now I have a room full of them, and I love them for them, and so should you 'all.

He said that's the point, you can say anything to strangers, and make them feel, just ask it in a way that is not prying, or makes them feel Uncomfortable, like that girl Megan, over there, that's being a dick, to the boys- girl that have them. Why should it matter what in your shorts... and she gives an hour-long speech about- why, before thrown out... then a boy named, Ed got up and gave his story of how he became a girl, not by choices, when they had to cut his nuts off, it was cancer, they said, he lost his dick too, vary said, yet we all just blinked, for her, looks like a she.

Yet he not dealing well, about have a girlfriend, that not in- love with him now, but that isn't completely true, they said it was endlessly- permanently and never going to end, love they had that was so cute-ie woo-ie that it makes one gag, like its harry balls, you have to suck.

You can't just say anything, in this room, well sitting by the cross a-crossed, the Frenching 17-year-old nun, and the 50-year old greasy ass-ed prick, with the caller, that had five boys, and knocked her up, and is bang her, regardless of GOD's Holy F*ck, yet talks shit about the trailer trash, that I am in church, ha- go figure. That why I here to help sinners, ... Yet, this is where they say I should have this... where they understand, that boys and girls, like us are going to hell, for not picking the life that God gives us. I loved that one coming out of my love's mouth... they did not even know what to say...! I know she- loves me so much; it makes me ache. I don't know how she does it. I would drive me mad if I had to put up with me... I said that, and then through.

But I had to do something, and at least this feels right for me to do. All those plans I had-photography courses and art classes when it comes down to it, they feel a bit pointless, now that I am doing this for a job, yet live is wired like that like I'm playing at real-life instead of actually living it like they why I was with her in my mind. Crazy, yet to some, it makes complete senses. I had to find something that I must do in my life, something undeniable. I can't do this, I can't just be this... whatever this is, I have to document it, I am the first..., I don't understand how anyone does it, like living with sickness, and yes, I feel it is, yet I get it now, there is literally nothing to do but wait, and see what happens, wait for someone to love you for you.

(EVENING)

I get up today, after a quick cat nap, and see that another officer has been shot in the face, that now five this week, cool, and no one is stopping it, why should they, maybe it's the people taking back the law, and getting their free rights back. I could give a shit, and I snap it off...

I've been kept waiting, for the train, to start my day is now my last year of school, I am living with her in my home, like renting the apartment, our room off my mother- yes, I have to pay to live in my own home or I am out, and she too, a $1,000 a month with all, and I behind. I have to pay for my phone, $600 and to have what they do, I have taxes to pay into, I have to put $50 or so gas in my car a week, and that I will not pay off until I am 80, and it's a 1990 corolla, that all colors. Or it back to my dad's, and her mom kicked her out at 16, they need the room for the other huger mouth that they have, they said to her, so she's with me, she was living with her old girlfriend, yet now that we're back together, we're trying to make it. $500 me $500 her... And I only make $300 a year, doing this job, and that's more than them, go to college, add is not paying and my mom is not either, and she makes too much to get it anyways.

I can't even afford new undies, eating out every day, is $60 for she and I. and if you don't eat out, around her there is nothing to do, so its sex, eating out, and well eating out.

Half an hour ago, I was wondering if... I going to make it in life, and I'm still here, even if they don't want me to be, you get what I am saying. Sitting in the reception room flicking through 3 shows that all I can have, thinking about getting up and walking out, down at the gym, and that is not free either, $25 for them to look at your face going in the door, I know doctors' appointments run over, all this too, and I don't have coverage for that, but therapists is what I need they say...? I even pay to take a shit, and for me bag shit and taking out, I pay for water, I mean really water... more bills then texted, and they all want to see me and her fall on our ass's... that's life in a small town. The next move is in someone dog house, I feel it coming, heating for this home is $900 a month in December.

Films have always led, me a happy feeling, that would be cool if I could keep the power on, halfway through the mount its cut, and there is a fee for that to get that back on, and I have paid mom for it, yet tell them that at the power company... they don't want to hear it, she spent that on drugs, and free sex, and working at bars here and there. And you have to have insurance for everything also... more money I don't have, yet I a grown-up at 17, yet I can get a bear, or have sex, or get a pack, without getting carded, yet I am grown up, to them. My car was said to not be on the road when it was in the shop, yet, I have to work, yet the cope doesn't get that either, and they're more than happy to the ticket. And funny school tax my mom pays in one year is $3,000 and I can't spell or think over someone that is in 2nd grade they say, and sure, we all are being failed. They get 6 million dollars a year, yet we have no books, no papers, don't need to write a paper, don't need to do math over adding and subtracting, don't need to do anything for they feel we cannot even shit and wipe, and yet the teachers make $30,000 a year and don't care or want to be there tell, me why, I am living the way I am.

So, the shit I am in I have made someone a million, for doing nothing, but let us sit and rot. Um- me to believe that they kick you out the moment your thirty minutes are up, is the best thing ever they say, I suppose they aren't really talking about the kind of therapist you get referred to on the National Health Service, no more like some girl, that has nothing to do with anything is good enough, kind of like me and what I do for others.

Note- to all girls on Facebook, if you and your past lover/ex is no longer, take the photos down, it's just hurting yourself, and go to Walmart, get them printed, for your memory only, and put them in a shoebox, with a ribbon tied tightly, and move on so we can too.

I remember, go up to the receptionist to tell her, that I've waited long enough, to feel that I can do this job, I'm leaving, my hometown if I don't get this, when the doctor's office door swings open, for my drug test, he already through I was no good, he's a lanky man, emerges, looking apologetic and holding out his hand to me, asking to piss in the cup, and he has to look for he can't trust my type, yet I have to trust him right- go figure. 'Mr. Haswell, I am so sorry to have kept you waiting,' he says, I just smile at him and tell him it's all right, and I feel, at this moment, about letting him look at me down there too, it like the dad I through, in my sick mind... that it will be all right because I've only been in company for a dad and I feel right at home, a moment or two and already I feel mollified.

I think it's the voice. Soft and low. Slightly accented, which I was expecting, because his name is dock- is- I guess he must be med- thirties, although he looks very young with his incredible dark honey skin. He has hands, nice, I could imagine on me, long and delicate fingers, there, and I was getting turn on by it- good every girl's nightmare, clit showing anyone, I can almost feel them on my hood skin.

I thought so this is why you in practice to see all the young girls... he winks at me, saying all is good, here.

'I CAN SEE THAT YOU HAD SEX,' 'Yet, girls today I see in my office are younger than you, so, whatever-' he gave you should not speak, holding a vag.- cutaway, that is glass, in his hand, Umm-hmm- I roll my eyes and get a free condom- thrown in my lap, so, (it is better than- the poop test) I sit, getting, a handful of tongue depressors, and a half a bottle of germ-x, and placing it in my handbag, he back in the room, as the door opens, I just get my bushing butt back down- knowing I was busted, 'disinfectant-' he said- 'there should be one I hear- hum- have to give the girls hell,' yet this man has a ponytail and wear a leather vest, looking more like a hells angel then a doctor, rough and ready is his style... so washing hands, he can do after, ha, I sure he'll-a doing scratch and sniff, before going into the next room.

We don't talk about anything significant, it's just the introductory session, the getting to-know-your stuff, about your body that makes you gag some of it, there was no jock there yet you're smelling; he asks me what the trouble, I have been in overtime with my dad and mom, saying- 'I am not the bad girl.' I tell him about the panic attacks, insomnia, I been having yet I think not... I know what that going to do, drugs, and help, that I don't want... so they can talk, no thanks. Just what I need drugs in a drug-ie home... hum, I see that I would not be the one taking them, and all they would be asking for me to give, as a setup, been there... the fact, that I lie awake at night too frightened to fall asleep, is not the end of the world, to me... even if... YOU FEEL IN THE BLANKS, you think you know me too- right?

He wants me to talk a bit more about that, noggin, but I'm not ready yet to say I am a physio-tared. He asks me, all the doc crap- if I moody- PMS-ing- think about killing a church full of bible bangers, whether I take drugs, drink alcohol, also- I just said- all the time doc, all the time, he looks at me with that sideward stern, yet nice look, along with the- I've seen you grow up smirk on his face, as if I was joking, rubbing his hand on his ripped jeans, there is mud on his cowboy boots too, his double bar- glasses are at the end of his nose while doing all this, lower lip bitten and tucked into some.

I tell him I have other vices these days, and I catch his eye and I think he knows what I mean... 'umm-' he said 2 finger typing on the keyboard, Then he feels, my belief, my chest for lump so he said, and back and whatnot, breathing and all that too, this should be this and that should be this, hit, hit, and spit, and those rubbed... too; yep at the doctors. As if I ought to be taking this a bit more seriously, so I tell him about the gallery closing, uptown, and that I feel at a lost all the time, and have no short-term memory, 'it is that is early- signs of- dementia.' 'Not common, yet could be...', he said.

My lack of direction, to what he was saying was my mind, playing tricks on me, the fact that, I spend too much time in my head.

He doesn't talk much, as he logs out, just the occasional prompt, but I want to hear him speak more about what is wrong with me, 'soo-a, I'm leaving, see you in a month- don't do two boys in the same day, he said-it's slutty.' While- running out the door- slamming it hard.

‘Thanks DOC.’ Is what I said.

Part: 23

Dad is waiting for me when I get home, over this weekend it's more of the same, he thrusts a drink into my hand, saying go for it, yet that's a dad he thinks it's cute when I drunk, he wants to know all about it. I say- it was Okay. He asks me about the therapist thing I am doing, and if I am keeping it: did I like them, did he seem nice?

OK-ay, I say- again, because I don't want to sound too enthusiastic. He asks me whether we talked about Haven. And how she thinks everything is about me. He may be right, about that all too, He may know me better than I think she does, even when it comes to the way I think.

TUESDAY, November 26, 2017-

(Not long- BEFORE NOON)

I woke early this morning, that was sarcasm, by the way, if you did not get it; but I did sleep for a few hours, just looking her over trying to fall for what's on the outside now, of her, which is an improvement on last week, she is really a woman now, not the boy I fell in love with-in like kindergarten, I felt almost refreshed when I got out of bed, so instead of sitting on the veranda, and see the steam train go by, I decided to go for a walk, next to the track's not on them.

I've been shutting myself away, almost without realizing it. The only places I seem to go these days are to the shops, my classes, I still have trust issues with them, yet I have one or two real friends, and her that all I need, and the therapist, God right. Nah I happier now than ever, (thumbs up!); occasionally to some girls, I sit with lunch.

The rest of the time, I'm at home, I and I end it with my dad, over he was playing with the baby, it's no wonder, I get restless, yet- I'm-a- the bad girl.

I walk out of the house, turn right and then left onto Apple Road, things are all the same, yet I feel new life in me. Maybe it was letting go... past the inns, bars and holy places, the ornament that litter the streets. We used to go there all the time; when they were one, and not 2 with more than two in them, at one time; I can't remember why we stopped going out and seeing faces, I don't. I never- ever, liked it all that much, too many couples just the right, you know boy-girl, all drinking too much and dicking around for something better, wondering if they'd have the courage, to say no. Perhaps that's why we stopped going, because I didn't like what the world became, and I was not them. Past the hostelry, past the workshops. I don't want to go far, just a little tour to stretch my legs, and see how the other half live, that are boy- girl. Yet- I have everything, I want right...?

It's nice being out early, before the school run, on the train... before the commute gets going also on Amtrak; the streets are empty and not too- too clean, yet I have seen worse the day full of prospect. I feel good and, yet I steel not like them I still holding on to what I should have lost in 9th grade, and you know what I could give a frap'n F! I am sick of sex before having it, I have it with her, so is that real or not? Some would say know, is it gay, or what is it... you tell me, it not documented yet what we do.

(They say you're not FUCKED until you have one in you, well- then liz-bo's are what, what are we? A gay man is- what, even if- there is no baby coming out of that but hole is there.)

So, what are we freaks, or what? I did not want it, yet this is what I have been handed. I still feel that life, and how you are raised has something to do with being transgender. I look at her and say- whatever makes you happy... yet she never truly going to be, and you can get why. And if not, you need to stop and think. I turn left again, walk down to the little playground, and started swinging, like I did as a child, the only rather poor excuse for green space we have. It's empty now the town yes going to sleep for the lights to come on in a warm glow, but in a few hours, it will be swarming with toddlers, mothers, and dads that are not freaked up like ours, it's them that did this so she and me.

Half the girls will be here, are just that girls and the boys know what they are too; yet, I look around and think, what this world going to be when things change, and the change is something more than what it is today, like what if you could pick before you are made, or a year into life, by reading your mind or something crazy like that, competitively stretching, manicured hands wrapped around a Starbucks, I am 10 feet in the are back and forth, holding on with on hand. I fly off and all the coffee, that was in the cup is now in the air like me, and not a drop is spilled, and it all back in place like, me with feet on the ground.

I carry on past the park and down towards Cherry-Berry avenue. If I turned right here, I'd go up past my gallery-what was my gallery, now a vacant shop window-but I don't want to because that still hurts a little. I tried so-o hard to make a success of it, throughout these years, wrong place, wrong time-no, yes, maybe, not in this economy, I could have done something else.

Instead, I turn right, past the Rockville express line that part of Pa railroad, past the other pub, the one where people from the estates go that have money and look down on me in more ways than one, and back towards home, that run down, and as they say should be condemned. I'm starting to get nervous. I can feel butterflies now, think about her as I did with him, both the same yet like it all new, re-learn someone. I'm afraid of bumping into the Watsons because it's always awkward when I see them; it's patently obvious that I don't have a new job, that I lied because I didn't want to carry on working for them.

Otherwise and rather, it's awkward when I see her, just know, that all- of it. ignores me, and my thoughts of what if..., but she seems to take things personally when I feel, lost in her arms and feel as if she should act more like he, her.

She obviously thinks that my short-lived career as a saver came to an end, for the reason that of her or because of her child, and my sister and dad. It in point of fact wasn't about her child at all, although the circumstance, that the child never-ever stops whining didn't make her hard to love, as she may think, she is being a mom to her like I. Yet a dad is what she needs, she needs and what I need also.

It's all so much more complicated, but of course, I can't explain that to her. Anyway, and forever- never ever leaving her. That's one of the reasons I've been shutting myself away, I suppose- its, for the reason that I don't want to see the little girl grow up in a brock F-ed home like she and I did- and already the child is F-ed, what is she going to do in school, and the kids are not going to be kind, to trash, trans, shit like us, that the sisters, of the dad, crazy crap... talk... conversations... dialog, all BS. Part of me hopes they'll just move, or that, I do when I have the money to get out of this town, you have to have money to make it and get, away I do not. I know she doesn't like being here: in this place, yet I love and heat it, all the same, it's my home town where you can let go, and they won't let go of you, she hates the house, also, hates living among the trash the in it, and dirty laundry, that we don't know how to do for we razed and tea-ch-ed (and yes I seed that for you'll get it) our-selfies everything's in this life and it not to munificent, hates the trains.

Can't read, write without it being text with Spell- Checker saying ever definition, Math I am-a able only with, using a calculator, I's cannot make change, I lost 3 pennies and got fired, can tell time, like my mom can, filed all the places on the flat maps in class, that are not in a 60-mile radius, how many feet in a mile 5,280, funny that I do know... no English, I'd say or do it right yet, I need to no other one, yeah right, I don't know the first one. Cam. Never had it, prealgebra for 4 years not going past it, was it. And then they have the audacity to ask, why were all stupid? You- YOU- did not teach the US, anything but sex, and feeling like we should just end it NOW.

Bio, I failed, I failed everything, and sat in there doing nothing; I never had to read a book for class, never assigned homework, nothing but rot, 12 years never getting back, I don't even think my school has any books when she and I think about it. I, she, them, didn't even really need a pin, either, nothing to write, they all think we can so, why would we need one, not one in my class is doing anything with their life.

Making babies is all we know how to do, and we can do the after-party, home with mom and dad until they say grow up, and we have to ask how you did not teach that either. FAIL- all over with the kid, that is born in the years 2000- 01. Giving up is all we were through, and how-to party, expecting and not knowing know to work for it, yet they need to teach it, don't they?

I stop at the corner and peer into the underpass, the train overhead, I had to go to my old spot, and remember, something that is getting harder to do, yet in something not. I wanted to remember the times in my head with the girl that helped me.

That smell of cold and damp always sends a little shiver down my spine, and I remember her doing just that, giving me that shiver down my back touching it, it's like turning over a rock in Rockville, under the stone overpass, to see what's underneath: moss and caterpillars and earth, that creep on the ground as they do in my brain, It reminds me of playing in the rockery as a child, nothing changes here, I feel childlike... and I feel like I still there, yet the world changes around me. looking for frogs by the pond with him, and being as one of the boys. I walk on, lost in thought till I hit the tracks. The street is clear-no sign of the kids, the wind takes my hair, in the breeze, and I understand day in out and day, out that I can't remember their names, and thing, and places, and the part of me that can't resist, yet want, yet can't remember, a bit of theater is actually quite disappointed, to me as I act it out in frustration next to the tracks, asking- why...?

(EVENING)

I can't keep still..., even though she just called to say she has to work late she is working at the dollar store making 2 bucks, an hour, and drawing a dollar fifty, which is not the news I wanted to hear, having the baby, that they want to take into protective custody and give to all people my daddy, yet they don't believe me, I'm feeling edgy, have been all day, I don't want to go back there, yet, I feel someone or something pulling at me.

I'm too frazzled, my heartbeat feels like a flutter in my chest, like a bird trying to get out of a cage; I can't just sit here, watching the trains, I need her to come home and calm me down, I just know it, I did not go to school today, did she, I don't recall, or did I, need too I don't remember, yet what day is and time? ..., and now it's going to be hours before she gets here, and my brain is going to keep racing around, and around and around, and I know I've got a sleepless night pending.

I slip my flip-flops, on my bed with her, then him, and her, and him, my dad rolling around in my head, on and go downstairs, and pull things in and don't remember why I did, I thought it was for toast, yet that was a through, I let go of too, lost in the past of horror, out of the front door and on to Road, I run for the train, to keep all the insane away. I not thinking, yet thinking too much, it's around seven thirty- three, like- a few lazybones on their way home from work, pass me running, for the end, of it.

There's no one else around, though you can hear the cries of kids playing in their park, as I feel in my mind like a child lost, taking advantage of the last of the sunshine before they get called in for dinner, and a bath, by moms and dad that care.

And she is running for me, and I to her... and the light shines in my eyes, and the light is out in my eyes, just clockwork, here... nothing more.

Part: 26

I walk down the road, towards the station. I stop for a moment outside number three track and think about not getting off this time, the bell ringing on the steam train. What would I say, to them if I was not to, nothing they don't care? Ran out of sugar, and went to get some? Just fancied a chat, with the officer looking at me like, I crazy saying don't. Their blinds are half-open, on the cars they don't see me, but I can't see anyone inside, my mind, thinking clearly, about not needing me.

I carry on towards the corner, and without really thinking about it, I continue down into the underpass underneath the tracks, which is ironically meant to run me over. I look down and notice that there's something on the floor, somehow, I know on the very train, that was under me, is it a new day, or wh-at...?

I have lost it... a hairband, purple, stretched, well used, is my way of knowing that it a Tuesday, and that was the day before I was there, so why is my mind doing this to me? I am a runner, perhaps, but something about it gives me the creeps, that I keep doing this and don't remember why, and I want to get out of there quickly and move on with my life, yet I cannot, back into the sunshine, and thinks that I love.

On the way, back down the road, I know where I was the day before, yet is this just in my head too, she passes me in the train car and sits with me holding my hand saying it's all good, our eyes meet for just a second and she smiles at me. I'm about halfway through when the train runs overhead, and it's magnificent: it's like an earthquake, you can feel, its right in the center of your body, making your heart pound, stirring up the blood, making the brain feel, a rush, like an orgasm, (God knows that the only way I can really have one.)

Its FRIDAY I know by the Pink hair tie, of 2017-

(MORNING)

I pass out cold for an hour or two, then I wake, sick with fear, sick with myself. I am exhausted I did not sleep, my head thick with sleeplessness. When I drink and do some drug, I feel more alert, I hardly sleep at all, and don't know why I do and yet don't. If I have a day when I don't drink or do a drug I feel, empty on the inside, that night I fall into the heaviest of slumbers, when I found Methamphetamine, ICE (I found how to make it sitting in school, and I took notes, funny the guest speaker had a lot to offer me, sitting in the auditorium,) I self-med, they're not going to say I need, yet I feel I do, and I kept that from all them, even her too. It's a deep unconsciousness, and in the morning, I cannot wake properly, without feeling hazed, I cannot shake sleep; it stays with me for hours, sometimes all day long, I in another world like, yet it better than- feeling. I can't get blood work now or see, the doctor, yet he's no help anyways, there is just a handful of people in my carriage today, none in my immediate vicinity. There is no one watching me, so I lean my head against the window and close my eyes.

The screech of the train's brakes wakes me, I lost in my room looking out the window, just like her, the girl that lost her mind, a hundred years ago, doing the same as I just in a new way. Snap- then I am at the signal, and she is heading for me, at this time of the morning, at this time of year, the sun shines directly onto the back of the track-side and my house, flooding it with light.

Yet, I see nothing but haze... I can almost feel it, the warmth of that morning sunshine, like the shot of the drug running through me doing the same, on my face and arms as I sit at the breakfast table, eating my food in one bit and galp, going down hard. She opposite me, and worried, her bare feet resting on top, for the reasons they're always so much warmer than mine, and she rubs them on me to get them hotter, my eyes cast down at the magazine, for teen girls. I can feel her smiling at me, the blush spreading from my neck to my chest, the way it always did when she looked at me a certain way as him. I blink hard and all of them are gone, all the faces I know looking at me like they know me. We're still at the signal, and I sitting there, looking at them looking at me.

And yet, I am the one, that looks normal...!

Part: 27

I can see me as a kid in the garden where I played, and behind her, a man walking out of the house, and it's my day to come and play with me as the man- I respected at the time. He's carrying something-mugs of coffee, perhaps-and I look at him and realize, at me with love, a man that looks at me with the look you would give a teen lover, that when it all started, that it isn't normal.

This man is taller, slender, darker, then I remember, yet that would have been him at the time. He bends down, placing the mugs on the metal table on their patio, picking me up and kissing me on the lips, like I said that is when... the end.

He's a family and friend, and them too; run in my mind also in fragments, like this, my sisters' and brothers, an atom that was ant Jimmi, was my dad, was all misfiring, yeah- I that messed up. I snatch air into my lungs, and realize, that I've been holding my breath and that not a joke, I did not remember to do so. I could not even remember if I had a brother or not.

As the feeling went through me... I remember a cousin from Australia, or was that a singer; (maybe I am thing singer) I don't recall, I slip into madness, staying for a couple of weeks; there I am sure, yet no one cares... but her she is my oldest friend, I love her and she- me, pray to think I was out for a year in a- coma, they said, I almost died.

(whiteness)

She walks towards me I- in the bed in the ER room, she puts her hands around me and holds my waist and she kisses me, long and deep. She was there with me for a year that's is love if I ever saw it..., no...?

(2018) the day doesn't care, the year not imprint... do you give a shit- no – not really, so, why do I? The train moves, through my mind, and body as I am out like it did when I was there, like dreaming the same day over and over- and over- and over, like if it's all a dream, yet I know it was not I know, I can't believe it.

Why...?

Why, would she do that? When I dumped her for less, then my stupid? She never went back to her girl-ie love all this time, their talk was good for something, was it not, I can see it, they're happy, that I was out of there F-n lives.

That she could be with them not me.

She was the only one that came to see me, yet I was the dumb one, no? I can't believe she would do that, and not do that, or that too, yeah. On a larger scale, to a more intense degree, of course, I was the one that said this was the way out, but I remember the quality of the pain, I had so- yeah, what other choice did I have- really. You don't forget it, I sure either, being that girl, what to OD. She doesn't deserve that, and I don't get why, I did it, I-s' feel's – um- don't... I'm-a still groggy from sleeping so-o long, a real sense of disappointment, to my mom whom through she was getting money form it all, like my death and shit; I feel as though, I have been cheated on.

A familiar ache fills my chest; I have felt this way before, like when he became a she. School at some point I need I would have to go back and do, yet at home; yet, I don't know-how with no PC or internet as I could pay for it. I found out the way everyone seems to find out these days: an electronic slip, on a text of what really happened to me. Sometimes, it's a text or a voice mail message; in my case, it was an email it's all saying RIP, you've not missed, yet that's not slander, yet I fart and get it, the modern-day lipstick on the collar, was all around too, it was an accident, really, I wasn't snooping, in her phone.

I really think they all wanted me to die too...

Part: 28

I wasn't supposed to go near any computer, of I would get my ass in a world of hurt they said to me, you know all the ones that have restating orders for I am a danger to myself and others over; self-helping myself; unlike what they should and could be doing for me, because he was worried, all she was worried about was me, deleting something they need to quote un-quote help me, that's important to them, or click on something, that I would find that would have me sent out, I shouldn't delete, yet she said, the dumbest thing, I can't let you for, you push too many buttons virus or something, that would crash the PC, or that it would be hacked. They took mine, not much of anything on it other than a few porn sites I didn't want anyone know about, yet they do, it's not like I have anything to hide, why do they want it- I know it, in the first place is to see if, like- I lost my mind or something like that. Yet, they see, and say what they like about my hard drive, saying I was leading up to something heinous and or sadistic! 'Technology's not really your strong points, she said to me, is it...?

Like- knowledge, skill, and ability.' I managed to delete all the contacts, she had, saying- shit about me, what was wrong about that, in her email address settings, I said it was all by mistake, yet they knew better, saying I had something to hide, no I just don't like them talking about me.

So, I wasn't supposed to touch it, or anything on or within it, not even the screen.

Nevertheless, I was doing a good thing, ant-I? Um- I am trying to make amends, for being a bit depressed and difficult, to them all they said, I wanted it to be a surprise, by some that cared or got me, for why, yet not even she got it at this point, so-o I had to check her work schedule secretly, I had to look, to see if she found someone new, other than me.

I was out all thanksgiving, I was told that she was in my home all alone, but I just bet... I wasn't snooping, it Christmas, and she did not even get me anything, there are lights, strung up like a 5-year-old did them when I walk through the door, I have not seen my home, in weeks, yet she had, it nicer than ever, not her at all, I wondered. She found time to take over my job also and to keep the home, and make nice with my mom, like the girl she never had, I was um- I don't have words for it.

I wasn't trying to catch him out or anything, with a new lover, yet I knew, I knew... I knew better than that, in my heart, yet not in my mind that was still fuzzy. I didn't want to be one of those awful suspicious girlfriends who go through their girlfriend's bag, and say you have- do this and that- yet I want the truth, and they are not saying. When I answered her phone was off, and that's a never when she was in the shower and he got quite upset, seeing new nude photos of a girl on there looking cuter than I, would ever, I knew it, yet she was in, out of town, she going to leave me, I could feel it, yet I deserve that, don't I? Besides accused me of not trusting her. I felt awful because she seemed so hurt, when I said go with your new SLUT, I don't care, yet I do.

Really, I did nothing but say in my bed, lost in my mind, and dreams, I was- there, lost, and there, lost. Lost with not having her completely. I knew that the big man up there was giving me my hell, I needed to look at her work schedule, I know that is when they were... um... where... yeah... and she'd left his laptop on, and I know the password, so I when and did the stocking thing, that is all I can to they say. Why she'd run out late for a meeting, with the team, of them.

On there is a starting of a book about her story of being a transsexual, and I read it, and there, was a bit in there about me, and I start to cry, she really loves me, I know, it's just me and it's just her, and how we are.

It was the perfect opportunity, to sink in the I love you for life part in there, before she sends it to someone, so I had a look at his calendar, noted down some dates, and say my side of this story also, I know she would say, I was stilling her thunder, yet I sure they would want to hear my side.

When I closed the browser, and MS Word, on the windows, I looked at all the email account, see what I have missed, and what they do and don't do that I am not a part of, logged in, laying bare there. The emails where a girl like her, that made the change, and she was saying he said of the story and that they should get together, for its all the same, was it, love, no but I took it that way, I clicked, for more, and it was not, at all what my mind was thinking.

I thought it was spam at first, when I read her posts until I realized, that they were kisses, hugs, and storylines about her life, mine and hers, all the same- like. What was missing was the why of it all, or what make a boy want to be a girl, and that is where I came in saying I think is the way you are raised, and state of mind, it's a sickness to me, or something over being raised, where a man has all control over you-you don't want that ever so you turn to a girl- for love.

In an email:

I asked for more photos, it was a reply to a message, here to say she wants to meet me and her, and have maybe a hook up also, hey were young why not, 3 girl sex, I would love it, I had to wonder the parts if she was she-boy or girl-ie made, maybe I would, um- well have it, she'd sent a few hours before, just after seven, when I was still slumbering in our bed. And said to say she had all that changed now, yet I was in-like with her, and want to see where it would go also.

She is girl-ie made, having the hole nothing more, yet, I fell asleep last night thinking of her in dirty ways, I have a thing for this girl now, what can I say they're real, and sweet, unlike other girls, or boys these days, I was dreaming about kissing her mouth, and all lips she had, her breasts, the inside of her girlie-ness. I woke this morning with my head full of her, desperate to touch her, it was fast lust of me touching myself to her photos, and then the video chatting started she saw me doing it, and it was friendship to more in a day or less, don't expect me to be sane, I can't be, not with you, then her, or anyone.

I read her messages and had the video up, and I was looking at her doing the same things with me: sexting yet with video, I loved it, so thrilling, so wrong, yet right, and she knows nothing about me yet so I, I thought why not, even if it's not long-lasting it's a thrill. In love with her, until and after I felt the shame, why? All girls feel that way I think it's for we pounded to think touching and feeling is dirty, or sin or it's not nice for a girl, I live once I'm-a going to cum. And then- you or she is going to stop me, and God I think he gets it also, and she just as missed up as I so, it's all right...

...All right...!

Cheating, nah- I don't think that is a thing anymore... with any girl my age, you do, what you do, with what you do, how you do, and if they don't like you that day, do it with one that you want too, with you, it's what you do. Get off- is how- to do...

Part: 29

Haven- so being trans, and look at yourself like in photos and in the glass, I learned to love me for me I want to me. Others got it, I would say, I am not like all those in your place, where you live, I had friends and a girl that gets it.

I remember when told her that he'd never felt like this before, that he couldn't wait to be with her, that it wouldn't be long until they could be together.

All true, yet I had to do what I did for me even if it seemed selfish... I had it all, a girl that loved me for being the right boy, I would say why was I not happy with that, it was that I was not seeing whom I was on the inside showing out the out. And that fact I all was wanted to feel girl, even down there too.

I had her yet not me... if that makes any sense...

People ask all the time, so what was it like to go through the change and what do they do, when taking all that off and making a puss- puss...?

I just give them a link to a YouTube video.

And my photo of my new stuff... as you can see here.

A journey starts with the first step and it goes forward at your pace.

Usually, it begins with the therapist, finding out where you are in your gender variance.

First, you get a whole bunch of hormone injections. They cause you to lose muscle tone, gain fat, and your cheekbones to rise. Your mammary glands also grow.

Then slowly hormones from a doctor again slowly at your own pace.

You should be working closely with your doctor and in the final in control of how fast you go forward.

Some transgender folk does not transition all the way others do and you will find out for yourself as you go.

The hormones and dosage can be done in several methods, pills, injections even patches.

It hurts like hell, you feel and smell like her, trying to get all that is boy off you... everything boy makes me want to sick. I love the pick, mermaids, and all that is girly... I always did, even as a girl-boy up 'till 12, and that when I had to pick what I wanted... They will cause body changes, skin, weight moves around, curves if you're lucky, other things begin to shrink, then if you decide surgery.

And then optional cosmetic surgery can be done. The younger you begin the better.

Done properly, so I had to make a pick younger then you think of what I really wanted in life, and with proper guidance, you can be happy, that what they say, yet you can never really get there, I feel, baby's and girls, to date, or whatever have a lot to deal with... and will be the person you have always been but no one else could see.

Well just end up living together, name change, bathroom, and so on, is not but a cost on whom I am... and what I want to be, if you did not know I was trans you wouldn't, yet those that do, take me as a freak. Unless they're the ones that care for me, you know, that have a brain.

My voice is now sweet and high, and all girly, you would love me I am sure of it, don't judge what you don't understand.

So back to what happens...

A lot of things happen, first, you take hormones such as estrogen pills and antiandrogens.

Like- you do this to start transitioning through it is optional. They do tend to yield good results for general appearance through.

Then you would probably go through FFS (facial feminization surgery) which is done to make you look more feminine.

Then there's the psychiatric evaluation to make sure you are absolutely, sure about this and that your mentally stable enough to go through with it.

I passed... they get it, yet some ask why a doctor would do this for money, I get that, I feel it's to make the one in the body happy.

Then finally there's the sexual reassignment surgery which alters your male genitals to female genitals, using the penis to create a vagina, a good place to look is- tsroadmap.com.

It has good information, and don't be an ass, about it you don't understand me, goes f-off, boys that are dumb, for everything you need to know about transitioning is her.

One thing I hated about being a boy and around them was the dumb they are. Good luck, if you're like me!

Then:

After several months of that intentions, at 12 and up and for life, you have to proceed to surgical alteration, I did mine at the end of the age of 13- going for 14.

Giving you knockers is the easy part, both implants- my nips are smaller also, a 32B-worked for me, getting a functional vagina is extremely difficult, to spray and do all things you want it too as a girl. I just want to cum like all the other girls I know that sleepover and we do that, yet not a sure thing, they think it cute, like them, I learned I am me, not them or anyone other than that, yet it works.

Most transgendered individuals I know ultimately keep their original genitalia, so they can still have orgasms. Yet I have had them... its hard work yet can go off, after an hour or so... of dildo loving fun.

Others in school were not kind to me, I have my girls, we all do in school, yet them, I think there simple to whom I am... nothing more. I have 10 girls that I love, and they get me. That's more than a girl- like me, can ask for, and I have her, always, even if she's not coping with me well.

Yet, I been called the girl with a dick, and other names, yet that nothing to whom I want to be, and what I really wanted and what God did not do right for me, I am sorry to say, and I don't blame anyone for it, it's just what I was predestined to do, I guess...? My life plan... they would say... a church that gets my type, God loves us all, even if this or that way- it's good to remember that. I am a living bean after all- just like you, yet not in sex. I not crazy- I not unlike any other girl out there...

I am me... I have become me- inside and out, deal with it, or not, you pick. I not that hard to understand... am I?

Part: 30

I don't have words to describe what I felt, that day, but now, sitting on the train, I am furious, nails digging into my palms, tears stinging my eyes, the day she said it was over, I remember it, yet even now, I get it, yet I am the same one the inside, yet she never felt that way to me, on the outside.

(Flash Back)

I feel a flash of intense anger. I feel as though something has been taken away from me. I remember it all, how could she... do this to me?

How could she do that...? I thought about it, it's just boobs and a vag., ...so what? What was the hard then, now I get was not have the sex we planned on, yet I didn't want it, did she not get that? I said after we would, yet she yelled, without a dick, with a fake one, that F-ed up, you ass-hole. Think about what I want she said, and I said all the ways I loved her, yet that was not enough for her hitting and slapping on me, and saying get out!

'What is wrong with her?' I thought, and she said- I had that twisted, 'look at the life they have, have- as girls a girl, I want to be,' I said to her- 'I want it more than anything,' 'more than me,' she said, if that the way you want then yes, 'look at how beautiful they are,' I said to her in the hallways of the school, all over Rockville, all the time really, she was sick of it, and me being here and not the storing loving him!

I have never- ever understood how people can blithely disrespect the damage they do by following their hearts.

Who was it said, that following your heart is a good thing? May not have been trans, it is pure selfishness, selfishness to overcome all, I speculate. Hate floods me, to the ones that don't get it, yet I love me now, yet not all days and she learned too, it's all about living and find life, as you want it to be, in finding you.

As I said, 'you don't have to be the one...' yet, like- I know that she is... I just know.

Part: 31

Me- (Back 2014)

Age 15-

(EVENING)

The 5:55 fast train to Rockville, on Amtrak, has been canceled, along with are steamer that we use that the school said, is good enough it's all we can afford, today there is no way over the lake to the town side, so its passengers have invaded my train, there was a derailment over the way, blocking at traffic, upended room carriages, three teen girls dyed- their names or on the news yet not imprint to me.

I, fortunately, have a seat, but by the aisle, on days unlike this, not next to the window, where all you see is high water, and reflections on the splashing waves, and there are bodies pressed against my shoulder, my knee, invading my space, for the entire school body is jam-packed in three train cars that form the 1900's. with no heat in them.

The heat has been building all day, with all the sadness over them, closing in on me, I feel as though I'm breathing through a disguise. I have an urge to push back, to get up and shove. Every single window has been opened, just out of them dumb like always, jumping around and about as young kids do, and yet, even while we're moving, the carriage feels airless a locked metal box.

I cannot get sufficient oxygen into my lungs. I feel sick, over Smelling carnosine heaters. I can't stop replaying the scene in the coffee shop this morning, and fogged window, in this winter wonderland, something off a Christmas card for sure, I can't stop feeling as though I'm still there in her mind and not my own, I can't stop seeing the looks on their faces, then and now.

I blame her the girl the haunts me, for all the loss of life, yet that may just be my mind. I was obsessing this morning about the girls that were lost faces, three girls, Charli Emily, Ellieddy and Ameliah, all under the age of 12.

Yet, it's not like we have not seen this before, it's in the press one day and old news of we all have to move one the next. The is when her hair was growing out, about what she'd done and how he would feel, no longer being on the boy side of things, this is when she starts the dress too, and the new look, when she was at the start of her teen years.

And I lost my boyfriend, about the confrontation, with the others over her I stood up for her, she was picked on making the change, now they love her, yet she is... like them now, I was walking around in a daze, those days think about him, without thinking, I thought I would never see him again. I have her, yet at the time, I did not see what could be, and what is... and not I went into the coffee shop that everyone from my town uses, on days where everything else is shouting down. I love to have days, like this even if you have to make them up, I hate school! I was through the door before I saw them, with him/ her now, and by the time, I did it was too late to turn back, and he called me over, saying that he loved me, I thought why you're a girl now that likes girls, is that not wrong, and I am a girl that likes boys only, is that not wrong- being right?

They were beholding at me, and she did too, eyes widening for a fraction of subsequent moments before they remembered to fix smiles on their faces.

All the- girls, there is now a new grope, that love him as a- her, saying he what they have been looking for to round them off, or words to that, that was awkwardness for me, for I not like them, thinking of it, are now beckoning, waving me over her, makes me say how, I not beaming a green monster- I not, yet maybe. 'Rachel! Being one is like playing with hem and teaching all that is a girl.' She said, arms outstretched, pulling me into a hug, I will show all that you need to know about boob periods, and whatnot, and boys, or girls, or whatever even how to do your makeup.

I wasn't expecting it, my hands were caught between us, saying you understand your part of the grope right, I said sure and walked out the door, fumbling against his body, saying I won't bother, that he needs to pick me or them, that was the start of this... Sasha smiled sneakily as only she can, gave me tentative air-kisses, trying not to get too close. 'What was she doing here, anyway, she is trash?'

'I get that, yet you don't get her as I do,' Haven said.

For a long, long moment, I went blank, staring in at them from outside, think the why of it, yet I get it now, I am trash. I looked at the ground all icy, shiny, and snow-covered, I could feel myself ruddiness and, realizing it was making it worse, then I could have ever imaged, I gave a false laugh and said, 'I lost him, I lost him.'

Part: 32

Just feel him up- I mean her- as I used too, I was thinking in a moment of rage. 'Oh my,' she failed to hide her surprise when she got to feel her boobs to see what boobs felt like that where not mine, and puss- puss too, all hands-ie, they are eating there whatever- slop and make him there cute girl toy to be, at the café, while Sasha and the other one the girl that looks like her face was hit by a frying pan, nodded and smiled, saying you're one of us now, you don't need trash, your popular. 'A truth of life, for a small town-no?'

The girl with the new hole, is a hit with the girls, a boy that is a girl, they get it, it is the coolest thing to them, yet not me, I wanted the dick, not this dick she is. And that girl, make the bullying boys back off, I never- ever had that...

I couldn't remember the name of a single- one of them. Not one... I couldn't think of a good name to call them either, I just stood there, rubbing my lower lip with my forefinger, shaking my head, and eventually, the one girl said, 'Top secret, is it, you and I and what we're doing tonight?

Are these girls just weird like that, or what? I don't get it? What do they see in her now being- as well as her?

They didn't want to bother before now- why now, and why would she well not bother with them now?

Don't want you saying anything until, now but its- ending I know so, I changed it today on Facebook, and doing so-o, I lost the little friends I have, the contracts, all have dropped on my phone too, over this all, it's all official.

It's complicated...

It was bullshit, and he knew it, he did it to save me, for have a life of wanting more, yeah right, is that she is saying to everybody.

Crazy... no?

(Goo-goo eyes made...)

And everybody bought it, but me, like the whole lot- but everyone pretended they care about me, and they don't, and nodded along, sucking on my food at lunch, ham salad.

The grope of girls was looking over their shoulder through the window, they were embarrassed for me, they wanted a way out.

Part: 33

I see- that girl- put her hand on her forearm, I flowed them through the part they were on their date if you want to call it that I did, 'It's great to see you, Rachel.'

She pity was almost profound about it. I'd never realized, not until the last year or two of my life, how shaming it is to be pitied. And that is what I saw there looking out the bushes, of them sucking face sitting on the bench, with the light flickering at the duck.

God get a room!!! (I thought.)

We never got this far this fast- I through there too.

Look at the tongue flicking ear licking- tit grabbing, lip biting, and ass squiring, and grossness... holding, and puss- puss grabbing, 3rd basing, going on, and they did it- it all, and they did... it all- all the sexy stuff- and stuff- and shit, I'm sure... sex- sex, and more f-n sex- they had it in them all night, and if not together they were soloing and showing it to each other, and then doing each other, I saw it all, I sure- of that too, I am sure of it.

Stuffing anyone...?

I could just see all the toys in my duty mind, then they were, using them, glass, 2-point O in the butt holes- rabbit wiggling, both at the same time, god, look at them go- side by side, and oh- facing- making.

I was even touching...

I wonder if it is double-sided? You know what it is, don't you? IT! The girl's best friend at the end of a hard day- it! A creeper said- 'sucker her nipples' I swear to you... I hear it far in the park's background nose. I shit you not... Home- run after home run- and fun-fun- fun- hun. I would know, I saw it allon her- Rachel's bed, on hers, they did this- and that, as I thought, and it was double-sided- smashing.

(What I saw)

Pure Enrichment Peak Wand Massager was held on them until, N-joy Pure Wand on her, and it should have been me- me- me, getting the G- spot loving- of my dreams, like this- I want her/him now.

The Candy Cane Waterproof Vibrator was going hardcore, and in her than her, and back. The Conquest Clit Stimulator and I thought I had it bad, with want to cum more than 6 times a day, maybe not. Okay, now I am horny, and said not allowed- in my head- I think it me and my own Candy Cane toy tonight, yet I am trash for 6 dollars, that all I could get, and some others yet I not telling you that.

So, she'll be with her in this why yet not with me, how would that make you feel?

I know what it did to me... I know.

I saw all 69 things they were doing- like with- with each other too, down there- you know there... so yah- eating out, it happened. Good for her, like I never had that- and I wanted it from him, yet she got from him being her- good for the two of them, 4 years of us for one week with the- good- good. I am a girl- you would too if you were me.

I don't get it, I have what she has and more, and it not been used, as hard, or as open as she was just saying.

Then I thought that one over, maybe not so...

Never been there yet...with a lover, never, yet I have... had lots of bad sex, anyone wants me, after daddy... maybe that is why she/he passed on taking me?

I am deserting to have sex, with someone, that is not my dad and my age!

Even- I get it now... even I...

She is even still scared down there, yet you would not know if you did not know, yet she is trying to cover it with a light covering over her brown hair down there, it looks the part... I was blown away. I was standing on a talus... looking in the window, um -like a creep- I know- yet, I was in love with the now her- Haven.

'My heart is falling out of my ass' - and you and them could give a shit!

Part: 34

I sat down in the shade beneath a sugar- maple tree, thinking of the unfilled hours ahead, replaying the conversation in the coffee shop, remembering the look on all those mean-ie girls faces, when she said goodbye to me, it was all over for me, and whom I was, I am, and was going to me be.

I must have been there for less than half an hour when, I got a text message, and I could feel the vibration in my jeans.

I myself held out for about three minutes or so-o, before, I myself repossessed the phone and dialed into voice mail, hoping for I want you not them, speech yet did not get it, no all I got was my mom bitching- 99 times, about nothing, and that I should- well just F-n dye! Or find a train, and run into it, head on!

It was her again, texting from the shop saying, this is for me be happy for me, and understand.

I let the text go, and did not say anything back, why would I? I for one, like tried to ignore it, like life! Yet, sucking at it is what I do, so you can't ignore suck!

Today, I did the unthinkable smashed it off the ground- the phone that is, and I knew, I could not get another; I put the phone back into my bag, and I didn't want to hear any more, not today, was already awful enough and it was not yet ten-thirty in the morning, and I was sick of hearing the drama, of all them, saying I am wrong.

Wrong- I did get it. I the bad one, here, not wanting to go on, yet that not the whole truth.

I steadied myself for the anguish of hearing his/her voice-the voice, that used to express to me with amusement, and light and now is used only to reproach or comfort or pity-but it wasn't him/her.

My skin was itching, so I got to my feet and walked to the cornerback to shop, they were gone, I couldn't breathe, and I couldn't stop my brain from racing.

I went in and sat down, there, I opened the first one, and drank it as fast as, I could, grabbing it fasts out-a- the cooler, and then opened, the in like one second less than two- I am sure.

The voice, in my head, was not my own, from that moment on, I snapped, in the head, and like half dyed, to the world, I may have stocked, they say no, yet I say yes. All over a boy and love, it's possible... no?

I couldn't see them, turned my back to the path, and I got under the table, I could pretend like a child that they couldn't see me.

'Them- the two girls, without her, they're looking at me saying shit.' Long pause, and I blacked out, and I did not remember, anything more than like a year, or those days, just in patches-like.

I woke up in the ER with no way to pay for it yet, that said I was just fatigued, she was standing there, and I was in one of those sex grows they give, showing way too much of my lower end to the world, and sure the canteen was not drawn. Sorry, my ass was showing, they all saw hair vag...

'Look, I know you're having a tough time,' she says, as though she has nothing- to do with me feeling like the world has come to an end, or do with my pain I feel over her being the only one that there for me in my life, 'but you can't call us at night all the time.'

Her tone is trimmed, cantankerous. I got you a new track phone, and I am the only one/ name/ number in the contacts, 'It's bad enough that you wake me up, don't call me, take the phone, I don't want it. I see you need more rest to come around, she throws the phone at me, smacking me in the face, but you wake, she said: why- are you not being nice to me? She questioned, and that's just not acceptable, for you to be doing this to me, I was always nice to you, she said, and I screamed leave, and all the NR's LPN's- girls at the desk were looking in my room, with glares on their faces.

'I need to talk to you about the phone, she said the next, day laying like un-top of me, in my hospital bed.' Extra-long pause- she's talking to me, and doing something else, multitasking, puffing on an E-cig, through her lime- green braces. You're going to have to go- and get off her bed, we're struggling to get her to sleep through now of it all- the nurse said, along with she has been difficult.'

'We're careworn, trying to get her to sleep through the night, and even day, she doesn't need you here she said.' We, us, them, our little family- so they. 'F*cking bitch,' back off, she said, she was escorted, out by to man, banned for life at Miners Hospital, or problems and our routines, of her being her, and being me. She has taken everything from me, she yelled kicking and screaming, as they drag her out... She has taken everything now; she calls me to tell me that my anguish is inopportune for her? I give the phone to the staff, saying: 'I don't care what you do with it.'

Part: 35

A blissful rush of alcohol hitting my bloodstream, I am-a partying with my N-E-EEW FRIENDS, lasts only a few minutes, and then, I feel sick, not over the drinking over her. I'm going too fast, even for me, with my changes, I need to slow down, and think; if I don't slow down something bad is going to happen, I can feel it.

I'm going to do something, I will regret. Like losing out, on something or someone, or anything, so on, I'm going to call her back, I'm going to tell her I don't care, about her, and I don't care about her family, matters, and shit, and I don't care if her my child never gets a good night's sleep for the rest of its life, with her dad walking around with dick hanging out- like a dyed baby bird.

I'm going to tell her, that the line he used did not work, with me-don't expect me to be sane, I said about it, she used me, and got them that not right... text message: I been think n bout u- n- me if we were alone how it would b, I would kiss u all over till ur feel n hot then give u feel n when I hit the spot, 4 I love yah bab.

Thx U 4 U Bn U

< This passes as writing in my classroom, I think NOT, in life! We don't know to double the coincident, were to use a comma, how to even write a freaking sentence. We don't know how to drop the 'e' in write, to make it- now present tense, (and yet that was wrong no) we don't know that either, to add an ending.

Without text helpers like everything turned on in a word, that they don't let us use, or electronics where F-ed, and all fail, we're all dumb, and it's not us, is the teachers not doing anything to hear- we're not allowed to talk, or it's being belligerent. We all so dumb where happy, that is why every other word is F*ck- that we use or say- it's all we know, we don't have a vocabulary to elaborate. I love it anyway, like- I knew what he meant, yet nobody, I know has looked at a book, notebook, or has thought about having or using either.

This how we all write and it is passed as okay, then the teachers don't care about us, just like math, reading, and life, they don't care, they want to be paid and that all they care about, so we don't take their jobs. When we were first together; she/he wrote it in a text to me, like no-one uses paper to write, are you kidding me, that would be the way of the past, look at all the kids in my class they don't even know how to hold a pen nevertheless use one to spell words on a paper.

My dad got laid off his job, his woman left him for banging me his little girl, and other little girls and he lost part of his ear, at the Barns- Sterling and Tucker coal mines, now it's finding work, even if it's illegal, around here is moonshining, come done to the old factory, and it you a jar. Or drugs laundering at the music shop in the town, where you can get a mixed custom Gibson, for your obsession, and nose candy for your fixation, and your needles for your relaxation done right, by a man that looks like Tom Patty's twisted dicking tween.

You walk in there and it looks like a- shit cyclone went off in the store for all the trades for their ho-hum needs. (starch- starch) a shop where I was told to take my custom guitar and shove it, or I kill you, all I wanted was stings... yet being me all trash-ie and shit, I think he through others thing from what they say, not what I say, what I say is always twisted- in more ways than one. I was chased out with a shotgun- I shit you not! Life in a small town- that how it is... saying- 'your dad owes me...'

He was declaring his undying passion, for me I am sure. Everything she has is secondhand, like me also, how is she now something she not- with new girlfriends, I want to know how that makes her feel, and how that would feel to be her.

I want to call her back, and then no- then yes- then no, and ask her, What does it feel like, being one of them, she is living in my house, for Christ-say-k's surrounded by the furniture, I bought, for she and I, it's all cheap, yet it what we have, to sleep in, the bed is a day bed she and I share, oh well that what we have not had anyone that cares, that I shared with him for years, also, I remember the first time, we were 5 or so, and I was so turned on I could not sleep not know what it was- yet it was not long till I did with daddy.

I still find it astonishing, that she chose to stay there, in that house, in my house, even after I said get out, yet she there and, I am here in the ER for another half week or so. I couldn't believe it when she told me, she was not taking all her things, or not leaving my side, never- ever. 'I loved that house,' she said, 'and you and I in it, it's all we have like each other.' I was the one who claimed we keep it, despite its location, and had to overpay to her mom.

I liked life down there on the tracks, I liked- and love watching the trains go by, I enjoyed the sound of them, it is relaxing to me, you can't take the farm out of me, I never be a city girl, the old-fashioned trundling of ancient rolling stock through Rockville is always going to be me- and she.

'It won't permanently be like this, they will sooner or later upgrade the line to more tracks, and then it will be fast trains ear-piercing past the home, I am sure of that too, just like me get all new parts, I don't want to see that- either, slow-moving is how this town works.' Nonetheless, I couldn't have confidence in, that it would never- ever- in fact, happen- ever- I am- sure of that. I would have stayed there all my life, with her as me now, feel like me on the inside and out... that's I can keep a $2 an hour job and make $300 a year, to pay to live, to those that don't want us too.

I didn't, though, and her mom was going to say get you old enough to do it on your own I did, no one is going to hold your hand, it was upon the market- saying: for sale by owner, yet she/ we couldn't find a buyer for the price we divorced, so instead she said, I give it to you two for rent, if you can keep it if not the town will rip it away out for under you.

Part: 36

Mom- So-o buy me out, she said, and we did, by getting her in jail for drugs, and sexy- stuff for less than a year, and for stilling a car to, that we had in the year of the same length of time, it was junk yet, I dove in to not even thinking it was hot, yet that's how things are around here. Do- and not think, for you don't know any better, we say- she said, yet their law said it not to be that way. We didn't by her out we set her up to the fail at life as she did for me, and she. 'It doesn't pay, we'll get you back!'

I am in the ER- yet I still freak myself, 10 times a day, if they want to look go head, I not stopping you. I don't change my ways of life for anyone, 5 when I week up and 5 before bed, it the only way I can sleep, and a go why to start the shity day- ahead, by thanking God for it! I can help loving myself.

I cry and then get happy with movies and MTV, and then said wanting her and my cat. And then I eat, like nothing and 2- finger away... I hear some little girls say- 'Mommy- mommy, ah- ah- um- I do that too.' And she was like 10! And a girl was looking with an eyebrow up, I just grinned, thinking little slut! And there I am looking for a train tonal start on. All I got was some nares saying attest draw the carton... they took my button thing-ie away, saying I was overusing that too.

Yet, I have a TV that's cool! And I cum-ed and rubbed it all down the walls above my bed, I know it will be there forever, some of me thee for all time, at least I've made my make in history, now, just to show how much I love them, for shity- taking care of me, that I have to pay for at some point... hardcore, the ruff is their style... Yet it not as freaked up as have her before she was fully her, in the school lot looking like- a girl, yet jacking it, you know it, like a boy- still, with her new girlfriend, and yet that on YouTube too. Yet she trans and gets away with mood swings, me doing that I would get thrown out, yet she has a doctor's slip, explain everything. Try taking that down, it's not illegal to post young sex- sorry.

Nope! And get up out of this bed, no don't think so-o.

Haven- The strangest thing was the first day waking up was not having a pee-pee. No- like I had this thumping clit-ie under a pad instead. I love where the girl underwater, or as the most girl not wear any, and just wear tight leggings to show it all off in the front, and in the back. We would never get the right price for it- it being the house, not in the way all the other one around us look too, it not- uncommon to walk in a home around her and see dog shit on the floor, and a lightbulb hanging down from bar junction boxes.

Me- But we never found the right buyer, even though the sign is still out in the foundation year we all too lazy to take the song down; yet only some dumb butts ask for a quote, instead we moved her in me, and we took the dumb for what it is, and she loved the house as I did- even if, and we decided to stay.

She must be very secure in herself, to show me, and the world what she looks now on Twitter show full nudes; I suppose, she has a right to, I mean- if you want to- there is like no one stopping you, or showing all of you to the world, I think about how, I am wearing my younger sister's clothes, using the same brush for our hairbrush, toothbrush, and hair ties, we share it all, I have to be her mom and dad, yet she still living with him over in the park, on the weekends, I have it made until I can make a payment.

I think to myself, that have fallen asleep, the lowing glow, and the hot sun comforting me, to do just that. I woke with a start, scrabbling around desperately for my handbag. It was still there, my skin was itchy, I was alive with bed bugs, the sheets have not been changed seen my mom left, and I don't know how to wash, I am only 15, they were in my hair, in my butt crack, on my neck, chest, and biting me; I was scratching them away, I bounded to my feet. The train stops outside, I look from the high up bedroom window.

Haven- my thing to do when sad, and think about her is gone for a walk, I am across the carriages left, on the tracks, there are too many people in the way, upon the path, she and I always said, and the town sucks anyways, way- the tracks where always our get-a-way, make sector.

The spray paint of our names, my real name with hers, I wonder whether if I should change it, and see if it still there, I am sure someone has painted over it after all these years, whether he knows, whether she going to make a full recovery..., or whether she's still living, with some issues, a life she's yet to discover is a lie, the fact that she is living with less in her head the rest, yet I am in denial, about what they say.

Me- It's some MORNING of someday-and I don't care. I know without looking at a clock, the time, that it is somewhere between seven thirdly-five and eight. I know from the superiority of the light, from the resonances of the boulevard outside, about 300 yards away from my window, from the sound of the town over the way across the tracks the chamois hallway right outside my room.

I roll over and fall to sleep again, I get up early to clean the house every Saturday, yeah that is, do that, at the crack of noon, no matter what, I have too at some point.

(Thinking back to the change)

I remember- It could be her birthday, all over today, she now a girl, in a way it was a new birth a new identity, it could be the morning of the end of all time, and she would sleep through it, and she will get up early on Saturday to clean if I drop her cut small- jiggle butt out of the bed hitting the floor only. She says it's purifying, it sets her up for a good weekend, and for the reason that she cleans the house in a night top and have sweat pants rolled down at the waist, meaning she can crash afterwards, it means she doesn't have to go to the gym, if that all she has on... and to do it on that day.

It doesn't actually bother me, early morning vacuuming, since I wouldn't be asleep anyway, with her hair backside running around in less than what is decent. More like a nude girl and a sticky pad, just hang, but that's- TMI right... sorry. I love to freeze, not running, eye bogged girls, a 6 am.

(Mmmm-ah)

Ha- she shaves just being sick. I- Haven, like cannot sleep in the mornings; I cannot snooze tranquility pending the middle of the day, with her. The day springs out in front of me, not a minute of it bursting. I wake tersely, my breath sharp and heart racing, my mouth decayed, and I know directly that's it. I'm awake and don't want to be. The more I want to be unconscious, the less I can be. Life expectancy and sunlight will not let me be, it seems, I lie there, listening to the sound of the world lost in it like time, with the ghost of it in my brain as another girl from another time. Crucial, joyful, and busy, I think about the clothes on the side of the railway, we left before he was a she, and I drift into a sleep of dream of him inside me...

The dream- we are next line kissing, loving in the morning sunshine, and the sex is long and slow, what teen girl like me dream about.

2:00-sh.

I could go to the fitness center, for the one that doesn't have money for a membership. I could sit on the sofa with a cup of coffee and Saturday kitchen show on TV on channel 3 with bunny ears, and VHS. I could rewrite my report for school- yeah right like I have homework. I could wait for her to leave the house, go to her shitty job, to support me, being me now, I crack open some rose wine that was $99, that was left in the cabinet, it was dry, and I want to just get out of my head, even more, and sleep, lost in the dreams of what if. This was that- that was this.

She was already sleeping and me getting in the bed with her would not have worked.

Part: 37

I opened my eyes and listened to the rain pounding against the cracked pane window that's slip into fours, and it is now like 5-sh out, I sleep for that long. I felt her behind me, sleepy, warm, soft body molding to mine, her hips just fit ever so nice in my behind.

Afterward, she went to get the snail mail, and I made leftover from like 3 days ago- when I went to the café, we sat in the kitchen drinking whatever bar or alcoholic thing we could find or get our hands-on, we have older boys for that too, and my dad, never really knows where all the beer goes, we went to the pub for a late lunch, at 9- it was the only place open all other places close at 7:30 pm., we fell asleep until then and I had the alarm sit, tangled up together in front of the TV in our room that is nothing but snow.

Clear plastic over the other window, I imagine it's different for him now, then with me, and then like nothing has changed at all, it's all the same, he is just she, lazy Saturday oral sex and leftovers, and double-sided dildo, smashing and sleep and more than- and sleep- and more that, instead a different sort of joy, or have a man- I have a girl that we'll never get me there, you know there, I am just a little girl tucked up with a little and wife is not what I wanted.

She'll be just learning to talk now, I have her one day out of the week- all 'Dad-a' and 'Mam-a, she is now, learns to walk.' The baby is in our room, in my old crib, and we do what we can, on food stamps and welfare, and a secret language incomprehensible to anyone but a parent. Yet, my dad is more fit then- we. I don't think, so yet that is more of that and or in their own lawmaking in my hometown.

I don't have heat in all the room, just in the bedroom with one space heater, I don't have $600 a month for heating oil, for this old house, that has no pink stuff- in the walls, its hollow, (yet it's not falling all the way down, they say I have it really- really nice.) and there are holes in the roof, and I trapped it the best I could.

And put rugs down at the doors, yet it's cold when it hits -17° out; yet, that makes me on fit, for you, all failed me to this point. I walk everywhere I go- in the town, even in the cold, I have to, I don't have it- it being money, education, and some that cares. I wonder at night, if I should be walking the streets, it's a small town, yet I don't feel safe, being a small girl in a big little town. I should have a car, a high paying job, a life, and a man... like them, yet no, we don't have that... we have pained fail, by the ones that disrespect us, yet we have to give that to them - I don't think so-o.

Yet, no one wants to help someone out, it's all me- me- me, no love anymore in the small town, for someone like me, it's all for them. The pain is solid and heavy, it sits in the middle of my chest. I cannot wait for this all to stop, it's the ache of loss and the thump of something new sparking, and to leave the house, and take my walk along the tracks holding her hand.

Dad- 'Some young girls turn depressed awfully young. No singular motive, it seems, but they seem practically to be born that way. They bruise easier, tire earlier, cry more rapidly, remember longer, and as- I say, get sadder younger than anyone else in the world.

I know, for I'm one of them, and I can't say I fail them sorry, they don't want to work or try.'

'You can fix ignorant and confrontational attitude!'

(SUNSET)

December 13, 2014-

Haven- I ran into Santa, and just playing along with the man in the suit, I asked him, sitting on his lap, for a vibrator, and his draw draped, for I was 13, yet looked 10. I have always been really same, all the way backs as I remember, I was never a boy in my mind, I love all that was girl-ie, and playing with girl toys the color pink, and dolls, my little ponies, and things like that, dress, makeup, nail polish, cute girl 2 piece swimsuits, singing, dancing, tag with girls only, boys had coodie's, and were icky, I would not have where pj's to bed it had to be a night top nothing more, with all that tucked under, I did not want to see it. Eyelashes had to be, right long and pushed up, lips had to be pink at 13 and up.

I remember, think I don't want a boy, I want her, yet be the same as her. I asked him to bring we a girl and put her under my tree, and to make me one, and he said a real girl or a blow-up, I said I take either if you do this for me, I believe in you and GOD! He said both are to help you, why not... believe and have faith?

It for the good of all how is that wrong? I said I guess your right- thanks, I left with new hope in my fading young heart.

Me- so at the same time at the Salateah mail, I want and sat on Sant, he had a hard on at this point, with all these little sluts asking for- ho-hum- toys. Sant got more then he asked for with Rockville that year.

Haven- I am going to see the new me soon- I said to my mom and dad. I got my sex change, though, Obama care act, it was paid for, for I tried cutting it off and there was nothing they could do in the ER but remove it. 'Good reddens,' I said to my pee-pee waking up, and then it was psychological test, from that day on, all they said is that she is sick, think he needs to be a she, and she wants to be so-o lit her, she over the age mom and dad you don't have a say in the ER, she is now what she wants- and that is her right. And my mom and dad, left me there, saying they never want to see me again, not even a handhold did I have someone understanding me, what to be well me! This was my only gift to me, I never got the right toys or the right dress, I never had all the things those girls had, and damn- it ... I was getting it! I was never loved, as the girl, I was on the inside! She was the only one that kind-a sort-a did, and I love her for that too.

Doctor Marshel- 'He used nail scissors, and a sting.'

Mom- 'He was not cut as a baby, was that what he was doing?'

Doctor- I think not, and you should know... it was at the base, of the shaft, -Miss.
(judging tone)

Doctor- He thinks she is a she, and by the test on the inside of her mind she is...

I- Haven, was going to bleed to death, they said on the ambulance, yet I did not care, I want to be a girl- a girl- a girl! And if death was the way to be it- then so be it!

I recall not get anything under the tree, now if you would do, that to your kid, your child would sue. Think that's funny, I heard a man at Walmart- saying just that to me, when I saw his brat screaming and hitting in the left nut. Saying- 'Santa's see you!' 'That doesn't work anymore-' he said.

(Now)

I spent all day in my bedroom, waiting for Haven to go out so that I could have a drink. She didn't. I was being lazy in the living room on the lazy boy, at the place where I like to just spare- out, and do my whatever, under like ten blanks, and throw them off at the peak. By late afternoon I couldn't stand the imprisonment or the boredom any longer, even with cuming also, so I told her I was going out for a walk down by the tracks, that when she was done over the way on her sofa, to meet me at the cross-track, yeah we look at each other doing it it is normal right? Then, I walked to the station, bought a couple of cans of gin and tonic and got onto the train.

(Back)

Haven- For as long as anyone can remember, the students of 'Rockville High' have inwards at school on the last Monday in September to find a list naming the prettiest and the ugliest girl in each grade. I was there, as a boy, and want to be on the other ends of things, as one of the girls.

Me- I am going to see if I can do something tonight maybe go to a movie but I don't have 50 dollars to blow on shit like that, I thought about an Ebook, yet I don't have 10 to blow either, I would rather have a new sex toy for 30, at least I can keep getting what I want. I like to keep all my glass dildo on the mantle of my fireplace and I love to rub my clit with on hand and use one at the same time and have two go off at the same time- orgasms that is.

Haven- This year will be no different, I remember saying- after I did what I did, I did not regret it though, walking in as the boy with no- ween-n-ie. Roughly four hundred copies, of other girl's photos for photo day, went out, yet not me, I wanted to be one of those preppy girls, I was determined to be.

One cranked up pic. is tapped above, me and her in my locker door, the girl of my dream, if she no longer wants me, for me being me. the urinal in the first-floor boys' bathroom, was no longer for me, I was going in- into the girl's room, looking seeing being one of them, it the smell of new, and girlie pee- it was thrilling to me at 13, I got my first temp. and said, I see what it's all about, even if I don't bleed as they do ever, I bleed in the ER to make up for it.

All the girls were talking about where pennies from Heaven AKA- dick pics, as I was sitting down on the pot- as a girl- what I always wanted- to spray it out of me as they do, one girl has her phone all tucked between her in the next stall over she dating, a football player, violence, is what I here after 5 hours of brainwashing she, get off hard to his pic, and sexy texts, I want that with my dream girl, or maybe just her, yet she is not into me, as me now, and depression, of what to do with me in some class having to ask the nurse's office, about me in PE was getting to me also, I am a girl-girl- girl, I said to the office deal with it.

The list is affixed to locker doors, slipped inside classroom desks, stapled to bulletin boards. They did not know how to take me, yet girls are sweet, they soon fall in love with me in my new class, all new girls, they held me back a year also, saying new faces would be good for my state of mind. And I did not care I was getting where I need to be as the real me, so I am with 12-year-old girls, and love it! A new class of real girls, that is not mean, to me.

So, high school was put off for a year okay, I love the idea of getting away from them, the only one I missed was her. To be in the other building with a girl that a not mean to me was all I really wanted, and maybe I would learn something to with a class that did goof off- all the time, I do what more than they.

I'm not going to visit her if she did not want me too if she did not love me anymore, she was at her dad's dump then, and I was with my mom, and her many men, that would flake out, on her after the quickie, I seen it all over them home- gross! I'm not going to turn up at his and her house and knock on the door, one it would fall off, too she would eat me out for it. Oh- deadly worded, um- give me hell!

Yah that works...

Nothing like that, nothing at all crazy- or silly. I just want to go past the house, roll by stroll next to the train, think about ways to be new, and maybe that was a new girl too, in a new grade, and new school, it felt, strange but right, I was finally coming into my own- as a preteen girl. I'd, had-a nothing better to do, and I don't feel like going home, so I was making my intentions, I just want to see her, yet wanted a new start. I want to see her- yet it was more and more- no, I was not caving to her- like always in the past, I am no longer that boy- I am adorable - kick ass girl!

Part: 39

This isn't a good idea- I had the immoral thoughts. I know it's not a good idea, to go over there yet I did, just to look in the window, and I saw her and her dad, doing it, and I was really done, I knew about it before, yet I thought she was joking about him going down on her; I could see some but not this- it was too much, this was the only dirty window that was not plywood boarded up. It 1983 carefree, orange and cream!

An embossing stamp has dimpled the bottom right corner of each copy, of my new agenda and notebooks, I was really going to do it this year, and make the grades, leaving behind the scar of the high school kids that moved on without me, concentrated as a line drawing- that I did, start to bleed, it was all I had of my past life, the new gymnasium, they added on was not what I thought it was going to be after a 3 million dollar renovation, to the middle school, and a wing of high-tech science labs were added, along with removing all that is art-ie. Not needed in this day and age they say.

This stamp had certified every graduation diploma, for 8th grade, and mine was not completed, it was ripped into two, and handed to me by my mom, before it was stolen from the principal's desk two days ago, before my change. It is now a piece of fairytale illegal imports used to dishearten impressionists or rivals.

But what harm can it do? Trying new things- I through at the time. I want to be closer; I can't see. I want to be closer to them, those girls I want to be, and I do it, I am making new girlfriends and girls that are friends.

Mine record of BS, that they have attached with the old me, no one knows for sure who authors of it were, yet they have the right to say whatever- and do whatever and I have not to say in my say- I don't say so, so I killed the old me as they would say to do, and started over, or how the responsibility is passed along, with a new record, I knew they would have to pass me, like me, and not make up a me, that is not me, like before, I was calling what they said, or it was under investigation, secrecy it has not impeded practice, her- there making all easy passes for me, or the school we are sued, for my doctors, say it was the school that did this to me. If anything, the guaranteed anonymity makes the judgments of the list appear more absolute, impartial, unbiased, yet the school would not cave to me, passing. Yet I did not care... and my mom and dad... said do as you want with her pin... scribble on the line sale me to them.

Three weeks into the 8th-grade year:

My mouth is dry, it hurts to swallow. My heartbeat feels as though it is at the base of my throat, uncomfortable and loud. I roll onto my side; my face turned to the window and look out from my window thinking about what I did- and then I have to stop and say this is how I want it and need it.

The second thoughts are killing me as I am failing, and it not on me... even the doctors would say. The light there it hurts my eyes, as I look at the old street lights, that flicker. I bring my hand up to my face- and cry like a girl; I press my fingers against my eyelids, trying to rub away the ache, of not having her.

My fingernails are filthy, so-o unlike the girl, I should be, not all the boy is out-a me yet, and my legs fuzzy.

I feel as though I'm falling, and failing at everything like, I did before the change, and it's not this new me that is the problem, it's them not the kid in my grade the teachers, saying this and that, bullying me. What they say would make a grown man break down... overtime!

Part: 40

You know I could have had my deenk in her as a- she- male, yet I did not she was wielded out by me, having the boy and face of a girl and the man's junk, I would have, maybe yet I thought it was wrong, at the time, I don't know what I was thinking and she holds it, agent, me, I mean I was blown to place I have never been by her yet she wants it in her, and I would not give that to her. Yet I was like 12 and didn't know what I was fulling doing there, even if I thought I did. I was a little boy, yet changing into a girl.

My goal in my change was to look like Ariana Grande that is what I asked for when redoing my face and body. And I know that some may say it too much but I going to show you the photos.

(Life tip from a trans girl and what I found out: I would say to any trans boy to girl, find a girl that gets you, for she well takes you as a boy in her mind, even if you're not in your if she loves you it will not matters. A boy would not want me, for all the gay's that are with it!)

Me as a pre-teen boy moving into the girl look.

A day before, I said, I don't want this thing any longer, going off in my hands. I was stuffing... the top, and tape it down in school!

I am now one of those girls in my grade- I do not have the grades but I have the girls and the look that is all me, inside and out. What it looks like down there everyone asks to see it, so I just show, and say it's okay. Even at lunch at school, you can see me under the tab dropping my jeans for girls and boys to see a fast look my first year with them.

This one showing me growing my hair, and looking more like a girl with the injections. And when I got my boobs, there are small, yet I love them!

The day after, in the hostel room, recovering, now if you did not know you would not.

A sexy photo I texted to her, saying 'I love you still!'

A pic. Of me getting where I want to be looking like the singer I loved! We could pass as tweens- no? I am happy to say that Photoshop has nothing on me! Ha, I sing no- you would rather hear an audio-tuned queef- for 3 hours than her that, cracking.

Age 14!

And now I am fully happy with the look of me, on the inside and out!

(Now)

Me- Sleeping next to the girl I love, as though the bed has vanished from beneath my body, I up next to her, I am there by her side, feeling her covers and her warmth. Last night, any every night since we made up, and yes sex had something to do with it.

Something happened...

The breath comes sharply into my lungs and I sit up, too quickly, heart racing, my puss throbbing, like my body trembling for her, I learned that she is him still on the inside, and the outside is starting to work for me now too- I think, I may be gay for her- is that how this works?

And so, with every new list, the labels that normally slice and dice the girls of Rockville High into a billion different distinctions, poseurs, poplar's, users, losers, social climbers, athletes, airheads, good girls, bad girls, girlie girls, guy's girls, sluts, closet sluts, born-again virgins, prudes, overachievers, slackers, stoners, outcasts, originals, geeks, and freaks, to name just a few, will melt away, with me I thought at the time, I was the only thing they would be talking about. The list is refreshing in that sense. It can reduce an entire female population down to three clear-cut groups.

Prettiest, what I wanted to be...

Ugliest, where I thought I was...

And everyone else... that doesn't matter...

This morning, before the first homeroom bell, every girl at Rockville High will learn if her name is on the list or not. The ones who aren't will wonder what the experience, good or bad, might have been like. The eight girls who are on it do not have a choice but live with it. I wait for the memory to come, to me of the ones that were there last year, it not a list on paper, it more what we all just know, sometimes it takes a while. Sometimes it's there in front of my eyes in seconds.

Sometimes it doesn't come at all. And I wanted to be on the top with all the other prettiest girls- no matter what it took, even if that was having sex with the girl to get there, show her what I am made of, I wanted to love, yet loves not how this all works.

I remember being on the steam train, today, my mind still fuzzy, yet I am getting better. I'm breathing deeply, trying to slow my heart rate, to quell the panic rising in my chest, of freaking out over what I can't handle about it all, I think, and remember it's all going to be all right. What did I do? I got on the train and there she was, coming up the row saying it okay, I don't want to remember my past, why can I delete it- I said to her.

Haven

Part: 42

(Second term of the 8th-grade year)

I stroll around the sugar maple tree outside the school, it a cold day... and flurryng out, ice is dripping on all things around, 8° out.

One hand drifting lazily over the thick bumps of black and blue I have under my dress, I was still, oozing, and padded, and was wearing a splint on my nose, yet I was becoming me, I was not the first girl in my new class to have a nose job, a breeze nips my her legs.

There were just shaved before school, bare they are like above the new hole made for love, between the hem of her corduroy skirt and I have ballet flats.

It is practical tights weather, but I was not fighting them on, like the other girl I went without, they said I need them I said- no, I am a girl after all too, but Abby, a new girl that I just oh my god love, will avoid wearing them for as long as she can, without undies too and, stand there in the chill, shivering like she's having a really hard orgasm.

Or until the last of her summertan fades away, from the girls that are skank-ie. Whichever comes first, I felt odd with them all looking at me, them saying that's the one, I was telling you about, and I know all the text buzz standing to go in before the bell- read, the questions of what all that I have or have underneath. She has bigger boobs than me - what the hell, it was a soft whisper, I could hear the mindless chatter.

The spot is known as 8th Island, is where I stand with them. It is where the more popular 8th graders the gathered in the mornings and before school. Nearly everyone avoids the younger kids, yet I was okay with the 7th, yes that's me, it's the Island because of the rotten-ness, of we girls are with other girls, yet I look around this year and I know there is talk, yet no hate, as I feel last year for me. It took me doing this to myself to get some to see what I really wanted, and that was a new life, new class, new me.

Some say: I am going backward, saying I am immature for my age... yet no, I don't want to be with them that think they are when they're not. I'm frightened, but I'm not sure what I'm afraid of, which just makes the fears worse. I don't even know whether there's anything to be frightened of - really- there just kids like me, yet I not just a kid like them- am I...? It all comes down to what is underneath- and on the inside- that is all they care about- and what show on the outside more than that- right? It all comes down to the- sex of it...?

This is a fine prearrangement, though, for the reason that, by spring the 8th graders will nearly be freshmen, and will avoid anything that might identify them as younger, yet that all so mean, the sophomores, are going to bully me like before, yet I have one year of freedom, to make this kid see the real me, and hopefully- like- I well keep 'um.

There was a younger 8th-grade girl, there- I remember that I oh so-o love too, brown-sh hair. She smiled at me, and we hit it off fast like all that is pink and girly and Ariana, it was all that we talked about has she said her but this in your ear, it was a bud, with I am so into you playing, we shared the same headphone, standing there, I felt more loved than ever by a class of kids.

Not the cutest girl, in the group yet sweet, not popular yet not sped either, yet I don't say those kid's ant nice, they are, you just have to wonder, what wrong with them or are they okay... to be 'round, you could never really be seen with on, for those starts.

I think she talked to me, about if I was new to the school, she did not know about me and I did not say, I was shocked, that some girls where this naïve, but I can't remember what she said, about her, yet I remember her saying: 'I started shaving there too, itchy- right.'

There's something more to her, that I never saw in anyone- but her, but I can't reach it to say what it was, maybe not judging me, can't find it in the black thoughts of shock I was in, to really recall. She said amiably- 'Add your number to my phone,' and my legs felt as if they gave out from underneath me. So-o, I did... first girlfriend other than her ever, um- like all the boys can go suck it, I never want to be one or have them for friends, they are everything, I don't want to be.

We all rush into the door she holds my hand, running in and then it slips away as she goes to her known spot and homeroom, and I don't see her the rest of the day and she left me with a small, I did even get the last name, yet I was fluttering on the inside with butterflies.

Um- like, ah- when I was outside my underarms at this point feel chapped, like my legs and lips to under all the pink lipstick and glitter glow of my makeup and green eyeshadow, that corresponds with my olive tank, and kicky jacket green top.

I was doing out with my day as you know it's all about what your wearing, and see all that you'll be with for the next 180 or so days, it's a slow day of meeting the teachers and them read syllabi, and handing out books and saying your all passing as of now all you have to do is keep it.

I look around the room and see all the kids, my phone is on the desk in front of me with just her number in it. My purse is not on the floor, it is hanging over the back of the chair where I usually leave it, like all the other girls, I copy as they do.

I must have had it, yet not the same thing in as they- I would not know yet all I need, I will find out, for the reason that, I'm in a class with mostly girls, which means I have my keys, in there and a change of everything, and pens, and random gum, and nail polish, etc.

So, walking through the hall going to lockers I ran into the same girl today a school, and she blows me off, I thought how someone has gotten to her already. I thought...

Before, I knew it the day was over, and it was time for the buses all the kids running out of the school, papers flying, to take us home, or just get the train, or have mom get me, yet I don't have them so, I did my own thing, and I did what I always do, taking the train over, its faster. Buses have never worked for me- I thought.

(Day 2 of my 2nd 8th-grade year)

My hands are trembling, more than my body. I get out of bed, I'm naked, yet everything now is where it needs to be in my body mind and soul. I catch sight of myself in the head-to-toe mirror next to the dresser. I have a cut on my lower lip from biting it; Mascara is smeared over my cheekbones, I am alone, yet, I live with a family that said they would take me in... even if I was at high risk... There are bruises on my legs, I must over up too, and I feel disgusting.

I put my head between my knees, waiting for the wave of nausea to pass; as I sit back down on the bed, the bedroom door is just open a crack, I see the woman looking in at me, she was wondering like them I would image. I get to my feet, for the clock is going off, grab my night top, that I took off and placed it in the hamper, and open the door saying: 'I am on my way- don't worry I am fine.'

The home is quiet, for now, I know this woman, has girls of her own- yet I was asked to stay away, that I am on thin ice. For some reason, I am certain I don't want to be here, I want to be home or with her; yet, I do have what I want with me- and that is the real me, yet not home life yet, nevertheless, you can't have it all.

The next day- I was looking for her, the girl, that gives me a number, I did not text her, for I did not want to impose, and be nescience. There she was, yet she was not alone, she had two girls next to her that were the same looking as she. I could not believe my eyes, I made new girlfriends with three triplets' girls named Baca, Emily, and Melody.

The only way to tell triplets apart is by their eye color, Baca has brown, Emily has green and Melody has blue, I am sure that two of them are wearing contacts.

Baca is the one, that I meet the day before, I feel as though she did jittery with them standing there just chatting about school boy's music and so on, saying I was not into boys - with her sisters, the day before standing next to them we all just hit it off fast, like the same things, I never knew that making friends was this easy. I could not tell them apart, yet I knew, that they would be my besties.

I got my first ever tagged pic., on Facebook when she said: 'take a cell phone picture with us,' and I was more than overjoyed! Um- though I can't remember when, I ever had someone ask me to do this- not even her, she did but it was not like this. Before I went in, to start the day of learning, and groping of whom was going to become, I walk as quietly as I can out into the hallway, looking down yet, all them are smiling at me, and I did not know, it was freedom to me.

I asked my new girlfriends over to my new home; I did not even think to ask if it was okay...

Us girls- Baca, Emily, and Melody - I can see that Haven's bedroom door is open slightly. we peer into her room, one on top of the other, just looking at her. Her bed is made, nicely like someone, that has OCD, we're not like that we whispered to each other. It's possible she has already got her before us and made it, thinking we would judge her for it or something like that, surely, she is not that neat- us whispering softly again, all in matching outfits, pink, dress, and ribbons in their hair on the left side.

Thoughts unanimous- between are the same whispers, but I don't think she stayed here last night the room looks that nice. Yet, I am sure it will not like that tomorrow for where girls are having a sleepover, which is a source of some relief, I am sure to her, we heard about her, like all of when the teacher gives the speeches with her in the room, confidential- my butt, yet where not saying or care, she one of us now in is click- she needs us and we love her for her.

This shouldn't matter to anyone, not even the teachers- I feel, and they had no right saying she was a bad apple, the sense of shame, is going to be feeling, that why we're here also if others turn on her now, she has us, three, are mom even said its okay- to play nice. I feel like an incident, as she would, it was what she had to do, though Baca, to get away from, the kids, yet she still has the same teacher as last year, talking crap, about her new life, she loves, and they want to take from her, and where a girl is not going to let, that happen, no, and the whispers where unanimous, proportionate we are with the gravity of the situation, but also to the number of people who witnessed, what was said we had to come, for the heat is going to be all over Rockville- soon. And she is not going to see it!

I remember the after, saying it was okay for me to be discarded from the hospital, that all was good with me and coming home, to my new home, with them, and just walking was so hard, I had no one really to have mercy on me, as I went into the home, I recall being at the top of the stairs, I feel dizzy again and grip the banister tightly, as she said you did this to yourself, you can make it is on your own, yet she soon warmed up to me, it was more of that what they say- that she was feeling towards me- judging before knowing. It was not even a day until she was the mom I never had, and she falls in love with a new girl she never had, and she said: talk is cheap isn't you're a fine young lady, and I got something I never- ever had by a mom a hug!

It is one of my great fears, was not looking like a girl alive (along with bleeding to death, you never really know how alive you are until you start to feel death.) That I will fall down the stairs and break my neck, was nothing like that fear I had of losing ever- and have anybody- other than her, that cared, and even she did not at that time. Thinking about this makes me feel ill again, it like the getting kick in the nads' feeling, and yes those were cut off too, I can never have kids, and that hit me too that is mine, and my mom and dad, said they were not paying to keep with was in my nuts. So-o there- how do you like that? They said- we've been cheated her, with your experiments of gender questioning.

Dad- 'By you being a few cans short of a six-pack.'

...is how they really worked it.

Havens real Mom Lynn-Netta- I want to lie down, but I need to find my bag, check my phone, I had to all my friends and tell them about, my break down, and what my son has just done to himself... it was the take going around, and I was with then saying he was losing it, was speed, she has been spending too much time with the trash over the way that is just that!

Parents- well we attest now know that we have lost all our credit cards, to his dumb sucking move- and I'm not paying for this- Haven's dad was yelled all over the waiting room and was asked to leave, and when he would not he was hauled out the door by five men, along with mom.

...And then that is when 'I got- Haven's real story as too- why...?' Said- the doctor, on staff that night. He went on a no- to me opening-up, all it took was a teddy bear, and me being nice to the now- her- and understanding- and we took care of her expenses- I felt the need and so did the team.

I need to know who all I need to call, she said, 4 days after all this... her handbag has been dumped in the hallway, by her mom, looking for whatever even digs as to find out the why- of it, just inside the front door, of the sitting room. I got everything cleans up and made her my personal responsibility until my shift was over. I had to see what was making this young lady- now tick. (and it was not long to see all that was wrong) Her member was cut, almost all the way off there was nothing we could do, and it was her choice to go all the way anyways, we have the signed document after the fact, by her- and that it was life or death- there was nothing we could do otherwise, and also the school

Invalidated education program, that where just ridicules to her identified, they had her with the special needs, and groped her a mental, and that she should not even be in the 2nd grade with her dangers of herself and others, that she just too crazy to be around others.

‘Lawsuit!!!’ - I screamed! ‘This is all bull-shit to do to a kid! All the staff, looked at me, yet it was approved I was right, in saying and going there in calling others to get a case going. There was nothing in the brain testing to say she was not normal, yet read this report and the girl will not even get a job clean shit out of a toilet someday. And the whole town knows this... she branded!’

Me- Sarah, my jeans, and underwear sit next to it in a crumpled pile; when I heard that she was going to live, laying my bed after having to satisfy myself, and I just said, ha- I want to see her dye- for doing what she did to me, and my dad said- I get that, the first thing we ever agreed on really. He always just busts in my room, yet it’s a small place.

Haven- I can smell the urine from the bottom of the stairs- that I was dripping. I grab my bag to look for my phone it's in there, thank God, I said, it working, I look on Facebook and see all the talk off all the kids, that were pulling for me to dye, they even made a hate page, all in my grade, along with a bunch of scrunched-up twenties and a bloodstained Kleenex, drawings, that show what I wanted, is what was left, and my screen was cracked, and a teddy bear was all that I got for my sickness- I guess you could call it.

Nausea comes over me again, stronger this time than ever and I call the doctor that I had said I can’t take this; and he sees all of what I do on Facebook, I can taste the bile in the back of my throat, and cry, but I don’t make it to the bathroom, I vomit on the carpet halfway up the stairs, and my new mother was getting it, and me- at that moment.

Haven- Upstairs, I plug in my phone and lie down on the bed. I raise my limbs, gently, gingerly, to inspect them, and that too. There are bruises on my legs, above the knees, standard drink-related stuff, the sort of bruises you get from walking into things.

My upper arms bear more worrying marks, dark, oval impressions, that look like fingerprints, from being moved from bed to bed, like dog meat by trauma surgeons. This is not necessarily sinister- I thought for me to do, is it? I have had them before, never like this, usually from when I’ve fallen and someone has helped me up, playing as a boy on the teams, baseball, baseball- and so on.

The crack they made for me down lower, that I should not touch feel like it would never- ever be right, and I freaked, but it could be from something as innocent as me not knowing what they did to make it right.

I have to lie down, when she posted on Facebook, I should have passed, If I don't, I had to lie down, I'm going to pass out from the long letter she posted to the world for her being alive, I'm going to fall if I don't soon. It was like a page of run on's about her life-ending. So, for a like tree week, we just moved in on her and shared her room, and her new mother was more the okay with us girls hanging.

(New day- three weeks into Havens new life)

So, like it's are academic decathlon on Monday- that would be tomorrow, so I need to see if she could help me with my studying along, with my new BFF's, that is the lie I told her, I could give a crap about my grade, they're all fixed, I can't make them love me, the teachers that are, and I need somewhere to stay for the night, I know that it's not going to fly yet I have to ask. I am out of fuel in my heater, at my home, and have no cash to get any, so its bag her for a twenty, just to make it 'till my payday at my job, and now that I don't have her, I am on my own. And my mom wants to see me fall on my face, why- she doesn't need a why- she just does.

The tree girls- like- our parents dropped us girls off at our older sister- we are living with her, we are living on our own now, even if mom and dad, we should be home with them kissing butt, yet we want to be grownups, our sisters is age 18 she has an apartment up with the low life, also, we don't have much, just like the rest of the world.

She and I, and us girls we're off here using are pulled bikes in like 3rd snow, yet mom or dad taking us to the movies was not going to happen, they have already done more than they felt the need for us, like we have a car either, that runs... ha.

I or we girls don't have the money now to keep a car up. The law forbids us to have bikes on the road- it is all of us doing this though so way to they care if where low life just trying to live, like to drive on the road at this time, of the year is nuts. I know that we're going to get pulled over for this at some point, yet- we don't care. All we can say is that we need to have fun to be kids- yet I don't think that is part of life any longer- for a kid to be kids.

I know that I- we, we'll all be frozen, by the time, that I- we get there... to the movies, that is where we planned on going, yet that is all we have to do, and after that, I will am flatly broke, yet I feel not let them know this, yet oh well it builds character they say, to have nothing and have nothing to lose. What feels like hours ago, is even harsher by the wind chill, as I make the 4-mile bike run, to my sisters. Either way, I knew these, kinds of mornings suck on the weekends because Baca has to get up extra early to have time to shower, for her mom drags her to do the church thing, she has to do her hair and put together something cute to wear. She does it all without turning on the light, so as not to wake her young sister, who is 4-year-old also, living with her older sister for her mom is just not right- like all ours, with whom she shares the largest bedroom in the home with. There is not enough room for us all to cram in.

Anyways, it was hard to get them all to just say yes take me, in we did not get much sleep, yet I had a place to stay, I knew that we girls would have to take bikes to school, or hope the train over, for they don't get it at school that we don't have mom and dad or them at the school that care, to see that we have to find homes that work for the moment, yet it was nice just to be warm. The baby doesn't fall a-sleeps until the last possible minute, because she has no morning of having to shower and go to school and getting up a 4 am to do the routine to speak of, besides brushing her teeth and cycling through a rotation of jeans and boxy T-shirts, is what makes you in 8th grade, and also me tripping over them in one old small bathroom- did not help- either.

Baca yawns, we were in class. She can't remember a thing that we never learned, nothing was right on her test, I could see it on her face. Meanwhile, I think I may have passed this one yet they- the teachers that made me this way- would say not so-o.

This morning, I had proudly put on a new T-shirt, that I bought online, the first time ever, that I got a girl's shirt from an in the online store. The first time, I use a gold card... I have been saving this card for Christmas all this year, and it almost Christmas again, there was only $20 loaded on the card; yet, I got what I wanted even so-o, even if shipping was more than I thought also. 'Thank you' - I said to my sister shakingly, for caring, when she needs the money herself, I did not get her anything, yet she understood, 'it's cool' she said, yet she has to play mom and dad and family and make some kind of holiday for us all, that too falls on us kids.

My sisters and I, all got the same series of fantasy novels called: 'Harry Potter,' the form is mom and dad, yet not one of us could get past the first page, we can read it- in 7th grade, mom was shocked, yet not surprised. So, we just called it gay- like everyone of us in is class to make up for the fact we have not read it, and took them back, only go half of what they paid yet that was worth more to us, and got the money. 8 books- I said- why not just get the movie- dumbasses, my two sisters like I whispered unanimously- we agreed. that would be easier, like who reads anymore? Could've got us new cell phones, these things are older than us. And where stuck paying for the bill, I think not they said, you're like you have what you have.

Like I- Haven and all my friends are obsessed with the new I-phone 5 that just came out, yet we would have to the sale and ovary just to get one- four the tree of us- to share- and sharing to us is getting old. In my sisters, old beat to hell car, Baca to give me two French braids for school it turns out my sister has a big heart and taking us all to school, one on each side of my head.

I only wanted Baca to give me two French braids, yet all of us girls have them now, I know if the other girls see us looking the same, someone we give us crap about it; even though Baca can do a knot or a twist- hairstyles, she has this look down for us all, Baca feels are better, more classy choices out her two 12-year-old sisters- I feel, they may all look alike yet there miles apart on the inside.

But Baca never ever says no to Emaly and Melody requests, even though she finds it weird that Emaly and Melody want to dress in what is essentially a costume because the braids do make Emaly and Melody look better, or at least like she cares a little bit about how she looks. I pick up my phone. There are two messages. One part of the day when we're not in the same classes, it make us three said, yet that's school, crayons, and glowing shit on paper in 8th grade, and look at: 'See Spot Run, ' and doing 2nd grade spelling, yet the teacher feel there right on point with us- I could not even tell you a place on the map where we are from, or who all the face are that ran the US, yet why do I care, they say to me, I don't if you don't.

The first is from Haven, received just after five, asking where I've got to. She's going to Damien's for the night, she'll see me tomorrow. She hopes I'm not drinking on my own. The second is from Melody, received at 10:14. I almost drop the phone in fright as I hear his voice; her shouting. 'Jesus Christ,' 'what the hell is wrong with you?' I ask, 'I have had enough of this, all, right?' She said- 'they make out to be metalloids-' it read. 'I've just spent the best part of an hour looking at this shit and looking around the room, and there is know why I am getting this Math, Reading, and so on,' I sent back- 'maybe it's too easy.' You've really frightened- and frustrated, Melody, you know that? Said the prick teacher, that can't tell one from the others, and doesn't care too.

And that expulsion for having a phone out in class, yah go suck it, I am in the office, and another for a too short of a skirt with no underwire under them; 'pervert,' I said back, well that all of us, then right? 'No just you- the smart mouth- GO!'

'No- I don't have too,' and I was dragged out the room by my skirt bottom, it comes off like you would expect before I was out the door.' She thought you were going to... she thought... It's all I could do to get him not to ring the police. Leave us alone, we screamed, in the classroom, stop calling me names, I said- to the teacher, stop hanging around us like we're dumb, just leave us alone.

'I don't want to speak to you,' I said to the principal, 'Do you understand me?' 'I don't want to speak to you either- we can just send you out of here, I don't want to see you, for a week, I don't want you anywhere near this school. And the girl you where texting too Haven- I don't want to see her for a week, she did not do anything, that's no matter to me, she already, a badly-behaved, 'You think you can ruin your own life here in school you cannot, he scrambled at Haven, I make your say- of what you can and cannot do.' 'but you're not ruining mine.' She said back- 'Not anymore- you don't have to be where- we send you to the retard school. I'm not going to protect you any longer, understand?' 'Just stay away from us. Melody said to him- and his bending us backward over his desk with his yelling.'

School buses and cars begin to appear, were still in the office, and where let go- they did know it but we wanted the 3 weeks off, all of us girl cut- going to drop out at some point we know- yet that they why they want it.

One by one, I am warmed by her and her sister's hugs, 'I don't have any more chances,' I say to Haven, 'your discarnate- on,' they said, and like them all at once- 'and it's not right,' They all spent the weekend sending pictures of potential dresses back and forth to one another for the missing the winter- snowball dance on Saturday night. The dress Baca is completely in love with- a pink satin halter with a thick white bow cinching the waist- is on hold in her size 0 at a store in the mall, she prayed for it too. And is not getting that back either.

Her only hesitation was knowing that her sisters did not seem to know how dressed up, without her, or want to go, and that would not be right, sure we could not all go without all of them there, could we. (Back a week)

'Ooh! Emaly!' Baca says when her best friend her sister, Melody Krumenacker, comes walking over from the parking lot. 'Did you show Haven your winter- snowball dress? Does she think it's too formal?' Emaly throws one arm around her, in a shop in the mall that has things marked down for flaws, and things like that.

Baca and pulls her in for a hug, with us girls saying- 'I love you all so much.' 'My sister said it's perfect for you to go with that one! Pretty and fun, and cute, and boy-loveable, you are! But not in a trying-too-hard kind of way, I love that flirty too though, sexy- yet not showing it all- undies or no?'

I would not spend money on them and save, for shoes, 'He'll know you don't want lines... and you feel- um scandalous- and that makes you feel like a WOMAN, not a little virgin girl, 'well that's what we are?' RIGHT? Baca yell in a panic, the three of them all at the same time yell- YES- with a look on their face that is too cute you could not help but love them for it!

Haven- 'that not trash-ie, though is it?'

'We're not...go with it.'

Baca- 'Show off your goods, that why God gave yah' Haven - she screwed up her face, in only a way she could, saying he didn't.

'Oh yeah...' she said.

Becca and Emaly are the only two girls in their group of us girls, who have older sisters whom also go to the high school up there on the hill, and they say to go without having sex with boys, that boys like that, its Rockville's, only thing boy think about, the only thing boys should care about is the girl, yet they don't they just want in your jeans. And the other to nodded in a way only they do, she said I would get that one when I older- I don't get it.

Becca sighs with relief at having received Emaly's sanction and approval, about us not have sex at the end of the 8th-grade dance, with are dates like all the other girls or they say they're going to do, you know how girls are, and also a boy is far worse than that, for lying about the V card.

Becca and Emaly are the only two girls in their group of us who have older sisters who also go to, and they say to go without, that boys like that, its Rockville, only the boys should care.

Not that Becca's Emaly and Melody is any match for Emaly's, modesty yet I get why she wants little girl undies underneath saying- what if you fall- of something like that.

Unlikely- yet I get- I Haven had other thoughts- to it- yet I was going to do just what they were, as a girl that I am, the bra is built in so why make yourself feel restricted when your grinding on a boy.

During that week, Baca and Emaly snuck into Haven's bedroom to look around- it the typical girl's room, nothing out of place from any other girl- in this world- all pink and right- for an 8th grader.

They stuck their heads in Emaly's closet, looking for boy things not one, just a lot of different undies, young girl with flowers and girly things on them- bras, and T's and short shorts, 2 dress, and jeans that are skin tight to her from- like us we said- unanimously, her new mom has been shopping for her I see.

The next night a school night it was a Wednesday- I was in the tree girls' room, that have tree beds, in a row, all in soft pink and lavender with mint green. With white headboards, and white nightstands, with a photo of the boy there crushing on in their matching digital frames, that show all there the girls' days of growing up.

I- Haven was snooping, I found a few boys' phone numbers hidden in Emaly's sock drawer next all the little girl undies, and her gummy dildo, all the girls have their own, in the same place all in different colors so that can tell them apart, she swears off forever- over what boys say, I wonder what that was like to be crushing on more than one a one time, she said that's okay too.

Like before going to be it is this girl ritual to masturbate, there fully nude, I have to say as a girl to it became mine also, with them... when I sleepover, and also on my own, oh there is nothing cuter than seeing three triplet girls doing that as your sitting at the foot of their tree beds looking up at them, and they want to see them cum-ing, it what girl do at sleepover also, and they're not going to go a night off, just for I there no- where just that close now, I was with them...

I remember the first time- like I-

Haven was nervous about cum-ing in-front of other girls, to show my goodies, that may not be right, yet they were, yet Baca said I help you got off, and the girls did it with me, on one of their beds, my back agent the headboard with her and her and she next to me.

...And yet they got me one of those too, just like there's off of Amazon, for $7 it's a blue 7-speed rabbit, that will blow any young girl's mind they said to me.

...And held her charm bracelet, that she was planning to give me, against her undies that were on her wrists, the night before, I said I like it- so she must feel the need too... give it to me.

I would love it- yet I had to abolish the moment for myself. I have always been like that...

I look to see how these girls have everything perfectly arranged atop a white wicker vanity, that they share, I love it- I said you have to do this for me- in my room- they gave me so much free crap- in make-up, and things to make my face look cute.

I had always dreamed of having a vanity, but there was no place for one, I thought- yet they did it for me out of an old table, I asked my new mom for that was in the hallway that needs some love...

I and the girls made it white, with a can of spray paint we found, and they did the rest, along with watching makeup scenarios- YouTube videos with me to find my true look; fake lashes and everything; I even had my eyebrows redone by them, even if they were not bad there right now!

The biggest thing they got me was hair extranets, now my hair is down to my butt, they said- 'like if your kind to them you can keep them for years,' 'we put our money together are allowances, we want you to have all this, a bag of girl's make-up things. This was also the money back from the Harry Potter books.'

The next day you have to say, the girls where all looking at her, with that dropped jaw look, Emaly mainly stayed by herself that week, I can't say why, she loves me, I know, yet I think she felt like she lost her sisters a little, that week to me- become the girl I never- ever knew I could be.

Ask.fm Bacca is answering her new questions for the day- asked by anyone around the world at age 12, yet there is nothing else to do, by being online.

I just got this on ask. FM- Shaved or hairy cunt innie or outie I said- Shaved, innie, yet Emaly is not right now, she wanted to see what not doing it would feel and look like for a while.

Bacca comes on you like it... yes, when are you...

Becca and Emaly asked questions about what - Rockville High was really like, and Emaly gave them lots of helpful, blunt advice, like to be cautious when hooking up with older guys, to gossip only with the friends you completely trust, and how to hide the smell of liquor on your breath from your parents.

The day is over, texting her and her friends back home with our many just the 3 girls, and reading a stack of teen magazines, that she'd brought with herself, and she only went to the skating rink with Becca and Emaly once for a couple of hours, I could not go I was cramming homework, and my new mom looked over and singed so they could not say I did not do it. But on the one rainy night, Emaly let them hang out with her in her bedroom, and we play an x-box. She curled their hair with her thick barrel iron, and let them watch a crapy free Comcast movie, like Twilight 1, that I see a million times, from the foot of her big fluffy beds in the girl's room. 'Vampires suck-' and unanimously we all agreed. 'imagen the sex' said Becca? 'Ow-ha-' said the other two all cute-ie and- unanimously!

'Suck' - 'that they do,' I said, with a giggle.

Emaly and Melody and Becca, meanwhile, offered nothing beyond recommendations of which math teachers at - Rockville really knew their stuff.

...And Baca wondered, more than once, if Emaly even knew who Emaly and Melody and I were, despite the fact that both girls where in the same grade. Emaly is about to go chat with their other friends when Baca leans in and whispers, 'Did you finish the Earth Science worksheet?' Emaly makes a glaring face. 'What do you think?'

'Baca, you can't keep copying my homework! You're never going to learn anything.' 'Ture yet you know nothing- so...' then way copy they all said- UNANIMOUSLY- the three girls.

Baca combs her strawberry- yet dark brown hair with her fingers. 'Pretty please...? I just got too caught up in looking at dresses last night and went right to bed, and bath, and eat, and there was no time, to make time for it, it will be the last time- it well. I- I swear.'

It's bad when she starts stammering. She puts her hand over her heart, and made the pouty face, with her lower lip.

'YOU- Promise...?'

Emaly just sighs, but she heads to the school to get her homework from her locker, to give to me to copy in study-hall.

Baca cries out, 'Love you, sis!'

A minute or two later, Emaly sprints back outside, her black ponytail whooshing wildly. 'Baca!' She screams, loud enough so that everyone at 8th grader turns and looks at her like she's nuts. Emaly dives forward the last few feet and grabs Baca to keep herself from falling. 'You're the prettiest freshman girl at - Rockville High!'

Blink- Blink- Baca blinks. 'I'm what?'

'You're on the Facebook Page as most Popular, dummy! ON the Facebook top ten girls of Rockville middle school! 'That's a thing?' My sister is on it, too.' And look - look have is number 3, Emaly looks at the other girls, her braces twinkling in a proud smile, saying good for you Haven- you made it as the girl you truly are. 'Haven- got named the prettiest girl in the 8th class!' Yet some dumb boys had to take the joy out of saying- that all the other girls must be really butt ugly then.

Baca's mouth flows open and goes all droopy with surprise, and I Haven hold her up. Maybe she wanted it I said, even though she isn't sure what Emaly is talking about either, it is clearly news to be excited about a girl like Me- Haven getting top 3 and all them under me. Luckily, one of their other friends asks, 'What was it all about?' and then everyone turns to Emaly for an explanation, it went viral this year... the top ten popular girls.

Haven- I don't know what I've done, to get this.

What did I do? She said in wondering questioning.

The school day is over I hear the bell right out, and I don't take the bus, I walk along the little pathway between the parks, shops, and the neighbor's garden, climbing over the fence, with the girl and unanimously we chat about a girl like me- Haven have made the 10 teen girls on Facebook.

I think about closing the French doors, that we left open- not thinking, silently creeping into the kitchen all of us girls march, now sitting at the table, we make our own food, Havens new mom has not come home yet, from her crampy job. I grab her from behind, and she jumps and squeals, I wind my hand into her long hair saying- I love you like one of my sis's, I jerk her head backward, with her hand- feeling love for the first time, I pull her to the floor and I smash her head against the cool blue tiles, and we play around one on top other and so forth, "rough-housing' aging girls I see,' her mom walks in... saying- 'ah- well-a girls will be girls.'

Melody- 'Why is it I feel so unbeloved slut being like all the other girls- like posting photos, online sites and wants, and boys- stuff?'

'God all this is making me want one, and to suck one-off like I have seen my sister doing last night in the living room.' Said Bacca- the load one. Unanimously all the girls agreed that they want to try new things with boys, yet, Haven said- 'I think I like girls more,' and unanimously the girls said- 'um well... um... you can be Bi... these days, and- and- and- no one really many cares.' Said the jittery one, Melody.

Bacca said- 'would you kiss me,' she leans in eyes closed, shy yet wanting, and they did for over 60 scents- with tongue, I won't feel boobs can I and she did under Bacca's top. Experimenting mom said when she walked in unannounced? Girls well are girls she said, don't fall in love- she snickered, making boys happy girls by practicing? 'We don't even like a boy- really, we don't-' they said all embarrassed, mostly if not at the same time.

Part: 43

(NIGHTFALL)

My head hurts, do what I do and start humping a pillow with vajayjay, you just stressed from dumb boys, and dumb freaking school, and dumb flipping homework, that like me you don't know how to do. I can hear someone yelling downstairs, it was my mom on the phone with my new mom saying they can do that I could get sued, she said their young girls- there nothing wrong with them playing around, 'but she's really a boy- she said fast- and harshly- SO-0 whatnot anymore, and my girl's lover her, it's all good.

Mom on the other end- 'Okay...' she said- not sure. 'I could lose my income too if I don't have her, and yet, I love her for her too, it's not about the money any longer, with us... we know that all and everyone is out to get her... I trust you don't let her and

I down with this.'

'The three girls' mom- Stephany K., 'It's just pillow fights, boys, make-up, nails, girl talk, online and off, and getting off- there's no harm in doing what pre-teens do. This is just going to be the 4 of them, and their hash- hash thing they do... it's fine!' '-Yah-no-'

...?...

'Hair what to do what not to do, boobs and the lack of them, and the period's not starting and then they do, and we want life to be over- we remember that...?'

'Right...?'

'Um- ah... wow- there in your hands now- I trust you to do the right things you have 4 girls so-o...'

'I wonder what that was all about...' said- Haven, oh it's about us- I am sure, said Becca, saying then need to back off with you, yet you're doing a hell of a lot better now, and yah? Haven said - yepper- with a big thumbs' up- thrown right on her forehead!

'I do not believe this! For God's sake! girls! HAVEN!'

My new my had to give me the talk... about us girls, and that she said if that's what you all want to do with your time- never- ever would we have done much in our day.

(lie)

I fell asleep, with my three girls next to me at my home tonight. Oh Jesus, and I didn't clear up the vomit on the stairs, from when your new daddy hears what you'll be up too. And my clothes in the hallway, like yours all need to be there, so I can wash, Oh God, oh God there all nude, yet all girls I see... soo well... okay...

'Where are your undies- girls, from the day?'

We don't wear them Haven's mom- and she yelled'

'Mom-a me-a!' she said well she slapped her forehead with her palm! 4 butt bare girls in one room sharing the same bed, wow...

'It's a sleepover ma-' Haven said... all cute-z!

(Next morning)

'I'm sorry,' Haven is saying. 'I'm so sorry for making your life hard, I was just really... well- ah... um... I- I- a want my friends to love me, she standing their butt bare, still from the night before with the guilt's, as I see three eyes the same looking at me and my man in bed, I'll be fine with them- she got hell for us...' I pull on a pair of these black legging bottoms and a T-shirt out for, Haven, she is standing right outside my bedroom door when I open it., crying having flashbacks of her old life...

'I get it!' Haven, she said hugging her...

'God- girl, I have to dress you too...'

'...same said to you girls...'

‘...Good God, and you want to be grown-ups and have boyfriends.’

She turns around, saying to all the girls and they walk towards Haven's bedroom. ‘And for the love of God, will you clean up that mess you all made and the toys- and those toys too?’ She slams her bedroom door behind her, with her girls holding her saying don't cry.

‘Mixed up little girls-’ said Haven's new dad...

‘Um- yeah- they'll be okay!’

Of course, Emaly and Melody, and she hadn't bothered to mention this very important thing, just like Emaly and Melody and Melody wouldn't have a clue about which dresses were right for the winter- snowball dance.

That Haven was in a whole heap of dog doo- at school; Sometimes, Baca wished that Haven was her sister, so they could trade places and she could take the crap for her.

As Emaly fills them in mom and dad, Baca nods along to what mom and dad say- saying, I would have it you're all going- end of the story- if I have to stand there and see you all have your dance, all the other girls are pretending that she isn't as clueless as the rest of them. In fact, they were all going not to go...

‘Taking care of girls, you always come to us with these things’ ...’ ‘...Why... hold back, Becca...?’
‘Um- wellah- it's not cool- to tattle tall to mom...’ she said...

Oh, is that so... she said all piss-ie... I am going in with you girls today... (um- don't it's just going to make things worse...)

Dad- ‘You all want to go?’

‘I don't stand for nincompooery, he said, under his snuffle!’

‘Yes,’ they all said- all unanimously...

‘Then shut up girls!’

Okay... Lots of times..., you and I, we'll-a be making run up on the meeting at the school if they like it or not- I have singed names about this place, and they're going down... if I go to an attorney!!!

‘Your mom is a fighting cat- I no right... don’t you just love her for it!’

‘Sweeeeet!’

The girls said- one hundred percent, at the same time!

Part: 44

Baca’s friends take turns bouncing her around with congratulatory hugs, and each squeeze makes her heart flutter a little faster.

Though the 8th boys act uninterested in their celebration, Baca notices their game of hacky sack inch closer to where she is standing.

But it still hasn’t sunk in. There are... a- lot of pretty 8th girls at - Rockville, and Baca is friends with most of them. Did she really deserve to be at the top of the pack? And should have Haven been above her- really?

It is not strange, a foreign place for her to be. ‘I’m sorry you girls didn’t get picked,’ Baca says suddenly to everyone, that is in her class, and she partly means it, she was rubbing it in, moreover Haven then her.

‘Please,’ Emaly says, pointing at her mouth, saying button it up. ‘Who’s going to vote me prettiest- oh yeah- you already did that for a girl that you hated; before, I made her over, like at all these girls looking at her with like railroad tracks running across my face, over how Haven, that girl beat them out.’

One of the girls gets up and knocks Haven on her ass, saying she’s not even a real girl- and she starts to cry as more hurtful things are running off, in slurs. ‘Shut up!’ Baca cries, knocking into Emaly. ‘You’re so pretty! Way prettier than her and you are real.’ Why did you not get this...?

Baca honestly thinks so, it’s all over her face, yet she loves her more than herself on like those girls in her class.

‘Actually, she is blessed to have made the list this year- at all one girl- said, because when Melody finally gets her braces removed, all bets will be off.’

‘...And don’t forget the only reason she got it was for some girl, that made the list was feeling bad for her.’

‘You need to hush...’ said Becca.

Emaly is at least half an inch taller than Baca, with longer hair, that always looks shiny and a tiny little mole at the top of her left shoulder is all that really shows them apart.

She has a great figure, with curves and boobs. Really, the only thing that isn’t perfect about Emaly is her braces- same with Melody- yet her ways are what turn all the girls away and the boys too we all say it’s so-o.

And maybe her feet are a- lil-bit-bigger, which are kind of big. But people usually overlook that sort of thing, yet when you have three girls that all the same, and as perfect as they, you have to start counting hairs on their heads. Said one in the class... ‘You are the worst at taking compliments, Baca,’ Emaly says with a laugh. ‘But this is seriously huge, 2 girls that look alike make and the 3 one that is the same of us is out, and haven is in the top 3.

Everyone in the school will know who we are now- Moldey...yet there are 3 of me- I sure they do, do I not have boobs and the same face?’

‘We just don’t like you,’ a Hayley McGraw said, right to her face.

Baca smiles, with now perfectly white and perfectly aligned teeth. Unanimously, the two of the never been more excited about the next five years than now, and Melody, with the look on her face, and haring what they are saying, has never felt so miserable, that she could just end it now- over them saying she is a shit-faced- BITCH, that can’t get a boy to finger her, and that’s why she’ll never make the list, she has no- swag!

Melody- ‘I wish, I knew who picked me the last of ever one in a class of 300 so, I could thank her now for ending my social life.’

Um- BITCH face- ‘Like- Why don’t you suck bleach, and do us all a favor,’ said Haley, and that night she did and was found in her bathroom, at 5 am. by Baca. And she was cold to the touch and blue, she pasted as a virgin, I hope all those sluts are happy said Haven, to their mom! That was not taking it too well.

And live in Rockville was never the same, and the three girls that everyone love went do to two, and nothing was done about it, and Haven was to blame, all the girls ganging up on her, yet that made Bacca, and Emaly even closer.

Mom- when in one day with the issue and also the next with her death of her little girl...

(Not a school matter) that was what she got...

'Go to the dance,' said Havens mom, '...and be with your two girlfriends, and never- ever let them go, they love you- you need them, and now they need you, more now than ever. There true friends to you- remember that! Haven... she is looking down on you'll now.'

Haven- 'Yah- but that doesn't let me see her ever... she said crying.'

(The other two hysterical)

Triplets, dad- "She was just shy and misunderstood" cried Emaly, standing over her dead body at the memorial home.

Only Haven and the family was allowed to attend. 'She was only 12- years- old,' said, her dad- with a life she never had- to live- all over some smart brats mouth I lost my baby girl.'

The girls, extremely excited over everything thing that was relevant, to a low of what really was... The idea of one girl, or maybe even an allocation, giving this honor to her not ever- ever- ever being there again was just too much.

Part: 45

(The dumb dace, that all the others don't care about...

...Us- the girls have on the perfect dress, with the perfect look, hair, and makeup, yet none of that really matters now, it is not like having her, is it? Said

Emily...

...Three girls sitting all at one table meant for four... spaced out, as they see all the others, swaying to the pop music- having the time of their lives... yet, they don't care about anything, but them, and for the moment and high...

‘...Hope your happy sister, you’re the top bitch at Rockville now...’ there was harsh rasp recement in her voice!’ And unanimously-

Haven felt the same.)

Scott- ‘Do you wanna make: ‘I like you- baby’s -?’-’

‘Yah?’

Me- ‘NO..., But we can go through the motions...’

Hey girls- Welcome back to 8th grade... at Rockville!

Part: 46

Haven- I remember having a pocket pussy and using it hard like it was her, it’s hard to remember her now, dreaming about having one of my own- a sweet tight little pussy to stick my fingers in and feel as a 12-year-old would feel having the shaking after self-pressuring.

She has friends, older girls, she didn’t even know about, that have to take far worse comment... why... why did she have to do this to us? Said Emaly...?

Haven yah me to yet, I never thought about ending it, even if and because.

She saw the list on Facebook, and also the ones that should just kill themselves too. The list names ugly girls, too?’ In the enthusiasm, she’d missed that part.

‘I saw a copy on the bulletin board of both lists and she was on the one that said she sucked hard at life and is too ugly- to get banged’ quote on quote, said, Haven... it was near the gym, by the locker rooms.’ Emaly says. ‘But they are everywhere.’ Inside and out and hairy, and smelly, she has a bad back- said one boy that wanted her for sex nothing more, his name I don’t care, then his tipper her butt - we would know, lazy eye (not true) and her shoe doesn’t fit, what the chatter. (was - her feet bigger?
Said Haven...

(Nowhere triplets... of course not! If that was so-o we all have that, it is not far what they think. Just because she never dated.)

It was said with her attitude she should have been the one of us that had the dick... said online... that was mocking her legacy.

‘Do you think I could be someone other than me?’ Baca wonders, and see who made this list, or not be the 3 girls of the one that killed herself, that left to the same.

She wants to keep the copy off the wall special adding it to her a memory box of all the small things that were her.

She had planned to talk to the girl on Facebook that made the ugly list and also the one that made the cute girls list.

‘Definitely! She thought, I going to do this...

I would become someone other than a triplet of the dead girl in school, I would be... something I not... The girls hold hands as they run into school, saying I will become you 3rd said have if we all get the makeover to look alike- I will try to take her place, I will never leave you said- for what you have done for me... said, Haven.

(Back)

‘So, whom else is on these lists?’ Baca asks, not too many girls we really know.

‘Beside me and your sister?’

‘Well, the ugliest freshman is Bealla Marco.’

Baca decelerates some and slows her speech, in her rambling, when I Haven lose eye contact and start to nod off and my head drops some. I could care less about being one of them, why did she care?

‘Wait?’ ‘A girl asked you don’t care?’

‘Yup,’ Emaly says, pulling her along, saying I don’t want it either, now that my sis is gone.

‘Wait until you see this... Whoever wrote it this year put funny things underneath everyone’s names, all yet I don’t find them funny said Haven- why do you she asked to- that girl. Like Bealla’s called: ‘TRIGGEREDAF’n SAUCE.’

Baca had watched Bealla kill it during the obligatory mile run last week, ‘either do it or you fail-’ said... the Lizzie- teacher. Baca isn’t friends with Bealla Marco, but they are in the same gym class. And was all pissy about that too, yet that’s just her and- how she is...

It was commendable, and Baca could have probably run faster than the crappy seventeen and or eighteen minutes she ended up with, yet the teacher was giving her a hard time, and docking, her for this and that, she said: 'I have a rum-soaked tampon in my pussy to you want to give me shit about that too bitch.'

Just like in Baca's case. It's truly the luck of the draw having to run the long jump, and see her well not jump but go long and hard to her face... but she didn't want to be sweaty for the rest of the day, yet I don't she has to worry herself with all those rocks ground in her forehead, and that chipped tooth-like West Cost has... off of Fantasy Factory.

In addition, with any luck, Bealla will understand, that there are other girls who could have been named the ugliest, moreover whatever and so on. YEP - Unquestionably, she feels bad that Bealla has been named the foulest girl in their class, but Bealla seems tough enough to handle it.

'What did it say about me?'

Emaly lowers her hand from her mouth as she whispers, 'It applauded you for overcoming genetics,' look at the video that has you splitting your legs on the beam hard when you fall, before letting out an embarrassed giggle, saying so that what it's like to get AF'ed. And all the kids get, yet not the oldies- in the room.

Emaly and Baca and Melody were named for being well what they were their girls all looking the same yet so different in their personality.

'Oh, no,' Emaly says: quickly; Baca bites the inside of her cheek and then asks, 'Is Emaly and Melody and Melody went from the ugliest 8th graders to the coolest in one year, just hanging - with older boys.' 'It's that freaky creepy snotty AF'ed looking girl Sarah Gernaer, who scowls on the bench near Freshman Island.' Baca lowers her eyes and nods slowly. She guesses Emaly can see her guilt because Emaly pats her on the back. 'Look, Baca. Don't worry about the genetics thing. It doesn't mention Emaly and Melody and Melody by name. I bet a lot of people don't even know you two are sisters!' 'Maybe,' Baca says, hoping what Emaly says is true. But even if most of the kids at school don't know they're related; her teachers sure do. It has been one of the worst things about going to - Rockville: watching her teachers realize, after the first week or so, that Baca is nowhere near as smart as Emaly and Melody and you.

I can't blame her after I've finished cleaning up, I go back to my room. Haven's bedroom door is still closed, but I can feel her quiet rage radiating through her things, I see a pic of us all- and burst into crying. Just like looking through her dress too and seeing that those times will never be the same either. I was wondering what we should do this that, and her things... keep them or let the memory's go...? ...I would be all-out like- if I came home to piss-soaked knickers and a puddle of vomit on the stairs, yet that is what mom got... along with one of us out. (lunch at school a half week in without her)

That girl keeps running at the mouth like I when I have the poops... and can help it, yet we not even hearing in at this point of why Melody, just had no swag.

Lacking swagger obviously... clumsy, careless, stuttering, lacking style and grace. a person who makes themselves look pretty- foolish just about all the time. would be considered 'swagger-less.'

She got all these hashtags too- #swaggalackin #swaggerly challenged #berto #dummy #messy

I finally like up, blink- blink- blink- I don't give a crap with an irritated eye roll- saying: 'OMG shut up! I am sick of it; you're trashing out a gone girl- that we loved even if you can love yourself! You have to get all your home-boys to do that for you too...' '- slut-' in a sneeze, is what she did.

Haven- 'Just because of your 14 and let a boy inside you... you know... all down there - and she points and her slit, doesn't mean you need to AF them as you do... 'stay innocent... and do one - and hold on to him... not 20... and pump and not dump. On every boy that will give you a tumble, you're gross, I don't like you at all... LITTLE MISS- LADY RED BUSH!' 'ou-u-wah' um like the thoughts I have Haven here are not good... said Baca mmm-ha.'

SHE HAS A RED BUSH? A BOY EATING A HOT DOG SAID?

UMM- YAH- SAID EMELY... leaning in to be seen doing the line of the run of tables, in the lunchroom.

Why did you want to see it?

Um- and his face got pink in color... saying maybe...?

Um- why- do you like that kind of thing, said Haven...? To Ethan Meryer...?

Maybe...

Wink...?

He the kind of boy that would blush just thinking about a girl's lower parts... and this girl-like- un-yah- even if... I- I- ah- dislike her she ah- um like- has that going for her, or so all the boys that have had say.

And yes, she keeps it all-NAT_ch_A-REAL! Said her girl... said in a very carnal scandalous why- and yes it red just look at a girl brow and you know what she doing, and a French-fry was thrown on her face.

'Lady red bush? Yep... that is the name she got on the ugly list on Facebook...' Too bad I didn't think of that... and she went blank in the face.

Well off to class... all the try's dumped...

(Home)

I sit down on the bed and flip open my laptop, log into my email account and start to combine a note to my mother.

I think, finally, the time has come. I have to ask her for help or get help about all this all that I did, I may have done it all, Beca through doing what was right. I wouldn't be able to go on like this - if I keep all this inside, I would have to change whom I am in and out to keep going with this guilt, I would have to get someone to tell this all to- but who? Not even my sisters... who?

...and it would crush Haven.

Mom or Dad?

Thoughts...

The most beautiful feeling in the word it having a boy lick you up down there, yet you shy virgins would not know that yet for your just 7th graders in your thinking yet, that's a dick, and then you feel it, and there is not like it in the world it makes you feel so-o good, and her know rankles up, and eyes roll up, her hands clench, I loved it the 2nd time around more... their first was um- ouch. Soft warm round comfort- of love- sucky and tight... girls sh-hh- girl your making half the lunchroom horny!

I can't think of the words, though, I can't think of a way to explain this to her.

I can picture her face younger to her last day with us, the sour disappointment when she now she was always last in the birthday song and the exasperations over the years. I can almost hear her sigh, with her life, the same as us- yet not always the last one out or in or whatever.

My phone vibrates... there's a message on it, received hours ago, it's Haven again. I don't want to hear what she has to say, but I have to, I can't ignore her. She knows me that well, she is feeling that I at the bottom of making the list, my heartbeat quickens as I dial into my voicemail, bracing myself for the worst. The guilt is getting me 'CUZ' I loved my sis.

'Haven, will you phone me back?' She doesn't sound so angry any longer- even if she knows, I one of the top girls on the Facebook list of Rockville, I am holding a secret, and my heartbeat slows a little too.

'I want to make sure you got home all right, even if you're not staying with us and I don't know why- I have to cover for you and I am scared for you and me, you have to check in with me - it's the regulations.'

You were in some state last night.' A long, heartfelt sigh. 'Look... I'm sorry that I yelled last night, it's your mom... that... things got a bit... overheated, over the girls I love you even if I not your real mom. I do feel sorry for you, Haven, I really do, but this has just got to stop, you are kicking yourself over what you did not do.'

'I don't want to see you go bad... over this... I know that you were over at the Rockville viaduct with Sarah, she got you there before don't fall for it, the girls not right.' I play the message a second time and a third, listening to the kindness in her voice, and the tears come.

Yet there we are standing under are spot the Rockville bridge kissing, making out, and dry-humping as we did in the past when I was a boy, with the steamers overhead... and the mist low... and the mood mysterious, and the look eerie.

Part: 47

It's a long time before I stop crying, before I'm able to compose a text message to him saying I'm very sorry, I'm at home now. I can't say anything else because I don't know what exactly it is I'm sorry for. I don't know what I did to Anna, how I frightened her. I don't honestly care that much, but I do care about making Haven unhappy. After everything he's been through, he deserves to be happy. I will never begrudge him happiness-I only wish it could be with me.

Emaly continues, 'Anyway, Emaly and Melody and Melody always gets the recognition. And every time she does, you're so happy for her. Remember last year, when you made me sit through that three-hour Latin poetry reading contest Emaly and Melody and Melody competed in at the university?'

'That was actually a big deal. Emaly and Melody and Melody got picked out of the whole high school to recite it, and she won a bunch of scholarship money.'

Emaly rolls her eyes. 'Right, right. I remember. Now it's your turn to get some attention.'

Baca squeezes her friend's hand.

Yeah, the genetics comment is kind of mean. But Emaly is right. It's not like Baca herself said it. And she is always cheering on Emaly and Melody and Melody for her academic stuff. She never even complained once about those early-morning wakeups or all the college visits they'd gone on this summer instead of a vacation.

Not out loud, anyway.

When they get close to the gym, Emaly jogs a few steps ahead. 'Here it is,' she announces, tapping the paper with her finger.

'In black and white.'

Baca finds her name near the top of the list. Her name! Seeing it makes the entire thing way more real, feel more earned. Baca is, officially, the prettiest girl in her 8th class.

She's not sure how long she stands there staring at it. But eventually, Emaly pinches her arm. Hard.

Baca tears her attention off the bulletin board. Emaly and Melody and Melody are marching down the hall with incredible purpose, her book-bag straps pulled tight over her shoulders, the tails of her French braids swinging side to side.

If Emaly and Melody and Melody know Baca is on the list, Baca certainly can't tell. Emaly and Melody and Melody walks by exactly the same way she usually does at school - as if Baca doesn't exist.

Baca waits until Emaly and Melody and Melody rounds the corner. Then she pulls the list off the bulletin board, using her pinky nail to ease out the staples, careful not to tear the corners.

From a block, away, Bealla Marco realizes, that she's missed her bus to take the train over to the other said, you know the school said where the good folks live, that have more than us and think it too and act so-o.

It is too silent, particularly on a Monday morning. Nothing in the air but the typical morning sounds- chirping birds, the click- click- click of rising automatic garage doors, and old train bells and the sound of steam horns of it the distances over the fogged water, the tinny rumble of empty trash cans being dragged back up driveways, for a mother that doesn't want to go to work, with a pissy attitude on life and to her young.

Sarah- Late to school- we know, starving for breakfast, absolutely- like- completely- totally- um exhausted and we just awake looking like, that girl off of Frozen- eating her hair and yawning.

Not such a great way to start off the week, said haven, that was all naked, when I had to kick her cute butt out of the bed what we were both in, she stayed over. Yes, I have to say I have fallen for her, all over, even looks now too- she one of those girls now- all popular... and I can love her for that also.

Nevertheless, she still thinks last night was worth it, even if we did not get any sleep or our school work was done.

She'd been asleep for two hours when her phone rang- it was her mom, looking in on her see if she could report that she was alive.

Haven- 'Hello...?' she asked, her word-wrapped in a yawn, she said yet I over at a girl's home- staying the night- and she hung up.

'How can you be sleeping; you need to be at school in less than 2 minutes? It's only midnight... no- it's 5:58. If you do not keep up with your work, I have to say back to them. It was in her voices mail.'

Haven checked that her bedroom door was shut, Sarah that is, and it was because she was on the phone with Bacca asking if she was okay. She was saying back off she mines now, not yours...

Like- Sarah, um- her parents wouldn't like her calling in and so late this time were all worried sick.

...Or maybe that was the thing they worried about since Haven was a year older, yet she felt respectable for her and her young life, like a sister... But for someone her parents lumped in the same category as her best friend, Hope, they certainly had a lot of rules about when, where, and how the three girls could spend time with her.

They'd lost the freedom to hang out when Bacca said she was the girl that made the Facebook, and she did it so she could be IN- LOVVVVEEE with Haven, and wanted to keep her sister, away, for she like- like her too. And that she wants to plant kisses all over her... and hug her, and never- ever let go..., and Bacca knew and would not stand for it, she was the first, and only... even if...

There were no more nights of Bacca sneaking through the dark and scratching the screen in the window above her bed, and jumping with her on the bed, and no more cuddle time, either.

No more taking the boys they were into or them either in the night; it had come to that point there where teen ages now, and masturbating become all they thought about with each other, and eating out; all they really wanted to try boy or not, or how they were into each other- and it was going more and more; and not just with Bacca- Haven..., had three girls, that was all the same to try, and Bacca wants to win the fight of her affection; more than that girlfriend of there in trashville as she calls it; already felt like a million years ago since the days we were kids at 12- now, 13 woman- we are now, ladies even.

Sarah- pulled her comforter over her head, and Haven went there and kept her voice low, mom was in the next room over, 'I want to blow me... with the lights out, she teased her, and she never really now she was serving till that moment.

'I'm sorry I woke you girls her mom flew in the door, Bacca sighed, saying yeah it's okay- (Thought can I just have her make me CUM.) Haven is giggling like a schoolgirl saying it done'ent gett'a any closer than that...! (It's been years, I want it more now than ever... her thought also... and there were so close and they were cum-denied, by mom getting the laundry.)

I'm just way too amped up to sleep, now yet I hear that the TV is on over in the next room, having to smash sex is not happening either, and dildo loving is out too, yet I have to get off, we both do.

(I had too at least once since, I was 9, thought Sarah, in a hast.)

Sarrah- 'Ah- ah- ah-AAAA- OH MY GOD....!!!'

Giggles...

'Mom- Girls...?'

Haven- 'Shit- ou- yah- um- um- Im'a

CuMING!'

(School)

Sarah, Haven, and Emaly had watched from the stands that afternoon as Bacca was stuck in a perpetual warm-up routine on the sideline while the football field got torn up by other players' cleats. He'd bounce on his toes, do jumping jacks, or run a sprint of high-knee lifts to stay warm. After each play, Bacca glanced over at the varsity football coach, fingers laced around the faceguard of his gleaming white helmet. Hopeful.

She felt terrible for her. It was the fourth game of the season, and he hadn't seen one minute of playing time. What would it have mattered, giving sophomores like Bacca a chance? - Rockville was losing by three touchdowns at halftime. 'The Rockville- little Indiana' hadn't won a single game. 'Well... I thought you looked cute in your varsity jersey,' she said, that's Scotts Hastening, the boy you have been dating for a week, yet love- love- loves.

Bacca chuckled, but Bealla could tell by the dryness that she was still upset, about it that she was not having one of her own to show off in, yet she had Haven she thought, hanging on her arm. 'I'd rather not get called up if I'm not going to see any playing time.

Just let me start on, boys too- she said, it's all I think about is being with an older boy. It's humiliating, standing on the sideline, with no boy cuddling upon you, yet, I have her head on my shoulder now- so, it's all good, doing absolutely nothing but feel her love, while we get our asses beat game after game. I could have had nachos with you her all the time, and feel warm and fuzz-ie like I do now, in the bleachers we went up, for all it mattered, and stayed till lights out- 40 to zip.' 'Come on, Bacca. It's still an honor to be here, after all, being in only 8th and has a 12th grader falling for you -

Emaly was in love with this boy- I could tell! I bet there are a ton of other sophomores who'd kill to be on varsity.' Emaly has moved on just fine, without her sisters, and is not all clingy with him.

We walk home it was not that cold of a night...In the home and off to my room, I lie down on the bed and crawl under the comforter.

I, Emaly- want to know what happened;

I wish I knew what I had to be sorry for- Bacca is giving me the cold shoulder, for them not to hang with them. I took her place, I guess? I felt like the coolest girl there just being a JV cheerleader... with my little uniform under his top...

Sarah- I know I was there- I try desperately to make sense of an indefinable fragment of memory.

I feel certain that, I was in an argument, or that I witnessed an argument, yet I can remember...

My fingers go to the wound on my head, from when I fell on the tracks, and busted my head on the rail, over by the train tracks that I love to walk on- balancing, it was to the cut on my lip, that I remember that I have permanent memory loss- and I forgot that too- yet I have all the past. It's like my day is a dream, and then... I wake up and forget it all, back to the day of the train almost ran me over, and if not for him- now Haven I would have died.

Sarah- 'Every time... I think... I'm about to seize the moment, it drifts back into the shadow, just yonder my reach. I can almost see it, I can almost hear the words, but it changes away from me again. I just can't get a handle on it.'

BACCA-

Does TUESDAY, November 3 sound right, um- yep- sure, I don't know the day from up- as they go down- ha.

(MORNING)

My teeth are chattering in my head, the tips of my fingers are white with a tinge of blue. Scott will come and haul me inside soon anyway, he'll wrap me in blankets, like a child- I just know it thought Emaly- and he did. It's going to rain soon, I can feel it coming, I said to Bacca. I'm not going inside, yet. I like it out here, it's releasing, cleansing, like a cube of ice, soak in the tub- thrilling having this was me down- the rain that is.

I had a panic attack on the way home last night, said Emaly. There was a motorbike, revving its engine over and over and over, as I was walking home, some boy that we go to school with playing head games, and a red car driving slowly past me also, yet two women with dogs were walking ahead of me made me feel safe on my path- over to the other said- yet I was scared, I need my sisters, I miss having her to do things with; so, I went into the street and was almost hit by a car coming in the opposite direction, I couldn't get past them on the pavement he would not let me though so I finally ran back to the tracks where I hoped a box on a train car that was slowly moving and got over the lake that way, which I hadn't even seen- some one ever do, this boy was pissed that I said no- to sex, and a date witch all comes down to sex on the first date, not like winner in but a blowie- and I was not going there. OH MY!

I WAS MORTIFIED, by the thought of it... He yelled something at me, and I ran- I ran. I couldn't catch my breath, my heart was racing, I felt that lurch come up in my mouth, like when you've taken a not get knocked up pill, and you're just about to come up, that punch hard that makes you feel gruesome and enthusiastic and scared all at once.

I cut my hand, as I tried to climb over the fence, I wanted to sit on the other side for a while, where no one else goes. I ran home, now over the viaduct- into Rockville, and through the house and down to the tracks, waiting for the train to come, to rattle through me, and take away the other noises. then I sat down there, I waited for Scott to come and calm me down, but he wasn't texting me back, so I knew he was on his way from his home, I thought.

So-o, I went inside, and then Scott came back and asked me what had happened. I said I was doing the washing up before he got here, He didn't believe me, then he got very upset, he knew this boy would not back off, with his- creep...

This retard was in the sped class... so that said it all... said Scott- 'I guess, I should get copes involved?' he said. 'You know, he got to play the whole five minutes and a second half, with you and your body that more than enough, for me to do something- ha they don't care, girls like me over here get attracted all the time, you have to be someone over her and I am one of those that are nobody- so the law thinks. Just for sticking up for HAVEN- I have all them turning on me. Even this boy has something in it- the law wants me taking down- just like the town for sticking with her.

I wish I were big like him, to say with me the night, and not ever- ever- never leave me- or my side, or Havens either. They're going to turn on you too Scott too over me said: Haven. 'Don't worry yourself- it is fine...' I should do more weight room work, and kick their asses, and maybe try that nasty protein shakes he always keeps going. I'm way too skinny, to fight said: Haven, ...and a girl too... said the girls, 'I'm, like, the smallest guy on the team,' said- Scott, but you have me.'

'No, you are not... are you? And anyway, why would you want to be like Scott? Yeah, he's big... to me, being my height of 4' 2', just like my sisters, but it's not like he's in good shape... ha- and then he lifted up his top, and we saw the six-pack, and little man boobs, that were faultless, and then I looked down- and was thinking about that hard dick, that just so-o you want to rub him and it with my hands- and I did. 'It was the right time for him to have a BJ! -for loving me...' I bet you could run circles around him, said Emaly to Haven as School boxers were on the floor and he was making CUM-faces.' I'll make sure your okay- and aw- thanks he grunted out. Oh, my- said- Haven... rolling her eyes at the cute... of her loving him... feeling her darling- love for him.

The next day at school, Bealla was pretty sure Bacca knew she wasn't crazy about Scott, it was all over the school that she rub him off... and that Haven and she were getting stocked, it was official, she was his girl, and all other boys need to back the freak off, or he would kick their ass - the owned her ass, and puss- puss too, yet that what a girl at Rockville wants- no?

The lunchroom and hall were buzzing about all the kids have sex and those two where at the top- in the snickers, behind the hidden look in their eyes to others. Bacca once told her that Scott had a special shelf for his cologne bottles, like his razor, and lube, which he displayed proudly, like that one condom that was meant for her- when she said yes- it was going to happen, and it did that night... they had first-time sex, and it was unanimously a sure thing they were a couple, yeah that's what you do here is this school to show it- have sex and you're- um- ah well dating- dah.

The old man perfume... said Bacca, and wouldn't leave the house without a splash on. Scott would even put some on before he'd go lift weights in his garage. According to Bacca, Scott was really grossed out by the smell of sweat, even his own.

(One week later)

Bacca considered it. 'That's true... she thought about it; the dude does eat crap, so that makes you small that way- she cutely taps him on the chest. I don't think Scott even knows what a vegetable is unless it goes on his Big Mac. No wonder he could not get a girlfriend, till I slimed him down- with all the SEX- and she said sex and a knotty and suggestive way. See- see- being a football player is what you need and me too.'

Study hall in the library... sitting at the table - no one reads there texting or dolling... sneezing or wheezing...

(Chat with the girls...)

Scott- God I know right, I jizzed a kid...

Ha- they all giggled...

They both laughed at that, for the whole day.

It had taken Bealla a few weeks to understand the way Bacca and her friends acted around each other, in the ways there where. The guys were super competitive, but especially Scott, now, we were going to be the best him he could be for her.

Everything between those two was a rivalry- all the grades back, new sneakers, who could reach the water fountain first. It seemed to Bealla like normal girl stuff for the most part, but every so often, Bacca would take some stupid 'loss' really hard.

Bealla was also competitive, and while she sympathized with Bacca's pangs of defeat, she also never pitted herself against her friends. She didn't even want to think about how sucky it would have been if she or Hope hadn't both made the swim team. That said, Bealla did take special pride in knowing that, when it came to the boys having girlfriends, she'd tipped the scales in Bacca's favor. 'Hey,' Bacca said. 'Guess what I found out today. Even if I don't play a single minute this season, I'll still get a varsity jacket, something you only have if you put it all out there... like the high school girls.'

Some weeks have passed...

She got one... her girls were all delighted for her...

'You'll look hot in it,' Bealla said. It was kind of a silly thing to say, but she knew it would make Bacca feel better. 'I care about the jacket so much- it makes me feel like a sexy lady. It'll just be cool seeing you in it all this winter.'

It's so tiny- said Scott Well, I am tiny... said Emaly.

'You're sweet,' Bealla said, blushing in the dark hair of long stands, from her eyes and small round face, eyes bright and wet. It would be cool to wear her varsity jacket, said Bacca at least until she could earn her own. I don't think so-o... she said to hold her hand laced, tight V-ed, downwards sweetly, and her knees looked together rocking on one leg.

Bedtime- with him-

'Will you stay on the phone with me a little longer?' he asked quietly.

Emaly fluffed up her pillow- kissing his photo, that was on her nightstand, and she and Bacca clicked through their respective televisions together, as if their remotes were coordinated.

With the girls- they giggled at the bizarre late-night infomercials, that populated the cable channels in the middle of the night.

As if all of them were all still together, looking up at the pics. they have taken, saying she's looking over us- no? Yes- yes, she is...

Pad programming- swollen, zitty faces...

and Adam and Eve's ten-speed dildos flopping in a girl's hand- mmm- mm- mmm,

Diet pills, Sex pill, Chill pills, Sia's Cheap thrills- MTV- and more TV- based on ancient sex secrets on discovery channel- and Family Guy.

That goes hand and hand said Bacca- and they giggled at that too...

Emaly fell asleep with her cell pressed to her ear, images of before and after flashing in the shadowy... Her battery died around four-thirty A.M. Her alarm died with it; I am sure he loved the snoring also- sexy...?

For love, and having her moment with her lover in her mind, or something pretty close to it, she missed the bus, and that means so did we... yet she wanted- 5 more of whatever's- longer than us... ah- we get that...

~*~

She missed it, but not by much. Emaly reaches for her phone to call that she's still home when she spots a notebook lying open in the street, pages fluttering. She picks it up... Using it to shield her eyes from the amber sun, she sees, at roughly three blocks or so away, her school bus bouncing along to the next designated stop.

She lowers her chin and stares out the tops of her eyes.

A second later, she's running.

Her body isn't warm enough, and she worries about possibly pulling a muscle. Chasing down the school bus definitely isn't worth a stupid injury that might keep her out of the water. But after a few strides, Emaly slips into a comfortable rhythm. I dialed his number, hoping he would... and listened to his voice when he picked up, at first soft with sleep- I was, and then louder, wary, exasperated- it was to me. He was already on his way... to high school- though.

I hung up and call back, and get the school, and say I had a defective alarm. I hadn't disguised my number, I remember it for them this time, so they could call me if I was not there in 10- they were worried, for my safety.

This was all over me-I got up in the night, left Scott sleeping, in his bed at his home and no-one really knows but the girls, and went back over to the girls home going the window, and sneaked up to the terrace of the household, and the girls were all out, yet the window was open for me - long story short here- I was off and had to take a latter kiddie bus, to school, one-half hour late.

I get why I am 13 and his 16, he can do that for me... take me to the lower school, the boys would eat his dick off... for it.

Do they do that...?

Part: 49

(EVENING)

Haven makes me oh so-o Horny... thought Bacca...

Sarah- 'Hell I don't have to remember

Instagram does that for me.'

See- see- ...?... yepper...!

Yep- Emaly loves using her pink flamingo- aka, The Lush - The Most Powerful Bluetooth one you can get... her boy got it for her for X-miss or the Holladay's. We girls call that thing that for it looks like a flamingo with a broken neck- flopping. We love this thing for it goes to the music that we love... morning to the beats, and the rhythms- love this... she even lets in for the boring class and it's all on her phone and she gets off... you can see her... as she is taking her tests feeling it...

I want one... I wish I had a rich boy... said, Haven.

Home from yet another day-

Haven- I could never write down the things, I actually feel or think or do. Case in point: when I came home this evening, my laptop was warm. I start to write down, my days, she knows how to delete... what was not good she said to me, so I let her edit, my story, I had plans for it, that some girl out there would be like me and need it.

Haven on Sarah- My browser histories and whatever, was now gone, looking at things she shouldn't, she can cover her tracks perfectly well- I thought, but I know that I turned the computer off before I left, and got rid of everything- also. she's been reading my emails again, and I don't like it.

A pleasing heat ignites her thrusting arms, her whirling legs, as Sarah starts to freak out rolling on the floor, she was that overwhelmed about to think about the day she was going to have during the day... with all of them. The school bus stops for a car pulling out of a driveway, and I had to leave her behind with my mom.

I quickly close the breach, on the bus with my girls. 'Hey!' she calls out when she gets close enough to recognize, the students in the back what well- you know- Haven and Bacca.

'Hey!'

Bacca bangs her fist against the side, of the window to look out, saying we almost died over hitting a mailbox. But the kids are too busy entertaining with each other to notice Bealla over there look at us saying nasty things about Haven, and the girls.

The bus veers to the right and centers hard over the driver's bad sight. She shouts again over the roar of the engine, 'sit down and shut up.' The bus accelerates, and a cloud puffs out from the tailpipe, stinging her eyes.

'You could have gotten us killed, she yells,' the bus driver barks, going in the ditch and we roll. The bus slams to a stop.

The kids look down at her, shocked. Bealla pushes a few wisps of brown hair out of her face as the folding door opens.

Bealla apologizes in between heaving deep breaths to the girls that looked all cut up, yet she was not. She climbs the steps, hurting, badly, she is holding the notebook, she was working on over her head like a crown, and it was a helmet keeping her from brain damage, she wants to like - um someone to claim it, saying if I pass I want someone to see this... 'You're not going to die...' said Bacca- who was bleeding profusely from her now busted nose.

Yes, the most thrilling ride I have ever had on bus 3... Matt, the driver passed out over his cancer, treatments taking over his body and mind... they welcome him over this- said Bealla- and that's just fine with me...

She passes up the student council bagel sale because anything really heavy makes her sleepy and she's tired enough as it is. She woke up too late to eat breakfast, and there is no way she can last until lunch without food. After stashing her coat in her locker, Bealla heads straight to the cafeteria with Emaly. Hopefully, there'll be something in the vending machines besides potato chips and chocolate bars. Bealla has been eating more and more since making the freshman swim team, her body always desperate for fuel. She wants to be careful to feed it well.

An older boy Dany passes us, girls, as they enter the cafeteria, looking Haven up and down, saying wow that doctor did a good job, ha, and slaps Bealla on the back. 'Hey! Dan the Man, thanks for saying what you feel, yet know asked you so shut up!' Said Bacca... with was hanging on Haven's arm, 'Was he talking to you?' Emaly asks, running out of the bathroom a-crossed the way.

Bealla is too disconcerted to react, when Haven, was face to face with her smelling her berth even saying- talk shit... that incomputable, the girls continue over to the vending machine. The entire glass front is covered over by papers. Bealla assumes it's an overzealous school club desperate for members until she tugs a sheet down and reads it, it the Facebook list, it still up yet old and crinkled, just a remembrance of what doesn't matter any longer.

Melody... the ugliest, well, that all we remember about her..., I can even remember her now. I think ahh- oh well..., don't care..., just like the rest of the school and the world..., don't care..., nothing mater..., but the now and happing... she old news and no one cared about her anyway's she was a weird - o..., Bacca- saw- a cramp spreads inside her, diminishing each and every muscle.

To be called ugly is one thing, I remember about her now too- I have just been that mean to her for that whole year- it was all I wanted to remember about her- and it was all over wanting Haven to myself.

Unquestionably, Bealla has heard the insult before, yet she wants to rub it in so- I kill myself over it also for me being a dick to my sister. Can blame her really, I thought... in all the hurting inside.

The word is so generic, without even thinking- I think this- so I must be thinking. Is there a girl in the world who hasn't, out to get me? And while she certainly isn't happy about it, ugly is something people say about each other, and say about themselves, It's almost meaningless... almost.

That hurts I thought, even though Bealla knows she isn't a particularly girlie girl, she was always at the top- even over me. Wearing dresses makes her feel weird, yet I love it, as if she's in a costume, pretending to be someone else. She only puts makeup on for 3 of the school weekdays like every other day, and even then, only a little bit of gloss and maybe some um- mascara- I should have put Melody at the top not her, Becca thought- yet she had to kiss ass to keep popular, she's never had her ears pierced, either like Bealla, because... I am and the three girls that look the same as me are deathly afraid of needles.

But Bealla still has all the essential girl parts. Boobs. Long hair. A boyfriend, and is well the shit. Bacca rips down a list of her and sucks in a big breath, the way she usually does before plunging underwater.

'Oh, no, Bacca ... What is wrong...?'

And she said why..., letting it all out to Haven.

~*~

Why do I have this here for touching yourself is a bad- bad thing- and it not- the first time you go in you we break this- thing- that not really that import...

(Back to when us girls were 10)

Bacca- How I broke my Hyman, like my sisters.

There's one way to do it that is safe, but trust me you'll regret it when you find that one special person to make love with and you don't have 'it' to give him. Go to your gynecologist and ask for a complete exam, so you can get on the pill- I was a 13 like every girl I know- thanks to mom.

The doc will have to insert the speculum and that'll break it- nevertheless, I thought would be wrong to lose it to a doc so I did like my sisters myself, but a girl needs to be looked up into- for health and sports, also... so it was like what do you want to do here, and unanimously we three made this choice, we girls did this- ourselves all at the same time... one night in our bed saying here goes.

Unanimously saying pads where out the question for us to forever- so yah girl brake there Hymans- yet it doesn't mean they have had sex yet.

The bloody brake- You don't have to go far..., that is what we all feel the hymen is at the opening of the vagina. The hole through the hymen is usually quite small. A tampon almost certainly will break it.

Inserting more than one finger would almost, certainly break it. Or you could buy a sex toy and put that in there. Some women put a condom on a small dildo, but I think that would be painful to a virgin- go with 2 fingers. It will have a burning pain... feeling, but I don't think you can 'mess up' unless you introduce something with bacteria into there, and give a day or two before masturbating again that what we did.

Also, a girl wants to cum- it what life is all about you can't do that with a flap of skin in the way of your toy- dumb boys. Don't they teach anything to you! This is something that needs to be talked about, we did not know what the hell we were doing... and there was no place to go for this, and the crap on Yahoo was gross, all we knew was it felt good...and we want to CUM, just like all the other girls in are class the was chatting about... under wraps.

[UPDATE: I did a bunch of research to prepare another lecture, and I found out the actual, honest truth about the hymen.

The short version is: it doesn't break; it

STRETCHES!]

To my utter astonishment as I became a teen, I found this out, my tongue-in-cheek post about how to break a hymen without a penis has become one of the most read on the blog, due to people actually,

SEARCHING THE INTERNET for the phrase 'how to break a hymen.' I feel terribly guilty that there are all these women out there who want to break their hymens and the advice they get from me is slightly facetious. I still don't know why people are so worried about it, but clearly, they are, so here's the ACTUAL advice:

Option 1: Have a medical professional do it. If your hymen is imperforate, microperforated, or septate, definitely take this option. If you don't know whether or not your hymen is any of the se things, get a medical professional to check. If you're thinking, 'But I don't have access to a medical professional' or 'I don't want to talk to my doctor about this,' then there's something else wrong that's more important than your hymen.

Option 2: Have intercourse. It's how women have been breaking their hymens for ages. There will probably be a little bit of pain and a possible (but not usually) little bit of blood, but it's totally no big deal, from a physiological/medical perspective. If your partner doesn't have a biological penis, use a non-biological one.

Option 3: Break it yourself. Which means you need to know both how to manage the pain and how to successfully break it.

And to stretch the hymen, you mostly need girth, so get a bigger dick or one to use, gradually increasing the girth of the thing, you penetrate with will make things easier; contrary to popular belief, pulling off a band-aid slowly results in less pain than ripping it off all at once, so don't try to put a mango in there all at once.

And finally, pull out a little mirror and LOOK at your vagina and your hymen before you start any of this. LOOK at it. See where it is, what it's made of. Think patiently and non-judgmentally about your feelings about what you see, as we did as a group of girls, one night- sleeping over... that is another thing have girlfriends, there to help... look at one another before... it a girl thing to do. This is a part of your body- just like theirs, just like your elbow and your toes. Be as kind and gentle with it as you would with, say, clipping an infant's toenails. Be nice to your body, or have one of your girls do it for you if that scared- all it takes is two fingers.

Have someone other than you -is- what we did- it not scary that way, if she genital... this came to mine because Melody was the one to break this for me... good times- good times, and the other way 'round.

Bealla doesn't answer, Bacca when she said hand it over or it's your f*cking teeth, and you sucking your boy off looking like a red-neck more then you are, Instead, she stares at her reflection in the newly exposed square of vending machine glass. She hadn't had time to shower this morning, that is why I went there... so-o she just threw her hair up into a miss-ie bun.

Bacca- A haze of short brown strands hangs down up around her hairline, cutely. It shouldn't surprise her, bits of broken, is her things though, like when her hair fills the inside of her swim cap after every practice- to just like that, some falls down just right.

Scott- I see her over the way in her little swimsuit- I there to cheer her on at she's on the swimming team, she tries to smooth them down with a snappishly clammy hand, but the strands pop right back up. She pulls off her elastic headband that, only us three girls wear- it's was the three- girl's thing as they said, anyways and shakes out her hair, and it falls lower than the nipple line of her boobs, and I make and Eifel Tower in my paints for her sitting there, she knew. It is full of love and bounce, yet a little dull from chlorine and yet it does move like normal hair should, just like her sisters, unlike all the other girls.

She turns away from me smiling, amused, tickled, and contented; rolling her eyes sweetly about the fact, that I was so taken with her. I knew she was going to f*uck me, after this, we both wanted it..., a quickie at least... She sees that the lockers outside..., and it's time to go... and we do just that in my car in the back seat. The next day we girls take about it in the cafeteria, saying the wonders of first-time sex, also have papers to do and pass 'round to copying- fast- for we all copy the same homework..., she chokes out- that she had the big-o- with him- that there IN-LOVE!

Back I remember Melody asking me this... 'round this time... and I had the flashback.

So, what it like to suck a boy off? First, you need to get him hard, you can do this by kissing him for a while and then rubbing your hand on his thigh near his penis. You will not actually be sucking on his penis, it's more of you using your mouth for him to masturbate into but you are doing the work for him. If you get his permission, you can tell by his body language if he wants you to feel him or not, make sure he is comfortable with it don't just grab him out of nowhere.

After you begin to touch him and get him hard, ask if he wants you to suck on him.

If he says yes take out the penis, and make an O shape with your mouth, then put the penis inside of your mouth. Move your head up and down in a vertical motion. Do not use any teeth because his penis is sensitive. Continue until he reaches orgasm. If you really want to wow, he swallows the semen.

Thinking and snapping out of it- I see a girl, I don't know younger tearing down every copy of the list they pass. I look up tearing up... they did not get why- yet it was all just a blared memory. Without further discussion, the two girls leave the cafeteria, split apart, and begin running, one on either side of the hallway.

Though Emaly is glad for something physical to do, after Math class and English, and Cam. it was nice to get out of hard work, it is also her second sprint of the morning without any breakfast, she is feeling drained. She searches deep down inside for the strength to keep going, putting one foot in front of the other, like a straw rooting around the rim of a soda can. She makes it to the end of the hallway and then runs smack into Bacca- all running the length of the long hall for class, who's standing with a few other girls for her turn, to run next.

I know in the library, the class is over in an hour- or so, and I was sitting in the lunchroom in study hall, with nothing- nothing to do, and- asked- more like begging them for something to do, like it's something hard for them to do for us- is make us have work for something more than suck at life, to that is so-o problematic. I don't really mind, there's nothing to read in here either that is from this time period.

They make us out to be Mongoloid, said, Bacca. Besides, unanimously they all agreed, just like Haven, they put us in our place for being less than they, in whatever they think they can do over us... and that a- lot of nothing... I have a lot of spam emails, I read when I get all logged-in... to the computer, just sitting there with nothing to do..., but see the little clock at the bottom tick my life away, I don't mind, because, it reassures me, that there's nothing going on, here and no life ahead, that I'm not up to anything, more than giving up, Haven is feeling it too...

-And-

That's good for me- it's good for us even if it isn't true, I don't care they sure don't. And I can't really be angry with them, yet, I have to blame someone- no? Because he has good reason to be suspicious. I've given cause in the past and probably will again, with I get written up for speaking my mind. I am not a model student like them... why I speak my mind. I can't be, I don't have the ability...

Haven said I agree- no matter how much I love her; it won't be enough either.

(MORNING)

Haven- I thought I would be bouncing off the walls for hours, eating nothing but junk food. last night I slept for five hours, which is longer than, I have done in a very long time, and the weird thing is, I was so wired feeling, when I got home yesterday evening, I could not sleep like I always do- when I come home and just crash.

I told myself, that I wouldn't do it again, not after last time, but then I saw my girls walking into the room, and I wanted them to sleep over and help me with my homework, why not?

I don't see why, I should have to restrict myself, lots of people don't. Men don't. I don't want to hurt anybody, but you have to be true to yourself- and say where getting A-Fed it is schooling, don't you? That's all I'm doing, being true to my real self, the self-nobody knows but Scott and my girls, not

John, Tom, Paul, Jack, Dick, Jen, Jan, Pam- no one. Just to run on some names to me and my girls that don't matter.

Haven- last night I asked Sarah if she wanted to go to the cinema with me one-night next week, then if she'd cover for me. 'If she calls, back she and I were not seeing eye to eye on the movie or just things... you can just say- were ended it, and are doing the makeup- you with sex... I'm with you, she said in a text- I'll go it's not like I have something better to do in this hell of a town, I knew I was looking and I'll ring her straight back, by being way too sweet?

Then you call me, and I call my girls and we'll all go, and it's all cool.' Not all friends here... yet whatever... it's something to do... or just get high... that's all there is to do for some of us, not me and my girls, yet.

She smiled and shrugged and said- this movie is fine, 'All right.' She didn't even ask where I was going or who with, later on... I was hoping to stay over at someone's home, though Haven, she really wants to be my girlfriend, I just know it, she loves me, she'll keep me.

We have to be careful, we can't get caught, by mom and dad- at her home, but by the end of the night, we were coming in hot. It would be bad for her, life-wrecking, hard. It would be a disaster for me, her and them too. I don't even want to think about what Scott would do if he knew that we all did what we did over a sleepover, everybody's fantasy dream, yet no boy needs to know everything girls do. It was fun. I don't feel bad about lying with her and them, I doubt he believed most of it anyway, even if. I'm pretty sure he lies about what he does with boys, too.

Emaly and Scott- He's lying on the bed, watching me as I got dressed, as I put in my butt plug with the white tell, that night later on afterward. He said, 'This can't happen again if you want it. You know it can't, with all this and doing that. We can't keep doing this, I going to have your baby...' And he was right, I know we can't, keep just pulling out. We shouldn't, we ought not to, but we will- for it feels good. It won't be the last time. He won't say no to me when I dry humping on him sliding all flirty. I was thinking about it on the way home, that I may need to see the doc and see... if... and that's the thing I like most about it, I feel scandalous- doing this behind mom and dad's back, and sneaking around, having power over someone, like a boy is the sweetest thing ever. That's the intoxicating thing, about boys and nasty little quick-ie F-me sex.

Part: 51

(EVENING)

I said to him- Just shut up...

Stop being a Jill Duggar and F- me!

And take me...

Take it... he said... and I do over and over...

Uuh... I said...

Taken it like a girl... she said, squalling...

With her- Uomo- yah...

Like a girl... she yelled... getting bounced...

Emaly- As long as you don't have any cold sores, and anything wrong with you - spitting or liking your fingers makes just a fine cheap lube, so use it, girls... I do with masturbating and on my boy when rubbing him off and blowing. I love tugging on that hard dick and having it in my mouth... and feeling it lip inside me oh so thigh wet and squizz-ie. OH, my GOD! And I back out in the cummie moment with him... 6 bangs inside me down there just went off- him too... my but has his imprints still...

We girl- the triplets all of us have used- Electronic toothbrush on our clits to get off... I remember the first time, around 11... with my girls we shared every moment, I miss her... and I said this was the best part of my day after school, unanimously- we did. A Handle of a screwdriver is what we all use when we started, could not say to mom we wanted yah-no that, things- you know things for this... embarrassing- and like we had the money anyway, so that was safe for us all to use... to get the edge off... this was a year or so after the sharpie, and we were not so tight, this was the next one up, and oh God the faces we made.

I can't walk even yet now I am down in the kitchen, opening a bottle of wine for us that is mom, yet she has more than 10 a day so-0 like she knows when Scott comes up behind me and puts his hands on my shoulders and squeezes and says, 'How did it go with the therapist, with Haven good?' I tell him it was fine, that she is making progress, they feel. He's used to knowing and -a getting all details out of me, after sex, when I most in-love with him and my voices in the week for the loving. Then: 'Did you have fun with the girls last night?' Oh yes- if you only know, and she rolls her eye in the way that only she can...

I can't tell, because my backs to him, but the thoughts going through my mind where so wicked, whether he's really asking or whether he suspects something, I could see the thought behind them blue eyes. I can't detect anything in his voice, it all in is lost in the sea that is the dreamy eyes.

(Next day at lockers)

'Come on, Bacca,' another boy says, giving her a big shove in his direction. 'Go give him a kiss!'

Scott does the same with John, saying we know- what you like... you like boys like this what-so-ever... hart throbbing COCK.

'Yeah! We support gay rights!' shouts Bacca- teasing.'

Bacca laughs good-naturedly. But as he walks toward Bealla and away from his friends, his smile slips into a look of concern. He leads her into a stairwell. 'Are you okay, and they make out?' He asks, careful to keep his voice quiet, they whisper and kiss and grab.

I apparently had last night a- she-boy, and did not know said, Pat... 'Not bad, considering the sex change operation, said one boy Haven liked and she was off in the hallway looking at him- hearing it all... ...Anyways- she was not sure, if it was mean or not though, you could see it all over her face...' Balla says, a desperate joke to break the tension, her dick is bigger still. Neither of them laughs at it. She holds up the copies of the list she's torn down, saying you going to kill this one too. 'What is this thing, she has about me being hotter than her?'

'It's a stupid tradition, this girl makes. It happens every year at the start of winter snowball week, the girls have daggers out- and go for blood, and they don't stop, 'till.' She stares at her- looking her down. 'Why didn't you warn me, about this so I could just go?'

Bacca runs his hands through Scott's hair. It is still light from the summer sun, but his roots are growing darker.

‘Do you know who wrote it, yeah her and she points- and Bacca runs scrambling into a room full of kids in class...’

Balla doesn't have a ton of friends, and is unanimously obvious to us girl... but as far as she knows, she doesn't have any rivals, they know not to mess with her dress- if you will... either. For the life of her, she can't think of one person who would hate her enough to do something mean to her or they would suck her with no teeth.

Bealla glances at the copies of the list in her hands and quickly shakes his head. ‘No, I don't. And look, Bacca - you can't go running around tearing these things down. These lists are everywhere. The whole school knows about it. There's nothing you can do.’

Balla remembers the boy whom, slapped her back in the cafeteria, and she put him in the ER over it by her boyfriend at the time freaking the shit out of him, the heat from his hand on her spine, was going up to her now.

She doesn't want to do the wrong thing, yet it like she can't help the fact she cannot.

She doesn't want to embarrass herself anymore, over this but it's too much fun getting to her... then what is already happening. ‘I'm sorry,’ she says, because that's how she feels, and the girls hug it out.

For many reasons, their friends yet not... ‘Tell me what to do, Haven... she said walking down the hall after the fact.’ Bacca rubs her arm, ‘individuals will want to see you looking upset, so don't be... or she getting her jollies out of it... They'll want to see you react, so don't anymore... blink... blink... and walk away... Everyone still talks about this girl Jen and how she freaked when she got put on the list her seventh. Trust me, doing the wrong thing now could ruin the rest of high school for you, I would know- my life is over next year- I so- going to be Af'd in the ass by all them and them.’ Balla's chest gets tight. ‘This is crazy, Bacca. I mean, this is crazy, drop her, and get over it- she's not your friend.’

‘It's a big mind game, that all-girl, don't do it... don't.... If you pretend like the teasing doesn't bother you, it will eventually stop. So, don't give anyone the satisfaction of seeing you upset. You need to be stone cold.’ He anchors his eyes on hers. ‘Game- Face-

Okay?’

She bites her lip and nods, fighting back tears, and I have my arm around her, going down the hall. She knows Bacca can see them, but thankfully she pretends not to and is held back by her new boyfriend one of like ten this week. Apparently, she has her 'Game Face' on, too.

Bacca- takes a second to compose herself, and follows Balla out of the stairwell, though a few steps behind.

Balla stands in the middle of the hallway looking around in a panic. 'Hurry up, Haven, she stops to talk with Emaly. She spots Balla and rushes over, and Haven spits in her face, just what her mom and the school was waiting for for..., her to miss up, over someone else..., I grabbed her in this hall, and say run, and in the science wing, we went. Let's go check near the gym..., a teacher said.'

She gives a huge whisper giving a hug also, "Don't worry.' I swear on my life that we're going to keep you safe, even if... and make sure they get what they deserve, also- thank you- Haven for standing up for me- her elbow went into hip- saying: 'you would do it for me.'"

'Forget it, Balla,' she says, 'where over forever- and ever- never- ask me for SHIT.' She drops the copies she's holding into a trash can they went- the teachers see that she was not the blame like always, she charmed, where not, I get an hour after and so does she... and another point of her 21- she only has 1 more to go, and they- this school, a trusted name in education (make a go0-ff-ie face) well send her off to re-tard la- la land, for not holding her emotions.

'What? What do you mean?' Balla turns around to glance at Bacca, who has rejoined her friends. 'What did Bacca say, she said F-U.'

'Don't worry, she'll butt kiss she has always for you... Her boyfriend all ways say all the right things- all at the right times.'

Which is how Bealla feels, without question, with him and the feeling he gives to her.

Part: 52

'Girls have to teach boys EVERYTHING! Even when it comes to cums! They're so cute, so cute, not know what to do, it's so cute... so... ah... I have been edging myself all day for him too, just to have the oh over- and over- and over- and over... I want that little boy to kiss me all over.'

Part: 53

(The next day at school)

‘What the hell?’

Though it’s posed as a question, the three words aren’t delivered like one, with the last syllable ticking up to a higher, uncertain pitch. And yet she is clearly confused by the copy of the list taped to her locker door, it has changed it all new now.

She drags a raspberry color fingernail down the list, linking the word ugliest and her name with an invisible, impossible line. She frees a strand of brown hair stuck in her thick coat of shimmery lip gloss, then leans forward for a closer examination.

Her lady’s bonces up behind her, wanting to see, why there is a new list of girls, along with wondering who made it? ‘She’s actually nice,’ I say. ‘You and she’d get on. We’re going to the cinema next week, actually. Maybe I should bring her around for something to eat after?’

‘Am I not invited to the cinema, with you girl?’ he asks, Bacca said it’s a girl’s night only, and chick flicks- you would not like them.

‘You’re very welcome, to come and see- Safe Haven!’ I say, and I turn to him and kiss him on the lips, ‘but she wants to see that thing with us, so... why not?’

‘Say no more! He says, his hands pressing gently on my lower back, and there on her small tight butt, oh so softly, and sweet, like a boy in love would do with his new girlfriend, after 4 weeks of firm dating, I drive you all. We sit side by side on the edge of the patio, our toes in the lawn, slipped out of our sneakers.

‘They always go for you, the lonely ones, don’t they? They make a bee-line straight for you, Bacca said to Emaly.’ ‘Do they? ..., said Haven... yet..., there so cute together look at them- all hugging and kissing, PDA’n.’

‘At that point, I’d already been unmasked as a non-responsible, non-tidy, non-courteous person, so what did I have to lose?’

...And if I speak my mind...

-And-

...THE CRAZY WANTS OUT...

All come to school looking for the list today. Emaly was so excited for its arrival, she'd barely slept last night, thinking that someone would have added are late sisters to the list of top girls but they did not.

'It's the new top ten popular, hottest, cutest, priest list of girls!' one says, tearing up.'

'Sarah is the prettiest 9th, Haven said!' ...Another cry, get to are grade already, we know.'

'Yay, for her!'

'This was supposed to be her year, also yet she had to kill herself.' Honestly, last year should have been her year Haven feels the hands pat her back, the hands squeeze her shoulders, saying you have me, I'll be there for you... and the said comes rolling in... the hugs, happen. Yet the only ones that really care where just the three girls... that where buds.

Haven didn't think it was pretty, pretty, one... yet..., there, all the same, she thought, why was she left out- just for being the girl that would not give herself up for any boy that wanted her puss - puss, that makes her ugly to all the boys and to all the popular girls that do.

Classic slut behavior... for them class virgin for her, and that's how she passes - so what better here? I ask... you tell me... teens then... mom and dad?

Some would say her head was too big for her body, and her cheekbones where ... well, freakish. YET THEY ARE ALL THE SAME... Also, she was the only friend without guy friends hanging with her at all times, she had no friends at all but us three girls, yet she was the slow one so they said. She was way too skinny, YET THE SAME, but she keeps her eyes on the list, over and over, and never was good enough... was she?

The list She pinches the corner, annihilation the blistered embossment between her fingertips, leaving an inch of tape and a rip of paper stuck to her locker door.

...and then tears down the list...

'I hate to break this to you, girls... but apparently, she is still the ugliest girl at - Rockville - even after death,' Haven announces, like a girl that is losing her mind. And then they all laugh at her for it, because it is honestly that ridiculous, to them for her to even care about her and her death that doesn't matter... to them and their own little lives.

She... and..., her and friends share quick, uneasy glances....!

Haven remains, 'On the plus side,' primarily to fill the uncooperative quiet, 'I guess we know for sure that Bacca did not write the list this year- no one is that mean. Mystery solved!' it was- YOU- and she points to Balla.

Lynetta, uses a seeing-eye dog to lead her through the hallways, yet this girl is more restarted- they say, it doesn't have to be nice, when someone has killed themselves Haven screams. She was born blind, her eyes milky white and too wet.

What wrong with me saying that- ya'll? So, it's a joke. Obviously, where so is making a girl feel ugly and making her feel the need to not live as you did with this one- and you all don't give a rat's ass- God...!

None of her friends laugh... yet all in the hall, even the teachers looking overdid.

Not until one of the girl's whispers,

'Saying really.'

Haven tempers, grumbles, in a hard berth to take in. Who-a is the absolute understatement of the year. She turns the list around and goes over the other names, expecting other mistakes that might explain what the hell is going on.

Haven- Sarah is definitely the ugliest freshman, I think not, it stated that though, and we all know that is not so, or she thought, it over me and her, she thought. Haven has a faint memory of who... this girl was and is, that was listed before, but the girl in her mind is kind of forgettable, so she isn't sure she's thinking of the right person even.

Everyone in school thinks Amy is gorgeous, so seeing her name as prettiest senior makes sense, yet Sarrah is just misunderstood.

Haven- And, of course, is the obvious choice for the ugliest 9th grader, for loving me. Honestly, any girl other than Sarrah would have been a total letdown, to all of them that are heartless snapping dogs at your ankles, like just- heaters of her, and I.

Haven doesn't know either of the freshmen girls, which is a surprise for the reasons, that she's not the kind of a girl who gives a crap about freshmen girls for they were all asses to her when she was with them in that grade.

There's one other name she doesn't recognize. Weirdly enough, it is her freshman equal: 'Who's Cassandra Kora?' The prettiest to her ugliest. Haven flicks the list with her finger and it makes a snapping sound.

'She's that homeschooled girl, that only come in for the band' one of her friends explains. What a lame-ass...! 'What homeschooled girl?' Haven asks, wrinkling her nose.

Another girl nervously, looking over both her shoulders to make sure, that no one else in the hallway is listening at this point, and then whispers, this...

'Cum bucket...' 'you know- um the one with the hair that looks like that, all crunchy.'

Haven's eyes get big. 'Crunchy - CUM - BUCKET?'

She'd thought up the nickname last week, for her, 'it's so-o right-' 'fitting no?' 'Um-hum-!' When everyone was forced to run a mile in gym class and Crunch-ie- cream of some young guy- hair all up in her blond ponytail kept swishing back and forth, all good crunch, like, like, like - a boy jerked it for a week on her face, and it was not washed out of her lashes and or hair, as she trotted along, it is all -ah and crunchy. Haven had made a point of whinnying as she passed her saying it over and over because it was so-o freaking gross to let your hair grow that long, without washing boy off of you. These slut like her (and she points) were it well- no- girl?

'Ummm hum,' and

'...I'm trashy...' she said to run by...

Picking on the weaker, it's what you do to keep up your image with the others... she thought.

Unless, of course, you had layers. Which this girl didn't. Her hair was cut straight in a v- and- and- and- having it up like this just made it look, well- well I think you get it... Haven looked at her all waist scared with cut marks, and said, 'Yeah what a waste... of those sharp things, I forget- um what where they called... (one-pointed finger- goes up to her mouth, all acting all clueless.)

'...Any- who-oo- I should have cut that

Curch-ie baby battered thing off instead...'

'...And- and- Probably with a dull pair of safety scissors...'

...She goes all cross-eyed, and all traded like... saying this along with... 'Yah and you make fun of me, for being in my classes...'

'Well lest- I am clean and smarter than you'll ever be- DON'T FOR-get it!

...And her head nods...

'Well... I think she's pretty,' said a girl passing, one of them- that are there...' shrugging her shoulders regretfully- to what Haven was saying, and I don't think you have the place to make fun of her for whom you are- after all.

'No one asked you-'

'No cars if you alive...'

'...Run Frost run...' her girl-friend said.

Someone else nods...

And one farts on it too... a girl lifts up her leg letting it hard... no underwire too, and I saw that thing also... with it...?

(Goog-il-e- eyes made)

'Did that come out of the front or the back...' Haven yield...

'She could use a haircut for sure, but yeah. She was definitely pretty... all the girl gang up... at the end of the run...'

Haven lets out a pained sigh...

Bacca- 'I'm not saying Crunch Hair isn't pretty,' she moans, though she'd never actually considered her looks, to be in this, she covers up, standing next to all them, just stuck in the middle.

This conversation isn't supposed to be about Crunch Hair- yet all the mean and finger-pointing was towards Haven- for doing as they- do to her.

It's supposed to be about her...

'It doesn't make any sense, what they were saying about Haven- yet to them it all did, and the run ones were thrashing her; until she ran off- crying- like the- baby boy that she is. Don't forget that; she- scrambled.

She the sisters of, one girl that is up in the high school that picked on her right, yep, Bacca she is making this for herself, I keep saying don't; yet she has to- think out- loud.

I'd be picked as the ugliest... if not for her one young lady said, Amy- I would be just that.'

Bacca- Her eyes roll off her friends, and on to other girls, saying: 'Would it kill you to get to know her, and not what is known about her girls- really- your so-o mean- to her...'

...Walking down the sidewalk, back to the school, all downhill- at a like 85-degree angle...

Haven sees them and is standing there in the nude, in the locker room, changing, they look ant point, yet there is nothing different to them, when she looks back, in the span of a few seconds, at least ten other girls are nude as she stands there looking at them, yet the talk about her is- running on... who, what and where she should be. Ugly girls who deserve this, this, when they're not girls... WHY are you in here...?

Why?

Bacca- 'She a girl back the F*CK off...' and she thought her to the ground by the hair.

And the teacher- well she did not see it...

Balla- said to me, you have no- style...

SWAG-GER-LESS!

'Well I did not like the wag- of my swag- so I had it cut off...'

Haven- 'Facebook sure did evolve, like fashion, and like it- it is seen through, a lot of pussy and dicks showing!' Facebook is creeping on your book, yet you can NOT get rid of even if someone is stocking, the shit out of you, so if they want you dead, they will keep going and who going to stop it, there are now laws yet. I want that changed... in my name, or something like that...!

Havens- Law I like that!

'I mean, come on, you guys. This is total crap, these lists and making others feel bad about being who they really are!' Haven gives her friends another chance to protect her, yet Bacca is not really it, though she feels a little pathetic at having to lure them. 'Pretty girls are not supposed to end up on the ugly side of the list! Like this one, she said but your mouth

Haven is making you look ugly to me also,' It, like, undermines the whole tradition.'

'Well, the list doesn't actually say that you're mouth it says you're ugly,' someone gently offers, given by other girls, looking at Bacca like she was nuts for even talking to her. If you don't stop, you're going to end up with NO friends... see what I saying.

'That's true,' adds another girl. 'The ugliest girls are seriously ugly, like you for having to chop things of like a dick... just to feel, this or that- or whatever and whatnot.'

Bacca- She follows me, and I take off my clothes, into the one side of the locker room, we get changed, as the bell rang... I'm going up the stairs, saying glad this day is over, and it was off... end of the school day finally, where now home and when we get there, Scott pushes me down on the bed, saying you're the same as your sister, and we trade, so- sh-h-h- but it doesn't matter because he doesn't know that I want him so bad, or that where switch places today, at this point to I am that good at playing Emaly. I'm good enough to make him believe it also and a girl needs to have a boy every now and then, I want him more than ever after a long hard day that I had and Bacca was cool with it, overall of the BS, I took as her today about a girl, that she is not even in love with any longer. I'm not even thinking about him... like I love him, I just want him in me...! And just as I thought, there pushing Bacca down to Haven's level over her standing up for her, and I don't like it; so, will two girls, that care for her, yet it's getting old, well tradeoff, every other week or so-o; just to keep her safe, and us two from losing it- over it because of well all of it.

(HAVEN)

(MORNING)

Haven called me back just as I was leaving the house this morning and gave me a stiff little hug.

She couldn't meet my eye.

I felt sorry for her, I honestly, I did, though not as sorry as I felt for myself.

Haven- I thought she was going to tell me, that she wasn't kicking me out after all this crap this week, but instead she slipped a typewritten note into my hand, saying here are some ground rolls, by the girls and their mom, if you plan to keep being with us and our friends, you need to do da-da-da- giving me formal notice of my eviction, if I don't not and to- can it- my mouth that is, and just be- me. The girl that we fall for from the first day, of 8th grade.

Bacca- She gave me a sad smile and said, 'I hate to do this to you, Haven, I honestly do, you're doing it to me- and you don't want to know what I have been doing to get this all out of me- girl you need to stop before they send you to tard school- or out, you don't have any more F- ups, or points to take, your garden is saying she had it, yet it's not you, it's them, the school they don't see it that way.'

The whole thing felt very awkward, reading the run on's of whatever's. We were standing in the hallway, of her home, which, despite my best efforts with the bleach, still smelled a bit of sick.

From where the dead girl was laying. I felt like crying, but I didn't want to make her feel worse than she already did, over something, that was as pointless as I, so I just smiled merrily and said, 'Not at all, it's honestly no problem, I can do this, so you really can read it?'

'Yes-' as though she'd just asked me to do her a small favor, to find out, that too... not to be true. The list just says you're ugly on the inside.'

It isn't the rousing defense- Haven is hoping for, for us girls, but now- she just needs, to hear it from us in a new way. (It was more of a test, by our mother more than anything, the teachers say she can't even read, yes, she can...) That was one point of this... the other, scaring her, to think before saying whatever is on her mind, to others that will screw with it.

But as the words sink in, she gets it also, that if she keeps going, she will not be seeing us ever... Haven nods slowly and lets a new feeling bloom inside her.

Clearly, her friends don't believe that, or they wouldn't be friends with her! So, what if people think she is ugly on the inside, too, they can see that we can. And pretty on the outside is what really counts, to all them up there- nothing more. F- that... Pretty on the outside is what everyone sees, where not like that are, we girls?

'No- forever- and ever-'

All the girls- 'Always!'

Haven had announced this as the plan for the morning. pep rally happens on Saturday, before the winter-snow- ball football game. It's an impromptu parade where the students at - Rockville drive around town with their cars decorated, beeping their horns and getting people excited for the game.

Haven has everything planned in her notebook, how it should be decorated (streamers, tin cans, soap on the windshield,) and what the girls should wear (short shorts, knee - socks, and - Rockville sweat-shirts- so on.)

Still, Haven stares at her friend's slack-jawed. 'I can't say, I'm in a very school spirited mood at the instant.' The fact that they didn't pick up on this annoys her, yet she is all for the game tonight and the dance.

One girl shrugs her shoulders, hard like. 'But we only have until Saturday to figure things out, before the next big dace of the session.'

One more adds, 'We can't leave it until the last minute. We need to come up with a concept. We're 8th graders now. We can't just, like, throw something together.'

Seriously...?

A concept...?

Haven rolls her eyes, at that too.

It is the strangest feeling to have, even stranger than being called the: Ugliest.

Nevertheless, then again, it ensues here is to her, as her friends nod along with each other, that they are going to talk and talk about the pep rally with or without her.

There are ten girls standing at her locker. 'Maybe like six or seven, if you squash.' She quickly changes her approach and rips her page of ideas out of her notebook.

She quickly does a headcount.

‘Fine,’ she says, handing it off.

‘Here’s what I’m doing. Figure out who’s riding with me, because my mom’s convertible can only fit five of us.’

Haven opens her locker door, and stares through the metal slats as her friends walk toward homeroom without her, they seem to be giving her the cold shoulder over what she said about - CRUNCH-ie hair.

Something about her face seems off, imbalanced. It takes her a few seconds of close examination of her face to realize, what elapsed her mind was to put eyeliner on her left eye. Her eyes move to the magnetic mirror hanging inside the door, saying I become a sloppy girl, like a tomboy... oh no!

Tom Girl!

...?...

Why didn’t any of her girls tell her that?

After digging in her makeup bag, Haven inches closer until the tip of her nose nearly grazes the mirror.

She gently pulls the corner of her left eye toward, her ear and traces a creamy band of coffee pencil, one of the samples her mother gave her, across the lid. Then she lets go, her skin snapping partly back into place, and blinks a few times.

Blink- Blink...

Haven’s eyes are her best feature, as far as she is concerned.

Individuals, for the last 6 weeks ‘till now, over the older girls, like always commented on them, and even though Haven finds that predictability annoying, she of course still relishes the attention.

How a girl, that was falling to you, would suddenly look up from the register and say, ‘Wow, your eyes are incredible!’

They are the lightest blue, thanks to contacts, like three drops of food coloring in a gallon of ice-cold water, dissolving. Otherwise, better yet, a boy would say. Her eyes get more attention than her boobs, and that is seriously saying something, for there so right there wrong to all the other girls in the grade. She is, after all, a true C cup without any of that ridiculous padding, which is false advertising, in my opinion.

An insignificant, slight, and dominative um- sagacity of relief washes over her. List or no list will take me down I am still the prettiest. She knows it, too- after being made to be. Everyone knows it also.

And that is all that matters, is being perfect... inside and out, not for her anymore but for them.

Part: 54

Haven and her mother agree the sedan still smells like Bacca dead grandfather, they bought the car off him before he passed, a musty blend of pipe smoke, old newspapers, and drugstore aftershave, of Stetson men's cologne, so they drive to - Rockville High School with the windows open, now that her mom has a real car that like runs, and drive without part falling off. Haven splays her arms across the window frame, resting her chin where her hands overlap, and lets the fresh air rouse her, even if is like 32 degrees' outside, yet that is over the fact that the car was hit, and the frame is bent and the window cannot go up the whole way, yet it was a $1,000- dollar car, and her mom is making payments on that...

Mondays are always the most tired mornings, always, you just don't want to get out of bed, because Sundays are always the worst nights, cramming homework and boys and drama, and girl stuff going out till wee hours in the morning.

The anxiety of the coming week speeds through Haven all the up and in- up and in- when she wants to be slowed down, she should speed up. She feels every lump in the old mattress, hears every creak and sigh of her new old house, yet she loves this home, its smalls, and noses, she just feels at home, taking Melody's place in the room.

Today the freaking car would not start, so-o before it got too late it was off to see if we could hop on the train. On the train, the tears come, and I don't care if people are watching me; for all they know, my dog might have been run over, they would not a car, and all over them and the look's they give with their hate. I might have been diagnosed with a terminal illness, and could die in an hour or so, and they would be like F-yah did with the b*tch forever. I might be a barren, divorced, soon to-be-homeless alcoholic, like them, no compassion.

It's ludicrous when I think about it. How did I find myself here, doing this? I wonder where it started, my homework thinks, even if it's good they're not going to say it is; I wonder at what point, I could have halted it. Where did I take the wrong turn, also think, maybe out a load? Not when I met Haven, who saved me from grief after my sisters died. Not when where all, carefree, drenched in bliss, on an oddly wintry day a year ago, I was content, in the black, abundant.

I personally have the reminisces and of those first days so-o undoubtedly, walking around, shoeless, feeling the warmth of wooden floorboards underfoot, relishing the space, the emptiness of all those rooms waiting to be filled, with them it was, just like me.

Haven- Maybe it was then... maybe that was the moment when things started to go wrong, maybe... maybe... the moment when, I imagined us no longer a couple, but a family; and took her place, and was there for, like she was for me. Rolls changed, I thought, up till now, I was still crushing on her, yet Bacca was with Scott and Scott was crushing on Emaly, they think I don't know I play, the game, yet I get it.

...And...and... after all of that, once, I had that picture in my head, just the two of us could never be enough, yet think back to the first day it was- it was, ha-um-mm.

Was it then, that Bacca started to look at me differently, her dissatisfaction mirroring my own? After all, what she gave up for me, for the two of us to be together, I let him think that he wasn't enough, I remember when I was just three weeks into this new life and nothing is comfortable, but her and the girls. Which is exactly what she'd expected.

The girl's room is nice but really old, the slender wood slats on the floor with a loose nail where the wood floor met the wall, squeaks, its cloudy diamanté blinking in the moonlight.

The first pic, of all them, ever taken, she found it last night, after the first hour of tossing and turning in the same bedroom, that Melody slept in, the same bed, where her they slept in together when she was sleeping over- the same.

Haven crept across the hall in her pajamas, that being a nightie that is seen through, and short, with nothing under it. Bacca and Emaly mother's reading the obituaries over and over, of her little girl, died, losing it, slowly, the light cast a warm white glow out the seam of the open door.

Neither of them had been sleeping very well since, all that jazz.

That is when Bacca looks at her phone, out of boredom, and it buzzing like crazy and goes through all the boy's text/ vid. messages, and emails, there are 6 photos of nude boys that were sent to her some she doesn't even know, and 3 jerk -off videos, one being Scott like I think it's a cute boy, really do I need to see that many at once? Yet, I have to same um- you know- it's a girl thing, I know what I'm, masturbating to tonight, umm- I love this boy and his hard cock! (that was thought with an upward eye moment.)

Getting up to pee in the night, the girls all out Bacca snoring hard, like only she can, darling to on her My Pillow, and hugging it like a boy, she mostly uncovers showing her little lady down there, yet that's how she sleeps, the only way it comparable.

Haven cracked it wider with her foot. Pairs of stingy panties hung on the coils of the wrought-iron bed frame to dry after having them washed in the sink.

They reminded Haven of the snake skins shed in the warm dunes behind their old apartment out west. Their old life.

Her mom looked up from the thick manual of tax laws, saying things have changed with our dependences, her dad still a zombie over his little girl, maybe his favorite girl passing, the one he was the shyest and his princes, all those years, she was the clingy daddy's girl, more than the others, the one that wanted daddy dates only the others that felt too old for it.

Haven weaved through unpacked boxes and hopped onto the bed. She opened her hands like a clamshell.

Her mom grinned and shook her head, looking a bit embarrassed, with Haven there. 'I had begged your grandmother, haven for these... to buy me this when I started high school, and that would be the right to keep you with us.'

Haven- 'You would do that for me?'

The girl's mom- 'You hear all the time anyway.'

I know their dad's thought rolling around in his head if it would not be for you, I would have my girl. And... and yet hers was you save me, after what was going to happen anyway.

Back to be, she is thrilled, she looks over and sitting on the stand is her toy, she pinched the barrette between her fingers, for the flicker, examining the fossil of her youth, and puts them in and goes to ohville.

The corners of her mouth pulled until her smile stretched tight and thin, turning it into something entirely different.

With a sigh, she said: okay.

'Yes, don't worry about it all taking care of...'

'I don't know if you've ever had this feeling, Haven thought- only doing this has given me that feeling, I have a family now, but sometimes- I think too much, when you get something new, that the feeling I have now, you trick yourself into believing, it will last for more than your given time, it has the power to change absolutely everything about yourself, just like a 36 scorned cum, 10 times over, that how to get the girls to adopt me felt.' They did not know... and I was not going to wake them to say... it was going to be the first thing said by their mom, before school... I wondered if they would be happy or not.

'That was quite a lot to ask of old tv batteries, don't you think?'

Ummm- ah-hah- she let it all out, saying: thank you- to God, in more ways than one, even that relationship was getting better, to which is why all the others were turning on her too, the stronger the faith, the more you look odd to the ones, that don't understand.

(Back)

She said this while threaded a hair clip it into Haven's hair, securing a sweep over her daughter's ear, and pulled the quilt back so Haven could lie beside her.

Haven hadn't experienced the feeling her mother had described when she thought about love, but this was the love she was feeling for her and the girls, not that love, but feeling safe, and happy was this love...but one much more unnerving. And not that like lust love ether- like when I see Bacca, who sat one desk away in her English class, and I look her up and down.

On her very first day at - Rockville High, Haven had noticed that Bacca smelled amazing to her, a small of a girl can drive you nuts, even if that coming from down under, I got the hint of that and she was- just right. And now all I need to do is get a whiff of her and she makes me melt.

Every girl is beautiful in their own way. To judge another for physical flaws is wrong, learn to love, not hate, this on and everything she has was right for me. That's the only way that true world peace will ever come to be.

She asked me what a vagina feels like on the inside to her and I said: its- 'wet, slippery, ribbed, soft and very warm.'

If you run your tongue over the top front of your mouth, that is what the ribbed - feeling is like in a vagina- inside a pocket puss- puss, only it is fleshier and softer than you're the top of your mouth, at on the same lines.

This that is when I asked her to do it to me and it was young lusting love...for that sleepover on... I remember.

The outside is smooth (if shaved lol,) soft like your lips or cheek. It feels similar to a soft penis, and recall those days too. If it is not shaved, it is still soft like your lips or cheek, but not smooth because of the coarse pubic hair. When it is wet, it is slippery and very soft.

I first categorized it, as that when she was turn on to me, when I got her naked for the first time and licked it, I was hooked, the small and test was everything I ever wanted.

It and she feel like a warm wet tight opening of flesh in which she squeezes and throbs her insides. very pleasurable for both indeed. it's like wet hot tight pink slipper flesh that stimulates the sensitivity of the penis especially the head. you will be stimulated by the warmth of her hole as well as the slipperiness and sensations of her walls and ribbed, then if she's tight, it's an added bonus of hot ribbed wet pussy friction that makes me nut every time, nothing is like a wet hot pussy because it is so warm and inviting...

That Haven now knew what she smelled like- she could sense her coming down the hall, long for a hug even, those starting day, of the 8th-grade year, summarized how much her life had changed, whether she'd wanted it to or not.

She swallowed this secret, everything she sees her with a boy that she wants more, that she really deep loves her to death, along with so many others- about her- and she because knowing, it could never- ever be right- when she is so-o wrong- Mom new- yet she could never confirm that things in her new school whereas bad as she'd been told, yet she got it.

If not worse... she got it yet, unlike all the other mom's she had a spot for Haven and a hart.

A while later, after ma- were just going to call her that, the girl's mother and now like mine, had finished studying, with me and Emaly and Bacca, and turned off the light, Haven stared into the shadowiness of the dim and held on to her ma's words.

Despite all these changes, she would stay the same girl. Or even go back to the girl, that Bacca fall for too, and deep down that was what ma wanted too, before falling asleep, she touched the barrette, in her hair saying, this was Melody's- she loves this, clip, wearing it every day, you keep this on you at all times, she'll keep you safe- Haven.

Haven reaches for the barrette, o'er as the sedan slips into a free space along the curb.

'How do I look? And she curtsy's- Like' Ma turns around, asking if she can start working to help out, Haven said- 'No one's going to want to hire me. They're going to want some beautiful young thing, that is not me, that is just so wrong.'

'Remember the things we talked about, Ma. Focus on your experience, not the fact that you haven't worked in a while, if they see the real you- they get over there- whatever, the hell is wrong with them.'

They'd done a mock interview last night after Haven's homework had been finished and checked, yet but they just said to leave no want you here, you suck at life, die... She'd never seen her ma so unsure of herself, so unhappy. Well, who the F- are they to say that to you? I'll take care of it, as the pre-school, teacher, for the young kids, at Catholic- school, she doesn't want this, for her job, yet she loves me more than that... She wants to still be Haven's teacher, under wraps just to make a point to the school she goes too.

Ma- It makes Haven depressed, their situation. Things hadn't been good the last year out west, and it's not her it's them. '...She is not the bad girl here...'

The money left by Haven's real- mother is was running out, Haven hadn't even known her mother had stopped paying support on their apartment. Her grandfather dying and leaving them the house was a blessing in disguise, also like the car, yet he even said you never worked for yet you're getting for nothing... to her, I busted nuts getting here and your kid just takes and do jack shit, and her and throw the paperwork, saying take my empire of dirt... take it.

Part: 55

Sarah- When the train stops at the signal, I see her looking at me, I look up and see Lucie standing on the terrace, looking down at the track.

I feel as though she's looking right at me, and I get the oddest sensation- I feel as though she's looked at me like, that before; I feel as though she's really seen me, yet, I don't remember.

I imagine her smiling at me- before, yet, I don't remember, and for some reason, I feel afraid- and I don't remember that either, of why- I do.

She turns away and the train moves on, wheels slipping.

(EVENING)

'OK-ay,' She smiles at me then and steps back again, crouching down a little so-o, that our eyes are level. 'Are you all right...'

He consults his notes. 'Haven?' 'Yes...'

That girl from the past keeps looks at me for a long time, like she is trying to tell me something, or maybe she is me; she doesn't believe me when I say I don't remember.

She's concerned, with me, yet, she not real, I keep thinking, yet, I don't recollect that either.

Perhaps, she thinks I'm a battered significant other- like my girlfriend or boyfriend at the time? Or else something like that, or that I am running down the tracks to end it all, and even that I don't get why-why...?... I ever her, stand on these tracks at this point.

‘Right...?... I’m going to clean you up a little get in the Rockville river, next to the viaduct, since you look- a bit nasty, don’t worry about a thing said- the girl, like she was my girlfriend, from another time.

‘I’m okay,’ I tell her.’

...And the sunsets...

Part: 56

‘Haven, promise me you’ll talk to your

English teacher about the reading list, God this is Pre-k work- girl... (I know yet that is all they say: I can handle it....) ‘Well, what the F- is there to handle with this...?’

I hate the idea of you sitting in her class for the whole year, bored to freak’n tears with books we’ve already read and deliberated, all last year- and we don’t even have to read it the teacher- is spitting that out for us. If you’re afraid to do it, or as they say not able too, they do it for you, like wiping your ass..., and buttoning your pants- you get it... no?

Haven shakes her head, at the level of dumb, that they subject her too. ‘I’ll do it.

Today. I promise.’ Ma- pats Haven’s leg. ‘We’re doing okay, right, when she shows her the work, she asked her to do- at eight grade?’

Haven doesn’t think about her answer, she was working hard, at getting her schooling, even if they say not she know she was higher than they say, she just says, ‘Yeah... we are, doing what they say for us to do, or we get expelled, there is no arguing.’

‘See you at three o’clock, that would be when this hand is there- and there, she said to Haven- okay- she rolled her eyes.

‘It’ll go fast.’

Haven leans across the seat and gives her Ma a tight hug.

‘I love you, Mommy. Good luck.’

Haven walks into school, barely a force against the tide of students flowing from the opposite direction. Her homeroom is empty, not for long the haters will soon be in there making their mouth run like runny pop, out of a tight butt hole.

The fluorescent lights are still off from the weekend when she walks in, they come on automatically, and the legs of the upturned classroom chairs spike four-pointed stars, encircling her like oversized barbed wire. She turns one over and takes a seat, chewing her pencil.

It is terribly lonely at school, even when the room is packed full of those and themes.

Sure, a couple of people have talked to her, in the halls but it was all in ways that you or she would not find cute.

Boys, mostly, after daring each other to ask her stupid questions about homeschooling, like if she belonged to a religious cult, or it was to keep her here and not go to the Lonnie-ben. She anticipated as much, her male cousins where just as goofy and awkward and annoying.

The girls were only slightly better. A few smiled at Haven, or obtainable tiny bits of graciousness, like pointing out where to put her murky cafeteria tray after lunch.

Nevertheless, and then again, no one extended herself in a way that felt like the start of something. No one seemed attracted, interested, and involved in getting to know her beyond confirming, that she was that weird-tard-ed homeschooled girl, that was here- well for them because.

It shouldn't have surprised her. It is what she was told to expect, and you just drift off in to, your own world for its less painful.

Haven lets her chin rest against Bacca's chest, even if they were looking, she needed her. She pretends to read the notebook, lying open on the small patch of desk committed to her seat.

Really, though, she inconspicuously watches the girls filter into the room, and take chairs beside her. The girls are frantic, whispering like crazy.

Muggy giggles and laughs are all she sees and hears. Wholly, consumed with whatever they're gossiping about, she knows it all about her, and her neck, and body and whatnot... even if... unanimously said by the girls it was perfect. Until one notices Haven watching them, back- and she said skank what are you looking at?

Nothing when looking at you- BITCH. '...and- and- and... like... ah- U's a wonder why no-one likes you!' Haven lowers her eyes, saying and I tard-ed. But she's not fast enough, to not have the look back.

Part: 57

'Re-tard, baby boy dick sucker... that is a baby boy too...'

Haven lifts her head.

'Excuse me?'

'Oh, my god, Haven!

Bacca made her eat her teeth...

And they both were thrown out... and thanks to Ma, she was spared, and the girl, saying shit, got nothing, not even a slap on the wrist. Um- it was more of that and- or, of what do you do to piss her off.

Emaly- 'You are so lucky; they did not put you out!'

Bacca- 'Do you even know how lucky you are?'

The girl puts on a big smile, the next time saying, thanks to you I have these now, and just like your tits there fake and now perfect. And she runs on tiptoes over to Haven's desk, doing acting all gay- like.

The girl ritually places a piece of paper on top of Haven's open notebook. 'It's a - Rockville tradition. They picked you as the prettiest girl in our grade.' The girl talks unhurriedly, as if Haven spoke another language, or had a learning disability, yet that what is known about her not what she really has.

Haven reads the paper, even if they're making fun of her doing so-o. She sees her name, there. But she is still completely confused.

A different girl pats her on the back, saying you have made it again. 'Try to look a little happier, Haven,' Emaly said, she whispers sweetly, in the same way, one might discreetly indicate an open zipper, that Haven Had, oh by the way yah- get that closed, too 'Otherwise people will think something's wrong with you, down there that you need to let all hang- out- or breath.' This scrappy little nobody line surprises Haven most of all because it completely contradicts what she's already assumed.

'Why is after I cum I cry? Asked Emaly.'

'What?'

Haven's eyes got big...

Part: 58

Sarah- plan is to break it to him fast, yet she can't remember the boy's name she was dating or was it a girl, yah a girl I was dating, right, as she runs towards the oncoming train, hoping for death of her life, to get a new one, where she can remember again.

And then the lights flash, and she is home, sitting on her bench, nibbling the edges of a strawberry Pop-Tart. Wh-a-at, the tangy smell of smoke on her fingers sours the sweet, yet was she really there, she must have been.

Bacca- at school, in class, she forces down at Scott's, well you know, her favorite part of this cute boy, because all this sugar clearly isn't helping, her thoughts, she lost in him and the daydream.

Sarah- looking out the window, in the summer- Let the squirrels eat some of it, she said to her mom rocking. ...And like someone, that has lost their mind; she needs to calm the hell down, said her mom, to her dad, yeah, but it's in her mind, it is slipping more, now than ever. She moves a tangle of tarnished necklaces off her chest and feels for her heart, saying I must find her and get her back - I- I-... (crazy whispering)

So, there's no scene, for her to get off.

Forget dressing it up, explaining things.

That's only going to make it worse.

She'll just say something like, I'm done, girls. Our friendship, or whatever the hell you want to call it now, is over, said Balla, with all the girls- that Haven is to off of her. So, go ahead and do what you want. Live your life! Become the best bros with the captain of the football team. Feel up the head cheerleader, even though everyone knows Margo Gable stuffs. I'm not going to judge you.

Scott- I took a girl's virginity today, and she was not you- she- was your sister... I cool with it, said Bacca as long as you love me more, so do you want to start making love altogether? Did he ask...? Um- I don't see why not, and she seemed grossed out yet loved him, for loving her. Two girls that look and feel just the same, I love you, girls, he said. The sex was awesome, me on top, her and then she... everything a day has ever wanted in his dreams said, Scott.

Every guy is a walking STD it's just what... said Bacca, I am sick of this you don't need a glove every freaking time, if your in-love one, and safe, girls remember- if you're willing to spread for the love you should be willing to spread for his baby, think about that one.

Emaly- My hart, thinking about that boy, it flutters like a hummingbird's, so fast the individual beats blur together and make a steady, uncomfortable hum.

That last part will be a lie, for I cannot love him he belongs to her, and I can do that. She'll totally judge me for it too. She'll be worried about me, if I don't come home tonight and run off with him, to find a place, to well... you know.

Haven's has number, I was saying we were going to the woods, with Scott, after school, she asked to come, I knew where that would go, so we did, and Scott was just that cool about it, Haven had her first bang as a girl, a moment she will never forget, under the trees in the dart, hard- and pounding, just like us with other boys, John- John, Josh, and Jash, all took their turns in our holes until we- cummed. I have never known how much she like being on top, until that moment. Us girls like letting the boys do the work.

Haven won't be worried at all-I'm not even late home yet-but I'm hoping that the news that I've been hit by a taxi might make her take pity on me and forgive me for what happened yesterday. She'll probably think the reason I got knocked down is that I was drunk. I wonder if I can ask the doctor to do a blood test or something so that I can provide her with proof of my sobriety. I smile up at him, but he isn't looking at me, he's making notes. It's a ridiculous idea anyway.

And Bacca and her were making it also, you should have seen. Haven- She rips the cellophane off a new pack of cigarettes, lights up, she is still shaking over it, a leftover of wild carries taste to takes away the smoke, she sips a drink of Emaly's drink.

Remembering last night, when she was hanging half out of his bedroom window, after- the after, she smoked the third-to-last cigarette in her old pack; and told him, thank you; after his depressing play-by-play of his aunt's final days of lung cancer; she'd seriously think about maybe quitting, yet puffing with oxygen, tubes in her nose, I was not sorry to see the old bitch die.

(Eyebrow up by both girls that are the same in all Bacca- and Scott- Recollections of that now makes her laugh, puff out smoke. Both dissipate into the chilly morning air, for each other. Before the school day, one last kiss before hell starts too, hell being the school day.

Haven- Last night, she talked a lot of shit, to the one that gets down on her, to all the girls that wanted to be there with him, yet would never- ever.

Girls talking- (He did that?)

Nevertheless, Scott... apparently, he'd been talking shit since the day they met, that was just who he is, yet he was still saying he had the hot girl in school last night to his buddy's, you can be sure of it.

Whatever!

Let him bitch about her smoking, she loves to do like she loves all of him and I mean all, like his uncut wink-ie. It would be a relief to replace her anxieties with something simple and clear, like more sex, or e-cigs, yet that would not do she said, like being annoyed with him, is what she is like without, it's like a girl, PMS when she can have 5-cigs and 6- oh's a day.

Sarah- watches two junior girls scurry along the sidewalk, as she is on the tracks, looking for her, to hold her hand and get her through the day.

Sarah knows who they both are, but what she thinks is: All the junior girls at - Rockville girls look the- damn same, many for she can't evoke- anything any longer.

They remind her of sex-dolls with their mouths hanging open- yet, saying nothing- noting, just there for the feelings, keeping the same stripes so predators can't tell them apart. Survival of the non-specific. 'The shoulder- shearling boots, length hair with highlights, the stupid, the little wristlet purses to hold their cell phones, lip glosses, and lunch money. It's the - Rockville way!'

The two girls stop in front of her seat and huddle, shoulder to shoulder, each clutching a piece of notebook paper.

The smaller one hangs on her friend and chokes out a sequence of high-pitched giggles. The other simply sucks air in and out, a rapid-fire of hiccupping wheezes, thinking about boys, they have a hand, and these they want, and the one they cannot.

Sarah's nerves can't take it, them looking at her in school either, yet walking along the tracks is her escape.

'Hey!' she yaps. 'How about you ladies hold your little powwow someplace else?'

It seems like a fair request, by a teacher, yet, I think not. After all, these girls have the entire school to roam uninterrupted. Besides everyone at - Rockville knows that this is her our hang out.

She discovered it in the 7th-grade year. It had always been vacant, for the reason that, it was situated directly beneath the principal's window. That didn't bother her. She wanted to be alone. That is, until Balla came along last spring, and said: 'This is my place, get lost,' like a bully, that she is, and her girls are.

Haven was terribly shy. Almost crippling so. He hated talking in class and broke out in hives whenever his parents argued. It was hard to get him to open up, but when she finally did, Melody always felt like she'd found a kindred outcast.

She liked begging Haven to torture her with stories of her former was fascinating to her, what going middle school another year was like, the at their hangout is where they wait for each other, to chat about things like this, before, school, and after school each day, where they do their homework and split a pair of earbuds for the right and left sides of an illegally downloaded song. A haven where, like- two kids who once kept to themselves suddenly keep with each other, that where she got her new name, a safe place just like under the Rockville viaduct, with Sarah.

(Night)

-Sleepover- (plow fight)

Wake- wake- hit- slam... fall onto butt... repeat!

Bacca- 'If you can't handle me at my idiotic rants, then you don't deserve me at my butt plug insertions.'

Emaly- 'I definitely have prune fingers after those faps, with you girls.'

Bacca- 'Cream you slut!'

Emaly- Eye roll, in lightheartedness, giggling like with her, wanting it so badly.

Haven- shhh- or ma well hear...

Shhh- U..., 'YOU'RE A BEARDED TROLL SPERM.'

Emaly- 'I got a glittery asshole man- with this plugin.'

Bacca- 'I have an obsession with butts.

I don't know why.'

(Giggles)

I have to pee now- said Emaly- 'That's what apple juice is. It's literally just apple pie,' said
Bacca.

'Damn... My penis just fell off the wall.'

Ha- and one fall of her too- said Bacca pointing at Haven, to Emaly.

Haven- 'I didn't know if you guys know, but if you fap too long you get cum prunes.' (o-haha)
...all around by the girls...

Bacca- 'Jesus titties this shit is ridiculous.'

(I love you, girls) ...said around by the girls...

'If you thought I wasn't gonna quote while fapping, you were VERY mistaken.'

'Marry had a little I-am- little I-am... Ha!'

...she sung well-doing...

Haven- 'Vaginas are just like socks coming together.'

'WHOA! Sock vagina!'

Emaly- 'Why can't dudes dicks have an extra part of their balls that go in the butt, like the size of a butt plug?'

(WHAT! ...?...)

Bacca- 'I just shot cum up Em's nose.' Emaly- 'It's like a lick worth of an orgasm.'

Bacca- I said today to Scott- 'If I where an asshole, you'd be my butt plug.' He didn't get it.

(Giggles) the boy is so dumb yet cute - yes cute.

Emaly- 'Oh shit he fell in love. He got vagina dazzled.'

'I'm not doing teddy bear porn right now...' she snaps- chatted a photo to Scott.

Fast snap- by- Haven- 'I literally just bejeweled my asshole.' Want a photo of that Scott, all rem-m-ie?

(n-ah- not really)

Bacca- 'I just lubed my belly button, hearing you too.'

Why did I get this said- Scott- 'Cause I masturbate and master-bait.'

Haven- 'I literally just tried to shove a what feels like- um- a- trophy in my asshole.'

Emaly- texted- 'My pussy is wet like the ocean because all my salt goes to it.'

Emaly- texed- 'Suck my vaginal dick,

Scott'

Emaly- 'I wish I had a dick, so I could try it now.'

Haven- 'Um- no you don't.'

Haven- 'Don't make me shit in your cat litter, and she always looks at us too like I want too.'

Bacca- On the cell- '...I've been practicing my cheek spreads, for you boy.'

Dirty talk... head nod sideways... two times.

(I know right...?)

Emally- in her bed- with nothing but the flicker of the Tv light- light night- 'Jesus please forgive me for my dick addiction. I just love giant cocks.'

(Nighty- night- night)

Part: 60

Bacca- say's all tard-ed- like: 'now remember Haven, a- the light bulb is not a butt plug...!'

(index finger up and shaking)

'Shut up- all you to do is frap and have sex, so in a way that skewering it in too- ha.'

Once, Sarah tried to carve their names on the bench but discovered the wood was that new space-age treated stuff and broke the knife she'd nicked from the cafeteria after the third stroke.

So, she makes sure to have a black marker in her book bag to trace a fresh layer of ink over their initials whenever they begin to fade.

Ma- saw me and Scott doing it, and she was cool with it Haven, what gives?

She's a cool mom! And I love her for that!

'I too said Emaly, cuz- he was taking turned with you and me, and I know she saw looking through the door crack last night, we- he... being me- and him- like- both- snuck over.'

Bacca- I'd been in the library on Ridge Road. I'd just emailed my mother (I didn't tell her anything of significance, it was a sort of test-the-waters email, to gauge how maternal she's feeling towards me at the moment) via my Yahoo account, about being honest about my body and what comes in and what comes or cums out.

It looked like her, she looked exactly the way she looks in my head, but I doubted myself. Then I read the story and I saw the street name and I knew. There it was the story of Melody, at first, I wasn't sure, about saying all this yet all the teen girls do, about how three girls were so close in all things, even boobs, boys, the red death at that time of the month, frapping, and schooling, so, and boys love it, like how I lost it... and with, it all on yahoo.

Rockville Police are becoming increasingly concerned for the welfare, of all the other girls- and even the boys' now, in my school, over Haven, being- 'DANGEROUS.' I FIND IT SICK!

Scott Tipwell, on Saturday night when she left the couple's home to visit a friend at around seven o'clock. Her disappearance is 'completely out of character,' Mr. Tipwell said. Mrs. Tipwell, my soon cannot inure mixing with that, she had him busted for busting a nut in Haven. It was quite the scene- outside my home.

Haven was wearing jeans and a red T-shirt, with Scott boy OJ all over it. She is five- foot 1 inch, give or take that inch, slim, with blond, tips, and dark hair and blue eyes, as of today, yet that changes a- lot like all of us girls, from week to week. Anyone with information regarding Mrs. Tipwell, and Haven, stocking and having sex with boys are requested to contact Rockville Police, she not even allowed to look at boys- the Police and moms say. Mom and dad are where calling the school saying they want her taken away... Ma- chips in saying- for being a normal teen girl.

Emaly- ...Oh, my... (sighing) Bacca, she was mortified.

Part: 61

She's missing her. Melody is missed.

Emaly is missing her so much. Since

Saturday, when she read the story online.

I Googled her- the story appeared, but with no further details, other than what we wanted to be said as the girls that really loved her, and that's how we wanted it.

I thought about seeing all the boys we now like -Scott- this morning, standing on the terrace, hoping to take us to school, like big girls, yet us girls just were standing there looking at one another, thanks to what is said about Haven, she smiling at me, saying see I take you um- to the bottom. We don't care- (hugs) ...I Emaly- grabbed my bag and ran out for a train passing by to hope, like the old days, into the road, that leads over to the school.

We all knew that Scott would come around, sneaking around, with all of us- he's a boy like when had they ever had control, with anything.

Part: 62

Sometimes, I don't want to go here, thought Haven, along with the girls it was unanimous, I think I'll be happy if I never have to set foot inside the schoolhouse again.

Bacca- As I would even miss it. I just want to remain safe and warm in my haven with Scott, undisturbed, and Have said: 'I want that with you Bacca, you're the only one I can trust.'

Haven- (I LOVE YOU.)

~*~

Sarah looks up. The four girls are gone. It's like a sucker punch to the gut, she got beat up, by them walking through the High school halls, for being, now slow, the surprise worse than the hurt itself, and no chance to hit back, the girls are making her even more gone.

'What's that?' Haven takes the paper, the new list of girls for the week, and she is all the way down, below the low-life.'

You know, like- I remember the days, like- when I would have thought this was the end of my life, yet, I don't even care, I have you girls. That all that matters!

...And unanimously they all agreed...

Book: 32

Naddalin and the Magic Railway

Part: 1

In class as a little girl, before coming here- teacher saying: 'I'm going to tell you a story about trains... folks far apart and the magic railroad that brought them together.' 'Every story, like a railroad, has its brave girls, this one is no different.’ ‘This is a wizardly word, and It is at one end of my special universe.’ ‘What does that sign say, I remember saying to a girl your age back then...’ ‘Number 13 Railway.’

‘The magic lost Railway...’ they all said, at reading time... ‘Really unfailing and right on time, all the kids where aw-stuck.’ ‘We were off... looking...’ He said. ‘At the other end of my universe... far away across oceans of time...’ up and over the tall mountain, and deep woods, and hidden deep in a valley... of spooky woods.’ ‘That points just round the bend, there is a place like this, that goes to another place, through a porthole.

A lovely place you'll find all that is enchanted good and yet evil.’ ‘Where the magic comes over you showing up right on time, this is your excellent time, climbing through universe to your own where there is no limit to your mind...’ ‘Soft strokes of lightning painting the skies, brightening up all your time, like shadows, cast, and by the way, I think someday one of in this class is going to help her, somewhere in this story, I already know, whom she is, do you?’ The story: ‘I remember's just trying to make this a better railway for steam engines. Yet those days were coming to an end.’

‘He says, the harder we work, the fewer kids like you all would care, it was not the thing, any longer, and outdated.’ ‘Help her, they always need help! They said.’ ‘For the reason, that steam engines are cowardly, irritable... worn-out chunks of metal, that should just rust away and die forever.’ Away-who: ‘Now, I've come back to find a lost steam engine, Number 13. ‘I'm going to destroy her, and dominate you, said a girl that was dulling me over flinging this and saying: ‘I was crazy-’ it was not a real thing!’ ‘We're really useful engines?’ One girl with pigtails said in class!’ ‘Only you can find that out... if you're the one...’ ‘What lost an engine?’ ‘You hear that train whistle sooner than it hears itself if, in your hart, you want to finder her.’ I – at five spoke up saying: ‘I've been looking at the map, it not there.’ ‘What are these mysterious shadowy lines, and you'll see...’

‘They look like covary caterpillar lines going no ware, yet were railroad tracks... but I can't see any tracks around here, even if I try hard too.’ ‘All I see are the ones we've traveled on.’ ‘It's mysteries that make this land so-o... magical!’ ‘This engine was vital to the magic, that held these worlds together...’ He said. I said- ‘I guessed there was something mysterious about this mountain and the woods and her that lay within.’ ‘Yah.’ All mountains and wood and towns have their secrets, covering, yet none like this one. ‘Should not surprise a kid like you he said to me, I did not get what he was saying then, yet maybe, just maybe I do now.’

'She the steam engine was being made on the assembly line, hot steam, sweaty, man at work, for low pay, moving pistons, and belts, hissing, and load pounding, back in the 1880's and as they were making here, a man, was crushed, by the boiler, when it was lowered in place. another had his legs pinned by the cowcatcher in the front, and then yet another had his toes amputated by one of the wheels that run the 20-pound rail, of the old U.S.A- factory.

It's now 2017, 137 years later, in a pall of junk rust, she sits... a flashback of the steam roaring, out and people, getting on to make their way to the school, it was speculated that this was used as a place where you learned wizardry. Sitting in what was the newly painted cab, a black man that worked for nothing, was puffing away on a pipe, somehow asphyxiated, and to cover it up they just left him there all night, and also it was said, they just put his body in the newly made boyar, as if he was the coal to run the trail run, of firing the engines, and he was brunt within, and sold like his soul to the train forever, adding to her lust for man. What was odd, is her headlight was on, and the room fogged, yet she had no steam to keep it light when they when in the next day.

I have heard this mythical story, over the years but did not buy into it. All of them to this point was just black, yet not this one, she was a JGR Class 7100, like them, yet she was all her, class, a lady- some said, wearing bright inflamed red they called it, what was scary the most about her it- her bagging was 13 with the son of the beast, Lord Ghizith, son of all wicked at this school in the story of tells, in Roman numerals was 9-9-9, yet even right side up is still what it is, with the dashes,

AND WITH THE V'S IT MAKES IT.

When someone placed it on her upside-down X|X|X, the same man that was given up as a sacrifice to her evil to start. She was going to pull nothing but kids, and her cars were going to be classy white. WE ALL NEW THE STORY, IT WAS TOLD IN CLASS, YET I HAD TO SEE HER MY SELF OVER IN HAVANA.

THAT SCHOOL, LED TO THE ONE WE GO TOO, and only wizards know about this lost world, and the magic railway, that leads to a new world of magic.

Holy sh*t! Come on let's go- and see if we can find her- and the resting spot, you know where not allowed, said, Emmah, Naddalin oh come on- and she ran off...

SHE IS coming GIRL, keeps YOUR SHIRT ON, said, Ellie. She's changing his shirt, in the chamber room, where all the girls sleep, other girls seem her do this, they giggled at her size for her age, and her dorky glasses.

That's noise pollution, keep it down others are studying, you girls frolicking and singling gallery like that, 'round the school halls, said Miss. Smith. What you're doing, is not a right girl... as you know... you have been told about your thing for each other, You might as well be sucking face in front of all your classmates. It like poisonous potions you to have taken with your love for one another said, Smith. Hey, Emmah, I will be right their girl, let me get my wand, and wizard glasses, too. 'Just leave them behind,' 'all you need is you.'

'It's okay- come on.' Go on, girls Smith said, try and stay out-a trouble- I- say, yet that hard for you all- I know. It's okay then, shh- I would say- um... Naddalin, your lunch, said, Emmah! Try and keep it cold, she cast a spell to do just that on the brown bag. There's yogurt in there... 'I no-' 'gross-right?' 'Yah.'

Slow down, girls, a professor said! 'Are you guys having a war, or trying to start one with all this racket?' He said loudly- with authority. This one he is pissed off because, I'm not taking metamorphoses shop, inside of a class he said I should be in for lower minded girls such as I, saying I not ready for this stage yet.

My granddad too, said this about me, even if. It won't embarrass them when you change things, and become something else or someone, or no how to make them a sucking mud frog. What...? Walking into the woods looking all eerie and green in color, misty, and hunting feel. Girl talk begins with the color of nails and periods, and boobs, and homeworking spell; they were trying on random animals in the sticks.

So-o, Last night, we're playing Scrabble, by candlelight; Its neck-and-neck between me and her. We blew Jagger away early, she can't spell for crap, So, at the conclusion, I had this choice of the ratio for five lousy points... 'or...' she questions looking dumb. 'Um- or what, Naddalin?'

Fellatio for 24 points, 'and...' (oral stimulation of a man's penis.) 'You don't even like that stuff, do you,' she questioned, with curiosity. and the game, I had it.

What did she do? Headmaster- said- She won by seven points... because, obscenities are not allowed, in the school, this was done with the word's like magic on the board, making the worlds appear in magic in Scrabble, even getting tops to go with the uniform can be done with the cast of a spell with the wand. And it is in the dictionary, regardless! 'Your jerkoff,' Naddalin, Jesus. You know, Naddalin, I was thinking... 'Uh-oh, smart-ass smirk,' 'No, seriously.' Now that was going to be staring here, and your about 14 years old, I- I figured it's about time... time that we got you laid, well with one of us girls. You know, like this year, huh? You need a girl to get laid... I don't know anyone, and they don't like me. What about Christin, Rollking?

I don't like her mustache, on both sets of lips. 'gross!' I have seen her in the shower with all that matted fuzz. 'Freak you!' Why? Why- do you care? Why do care like- If you get a little black hair in your mouth? 'She has a puss- no?' Okay... How about Haecien Hales, the secret shame? 'She's cute.' 'She's a sixth grader! Her- her wand is up to her butt, too about me, after I said she was cut, now- 'I am nothing but wrong.' 'So, what, keep asking?' 'She's a walking- rub off.' 'I know.' 'Come on.' 'I don't have the smallest deposit to open an account, to that honey hole.' Are you kidding? 'You carry your life savings of girl c*m between your legs.' 'Come on, Naddalin.' I think maybe I'll just frap off. Are you playing Winged horse racing this year or what? Somebody's got to pick it up- when you fall off with a little pussy girl.

(Three weeks)

'Look how c*ckeyed she works, this-this pile.'

'She got fuckin brand-new wheels for rusted out slanders.'

'Well, the boy does have good hands.'

'Real good little hands.'

'Bad taste in trains, and hobbies.'

'You know, Papa, you can't polish a turd.'

'Hay you girlie, when I said you could scrounge through that sh*t pile outback... I didn't mean you could build your whole freaking thing-ie with my stuff.'

'Why do you care?'

'You're not doing anything with it anyway.'

'Hey!'

'Don't think you got the gold key to the sh*tter.'

'Mediocrity takes advantage of me, understand?'

'Yeah.' She said.

'If it wasn't for me, it cost you an sh*t pile to put this heap together.'

'Smith said GO BE SOMEWHERE and let the girl work on her project.'

'I know that sir.'

'Look, I know you ain't got money falling out of puss-hole.' Like- If you did, you wouldn't be here, doing this down here.'

'Maybe we could work out some kind of a deal.'

'You... pick up around the place, you and these little ones too, you call girlfriends, and put the toilet paper on the little spools... sh*t like that, then you'd you can raid my junk pile.'

'Do that and you can... for whatever you want. I might even throw in a few dollars.'

'Sure thing...'

'Look what she's doing to that pencil, said Emmah in class, I wish I was it.'

'Go on, study with her now, asked the other, for there click.'

(Head nod no... and then like maybe.)

'Ask her out...'

'Mind your own business, girl and do your work... in your wizard notebook.'

‘Just read the book and pin.’

‘Yeah, come on girl.’

~*~

‘Listen, do you like music and dancing?’

‘Yes...’

‘Then come with me to the dace at the end of the year, the boys for the other school would say- I should be with one of them, yet, I pick you or an ickkie boy!’

‘Did you have plans with Emmah, yes and going to do the bad thing with her today.’

‘You are going to have no friends at all if you keep doing this...’

‘So-o!’

‘They get the bi-ness for there all like me.’

‘Get off my back! Old lady!’

‘What’s going on? Said Smith, ‘I don’t know- ...but you need to let this kid alone.’

‘Ever since he bought that locative, she has been obsessed with it, and that girl too.’

‘And you know what else?’

‘When we signed the papers, she knew someone had died in it!’

‘Does Naddalin know about that?’

‘Naddalin doesn’t know anything about any further than the girl on girl sex and working too hard for something that going to kill her.’

‘I know he died choking on exhaust fumes, the last one that was trying to fix her.’

‘You don’t know sh*t, kids of that thing.’ She said, frantic!’

‘My brother died, looking for it in the woods.’ Said one girl in class.

‘Because she wanted too, she said back.’

Emmah- ‘Naddalin wouldn’t have bought it if had known somebody died in it, would she -she had- that gleam in her eye,

I was not talking here out of it.’

‘Either you’re dumb or you don’t know your friend very well.’

‘She had the same look my brother always had.’

‘Probably the only thing my brother ever loved in his life was that car.’

‘No stinker ever came between him and Number 13 of the Skoufyceol railway.

If they did, watch out.’

‘I had my five-year-old daughter lost to death looking for it, and I think she did and she is the last car as remands, and that car is over top the viaduct.’

‘My mother back in the 1950’s she died the same way she did.’

(Of course, it came back, like new)

Part: 2

‘I wouldn’t put that in my mouth.’ ‘You don’t know where it’s been.’ ‘Get outa-here.’ ‘But we know where it hasn’t been- with you, dork.’

I said Hey, Ellie, walking deeper in the jade-sh wood’s looking for the old rail line, of 13. How’s your gimpy knee? It’s been better, all the spell in this world would not help it. Coach wants me to practice, and yet, I feel like riding would be good for me he thinks not- so. Yeah...? It’s about time. I have been eaten dirt with your name on it for weeks. Hi, Emmah, she is tagging along with us. Oh, hey, Ellie. ‘How you are doing?’ ‘I am okay...’ They going to let you play Winged horse racing?’ ‘Yes- I think I did not come in last you know- even if.’ ‘Yeah.’ ‘Docs says am as good as new, in three weeks.’ ‘Then I guess, I will be seeing you out there.’ ‘I hope so girl,’ she said in a hug.

(Three weeks later)

‘What do you mean, came back?’

'It went eerie in the room! Then the bell rang out!'

'How'd you ever get that train and all those cars fixed up like that?'

'Magic!' She said.

'Oh, just plain unfashionable hard work.'

'Non-of the girls believed it was- that or that...'

'Yes, we belong together...' She's in the cab rubbing her down...'

'Yes, it belongs to only me, and I.' Eye's bugging.

'You scared the hell out of me, and more said the girls in her room, with all the bed where they all sleep.'

'It happened, Naddalin she lost it over it.'

(Chatter of the girls at night.)

'Everything got bright when I was down there with her, and creepy feeling.'

'So, what are you saying?'

'It has got her soul!'

'She is Falling to IT!'

~*~

'I thought it was attacking me like, I was just held there standing looking at her like and dream, of evil!'

'Sexually frustrated, she is, that's all- said one teacher.'

Emmah- 'Come on, baby, please, sleep with me and get some rest.'

'I love you!'

'I love you more!'

Part: 3

(Back at the school a day earlier)

‘Having trouble with your locker?’ ‘No.’ I said, in a whisper. Did you see the new girl? They were talking about me in nasty ways, in ways that you would not even think of... ‘I just got here, and off the train!’ I’m in love, and I am fussy, with this girl, I overheard, and it was gross, what these older girls were saying about young girls, and what they did and did not do. I never- ever noticed you were busy, before now like this. Drop-dead, Maaria.

‘What is her name?’

‘Naddalin-’ ‘I don’t know.’ ‘She’s in the bureau.’ ‘She looks smart, but she’s got a body of a young hot s|ut.’ ‘Oh, crap, here she comes.’ I think you will like it here, the headmaster said. ‘Give me something for me to stuff in down here.’ (TEMP- handed) We have all kinds of activates, and all things magic. Exploding, this land is something you’ll love to do, not a bad way to meet girl’s others your age, and find friends that last a lifetime. I would like to get involved with the magic yearbook, where all photos and stories come to life, as you flip the pages. We have a terrific yearbook staff, he said well stocking his long beard. Won a prize last year, for our students, being most crafty...

‘They started it, you know,’ she said, ‘That’s not so-o,’ I spoke up. Shut up, dick-face! ‘Shut your mouth! Said the professor.’ ‘I don’t have to listen to YOU - you’re not my daddy.’ ‘...And to garbage like that, Elysia!’ ‘What where you saying to me that you think you can to jack-all?’ ‘She’s got a dagger, and my wand.’ ‘You are fearing liar!’ ‘That’s complete bullsh*t,

Mr. Sasey.’ She said quickly with no thought behind it. ‘This girl is lying. I swear to God, or let the daemons take it.’

‘Did she here in this school pull a blade on you?’ ‘Yeah.’ She said squeakily, ‘Show it, Elysia.’ ‘The hell, I- I will.’ ‘You can’t make me,’ Saying it like a brat. ‘If you mean, I don’t have the authority, your wrong blood hell you are wrong.’

‘TOUCH ME...! Try it, your bald sh*t, and I will knock you through the wall! ‘You two girls go up to the headquarters.’ ‘Now!’ You- (pointing) ‘Stay there.’ Along with saying girl- ‘Don’t go anywhere.’

‘You have got enough trouble, to face.’ ‘I am going to call the brigadiers. ‘Go to the office, Elysia. ‘I’ll get you! I will eat you out!’ Along with saying ‘You’re going to wish you were never-ever where born!’

~*~

‘So, all in all, it wasn’t a bad first day.’ I recall, thinking back, Think Elysia, will try to get even? ‘No, he’s a douche.’ she will most likely find somebody else to pick on when she gets back in. They kicked her out, you know, for the year and she will be held back too. ‘Good,’ I say. ‘They kick Ellie out yet for a week.’ ‘JUST- Probation.’

~*~

‘Stop - stop! Quick! Go back!’ ‘What’s the matter?’ She yelled. There - there she is, tucked away behind all the brush, and over-grown-ness, of plant life. ‘I want to look at her! And take a tour of all the cars and the engine.’ She said to the other three... ‘All right, Naddalin.’ ‘Just go back with me and hold my hand, it’s kind of scary.’ ‘All right...’ she said. ‘Jesus...’ and they said- ‘Wow!’ What is it? ‘Number 13...!’ ‘Do you know what this means, um- all the stories are true, she well... like, be here?’ ‘What?’ said the thread one, with them. ‘Jesus girls.’ ‘Ah- like Be careful, Emmah and you too.’

This is a piece of sh*t, said the second one, ‘she could be fixed up,’ I said way too excitedly. ‘Yah.’ ‘Oh, she could be really awesome.’ ‘Forget it.’ She Emmah said, this babies’ girl has totally rusted away, and is missing everything, to even steam, ‘I don’t care.’ ‘I bet it won’t even steam if we try, or the horn blow.’

‘Shell steam still,’ an old grumpy man said with straggly hair. ‘You need this, coal from the village uptown, is the only place in this dark yet charming land, now where you can get it.’ I am getting rid of her, you see... as scrap, and for the money, getting me a new place too, and over the fact, no one cares anymore about old junk.’ ‘How much do you want for her; I’ll get the money?’ ‘Whatever it is, it’s not enough, to save the history of the wizarding world.’ ‘Jesus, Naddalin.’ ‘Girlie, you ever owned something like this before?’ ‘I would say not- so-o, no?’ ‘Nope, I don’t even got-a-a- license.’

‘Names: LeDay.’ ‘Naddalin Maaria.’ ‘What are you asking for this train?’ ‘I am not one of you, he was, I am not.’ ‘Let’s start her up.’ ‘Really can we?’ She squalled.

‘She was part of the Skoufyceol railway.’ He said. ‘We no.’ ‘Smart girls...’ he wisped.

I like that, there is a lot of magic tell around this railway about it being hunted and evil, but why not it is after all the start of the wizarding ways of transportation, my grate-grate-Grandmother road this to the school, she was a wizard, and what I would love to become, like. 'Come on, we got to get going back it is getting dark.'

The headlamp was still bright and shining a creep beam, down on us standing in front. My asshole brother, great-great-granddaddy got this hip, off the line when it shuts down, over this and that... he was an engineer, for the railroad, she the lantern over there this was part of this train also, it glows... even if I can get rid of it, and his voice trails off... Likewise - 'Made in September 1880.' You got your new model year in September that year. Brand-new, she was, gorgeous. She had the smell of a brand-new steamer. About the finest smell in the world, except maybe for puss. That what always said I would rather go for puss- yet that's me.'

When she got her, she had six miles on her for test on the six days of the month at 6-o-6 she pulled out of the factory, with a hot steam fire within, and flames lick around the door of the feed, hotter than hell, and she came to life and was falling down the test line like a bat out of hell, barking a new record for this model.

Foldamer, my brother he went through hell, and back with Number 13 of the Skoufyceol railway, with the snotty stock up rich kids, not like you all now, but you get what I am saying now. If your brother loves this engine so-o much, 'why is he selling her?' 'Because he is stone-cold dead, some said he was going to go down with her in the gave or be lit up in the firebox- like the story.' 'He was not, was he the one girl spoke up,' asking. He died on the sixth, at 6 p.m. in 2006, in June.

(Creepy)

'So, Mr. LeBay...' How much do you want for her? 'I- I have been asking $50. I' well make it $25 for you, with all 6 of the cars too.' 'The money's not important, the thing her now is it, I want to see it not with me.' '...And there'll be no bringing her back... here... because you see, I am selling this sh*t hole, also along with the line to you if you want it, and buying me a condo, uptown, so-o- I won't be tracked down!'

'You got a deal,' I said quailingly, too him.

'I will get the slip, saying it all yours.'

‘Will you stop, and ponder about this for a moment?’ Emmah said. ‘Where are, you are getting the money?’ Said Emmah. ‘I have been saving up for something like this all my life... so-o.’ ‘it’s really not that much... either.’ Said the other. ‘Um- like, I have been saving all summer.’ ‘Yah but for schooling- books, uniforms, and things you need, to pass here.’ ‘You get everything you want... don’t you?’ ‘He’s screwing you over, and may do that too if you don’t get out of here soon.’

‘You could get a decent motorbike, for that much money, back home.’ ‘Number 13, is decent.’ Yah but don’t you need a track? ‘No- not with the magic railway, one the train goes over she get her energy back, and it recharged her, also, remember the story. And you stop at the ‘Shadow Time’ station, that falling- down now, oh but it won’t be if I have something to do with it.’ ‘The guys a weirdo,

Naddalin.’ ‘Yah- he’s freaking weird.’

‘So, that was $50?’ ‘Yeah, that’s it.’ ‘You said to her $25.’ ‘$25 would do it girlie.’ ‘It this is a good idea, let’s just come back tomorrow- and see what happens.’ ‘There won’t be a one, now or not.’ Do you realize ‘She’s 14 years old- Mr.,’ ‘I mean, that makes her officially a historic.’ ‘Great- ‘Kool with a k- girl, then Parnell’s junkyard is full of official historic CRAP.’ ‘I’m buying her.’ ‘I don’t care what you say.’ ‘It’s your funeral, girl.’ ‘Would you give Naddalin a break?’ She asked. ‘She doesn’t know what she’s doing.’ ‘You don’t know half as much as you think you do...’ ‘Skank-er’s...’ The wizard school and professor Smith, ‘you did what?’ ‘She’s all mine, and there is nothing here in this book saying: that I cannot keep her.’

‘You’re kidding, right?’ Said the board.

‘You can’t buy that junkyard fatter.’

~*~

‘Why is she inaccessible up?’ ‘No comment, ‘She’s safe from harm.’ Long ago, I made a mistake as Number 13 caretaker, and she was fare too in loving me and me - her. I-I all most... and his voice trills away... lost in a look.’ ‘Wicked was threatened to abolish her.’

Part: 5

She used up all her coal, and the magic she had is now all gown.’ ‘Wicked kids, not caring and a man like some of the teacher of the past here, that rain her made her go too fast, trying to keep time.’ ‘She’s as precious as gold.’ ‘Kids remember that, one of you well.’ ‘That’s beautiful, I could cry, and I did... like a baby girl.' It was said: 'The journey gets bumpier and bumpier.' 'But if there's a lost engine, maybe there's a lost railway, too... and his voice ends there.' 'I think that's how we travel her, on a secret railway, that we now look over, going so fast- with magic.' 'Taking what belongs to the lost engine, to do it!' 'I've always wanted to go this way. 'We're following some shadowy lines; I've seen on a map.

They're like light railroad tracks without any rail's ties. 'Well, 13, what are we to do?' I remember me saying, kids. 'It all seemed so much easier than life and wizardly was of it, like everything else, there are too many legalities. 'I'd given up on seeing her, as she should.'

'In my pre-teen years, I would over here this too: 'The Magic railroad?' 'Whatever,' they said. We're traveling miles and miles, taking away the magic, for them to get here to this wizard world, you know. 'They were more caring about finds wizard balls, and friend life, of seeing who's best, and was going to make it.' I recall saying to these girls that are not my bestie's, I don't know if this railroad's going to last much longer, 'till it vanishes like the engine.

'What engine?' 'Emmah said not remembering because girls and dating other girls within the school was more important, there are no boys around, it's a girl's uniformed school, and the girl is cute, so you do what you need to do.' 'The engine that traveled this railroad, way back when,' I said, 'and I never saw it either so maybe it's not a thing,' 'yes- yes it did way on way back, when the school had boys too, yet over legalities, and liabilities, we made the changes to go all-girl school.' 'We don't know what happened to it, it goes, and did for lots and lots of time, and thought about boobs, pads, girls, and kissing them all over, their bodies, and yes getting fingered by that one girl that makes me feel- ah, inside coming out.

Hello, Naddalin, the railway welcomed me, along with the hunts of the past, like entities black and hooded, some good some evil ghosts, and other like fallen angels like Jaylynn, whom all is legendary to us at the girls school of wizardry, telling tells of their life, and life's past that, the railway is a link to our shadow world, 'Welcome,' the voices said, all spooky and crappy, to my ears, to the wizard world of being on the long 3-day ride on the magic railway, yet back at the school, that will only think you been going a minute or so, in a time warp.

'Come on, come on it's along the green, magical ride, see all that is wizardly, over 200 years or so-o.' 'I'm very at home on trains, I said.' 'What if send a professor back to fetch you.' 'What if... said

Emmah...' We've heard that one before, about you being worried. 'What's the matter? One girl said, to the other, traveling sickness.'

Enjoying the sun, burning through the dense fog? That nothing was something, just young girls panicking, these must be the bumpers, at the end of the station; where these single-track ends, next to the castle, over on the hill.

'Are we supposed to go through them.' 'They do... we just don't see it- like, we did in the past, like a wall, like a porthole?' 'I was supposed to be back by sunset.' Said the one... You know, Naddalin, perhaps- professor- Smith, can guess where you are, or even his rest in peace, that said this story to me years ago, I wonder if we'll see him, or his ghost.

'He can... I am sure of that, they all can...' '...Maybe.' 'Because, I think he's been here himself, long ago, I bet he was related to the man, his granddad or something.' And there he is it's him in ghostly form, saying: 'I knew you were the one back then, to her and her girlfriends.'

'Now if your job to save history...'

'And if he can help, I do wish, he'd hurry, up and say the WHY of it...' then why is the magic in your heart, and if you care about something more than your little world. It keeps all optimism alive.' 'I haven't told you this a long time ago- back when you were just a little girl, but soon you'll be all grown up, and a wizard girl.' The ghostly professor said, 'there used to be an engine that traveled on the magic railroad,' glinting like in his appearance. 'Besides if only we could find that, we could still head back to Shadow Time on time.' The second girl said. 'Oh, that engine vanished... along never to be seen or heard from again, said some of the voices of pasted spirits.' 'I have to tell you something, I've heard a train whistle, and it sounded, like it came from the mountain valley, beep within the green fogged woods.' 'Yes, you well it's her crying for love and the loss of the magic of the youth like you.' He said.

'The mountain valley...?' 'I just recollected another part of the inkling of why I am the chosen to be this girl.' 'What...???' 'If he would just believe that you could do this you could,' in a way yes, he said. '13?' Can she whistle? Yes, we hear her at night from the school even faint. 'I've heard her...' 'Me too, me also...!' 'It's because she's magic, just like all of you, on the inside.' 'I identified, it or I thought some when we were out walking.' Naddalin and I were traveling on the ground above it, using our wands, and the last of the magic on the vishing rails, all cover with vines, and tall grasses.

‘Yeah, so have I, we said to the voices, and ghosts of the past, that are along this railway.’ And the windmill, still twist and twirlers where we stopped and looked at them.’ ‘This must be the map along with the magic railroad, and it was they said, it was hidden, for us not to be bothered by others that abolish.’ ‘But- but the railroad's energy is fading away, said Emmah even now it is- it is.’ The other girls agreed with her. ‘The railroad needs us, girls, to care...’ ‘I don't know her special secret, I think I do, the coal, and someone to love this that young, and to believe.’ ‘And, I need to know it now more than ever.’

‘Why did they want to get rid of the railway, don't you see over us, to keep us safe, from them, like your enemies.’ ‘Through the bumpers, off the single track, that looks like it's no longer there, the line that was shut down, by the school, the diversion track.’ ‘And how will I get back again?’ we don't know where we are.’ ‘This railway is all the souls of our ancestors; a place where can hear them and their voices.’

Boys can masturbate 7 - 10 times a day jacking, I am a girl and I can do that, I rub one out on the clitoris and finger down in every hour or with a dildo- sometimes both, yet I like to masturbate, and there is no shame in doing it, there is nowhere in the bible that says you can't, and it for you and a most for your body and health, so about every hour, as a girl I c*m, I have to, why don't you? And c*m over and over is not going to make you impotent! Or make God love you any less, for it. Like I have c*m in my undies now, girls always do, just think about it... and the feeling it gives you, it just happens, like when it pulls for you when you pull them out at the elastic and see that stuff, you're just feeling good, and normal.

Then I will try, I- we- and us- promised, we would get you home to your school soon, they said swirling around her. Follow me, us as we tell our stories. Right this way too: Bumper-Ville, to the other side. It just like Just a walk in the park, to do this even if all the track seems to end under you, you are not going to derail.

‘We're going through, now girls.’

The porthole is sucking them in... the girls cry- ‘It is dark and cold and bumpy, but we are not afraid.’ ‘We're not!’ ‘Oh, there's the missing coal truck, to her too with coal still in it, white in color.’

'We're going back for that coal truck you know here shortly.' 'Bumpers, coal truck, now we're starting to solve the mysteries.' You could hear the happy cries of the voices, around them. 'Nothing seems to work. This is the lost engine from long ago.' 'There- there-there...and they're all together, there it is it's also theirs, like all the white old cars.' 'Now we can go back... and bring some to help...' There, it is, they're - being them also, as girls, and voices, and there...is where they are now, in the lost land of the magic railway.

(The next day)

Do you think you could get some, now? 'I've tried all the different coals in the valley.' ALONG WITH SAYING- 'I can't make her steam,' he said. Coal, special magic coal, that sparkles with gold flakes in it, that is that's 13 needs. 'There's a coal truck, we pass the day before...' 'Up at the top of the mountain then down low we go, on the covering magical tracks.' 'Unquestionably, I will stop here, and I well.'

Nonetheless, I 'But better late than never well see if.' 'It's a beautiful day! Even if where in the dark thick woods, of this railway, we're down, in this valley now, the sun's rays shining through the trees, that seem to be grabbing on to us as we pass.

'I couldn't fix her in time,' he said, along with 'yet there may not be one, if...' and his voice trails off; and at last she is alive, and the light is bright and the steam are flying around her, and breathing, like... in- an evil hiss, she wakes to form the dead.

'13 is and was just like me back when I thought, I could not c*m'n orgasm hard, when it was 12 yet just like a steam, building but the right steam, with the train if you work with her long enough, just like she, we get you there, and just like steam building up and letting it out, it makes you happy when you masturbate for a long time,' she said- this to professor Smith and he just giggled, and the girls smiled also at her un-shame. The girls all feel as she did- saying that too.

'The railroad is getting its energy back, and she is she, the inflamed red engine, breathing fire she is; shooting it out her side too, by the big wheels, the funnel is smocking too.' 'Well, the lights are singing on you and All ago now, aren't you? 'Bright for glory...' 'He (your teacher back then) would have would have loved this journey, with her all over again.' 'Yes, she would, I said wiping a tear.' 'Besides, he would have loved it that you're with me now, and all of us too... right girls?' As he said then - 'didn't forget about magic, it's safe inside you, don't let anyone take it.'

'You've found her, and she's steaming, even if she is not ride read yet, that was the next thing for me, the girls did not know, I was thinking about.' 'And she's beautiful, even now yet, I have wizardly photos, that motion picture on the new paper, is it comes to life with magic, going on in my mind of the past of what she was and it was unbelievable!' 'There was enough magic, with us and her the train to get her to movie some, on her own rusty power... a big day for us all.'

~*~

I'm glad you were able to find your way back, form your magical stride, though the woods.
'Girls, do you realize this is?

Yes, we reckon this is one beautiful engine.' 'This is the lost engine, we said to others we meet up with back at the school, in the long halls?' 'Are we glad to see you,' the girls said with running hugs.

Part: 6

(One week has passed)

'Now we can go back to Shadow Time, on a cold day, without the railway the magic can't exist, maybe not now but over time, we don't even see that.' 'Aha!' she said. 'I'll not let you down again,' some teachers, said at the school, saying this was not safe for girls this age to be doing. Watch out for the viaduct, one said, as the girls run off, to do their journey.

'It's dangerous!' They giggle. 'No, you won't, because the magic you refuse to believe in... will get the better of you, if you let it do so-o.' He said. Also, saying 'You can run, but you can't hide, form this once it or she gets ahold of you and of you.' Though the old rail tunnel, that is a mile long, dark and damp.

'Well, 13 this is your shining time, too, if we do this.' 'We hope so,' the girls said. 'Come on, 13, come to life today to for us, we had some new parts of old trains to try, to see if we could get her moving even more, along with our magic.'

'Little engines can do big things, just like a little girl like me.' 'Then watch the swirls that spin so well, around her as she comes to life for us in an evil hiss.' 'Swirls, of magic, around her body.' Like the shavings around as we start to see her steam.'

‘Let's look around, the inside of all the passenger cars.’ Girl- ‘I think I promised you something, the right to do this.’ ‘She’s your if you want to bring her back to life and part of a working line for the school.’ ‘How can we girl help?’

‘I'm ready to work hard for this.’ ‘There is a railroad now, that likes to the past and to you making the future of this school, for all girls like you that believe, that can do or be anything they want to believe.’

~*~

Part: 7

‘What are you talking about, girlfriend?’ ‘You're 14 years old, they said yet I say go for it.’ ‘Oh, girl.’ ‘Actually, you’re wrong in think you can do all by yourself they say at the school other girls.’

‘That I did not have the money for it, but buying it for cash is no problem, see they don’t see that, they don’t even think about cash.’

‘Recordkeeping a train at 14, is something else...’ and for that, I need your permission, and that you have miss-ie,’ said Smith.

(Board meeting in the larger dining hall, with the stain glass windows, 1911 UnderWorld type right is typing way magically its self, with magic dust sparkling in swales around it -rip - ding- goes the mechanical devices.)

‘You know how we do things, at this school, with our girls, how could you say you would oversee them doing this?’

‘It's historic and good for them!’

‘You but more Importantly they could’ve consulted with us.’

‘I’ve consulted with you about everything I’ve ever done, the girl said, even back with I was little. If it’s something I want, I get outvoted, 20 to 1!’

‘This is no committee meeting, where we want to hear from you.’

‘I say you going too!’ said with passion!

'I bought the railroad, and that's it, I can give it back!'

'It most certainly is not it!'

'Sorry but you say sound like babbling to me!'

'How could you have let her do this?'

'I didn't let her.' He said.

'She wanted the railway, and she bought it.'

'We, girls here- us- we, tried to talk her out of it- even.'

'I doubt you tried very hard,' said one older woman, I did not know her name yet, but she would become very important to me, and my education over the next 4 years.'

'Yeah, well, I am going to my room.' She said storming out.

'I think you should, she said with a pissy, arrogance.'

'That's it, I am getting the hell out of here.'

'What kind of language was that, what did you say!'

'You wanted me in basic wizard courses, I am there, even if I feel, that I am high up.'

'You wanted the band instead of the chess club, I am there too.'

'I've managed 14 years without embarrassing you or landing in the dungeon.'

Asked: 'Is dungeon-ed a word?' 'It is now!' The one girl said.

'You are not keeping this here'

'Fine...!'

'Thanks for the milk and cookies.' They said walking out.

'What's the problem with it?'

'I am overseeing this, with the girls.' Said Smith.

Stall 20, the pulled her into, an old garage.

‘Get it over there and shut it off...’

‘Maybe the voices, of them, thought me that is the one talking, out of my mouth, that makes me do the crazy’s, and act them too, so look and perceive.’

The new track was laid... in to the dungeon, parts of the school.

‘Stop running down here before we all choke to death and the place burns down.’ Old man said

‘Kiddo, if you sold him that piece of sh*t, you ought to be freaking ashamed of yourself.’

‘I didn’t sell it to her.’ Emmah said-

‘I tried to talk her out of it.’

~*~

‘You’ve should-a have tried harder,’ he said slurring.

‘I knew a guy who had done something like that once, once too with a train like this. The fuckin bastard killed himself in it, now a kid is doing it.’

‘The Son of a bitch was so mean... if you poured boiling water down his throat... he would have pissed icicles.’

‘Okay.’ She said, awkwardly.

‘That is the last time... you run that mechanical asshole in here, without ventilation. I catch you doing it one time, and you are out. You understand, and this thing will is sold for scrap.’

~*~

(The workshop)

‘I am going to tell you something else right now. I don’t take any sh*t of girls like you, I know you and your family.’

'This place is for learning, not for skewing off, it's not for rich-ass-ed, snot-nosed kids, to do just that.'

'I don't allow any smoking in here either.'

'You go out in the junkyard, over the way.'

'I don't smoke what you do.'

'Don't interrupt me, smartass.'

'That right I am smart and have an ass!'

'Don't interrupt me...'

'Don't get smart one more time.'

'Ah, sir?'

'What do you want.'

'Those men over there are smoking pipes and cars, yah- better tell them to quit.'

'Are you trying to help yourself out of this school right, girl?' That is when professor Smith, walked in the door and said, 'what the issue?'

'Then shut your pie hole.' He said.

'There kids trying to do something other than lying on their backside, for entertainment.'

'I know a- slut when I see one, I think I am looking at one right now, all they know how to do.'

'They can read they can't write, or even think for themselves... either... so-o what else is there to call them?'

'You are on probation as of this moment.'

'You get it, stop piss'n them off, if you want me to help you with this.'

'You screw around with me...' He said.

'I don't care how much money, and that is not what this is about now is it?' 'You'll pay up in front... and it's now part of your schooling.'

'I'll throw you out on your ass! You got it?'

'Yes, sir, Good.'

'Now get out of here, this is not a place for young kids.'

'We're closed for the night and you need sleep.'

'You going to be okay?'

'Yeah don't cry.'

'You know, you better find yourself some other charity besides me and Number 13 of the Skoufyceol railway.'

'What is it about that car?'

'I don't know.'

'Maybe it's just that for the first time I've found something uglier than me.'

'You are the cutest girl in the school what are you saying he's an ass!'

'And I know I can fix her up.'

'You're not ugly, Naddalin.'

'I know what I am.' 'Gay, maybe, but not ugly.' Suck YOU!

'Ha- I would like that!'

'Oh, bug blow out, Emmah.'

'You don't need this sh*t.'

'Where have you been?'

'You had us worried sick, said the girls in their nighty's in their bed in their room!'

Part: 8

'I just have to get my wallet out of 'Number 13' of the Skoufyceol railway.'

'Want to come in with me?'

'Sure, I think, I love you, she said to me, and I feel butterfly's and felt the same.'

(Back)

'I'm fixing up Number 13 of the Skoufyceol railway.'

'Listen, miss, you've been rude to us once too often!'

'You apologize to your family right now... but...!' ...And his voice trails off.

(The magic in the train of 13)

Show me, and she fixed herself!

'AND THEN IT WAS TRACING KIDS DOWN!'

'Is that you, Maaria? 'Hey, you ain't mad, are ya?'

'Oh, sh*t.' SHE SAID!

'you're a dead girl now! As she was running down the magic highway, do to her cast spell, or payback.'

'Where have you been, they asked back at the school? You hear about what happened to Ellie?'

'Yepper.'

'Almost makes you feel sorry for the little slut-butt.'

'How's Number 13 of the Skoufyceol railway coming?'

'Oh, sweet, nicer than new.'

'I heard she was totaled, after a test run.'

-AKA runs her down...

'That is not how it was...'

'After I cleaned up the broken glass, it wasn't so bad, and using magic, you see that she and I can do anything.'

'Nobody better do- anything to me.'

'What does that mean?'

'I gotta go.'

'I hope you didn't think I could hang around here all day, I want to see the world of the magic railway, and all the town that was lost, like one called Rockville...'

(Questions)

'I really like this shade of red.' Said a teacher.

'Didn't think they made this anymore.'

'Well, they must, we have it no?'

'I want to have deep, meaningful sex with her, I am in- love!' 'Oh, my God she smiled at me.' 'Like- do you think it was a good idea, to say she was a cute girl with blond locks, said to the other?' 'Go get her, Sara.' 'Yah- Think I should?' 'You've got nothing to lose but your virginity.' Emmah, can you give me a hand?' 'I- I can't...' 'Yeah.' She doesn't have a chance at all, it was said.

I do not think so-o either. She's much too elegant for her. There you go, Sara. 'Lucky girl, see you at lunch...' 'What did you do?' 'Hey,' Have you seen-

Naddalin? 'Yeah.' she still in the class...

What is the matter? Elysia has her in a wand war, over who knows more, with the last class, or transformation, it like a thunderstorm in there, with the back and forth and the cracking.

Elysia, 'Hi, Emmah...' she said deviously, looking for you knew a friend. Come on, dick-weed, you want it? ...Come and get it! If it's yours, for the taking, come to Naddalin, you think you're the best in the class, here, your little girly wand... Just take it, I say, and let's go, that's all you got to do. 'Come on.' 'That's funny, Elysia, really cute.' Put the dagger down, put down the dagger, give it back to her.

'Go get Mr. Sasey.' I say 'Come on fastly.

Picking still- 'You want to go for it?' '...jump for it little one...' 'You've got a knife and she doesn't.

That makes you a hose sh*t.' 'Yeah, the all uneasily agreed.' 'Put it down.' Glass fall off her face as she jumped one more time; and then she stepped on them, breaking them to smithereens. Yeah, put down the dagger, put down the dagger, okay, I am not going to say it again. 'Get her, girls!' 'How do you like that sh*t faced? Puss-slap...' 'All right, break it up!' Said the professor... harshly. 'Right now, ... even more, harsh. 'You kids take a walk and get lost.' Not you, Ellie. 'I have not been doing anything.' 'You all right,

Emmah?' 'Yeah, am okay holding herself.' 'Real cute, girls real...' 'Three on one young little girl.'

Part: 9

'She was so shaken up, giving me all the details... of this girl, being chop up by getting run over by you and your train with the kid inside the cars, for the hell of it!'

'She broke down crying, saying it was not my doing.'

'I understand... they said at the board meeting.'

'A girl one of the perpetrators defecated in the cab, and this is why you did this...?'

I said I was not driving this; it was doing its own...

'They looked at me like yeah- right, knowing I hated this girl.'

'The kid was cut in half. They had to scrape her nude body up with a shovel. I's isn't that what you're theoretically meant to do with crap... scrape it up with a shovel?' 'Don't get smart with me, girl.' She could not be saved...'

'I think we deserve one more try.'

‘Naddalin would never do that said the three girls that know her best.’

‘Yah- not in a million years.’

‘I don’t think she’s Naddalin.’

‘It’s that train, and the evil of the man that passed with the story.’

‘I swear it is.’ She went on saying.

Part: 10

(Three weeks more have passed)

And then it happens, like a dream yet was not a dream, she was running for her life it was running her down like the girl from the past that was a legion, to them all in the town and schools. I am sure we see her again; I know that you did she was lost within another girl- like you reading!

Untitled

Number 1

Number 1

That 'is' I- STEVEN YOUR NUMBER 1- NOW!

-AND-

I LOVE YOU!

Anna- this is my 'UNTITLED' story- she typed the line in her bed with the laptop. That is died, to the outside world. Of how I love my family, friends, and boyfriend, and how I may die, at the hand of a man that is my -lover.

Steven- Fuck'n sh*t-

What? She screamed, in lost confusion.

He then said...

‘You should be SH*T-ING YOURSELF TO HOW GOOD I AM.’

Her face went slack again IN THE THOUGHTS, SHE BLINKED AND SAID THE SAME LINE BACK, and she looked sullenly at the wall. That is a good opener - no- that what she said... ha. He thought she was going to blank out again, but instead, she fetched a sigh and lifted her light body of like 99 lbs. from the bed. ‘You don’t have any need to use such words in the Nevaeh books, for the reason that they didn’t use such words at all back then.

They weren’t even invented, I suppose, but that was a better time than with the first parts. You might as well stick to your Nevaeh stories, Anna. I say that honestly. As your number one fan.’ I would like to let you know and see that... I see it- you twisted tit- smacking pussy licker! She said- suck on that- okay you well... here my bar of soap that I use on the dicks of the horses uses it! Suck on that! She went to the door out to the hall lock it as she looked back at her. She tried to smile some and love the thought that she could make it as the writer. -yet was it worth the lack of freedom?

‘I’d rather not have you livid- or heating on me- you need to love me- for real... I sort of depend on you; you know.’ ‘I’ll I put that manuscript back by all your movies, this is my copy, it not finished, Nevaeh’s you need to do some over- for me- to love you more than I do- think of what we do as your writing lines write as you would act. I may go back to the other one later when I’m done.’ ‘Don’t do that if it makes you mad,’ he said- but I want to feel you as I read the pages inside and out.

She did not return his smile-

‘Yes,’ she said. ‘You do. You do, don’t you, Anna?’

He left... going for a drive... to clear his mind- or to get things for the livestock... the wolf was left in my room teeth showing and the dr-ip dripdripping with spit at my bare body chained down to the bed like he was just on a long enough chain to like my toes... I could feel the breath of her wet nose... ticking me - and I could not back down of she would have bitten down hard!

She began to wait for the clock to chime outside the door along with the coo-coo one overhead reminds her that just like that she was looking and sound crazy also. Two chimes. The chimes over and over and for days he was off to do another kill on some little girl and to drag her back to his hole in the basement or to light her up in front of me like before.

He lay propped up on the pillows, watching the door. She came in. he was wearing an apron over his naked body as I watch him chop this little bond girl up into a ham-salad for the wolf... with a hatchet, he kept her six-year-old skirts, and underwear as a keepsake - and the bones that were not licked up by the wolf named after the girl in the story was ground up in a woodchipper - and her head was crash in the wood splitter - the manway she died. On one hand, she floor-bucket of her young little sweet - red blood - saying drink it - it shows love.

‘I presume you want’ your tent-sucking-bull-sucking- medication,’ he said flighty. That was him though - calm and nice to oh my god - run! If you can... ‘Yes, please.’ He tried to smile at her ingratiatingly, and felt that shame again - she felt grotesque to himself, a stranger. ‘I have it,’ she said, ‘but first I have to clean up the mess in the comer - you see what you made me do - with fling your sh*t out of the bed pain - if you could walk you would like that up to clean it. The mess you made.

You’ll have to wait until I do that.’ Baby

Dick Baby Dick Baby DICK! THAT IS, YOU! DICK OF A BABY!

She lay in the bed with his legs spared eking in the head - reading what she has said - making shapes like broken branches under the misspelled text that he cannot say for... and cold sweat running her nose- wearing shabby clothing her face is down now smashed in the dirty pillow looking out now she sees him make a dive over the creek outside, as she lay and watched as she crossed her eyes over the room of how to get out- now back after letting all the pop in pee in the corner he and set the bucket down and throw Anna at wall- whole body to picked up the pieces of the sh*t bowl and took them out and came back and knelt by the bucket and fished in it and brought out a soapy rag and wrung it out, and began to wash the dried soup from the wall.

Done- she said after sitting there for hours- okay back to bed the fucked man said- she lays and watching yet again with him fiddling with her body- and at last she started to shiver hard and the shivering made the pain worse, but he could not help it. Once he turned around and saw her shivering and soaking the bedclothes in sweat, he knew that he was taking it to far- and the sweetness was starting to come out with him... so unlike what was shown before... and he favored her with such a cunning and knowing frown, that he could easily have killed her.

‘It’s dried on,’ she said, turning her face back into the corner. She gobbled them into his mouth, and when he looked up, he saw her lifting the creamy plastic floor-bucket toward her- lick never before.

It filled his field of vision like a falling moon over the water that was little ingrown in relation.

Gloomy-sh muddy water slopped over the circumference onto the quilt.

Nonetheless, instead of leaving, she walked over to the bed and fished in her apron pocket. She brought out not two capsules but three. ‘Now,’ he alleged sympathetically. she gawked at her, and his face was all eyes. ‘Shampoo them down with this,’ she said.

Her voice was still tender.

‘Do it fucker do it,’ she said. ‘I know you can dry- gulp them but thrilled to believe me- when I say I can make them come right back up o’er.

After all, it’s only rinse-water. It won’t hurt you.’ he tended over him like a monolith, the bucket slightly tipped. He could see the rag twisting slowly in its dark nadirs like a drowned thing; he could see a thin scum of soap on top.

Part of her groaned but none of him hesitated.

She drank quickly, washing the pills down ever so hard like, and the taste in her mouth was yuck and was as it had been on the existences when his mother made him brush his teeth with soap. Her tummy hooked, and he made a thick sound. ‘I love you,’ she said and kissed him on the cheek. She left, not looking back, carrying the floor bucket. ‘I wouldn’t throw them up, Anna. No more until seven -thirty tonight.’ he observed at her for a moment with a flat empty gaze, and then her face lit up and she beamed.

‘You won’t make me mad again, will you?’ ‘Nope,’ she whispered. Irritation - was there - as the moon outside was all the hope she had left in this world. What a bad idea! He lay back, tasting grit and plaster in his mouth and throat. Tasting soap as she was sucking it, I won’t throw up ... won’t throw up ... won’t throw up. You do and you’ll eat it and if you throw it up for that you’ll eat that too.

Her fantasized along with dreamed she was being eaten by him over the nights she was at rest not an at pace though. It was not a noble dream. There was a bang and he thought, Naturally, good, all right!

Discharge it! Shoot the damn thing!

Then she was awake seeing a gun at her temple for real, knowing it was only Steven, pulling the back door shut. And then she out as he injects the fuck sleep add to do just that... She had gone out to do the chores. she heard the faint moment of truth of his footsteps in the snow outside now. I love he said- and she just gives him the pink and stinks sing with her left hand- oh such a fooler... he went past the window- with the plow- I need if I could run I would be chased down with it v- ing at my hills wearing a parka with the hood up.

Her breath plumed out, then broke apart on her loving face. the way a sturdy countrywoman might carry a milk pail, slightly away from her body with no thought at all, so that none would spill. At last, the insistence of this thought began to disappear, as well as he realized he was going to slumber. she had held everything down long enough for the medication to begin its work.

He had won. This time... she was going to do it... he didn't look in at her, intent on her chores in the barn, he supposed. Nourishing the animals more than I, and I see this I get the same mile I sewer to olefin god I do it's the same pig slop, cleaning the stalls, maybe casting a few runes- he wouldn't put it past her. had to think about this bizarre situation while he was still capable of something like the worst thing, she was discovered, was that him- that didn't want to think of it even while he could, even when she knew he could not bring the situation to an end without thinking about it.

Her mind kept trying to push it away, like a child pushing away his meal even though he has been told he cannot leave the table until he has eaten it.

Yet, miserable or not and he was... she still wanted to live and love yet not either with is a creeper. Think about it, dammit! Jesus, are you already so cowed you can't even try? Nopper- but almost that cowed. Look now he said- staring out the window- The sky was darkening elaborate- sunset. Five-four, maybe seven o'clock lost in it she did not even know.

She could have gone back to sleep looking at all the stars and wishing on one for the hope of freedom, wanted to go back to sleep, but she balanced thought. she didn't want to think about it for the reason that, just living it was hard enough to bar with. she didn't want to reason with it or about it for the reason that, on every occasion, she did ill-disposed descriptions facilitated, the way she went outright, the way she made him think of idols and stones, and now the way the green metal floor-bucket had sped toward his face like a colliding moon. Thinking of those things would not change his state of affairs, was, in fact, worse than not thinking at all, but once he turned his mind to Steven and his position here in her house, the thoughts that came, thronging out all others.

Her heart would start to beat too fast and then drop off to a stall, mostly in horror, of what evil creepy thing was next there he was creeping- creeping- creeping in her room thinking of something to do to her body and mind... it was just a matter of creeper time. but then again partially in humiliation, too. she saw herself putting his lips to the rim of the bucket, saw the bleach- water with its film of soap aid the rag fluctuating in it, proverbial these things and yet in a swallowed anyway, never hesitant a bit of it.

I'll make you drink this- if you don't shout the fucking hole in your face!! she would never tell anyone about that, presumptuous she ever got out of this, and she imaginary she might try to propaganda about it to herself, but she would never be able to do that. Then an odd, angry thought occurred to him: She doesn't like the new book for the reason that he's too senseless to apprehend what it's up to.

Per capita time he had taken a year or two off to put pen to paper one of the other novels, what thought of as her 'grim' work with what was at first certainty and then hope and finally a species of grim anxiety- she had acknowledged a flood of protesting letters from these women, many of whom signed themselves 'your number-one fan.'

Surely... Plus while she might be crazy, was she so different in her appraisal of her work from the thousands & thousands of other individuals transversely the kingdom - 100% of the females whom could scarcely wait for each new 2,000 page's chapter in the tempestuous life of the foundling who has risen to say, 'I do' a peer of the monarchy? Nope, not at all.

They wanted Nevaeh, Nevaeh, and Nevaeh. she could write an outdated story of wouldn't matter to teen just old creeps like him that want at trill or feel loved.

Thoughtful about the things he had said was at least a new avenue, and feeling angry at her was improved than feeling scared of her, and so he went down it with some eagerness.

They would still want Nevaeh, Nevaeh, Nevaeh. It's hard to follow ... she's not interesting ... and the vulgarity is to freak'n much it this do it over or you'll eat the stapler! How did that feel going down on your earlobe...? ...?... He asked... Then he specked it on her forehead asking the same question - with a sinker... doing it. The thought wasn't just odd; under the circumstances, how she felt about Untitled was totally immaterial. The tone of these letters varied from puzzlement (that continually hurt the most, one way or another,) to admonishment, to outright anger, but the memo was always equal: It wasn't what I expected, it wasn't what I wanted. Please go back to Nevaeh.

I want to know what Nevaeh is doing. Too senseless...? No? Too set... Not just averse to change, but hostile to the very idea of change. he recollected her coming in here, withholding the capsules, coercing permission to read the manuscript of Untitled. she felt flushed and shamed with humiliation, and warming his face... now they were mixed with real fury. It had come into bud from a spark into a minuscule recessed blaze.

The anger sparked again. Anger at her obdurate density, anger that she could actually kidnap her, keep her captive, and the strength of her choice between drinking dirty rinse water from a floor-bucket or suffering the pain of his shattered legs- and ripped open girlie hole, and then, on top of all that, find the nerve to disapprove the best thing he had ever written.

Suddenly, she felt better again, felt even though he knew this uprising was petty and pitiful and meaningless... she had never shown anyone a manuscript before, & she had proofread it and then retyped the thing.

Never- ever not even the dead girl did that- Never. Why, he didn't even- for a moment her thoughts overdrawn off cleanly. she could hear the dim sound of a cow mooing and the wolf howling... laying in her bed... they made friends if you will. I going to get you out of here so she said. Why? Why- she didn't even make a copy until the second draft was done.

4 years of hard work now she has worked nonstop, she didn't like it, and she was cracked. Hitherto he had to see it... The manuscript copies of Untitled which was now in Steven ownership was, in fact, the only existing copy in the whole world. He had even burned his notes.

Nevaeh was what she liked; in the story yet the face was the one losing it like the girl in the storybooks did... funny no? Absolutely- The work, the pride in your work, the worth of the work itself... all those things faded away to the magic- hurricane lantern shades they really were when the pain got bad enough.

She remembered thinking: Turn the pages all by hand up and down the screen, of this 1,000 pages' book/manuscript into paper hats if you want, just ...delight... The annoyance, humiliation, and heat gushed again, developing the first dull re-joining throb in her legs and hips. She really was an idol, and if she didn't kill her, she might kill what was in him.

That she would do that to him- that she could when he had spent most of his adult life thinking the word writer was the most imperative description of himself, made her seem totally disgraceful, something she must see page.

Now she heard the eager yell of the wolf- he had thought she wouldn't mind, but he thought Nevaeh was a wonderful name for a wolf dog. He remembered how she had imitated it, the way her upper lip had creased toward her nose, how her cheeks had seemed to smooth, how she had truly- looked like a wolf for a moment:

Hooooowwwwwwww!!!!

From the barn- I see him standing, I hear the sound through the glass of the window - the voice strong. Making the sound of the wolf- imitating it. she lies on her backside now, and puts her arm over his eyes, and tried to hold onto the anger, for the reason, that the anger made her feel fearless. A brave lady might meditate. A coward couldn't. Here was a man who had been a doctor & he was sure of that also. Even so, the thought was hell- no, because he did not go work- much other than being a baby killer- or so I saw on his pc, which I hacked into looking around the house when I would get out without him knowing.

Why did she no longer practice her trade? That seemed obvious. Cutting babies heads off sick and having a sexual thing with them to twisted fuck! Not at all her gear was stowed right; heaps of it was rolling around in the holds. If it was understandable to her even through the fog of pain she has been existing in, it would surely have been obvious to her age group. She missed being a younger teen, and the kids she knew- and also acting... and life outside 4 walls.

The police and ambulance were called to the scene as you know yet there was no Anna to be found- she was going or so they thought it was talked on the tv, that she was dead - or that someone would report her to a hospital, or something along that line.

She had connected no one about all this just so he could keep he love for himself - in the guest-room, put IV drips in his arms and a sh*tload of dope in her body to make his Mr. Happy well-happy! he had dragged her from the wreckage of her train car and instead of calling and do what he should have done... He had told no one he was here, and if she hadn't by now, that meant she didn't mean too.

It's been 5 years now since that day- he a sideshow of all that went down. Sufficient so she had gone into what she called breathing depression at least once- and just plain depression over all this that was becoming her life- and books all she had to do in life now where this dumb book. 'She's my number-one fan,' he muttered and put an arm over his eyes like a gay fag.

Its eyes, It's the face in the night it the feeling of cold and hot. It's creeper

Steven in my bed... with the throbbing in his legs began to cycle up. No. No, Nooooo. she pressed the felon of her elbow more tightly against her eyes. From the barn, he could hear spaced thudding noises of another dead girl, that he was making into mulch. Unbearable the sight, and smells I would get from this man- that was not human to me at all.

To tell what they were, of course, but in his imagination- I love it as I love you, he said to her lying next to her in her bed without her doing anything about it. she could see him pushing bales of hay out of the loft with the heel of his boot and yet cover over my young girl bodies that he had dragged in by the hair, could see them tumbling to the barn floor the roll like dead logs.

Chop- Chop- Chop! It is all I here for a day! The killer Steven was back- why not me? Then, cutting cleanly through this like a sharp knife, came her agitated as he was run to her bed for his playtime with her... even the dog was getting fucked over, almost- screaming voice: I heard them all get fucked and killed in the barn-like all under 14 years of age too- you like it don't say you don't- he said to me as he slit on open with his knife in- front of my dead her head feels on my chest- I freaked- in horror. The little hand now at my lower hips the body bleeding out down my skin... I would not have thought the eyes of death looked like this.

Name- Steven

('So intense!')

My name is Steven King.

He was on the stand for some of these, yet he got away with all the Killing's there was not anything I could do- but lay in my bed. All the weeks he was off at court in other counties. I could do nothing but writing this story!!

...And I did!!!

F*ck- YOU! MOTHER F*CKING C*CK SUCKER, I SAID!

'Come on,' She muttered, her arm over his eyes this was the way he thought best, the way he imagined best. He could see the courtroom in Bedford, could see Steven on the stand, not wearing jeans now but a rusty florid-black dress and an awful hat. he could see that the courtroom was crowded with spectators, that the judge, was bald and wearing glasses. The judge had a white beard. There was a birthmark beneath the white mustache. The white mustache covered most of it nonetheless not quite all.

Steven-

'I'm afraid this is going to take a while, Anna.' He rubbed, what I did not get off the wall higher the stain slowly disappeared from the plaster but she went on dipping the cloth, wringing it out, cleaning, and then repeating the whole process. She could not see his face at this point, but the idea- the certainty... of that- she had gone absolute and might go on scrubbing the wall for hours tormented her. He read he tells of who- 'Can you imagine!' That spirit of ... of fan-love ... I was all there's... ha- you have no idea who loves me... he said on the sand mocking them... know he would be going back to her. At last- just before the clock chimed once, marking two-thirty- the days started blurring.

Then her eyes drifted to the corner, where no sign of the splashed soup remained her of... of what was lost and what was gained... cast their eternal damaged shadows. She came back and stood for just a moment inside the doorway, observing his wet face with that same mixture of sternness and maternal love through this all. Living alone as I do is no excuse whatever for stamping the job.

My mother had a saying, Anna, and I live by it- don't f*ck up of your dead to me. Bath time- 'Now I must rinse you,' he said, 'or else the soap will leave a dull spot. I must do it all; I must make the whole shebang right. It hurts he'd blubbered out. It hurt her legs and it hurt her heart- yet it the pain he loves seeing the most other than the twisted thoughts of the love she not ever going to give him. 'all nasty, never neat,' she used to say.' 'Please,' she groaned strongly. 'Please, the pain, I'm dying I have to be.' 'Nope.

You're not dying- not all the way yet.' 'I'll shriek,' she said with power behind it, beginning to cry harder. It's nobody's fault but your own you see this is what I have to do with you to understand me and what you don't understand- understand? 'I won't be able to walk- you can help it- but you'll never- ever.' 'scream,' she said.

‘Remember that you made that mess- now you paid for it with your hip- humbled with the bat. Not me. she watched as she dipped and wrung and rinsed, dipped and squeezed and washed. One way or another she was able to keep from screaming.

She’s going to go out and I’ll hear her pouring the rinse- water down the sink and maybe she won’t come back for hours for the reason that maybe she’s not done punishing me hitherto. At last, just as the clock in what he assumed was the parlor began to strike three, she rose and picked up the bucket. She’s going to go out now. ‘She’s always writing things down, not making things up to add to how she was going to die yet the story would live on as her memories.’ Her thoughts- he said- okay- Now I just rinse.

Also- she thought about how her legs and arm have to be booked at least 10 times now by his hands over those 5 years to keep her from running, he whispered, but could get no further - with the ditty talk with her- it was like she was almost falling for him- times before.

The bailiff asked her to state her name, and over and over again- she said- it was Steven that did this to me in the text- so someone would read- but she said about all the kids too- yet would the story get out- if she could find a way to hide the pieces of the lines in-between; she sat there with her fibrous solid gloomy body displacing air and said her name over and over again but no more than that.

Still trying to imagine why the ex- Dr. who had taken her prisoner might have once been, put on the stand even if she did not make it the story would say it all, Anna drafted and then drifted off to sleep. Saving a copy- and stashing a copy and hiding in the pipe of the bedpost rolling.

30 relief swept through her- seeing a plan goes over head- and some trains, so great he felt like crying. Something had happened when he was asleep, someone had come, or perhaps Steven had had a change of heart or mind- saying when should I let you go- I, not your type you need someone that loves you more then I if that is possible- you need to have your life back- I was in awe.

It didn't matter... that would change his mood I was sure of that- yet that side of this man I liked... he was not all bad. He had gone to sleep in the monster- man's house and had awakened in the hospital to get the things he needs- being a Dr. there were no questions asked as for why- he was a Dr. like Mengele- an angel of death- running a test on girls like me. You can hear all bout he works and struggles here in the untitled book- that I hope someone will see 'You ... you ... you dirty- C*NT!' 'YOU DIDN'T'- HE SAID. Crawling from room to room- when he was out- she got out- she would be more than happy to crawl to the telephone, no matter how much it might hurt. He would crawl to the telephone over broken glass if that was what it took. And it was a heart attack ... but not the right kind. She came toward him, not quite staggering but rolling, the way a sailor will when he's just gotten off his ship at the end of a long voyage. Run- Run- Run she could not do that, yet she tried- Hell- she tried to psychiatrist away from her, but there was no place to go. There was only the headboard, and behind that, the wall.

'You where moaning,' she said. There was glass water- pitcher on the table. She seized it up and brandished it at her. Coldwater splashed his face. An ice-cube landed beside his left ear and slid down the pillow into the hollow of his shoulder. 'I had a bad dream.' 'What was it about?' That was P*SSIE- she falls asleep... he walked out.

The door at the far end of the huge ward opened and it came to Steven - only she was dressed in a long-aproned dress, and there was a cap on her head; she was dressed as Nevaeh in Nevaeh's Love parts, of the story.

Nevertheless, surely, they would not have put her in a long ward like this? It was a big hangar to do this right! Identical rows of men (with identical bottles of nutrients hung from identical IV trays beside their beds) filled the place. she sat up and saw that the men themselves were also identical- they were all him. Then, distantly, he heard the clock chime and understood that it was chiming from beyond the wall of sleep. This was a dream she thought- yet did I get it down- was it a dream?

Sadness replaced the relief.

Over one arm she held the book copy to her chest- all the same, nothing changed. There was a cloth over the contents as she slid the scrip back down in it holding the place. On the other side was all the hidden pills she did not take BUSTED Here - flung it open one night into the face of the first sleeping Anna-. Anna's face had turned a ghastly white as soon as knocking over the stand - fear jerked her out of the dream and into the bedroom brawl, where Steven was losing his mind... saying this is where my money on you goes? Yes- standing over her face as the storm crashes.

He was holding the fat hardback of Nevaeh's in one hand. How could you call yourself in the story- and say it was me how could you! She suggested he was about three-quarters of the way through not to stop that he was not the one that did it. Yes- she came awake at once; jerking up on her elbows. (she knew better- yet did not care.)

The first thing which was not the truth that popped into her head was what he replied - what she could have said- and that was a name change in the text- yet she wants people to know if they read this story. She came in late the following morning, her face the color of ashes.

She had been dozing, she's had a heart attack it felt like with happening over and over with no rest, she thought, and there was a moment's alarm which was directly replaced by joy. Your Just a name in a story- you can have this one... and no one will ever know. Let her have one - you killed her to let her have something to be remembered by! A big one those he said- I didn't want it!

A f*cking chest-buster! He said if I get busted for this- and I did I find you- and I'll kill you! 'No!' She reached the side of the bed, bumped it, wavered and for a moment seemed on the verge of falling on top of her. Then she just stood there, him- looking down at her feeling her out- like her paperwhite face looking up, the cords on her neck standing out, one manner pulsing in the center of her forehead, and one down lower.

Her hands snapped open, hooking his t-shirt- shut into solid, then snapped open again when she was injected with strong drugs.

WAKE THE F*CK UP! He yelled... 'What- don't- she said-' suddenly he did- he pulled her out of bed by her broken legs- and the bitch lapping started over the dead girl in the story, and his entire midsection first seemed to turn hollow and then to entirely disappear as the drugs took over, and he had free well of 4- play. she remembered hem that bookmark had been last night, three-quarters of the way through. Not to freak like this that it would be fine at the end- She had finished it- right- that she an actress she would know what to do, and what not to do. She knew all there was to know. You can read the story for your self- all of them- like I did- all 1,0000 words. It's good... I know you would love me for saying that ass holes. JUST F*CKING DO IT!!

'She can't be dead IN THE STORY FOR SHE IS HERE TOO!' Steven shrieked at her. Her hands snapped open and hooked closer to his face than ever before in fear.'

Marcella- in Neveah- CANNOT BE DEAD!'

‘Steven- Steven, please- cool it- dude.’ In his mind so-0 bright! she saw her bringing the pitcher down into his face, she saw herself dying of a fractured skull or OD-ing or something sick like that or too much f*cking!

And, a massive cerebral outflow in a freezing flood of ice-water while goose-pimples formed on her arms. Or maybe he was peeing on her in her dreams I’ll go with that one - it went into the story anyways she said. She wanted to do it; there was no question of that- get out and read this thing to someone that would get the story of the worst horror of her life, and also to make some money for of it too why not she a little cracked now too.

At the very last moment, she turned away from him- flung the water-pitcher at the door instead, where it shattered as the soup-bowl had the other day. he looked back at her and she brushed her hair away from her face- two hard little spots of red came up- had now bloomed the white- with the backs of her hands.

‘Dirty Girlie- wh*re!’ He panted.

‘Oh- you dirty Girlie, how could you!’ what is wrong with saying what really happened that what you wanted no? she spoke swiftly, immediately, eyes flashing, engrossed on her face - she was positive in that moment, that his life might depend on what she was able to say in the next 30th seconds. ‘Steven, childbirth can have died in stories like this- with some based on you as the killer.

U- U- You’ve used my name!! he said...

Nevaeh gave her life for her husband and her best friend and her child. The spirit of Nevaeh will always be there,’ ‘I don’t want her spirit- I f*cking want- here!’

I'm right here she said- confused she not real- she screamed, you are a f*cking retard!

hooking her fingers into claws and running them down his face until he guessed out blood, both shaking as if she would tear his eyes out. 'I want her! You killed her! You murdered her!' Her hands disintegrate shut into fists o'er and he drove them down like pistons, one on either side of his head. he screamed. kill her! - Her legs flared, and he cried out. They pressed deep into the pillow, and she rebounded like a ragdoll. 'I didn't kill this girl- she not real! IDIOT!!!!' She immobilized, staring at him with that narrow black expression that looks of the crevasse.

'Unquestionably not SO-0, 'she said, excessively mocking. 'Then if you didn't, Anna - who did?' 'No one,' She said more quietly. WHO DID- HE SAID ALL P*SSIE- 'She just died LIKE THE OTHER GIRLS AND BECAME THE SPIRIT AS AN ANGEL ALSO?' Ultimately, She - knew this to be the truth. If Nevaeh had been a real person, she knew he might very well have been called upon 'to aid the police in their explorations', as the euphemism went. After all, she had a motive - he had hated her FOR IT.

Ever since the third book, he had hated her. It had been called Nevaeh's Hobbies to live on. In- it Nevaeh spent a cheerful, that we loved anyways not that she was a real girl like me - is that so he said then if I kill you-you should haunt me then too just like the story? Your nuts she said to him - what's taking you so long just do it you sick vain f*cking basted. Depth may have been the outcome - but he hadn't. After a while, in spite of his having grown to admire her, Nevaeh's death had been something of a surprise to him.

'You must think I was born yesterday,' he said. Her lips drew back from her teeth.' she had remained true enough to himself for art to imitate life however feebly - I didn't think you even need to add about the girl Marcella at all, why not- the part of it now- to the very end of Nevaeh's adventures she looks over this one that what I said, what's wrong with that? Like she is me now - as here... (Nevaeh)

She had died a most unexpected death. His cheerful capering had in no way changed the circumstance.

'You fib,' Steven whispered. 'I thought you were good, but you are not noble.'

You are just a lying old c*ck sucking bitch- that I use as a whore. he overturned the table by the bed. The one shallow drawers spilled out. I could kill you- now and not even think about it you're not here- you're not here...are you.' I just played a part- so-o no... if you want to think that, she said- lost in his crazies. 'She fell away, that's all. He was dulling all over her body- and run back and forth all around the creaky wood floor, from time to time that materializes. It was like life when someone just... it works for him any longer without this fiction-sh girl.'

His wristwatch and he picked her up by her feet saying empty your pockets- for she would not he was fearing that she was hiding more- about her plans- to do whatever- hanged upside down now the pocket change spilled out- yet there was nothing found- only Anna knew where that was- and her maybe angel- that she wrote about in the night and day and year after year.

I said- the writer is like God that we play to the people in a story - this just pissed him off more blasphemy he said- I like her and Marcel Ray Duriez made them up, just like God made us up and no one can change what they do there the gods for the story- no you why did you do it then if this is what you want? The gun was at my head for that one... for I can do it that is why- and driving me crazy! And then it's not as real to me... she is U- you! Not me- I just don't have that knack- He explained, all right, okay she said to put it down, there was far there- as the gun when off yet it was empty... at her eardrum. He giggled saying I see you pissed your pants...

Part: 2

He stood there, and Anna lay in his bed, with 'round marks in the pillow beside his ears and looked at her. He could hear the water which had been in the pitcher dripping on the floor, and it came to him that he could commit murder.

If she hadn't thrown the pitcher, he would have devastated it on the floor himself, and tried to shove one of the broken pieces of glass into her throat while she stood there, as inert as a nightstand. She went blank then... to all this- She straightened up with her hands hanging limply by her sides, looking at the wall where an old photograph of his girl's photos was hung- even the one he did in and eat out as he called it.

Explain about this god that you have become, all right, okay, she said- but as far as Nevaeh goes I'll tell you one thing to you I have the power to do as I want with her, for the write said... you know him- you're the dirty bastard here doing this to a story that quite frankly never used to do that with- him- Marcel Ray Duriez could sue you, we- I see his ass in court then won't I... I'll tell you that God just happens to have a couple of broken legs and God just happens to be in My house eating My food and ... and ... that night- I got out of bed he was not noting that I was getting stronger I hobbled to the door and picked the lock, and in the kitchen, there was a door at the far end, I went to it yet it was looked from the outside and inside, two-way key- I get the big knife- as I hear his car make its way up the lane.

I did even have the door to my room shut he was in the home- looking in at me saying what have you be doing- and I just said

MASTURBATING! Okay, he said- wow- do I stay or go? Did you want to finish up?

She came back a little at a time, and the anger, at least, was gone. She looked down at him sadly. she looked down into the spill from the drawer, but there was only the change, a pen, a comb, and her watch. More important, no knife was found as he turns down the bed.

Nothing unlike always he said to her... little did he know- that she was plain to kill him in his sleep if she could- just to get out- or not kill him at all if she could get out without him knowing about it. This was a question which had occurred to her from now and then was, strictly theoretical, of course like Academia, only now it wasn't, and he had the answer. 'I think I better go now. I don't think I better be around you for a while. I don't think it's ... clever.' 'It doesn't matter. A place I know- is where I want to go, she was talking to her own mind here like it would talk back to here.

If I stay here, I'll do something unwise - and end this all. I need to think... yet my thinking is muddy- I know this... Goodbye- he will be saying to this girl here> Anna.' She strode across the room. 'Will you be back to give me my medication? - she giggles insanely...' she asked, alarmed that she was talking to herself, and answering it too.

Ah ah- ahh-ha She grasped the doorknob and pulled the door shut without answering the obverse he was out there too. Yet she was going to make the run for it- naked as the day she was born into the riches of having a gold spoon up her ass, and then now into this hell where she is getting f*cked with it, For the first time she made the key she made work it rattled some in the lock and she got away.

The hunt was on for the star- he loved- and hated all at the same time... he had to get her back... or she would squall this story. 190 days of freedom... in the woods living off the land... she was found naked and week- he drugs her back to his house by her hear... she was half dead... she was too crazy at this point to get help... or get that she was not locked up. And when she was free- she was alone, she did not want to be after 6 years of that you would do the same? Just look at her slit wrists and you can see the story...

Thump- Thump- Thump- tugging- in the brush- she heard her footsteps coming for her as she runs through the woods now- able to do so... yet in his hand he took the bass ball bat, and mashed both of her small feet yet again- the bat facing downward both hands on the hand perpendicular to the ground Uh- Uh- screams in eked in the hells like haunting ghosts of the past. the motor sound began to go away. It dwindled to a snore and then to a drone and was finally gone. An engine cranked over and then started up.

The low, crunching squeal of tires turning on packed snow. Alone in Steven's house, locked in this room.

Locked in this bed. In the room- In the ROOM- In the f*cking RoOM!

Rocking- Rocking- sitting in the bed- nuts in my mouth and head.

Hahahahahahahahahahaha! She said- This is nice- no a f*cking sh*t c*ck damn -it. She was screaming bad words- and not giving an sh*t! Anna had gone a little crazy- I hear the same steps now going off down the hall; I sit there passive- staring now at the typewriter that is mocking with its F and U being said. she lay in bed looking at the ceiling, his throat dry and his heart beating fast. throat dry from all the come going down that he had headed back for the 190 days.

And all the drugs too. she grimaced as she cried out angrily- words he couldn't understand, and something else fell and shattered. A door slammed. Now After a while the parlor clock chimed noon, and midnight and she was now in her 20's.

Year seven- she had dozed, but never really slept. The chiming of the clock woke him each time, the hour came around, and go and past fast and slow.

She knew just how long since of the last go about; he had been carrying in his love not being his love- at the time of the crash he was in love with the girl- yet not the real girl. He had not been able to reach down hand have her sign it yet- the book that is- he has all his books with her name on it now- every time the clock- he sees looks at those books thinking how are these books that go me here?

She had spent much of the night alternately dozing and waking in a cold sweat, sure - she was dying. When she came back by noon of Twenty-Four- has passed, she realizes that as bad as the pain in his legs and pelvis was, something else was also making her hurt. It was also the finger f*cking- too. there where ten groups of five and one extra. The little groups, neat at first, grew increasingly jagged as his hands began to tremble. He didn't believe he had missed a single hour. It was the withdrawal of the toys in and out also that he shoved in her hard-core style.

She needed the pills in more ways than one. she thought of trying to get sit up in the bed, but the thought of the thump and the drop and the supplementary growth of pain continually deterred her. she could imagine all too well 'So bright and there!' After a while, he began to feel hunger and thirst even through the pain. How it would feel... stricken he made a mark on his arm - four perpendicular marks, and then an oblique slash to seal the quintet. It became something like a duel. I am a Pretty Thirstily... she said- oh just drink your own piss... he said. Not happy with yet another long type up for a new chapter of the never-ending Nevaeh storyline. I am becoming Marcel Ray Duriez- Anna said! I will soon have done as many words and tossed half! f*ck that in the ass with a 2 x 4! She said- I like it way to rewrite it- for I said so- he said. I SAY SO...! After a while, she began to hope She was dying.

Anything to be out of it.

Part: 3

This was not the first time this man- The offer of the town- Fudd- was on his ass he was the case from day one- (with his touch-ie feelie wife- trying to make him during work hours.) the stopped by the home- and drove by in the night my hands waving out yet he never saw- he ran in on me- injecting me with sleep aids, and he put me in the addict nude- the places man was on one end of the wall with a doorway and I on the other ha-ha we giggle 4-times- side steeping in an out the door sing what we were going to do or go.

I'm up here I called out fast- he was climbing the steps- I could see his face- and the rain after him- and hit him over the head with a Gibbons guitar carking his skill, sprinters spinners-

The light bulb- over the head crack in the swing- will he shoving the splinted nick down and though his nick as he runs freaking out. I tried even to hop a haling ass train one night when I got out, yet my legs could not keep up... and there was Steven coming at me with the snowplow - and he ran my legs over with the 1953 farm tuck.

Back up and going over yet again.

I saw Steven now chasing this man down as he was going to his car Steven got on the farm tracker- and ran his head over with the spinning blade! With the evil glimmer in his eyes as he looked at me with my mouth hugging open looking out the addict window- as I was coming to it. His head spread like a watermelon that was Julie-ie in your mouth- it was that wet- and gushy.

Anna closed her eyes to all this think I am next, swaying unsteadily on his twisted, aching legs, waiting to see if he was going to get mad or cry. She was suddenly very scared... Steven's feet as she approached him. Thud-slush, thud-slush, thud-slush. Her hair hung around her face. Her eyes where dull. 'Here.' She threw the pills at him. Her hands were also covered with mixed streaks of goo. Red stuff, brown stuff, sticky white stuff. Anna had no idea what it was. He wasn't sure he wanted to know. The pills hit his chest and bounced into his lap.

She turned to go.

Thud-slush, thud-slush, thud-slush. Hump and bump! 'No, Anna. 'She moved to the door and then turned, looking at him with that stony face. Only her eyes, those tarnished dimes, were fully alive under the shelf of her brow.

I would like to leave you with. You may think you can fool me, or trick me; I know I look slow and stupid. But I am not stupid, Anna, and I am not slow.' Anna thought the extremity of his terror might kill him. But she did not want the freedom any longer, she wanted him... or so that what she said for the next 10 years... (Anna placed a book on Marcella's grave. Saying you did it hun - you did it.)

New York- (20 years) her real story was pushed- she got away after Steven passed for a gun blast to his head and now that he was depriving me of his company- it was time to hobble out the door and start my life- I never acted again- I never had a family... yet- I had a story that you would not even believe if I wrote it down for you- yet here it is... she said to her agent. This was to make a few bucks sick- no? it was the worst horror of my life! I still think about him- as more than someone that was evil. My life now well never be normal- I don't sleep well- I don't trust- and I only famous for this story now. He took all that away from me- yet I am a better person now for it- said, Anna!

Maddie text pic from a room at the party, it's a video, and lots of photos uploaded online! Look Jenny is getting it! Funny Ray is with shy, Busted!!! You can tell its Ray his dickie hanging out that is uncut, and the look on Shy's face is priceless. Jenny is about to swallow a boy's stuff, hand gripping hard on him to squirting in her mouth, and the other girl we know so-o well has her mouth open tongue out for him too in a teen party orgy, all sucking, all f*cking hard, then change partners, yet that the teen way!!! Now my sis is doing as they at those parts with him.

Now- Like you know after all that, and all the c*ming, and all the photos, showing it all, and the girls that are being sluts, and thing, I am still the girl that looks better, and would not go there, yet, I can live with not being that popular.

Karly- Out!

Nevaeh

Book: 34

Naddalin

Preface:

Once upon a time- there was a place called:

‘Rockville,’ Or a farm- in some small town- known as: ‘The Land of Many Steeple’s...’ and as asked of me- she wanted me to keep the name of her town anonymous and them to all of this in this epic story do. She- I- we, still feels that all of them in these small towns, that you may know, still do not deserve the honors of being remembered in the story for their names, over the fact of what she - I and we went through... Or the girl in Pittsburgh to see with her you saw life on the other end of things, didn’t you?

Thus, for this little girl’s- Bible- is no fairytale...

Yet, it is meant to be just that too...

Up till now, was it all that you thought it would be?

Like we all feel the names of towns don't matter, the life of, girls like you and I do... yet they were all places in Pennsylvania... all but one ends up here.'

So far been there was nothing like this place at all... In a scene, we were all in a place where did not belong, at one time or another, at least it's less than one minute or so away from one... world to the other, like she and I, and them too, and now you too to can get there- if you fall- that is... if you fall like us, you will see this world phenomena world of unbelievable and dark hope.

~Haven~

'To the girl that has my heart- let's be flawed together it's CUTE! Like- we may not be perfect but together we are perfect- perfect.'

Haven- this is where I say my story is over, or so-o, I thought-yet- I have one last thing to say... as who I was... and why I ended up the way I did, yes, I am older now... wiser, and look back on my young days, and think and think... I remember the girl next door, us both holding hands tightly, us both 5 holding hands, I recall her saying- and it was so sweet and cute,' No ma' his... MY BOYFRIEND!'

I remember this, and what could have been... yet this hex was, or she was what stopped it- I knew it and this is why- I end up the way I did and also, she... I know that she is living life... and had the family, yet was she happy I never know- the truth... was she really in love with the boy, or me, still... that is the question? I evoke, she was wearing a skirt that was denim, she long brown hair, and green eyes, and a plaid bandanna- I wonder if she ever has had those moments where she sat back and said, I remember that boy back then and think of what could have been, she too kept apart from me over that one person's mouth...

I needed out so, I ended it...

I did not want to think of the maybes anymore...

Or, the this and that's...

~Haven~

(2020)

Karly- Baby to baby- Grayson- She tells him' uh, love, no one's ever going to hurt you, love, I'm going to give you all of my love, nobody matters like you' She tells him- your life isn't going to be anything like my life. You're going to grow and have a good life; I'm going to do what I've got to do.' So, Rock- a- bye baby, Rock- a- bye, I'm going to rock you.

Rock- a- bye baby, don't you cry. For all the single mums out there going through frustration.
By- Clean Bandit, this song was made for me at this point in my life...

Part: 1

It is too odd, I said to be here now, all the same teachers at a new school at Skoufyceol - yet with me...and not her... why me, is the question that I asked?

Why...?

Why- am I the next? Why was the hex passed do to me, like all in my family before me?

Why- was I chosen, like the I to have fallen too this...

Why- I must do more than she ever could!

The only girl to ever come this far has passed... now should I do the same?

Karly was my Mother... so why me... that what we girls have been asking for years now...

Why US...?

Why?

Without doing what I must, I feel cheated.

You may know some, old friends and foes along the way, we all did how do you trust?

They were flawlessly standard, Mr. and Mr.'s. Doll girl... there where 4 of them, all that you would call typical.

A closed-off drive out of sight... is what you see looking into their homestead, and back behind there cover of darkness and tree cover weeping tree is the old-looking home, the same home that, Nevaeh and all my past relatives lived in.

Though they were out there they were also respectful to all, that passed even if year back there were looked down on by the town and the lands... they were in. Yet, even still where easy - to say, thank you very much, to all... even though... their word of them was not the greatest, for your time.

All those girls did what they could.

Why should I be any different?

They were four last individuals to have this placed down on them like me.

You would imagine being complicated in whatsoever bizarre or mysterious, and it's like, just odd because they just did not grasp with such gobbledygook, to see what I do.

Mr.'s. Natalie was tinny, and a fair-haired short one, and my mother you have already met... yet is now 50 or so-o.

Looking around you see that there are still may orchards countless fences and the long drive with the lanterns... nothing here really changes.

Anyways, like- I was saying Mr. Natalie (my daddy) was their administrator of a well-founded named horning, which completed military training, and he got that through my grandmother Kristen, taking over her spot.

Just another day an argument had broken out over breakfast at number four... of us. Not for their first time, this is a day in and day out.

Um- yeah- we live on Privet Drive; sorry- I's bounce around- it's my ADHD- so keep up.

Dad- I could hear loud, hooting noise from her Naddalin's room.

Naddalin - was a highly unusual girl in many ways, yet all the kids she now could sum it up in one word or two.

- Gay- S*UT- or worlds meaning slow in the noggin... yet, that was still coming for Mazel mouth... all those years back, and here offspring of freaks.

For one thing, she hated there winter holidays- like more than any other time of year, it was lonely, yet that is not a new thing with her type- in this family.

For another, she really wanted to do her study but was forced to do it in secret, in there dead of night.

The studying of wizardry... to fight the hex that was placed down on us.

Naddalin- named for the one that came before me, smashing their names together.

Naddalie- and Lynn you get- it... not the same spelling- anyways... yeah...

(Moving forward)

Me- So, it was midnight, and I was lying on my stomach in bed. (reading a book on the History of Magic... yet like the ones before more, I'm not able to do such- you know to read to my leave.)

IT IS TIME TO FIGHT EVIL WITH EVIL!

I have all my blankets drawn right over my head like a tent, making a fort. So, there is a large leather-bound book propped open against my pillow, as my head is at rest looking over it. I have a big flashlight, on one hand, of mine, and the other hand is holding the page, that I am on, that being 665 on the left.

I FEAR THIS STUFF, YET I AM SICK OF BEING SICK AND TIRED.

I- Naddalin, moved the tip of MY finger to the eagle feather quill down the page, I'd used as a bookmark.

I am frowning as she looked for something that would help her write this essay, I needed to do for school, yet could not keep interested... yet, with me, that is- what I have- or so they say. Fight this- all the is what I have- not that- this...!

I am thinking that- Witch Burning in there Fourteenth Century Was Completely Pointless if so, I would be there now... – AH- I Am like- discussing this all in my head- like a crazy girl- I AM NOT CRAZY.

(Back)

My dad is a big, beefy man with hardly any neck... although he did have a very large mustache, there was one there not like Hitler yet small, and before you say it, like- I know whom she is... '...Not just some bad guy.'

(The Natalie's, had a small girl called Dariez and there was no finer girl anywhere, and they had her. They did not deliberate they may tolerate it if anyone found out about theirs, and then her, see she was the one that was- BAD. Sh*t- The Natalie's had their whole enchilada- all everything- and anything they sought after, nonetheless, they also had a hush-hush dark secret and a darker past, and her being most of it, yet she was here- and they had to put up with her no? Even if we tried to kill her...

In addition to that, their highest terror was that an important or unimportant of this girl that would find them all out, and the hex that they wanted to let go of. Yet we were never- ever let that happen.)

NEVER...!

FOR THEY ALL HAVE- AND HAD- BEEN SO- O F*CKING PERFECT.

In a wondrous way... I think if this is all said and down, yet I feel that- why not, it's more, my Grandmother, to do this... here wises... on this family.

(Mr.'s. Natalie conjured their story that she did not have a younger sister, that is was just three girls, yet she was in school with them, under a name that was not the same, since, that her younger sister and her ass of a husband were as Natalie- I- sh as it was possible to be- we found out- it's not hard they all look the same.)

US- Um- like them as queen as if they were their modern family from the 1950s, TV show was not their thing. The Natalie's trembled to with their own minds, that their neighbors would say if there all their kids like - s arrived in their motorway, after school with here being seen. Yet we all no... we all do...

Ah- the secret shame... he- he- he.

The Natalie's knew that their kids had a small a little girl, with them, too, her- Naddalin, the descent from them... but they had never- ever even seen her, so they say, yet she is there.

This girl was another respectable real for keeping their past away; they did not want her mixing with any of the other children, around her, that was so creepy and odd- to them and their dick-sh ways, yet what had to be done.

Mr.'s. - was Mr.'s. Natalie's sister, but they hadn't met for many ages; in fact, a long story covering up here... so, who are they... hint- hint... When Mr. and Mr.'s. Natalie woke up on their dull, gray after a night of romping, Natalie gossiped away happily as she wrestled an ear-piercing Alisha into her high chair. And the tiny child, and giggled Mr. Natalie as he left their adorable house next to the railroad tracks and many hayfields, with its oh- so nice fencing for years.

(Day's pass)

Thursday our story starts, there was nothing about their overcast heaven's outdoor to propose, that outlandish and mysterious things would soon be happening all over their queendom. Mr. Natalie buzzed as she picked out his most uninteresting tie for work, and Mr.'s.

The plume paused at their top of a Pa. paragraph.

Naddalin pushed her long hair off the bridge of her nose, as she sat... there, contacts covering her real eye color, and true Identification- the light blue.

(Back to that night)

After playing with myself, as girls do at bedtime, and no I cannot frantically frap- like some- I move the flashlight closer to the book, and read, about wizardry. I was loving this more and more... the darkness was holding me- like no- another thing could. With all my ADHD- E- itch- NESS- and all!

Non- magic people... would not get me I thought...

Me- were particularly afraid of magic in medieval times, more now than then... I think yet I don't have a mind to do that do I? ...Yeah- but not very good at recognizing it... I see this with them- and they. Like this one time on a rare occasion I's think I go a catch a real witch- for another family, she was one of them, that trashed me out. Burning or killing me had no effect whatsoever... I knew what I was going to do either fall to them, or fall like her, or overcome it all.

The witch would perform a basic

Flame-Freezing Charm, on Nevaeh and Karly, thinks they were doing the same thing over and over in a day week or even years at a time- I have read this- yet they don't want to hear it... it in the past they say... said no? Déjà vu is what it called, and then pretend to shriek with pain while enjoying a gentle, tickling sensation... lost in time in space you feel, that sounds sick.

Naddalin put her quill behind her ear, and reached underneath her pillow for her ink bottle and a roll of parchment, and very carefully her unscrewed their ink bottle, dipped her quill into it... making notes... about being a wizard, and how to overcome this all.

I began to write, pausing every... that was the now out... and then to listen... my inner voices... that talk to me. Because, if any of their townspeople would hear, all hell would break out.

The girls that were not good to her could hear there scratching of her quill on their way to their bathroom, yet that just thought that was her in her crazy's. Doing what she does and that being weird.

I would find myself locked in their room under their winding steepes for the rest of their summer, which became my room, to get away from them.

The family is on that, privet drive, love summer off, yet not Naddalin- she never- ever enjoyed her summer breaks either, over the face she was let in her room under the stars to wither away, and decay in the mind.

Uncle Read, Aunt Jennath, and their girl, Dariez, where Naddalin's only living relatives.

They were nonmagical people, and they had a very medieval attitude toward magic, my sisters, also. Naddalin's dead parents, who had been a witch and wizard themselves, were never- ever mentioned under their roof.

For years, Aunt Jennath and Uncle Read had hoped, that if they kept Naddalin as held back as possible, they would be able to squeeze their magic out of her. To their fury, they had not been unproductive.

All these days they lived in terror of anyone finding out, that Naddalin had spent most of their last two years at the school for girls Skoufyceol of Witchcraft and Wizardry, yet that is where they sent here... one she bagged, two to go on like there was no known issue.

(The most they could do, however, was to lock away at Naddalin's and her spellbooks also, the wand too, could Sophia, and broomstick at the start of their summer break, and forbid her to talk to their neighbors, for she was slow in the head, after all, it was a boarding school for the low life... like the pig she is... or was it...? We wondered...)

This departure from her spell books, she had been a real problem to them- 'she'- being Naddalin, because her teachers had given her a- lot of holiday work, and at her old school at what was oak view, the name changed back after the towns got their identities back, she did not have to do anything for they felt, that she was a waste, and a waste of time, besides could not be taught.

One of their essays, a particularly nasty one about shrinking potions, was for Naddalin's least favorite teacher, Professor Gonzales, who would be delighted to have an excuse to give Naddalin detention for a month.

Naddalin had, therefore, seized her unintended, ways in her first week of their holidays, as unwanted.

While Uncle Read, Aunt Jennath, and Dariez had gone out into their Sophia garden to admire the snowfall, Uncle Read's new company car as well, (in very loud voices, so that the rest of their street would notice a new 2065 Toyota Prius in the driveway,) Naddalin had crept downstairs, picked the lock on their cupboard under their stairs, grabbed some of the other girl's books, to learn there stupid, and hidden them in her small bedroom under the stars. Yet even after all these years noting in a small town will ever change... just like minds.

If she did not leave spots of ink on their sheets, maybe that would never know... even so, they thought she was nuts, there need- ed never to know that she was studying magic by night, and her smarts by day, 'till dusk.

In addition, the third time this week, she was busted doing more than just studying in her little room, by the girls, that would take photos of her and put them online!

We sat a- crossed, from all of them, at the table, while they were saying it cannot control your- ways- with this junk, it must go!

None of them noticed large, tawny flying horses flutter past the window only me yet like them before me I have the gift of only being able to the worlds of good and evil, genetically altered, they are... coming to see me... like all that have fallen... I can talk to them too. I am one of them... fallen, what they don't know is that the train took my soul, and I not really alive at all... YET, I HAVE TRAYED TO KILL MY SELF OVER AND OVER, and the hex will not let me... all over they beat the sh*t out of me... and I am misunderstood.

So-o now, it is half-past eight, Mr. Natalie picked up his attaché case, pecked Miss. Natalie on her cheek, and tried to kiss and hug Alisha goodbye, but Missed her face, this one was not feeling it, because, Alisha was now having a little passive outburst of bratty- ness and throwing her cereal at their walls and ripping newspapers was more important. Lovely- he got into his car and backed out on to drive off the overhanging tree that a now around 150 years old, or more.

Naddalin tried, yet again, to explain, her feeling and thoughts about everything yet they would not hear it. Just rolling their eyes at her senselessness.

It was at the junction of their motorway, that he saw their first sign of strange - a pussycat walking backward on their road. He was having one of those moments. It was a spell...?

For a second, Mr. Natalie did not grasp what he just had seen- then he shook his head around to look again, lost in the moment of think I was here before, yet this should have never been.

He said this all to me- was he seeing things...? Like- from not getting any sleep last night, over to much Freak ME sex- his girl- and was playful and all, and she was way too- happy to put up with me anyways. It was like their minds where takin over by something that was- NOT.

Driving past her he saw yet another one... doing the same thing, life is running backward... (she has said this to me...)

A black cat walking backward on their corner of the driveway, past the front of the car. I was getting my head wrapped around what cat would do that? And I was bored, and running through the fields, to them chasing nothing yet in my mind it after the world they don't see, the world of angels, flying horses, and magic.

She is used to flying around outside, with me in the fields, I run carefree too, looking as they say crazy. It was the only thing that was real to us.

Caregiver- If I could just let her out at night, she would not have the smarts to come back. She is off looking for things and playing pretends in her mind. It must have been a trick of their light, I too thought I saw this girl having black wings...? No- maybe...?

She was the gorgeous thing I'd had ever seen... I was fixed on her... and could not say in the world what I saw... nor did I want to.

(Back)

The cat was looking at me... with glassy eyes... the feeling of chatting... it was speaking to me. (I have lost it...)

The look in my eyes said... I want your soul- a long and old lost like story... of why... that was a question not answered, that she wanted me to understand.

Part: 2

Mr. Natalie batted an eyelid and stared at the cat, that looked evil. It started back, as Mr. Natalie drove their corner and up their road. The eyes haunting him in the moon like and the crows, losing their minds, flying behind, and the trees scraping against the new car, he floored it, and watched their cat in his mirror, running fast and faster, unlike anything Earthly could.

Calling to him- like... in long creepy whimpering. (I want you...) nope, seeing at their sign; um- cats could not talk her was thinking, nonetheless what are all these signs, about- and It hit him, like- the girl, was hexed, and bring on the evil into their life's.

Before getting in his car- she did not see they're a- a lot of creepy- creepy- birds flying around him, wanting to pick at his eyes and face, with wings, spread- fly down past him in the early daylight.

Do I look stupid...? I wounded and thought to myself...? This is a dream...? I know that we have come a long way in life, with fixing love, and then saying maybe we need it, and then fixing sickness, and maybe that's playing good, or making a baby the way you want him or her... yet, I never- ever seen something like this. 20 years, I remember when that all took place... I was not for it at all, I was one of the boys in my teens, and wondering this was a side effect, for not having young lust, then. It was the régimes taking over... and we overthrew them...

How could love be- bad...?

Part: 3

(Next day)

Snarled, Uncle Read, a bit of fried egg dangling from his bushy mustache. And- I know what will happen if I was to speak out and up to about what I find to be real.

And- and so on... that chatted about what happened... as I crammed eggs into my pie hole, and did not look up, and did not say anything unless spoken too.

Mr. Natalie gave himself a little shake and put the cat out of his mind, even if that was all that he was babbling about. And all that I wanted to explain yet was not allowed too... it was frustrating.

I think that's a good thing... she said, let it go...

This day started the same as the day before - as he drove toward town that looks decerped timeworn Victorian, and some thought out of there pass day in the 1920s or 1930s, fairytale-like, we pondered, how the town was still standing, and the highway too, it was thought about, nothing except a large order of training he was hoping to get that day.

Let me love you is playing in the background an oldy but goodie they say...

However, on their edge of town, military exercises were driven out of his mind by different, diverse, and dissimilar. Yet the cat keeps popping into his mind like her... and the feelings of wrong.

Naddalin tried to claim, that she knew the why of it all, but her words were - go - under by a long, loud gulp looking at the other girl's.

It was a shocking business... shocking... miracle none of them died... over this, never - ever heard the like... by thunder, we here and all that shocked in the face, it was lucky you where there, or you would have goosebumps too.

Everything comes back to you... I said this and the one said, thank you, Martita, she was smitten, in thinking DAH. I did not see the sarcasm, and said thanks back! She said too, missed me doing the same, in my tone.

Thinking about a girl, yes that girl, I was lost in the thoughts, that she wanted for so long, to go there and to kiss, ahh- h- ha- I was a thing about her.

And- Thank you, very- very- much indeed, truly, and Martita, I said.

(Back at school)

Second Class, I would have to say... it was nothing to say anything about. First Class - also- and, if I can swing it, I get through it! Besides- and... think about a girl! The other wizard girl, like me... that I like- like more them like maybe even love. I knew why I had a nasty headache, yet I was not going to say any more there was no use in it, I suppose? Even in class, there were not all there yet that is me after all. In addition- In fact, it was-, Clean, and Kizziah, Martita... where all in my class to feeling this black darkness is me, yet I's was in the know of what was going on.

(In addition- if it is not wizardry on our young minds, then selfies masturbating, with their other girls is their anti-boredom, we all in their same room so- it happens, in their chambers. I think about kissing a girl, why not, they're all we have. In addition- no...! It's wrong to think she, and her of all girls to think about in such sin- shy ways, yet we all know. Yes, even in a place like this... even if it a place of witchcraft, there is still something that is considered wrong, and she more than most- yet here we like to look at what others say.

Naddalin- and I go to hell for it anyways, I thought, yet, being young and dumb these days, every older preteen says we kids/girls are at are all-girl school. Like- we- us- all- belong way down below, for our sins, of all, even lust- the lust of all, yet this is why we're here in there first place.

This blackness had bewitched them and her more than their others, I saw it at once, yes, yes, I did, a confounds charm, to judge by their behavior.

They seemed to think there was a possibility, that she was innocent, blameless, guiltless, they would be right, and so- o would she in some ways also.

For a girl to enjoy herself you need to be a yardstick apart, said there, one professor.

Who- say's things like that? Said one teacher at her old school...

Some girls just rolled their eyes, others it went over their young heads. Judge by their behavior, she said, we do, to see into your- mind, body, and soul.

(Alleged)

'I will be judged by them...? I don't care... I thought.'

Part: 4

(Forward)

(The board)

They were not responsible for their actions, said there one- in a fast ripping thought. On their other hand, their interference might have allowed black shadow, to outflow... over them too from her, from their soles within, from their black hole below, they visibly, with her and the other girl no...? Thought they were going to catch black shadow solitary- tendered.

They have gotten away with a great deal before now... yet that is what we have them here now... These young ruthless smutting girls think about nothing but temptations, I am afraid it has given them a high opinion of themselves... and of course - has always been allowed an extraordinary amount of license by their principal... to think and be with- HER!

- And, mmm.

And- Ah, well, Gonzales... Naddalin, you know... we've all got a bit of a blind spot where she was concerned, worried, and nervous.

And- Bothered... completely!

And- And yet - is it good for her to be given so much special treatment? That thought was bouncing 'round their campers too.

In my view, I try and treat her like any other student.

And any other student would be suspended - at their very least - for leading his friends into such danger.

Consider, Martita - against all Skoufyceol rules - after all their safety measures put in place for his protection - out- of- bounds, at night, consorting with a werewolf, and a murderer – and, I have purpose to be certain of her has been visiting: Skoufyceol of Wizardry unlawfully too and, to HER, and their others, she should be... not with all of them... we cannot do that... she is fine said there one... fine... a sweet child... nothing more nor less...

Besides- with a - Well, well... we shall see, Gonzales, we shall see... The girl has unquestionably, incontestably, and categorically has been thoughtless... and a bloody fool!

And- was thought and passed, 'round.

Chapter: 143

The girl has a vagina is I am sorry here...! And- shoulders movie, to their obvious. Naddalin lay to listen in with her eyes tight shut, holding her girlfriend's hand tightly. Saying under her breath, I do not care- I do not if it is wrong, I love you. And- she giggled; I feel there same about you too, quietly this happened. She felt very sleepy, and was wanting to go to her sleeping chamber with her and there shared a bed, held hands, like young girls do, in there night tops all there same as their others two to a bed, yet they picked each other.

(A day back)

She remembered that her limbs felt heavy, then their steam train, with all them that were once in it; her eyelids too heavy to lift... Pa. over, they nodded off-hand and hand at once, she wanted to lie here, on this comfortable bed, forever...

The words she was hearing seemed to be wandering very eerie to her from her ears to her brain so that it was problematic to understand... at this undeveloped age, of a tween.

How would I describe my looks I would say I look like a honey blond Emma Watson; medium-brown hair.

Sometimes, it's very subtly highlighted with gold, but it's never anything obvious. I usually wear my hair parted in the middle, although occasionally you'll see me with her hair parted to the right side. The hair color does vary slightly from a darker brown to somewhat lighter brown, and from golden hues to somewhat redder ones. However, my color doesn't change dramatically. It usually falls just past shoulder length. I wear my hair straight or with a slight wave. I's use a large - barreled curling iron or sleep in braids, to do that.

Wearing nude or neutral colors on my lips. I will apply light pink or peach blush to her cheekbones.

However, this look is never overly dramatic. I play my eyes, I don't wear false eyelashes, and I do not go for bright or garish pastels or sparkly colors. I am a fan of smoky eyes. I am a girl with eyebrows, I don't see the need for plucking all them little hairs out, we girl have enough of that to do as is.

And why is when I make lady- ness with me myself and I- I get the sillies? Is all about the fact I think about her well-doing?

I love her, I think...

Just like objects can hold spirits, like my great grandfather's railroad lantern that was Blair Jays Natalie's, when he was a railroad worker, odd I got it from the train that is now main... like he leads me to do this... Just like Jinger has a mooring necklace, around her neck with a crystal, dark made from the human hair of the one that past, I have one too form a girl that was named Lily, oh so many years back, I kept it... and I feel as she did- odd I do not know why, I know that she loved her daddy more than anything, he saved her... That a story in its self...

The Girl in the Window

Part: 1

The little girl lost in her room, looking out from the window said, all along she feels as the world closes its eyes on her, yet she never- ever sleeps, she the girl in white that never- ever is at rest. The dormer- the room grayed to her memories, of her life in the past when she was alive, her dad died was what killed her also on the inside, she wants to hide, yet all she has is the girl that lives in her old room to talk too, do you see them playing together yet it's all in her mind.

Do you see me with my- sad looking eyes crying for your life, I want to be in you to playing within you and your body and mind do you have the time to feel me- as I want to get out of this room, stop hunting be as rest and move on... yet, I need someone like you - to do that... do you see my old house as it is falling down around me, yet Sarrah lives here too she plays with me even if she does not dead yet? I am forever and always looking out my addict window down at the kids I don't get to see - why?

For I am always up here- that is why... they don't get me, I don't think... do you see the covering, on my window, and the room of my roof line as you look up at me, do you hear me calling out for you? Asking for a body or soul to take like yours. I am here until you find me, we - you find me... please help me! I am always frightened by what I see and don't see alike... like with her- I could say the same- she is there and then she is not, do you see her long hair blowing in the wind, that is not even there...?

Just a shadow person, for all my days left, until, I find pace - looking down is all that I do- and did all my life... (She is the shadow that is over me always.) - I see here in white I do- with her dark hair and green eyes, and little frame. The room is all gray, and the ceiling drips on me in the night when it rains; or even the snowmelt, like it, ever did in the past all the way back when I was alive her in the 1800s.

Things have changed, then again, they have not in here, it is all I see out there that gets me thinking, does it- you? Not in here, where it's always the same, but outside where life has changed. Do you see my desk as it sits empty with nothing, but the lantern that flickers for me in the cold lonely nights, that was my dad from the railroad?

The chair it's broken, from age and has three legs, now that I can sit on, why for the fact, that I can make it float, as I do as well, I am as light of the ground, like a leaf in the gusting breeze, a tight room with the wood framing showing. All whitewashed, and yet mucky, and musty... she is there and then she is not, like me she lives in the same very walls and, yet I am able to go through them now, unlike before... and I can do this as I please... you and I are on the ground over there in the graveyard. Do you see my headstone? Like- do you see my headstone, with my name under the angel oak tree. Do you see me coming out of it, and the ground, at night, I have to be reminded that I am dead... that- that... is only my body there, yet this is me now...?

Always, back to my home where- I stay in my room with her, now it's her room, her mom and dad don't know or get that we do this, I have a friend in a living girl, that is about nine years old, and now I am inside of her, she is mine and my new live on Earth, to take, and she is in me... I will live the life I never- ever had, one way or another, don't you see- that I love her for this... and maybe if love her for all that she is too.

Do you see my moth-eaten blankets?

...And that she uses now...?

BUT IT'S all me, as she doesn't you see... NOT her all me, she is no- longer- the NOT her... that looks like her to them but not to you and I for we now know- sh-h! She is me- me- is she- do you get that? Confused- don't be... Do you see the old head and footboard there that we share? Do you see me with me all cute kneeling at the window looking out, at the crescent moon- with her?

I see all kinds of changes too like into a full round moon to a big sun, I have seen a- a lot of days, I have seen the days and nights for over 100 years, around the time that the first longest novel was written, funny... no, and now-now- by a man with the same first name- odd?

All the time- I never- ever changed, yet, I get a new girl body to see, too still like mine. And change their state of mind, they did like I changed her now, and there in the ground left behind no longer, like me I weep like the rain on a tree to make it grows- through her like it I will still, I did not have a good life, now I will take, and see if I well, a good life, is not what I had with my dad he did things to me that you would not understand, or maybe you would I don't know either way, I don't want to talk about it, yet that teddy bear, is long gone too... so why talk about it. Do you see the rolling hills? Do you see the grave markers, more?

Do you see the tracks... next to the home? Do you see me over them all, I remember all of them, therein there none- what I would call friends... yet, there died to me too even then, not to be seen... if you know what I mean... until I am at peace, yet seeing them I will never be? Yet, well I ever am even now- that is the question? There are never flowers on my plot, yet 100 years, I could see why- yet there was never-'till her... nothing but bones next to me to keep me warm... ha- funny my daddy's... sick-sick!

Part: 2

The sun shines, yet not for me it's always a rainy day, in my head- even now- yet get better, the clouds are there, saying go to hell, yet I don't want to... not just yet.

The little girl lost in her room, looking out from the window said, all along she feels as the world closes its eyes on her, yet she never- ever sleeps, she the girl in white that never- ever is at rest. Do you get that...?

I remember being a kid, yet I don't, it was taken from me at 8 years old, and then I don't ever remember just being a kid like them or she or her too... I remember my mom being here and then not, I saw it all fade away, even if I was so young, I got it, I got sad about it... like her, with me, it's like living the same life over. I recollect being feed, and being feed up with life, and being bath at night by daddy too... 'until that night that I fight back and said- 'NO.'

I remember him- my daddy, - strangely me out, after my bath and I was bare, we have all been abused by someone in one way or another their hands or mouth that is why we turn, to a girls, if we are a girl for love other than a men, that has always been mean to us- even if not the same boys- we think he is, and girls are always sweet caring and understanding, even if... I remember being in the fight for my life, and him being mean over something like pissing the bed, being feet smashed, rope around my head, books that he never- ever read hitting me in the head with it, called a bible... he started raping me and ripping the pages out saying craziness...

All the pages were flying about and hitting the floor as I was being bounced on top of and had to do the other way around. 'Books are like boobs' he said to me- along with- you have to feel them and open them up like that little sight you have down there,' and you don't have those, grow up and be a woman, now- he was scrambling in my ears!'

I used to get out at night- from my room and the musky bed, and get... to see the graveyard at night, walking around, they became my friends in my head, looking for someone to call a friend and not 'till her, 100 years later, that understood me for me- and she's alive- so full of life, and become a girl that like girls. I am Lucie, the girl lost her in her room in a window, that was looking for a girl lover, and I have found her, and she is just like you! I look back on my life when I was nine, back in 1927, the ford in the yard sat in the mud, and my whit Victorian was still falling- down yet, not like now... yet that was over we- were a poor family.

And yet still astounding to those that passed by it think we were something for this immense home, a wonder some called it for its room count and size. Do you see the 3 levels of this how with- it triangle roof in the middle part, up at the top is my room...?

Do you see all the arched windows- 200 of them I think it was, all made just for the home, along with its wood-clad siding- do you see that one only that is always like it is glowing at night with a slight flicker of yellow, warmth in the cold- cold evenings? This room is all mine and no- little girl should take this away from me I thought 'till she- yes- she moved in... I get into her mind body and soul you see, now and forever as long as I like 'till I am at rest, or feel that I am... I am never- ever going to let go... never- ever- ever never! Even as bones someday she will be mine, my special friend!

Do you see the steps going into the dibble doors too, which can be opened- to even now the perfect feel- to someone like you- of something like the smell of fresh baking cookies, sitting on top of the old stove that never changed? Do you see the eerie fences that wrap around the home like the porch? Oh, home I never want to leave it... more now than ever- over her.

The swing sawing the rocking me to sleep, back in the day, the night she leads me away with her, she was the only one I reviled myself too... in the daytime. Do you see - what all this and everything here is to me? And do you see all the things that have happened to me...?

I don't want to die final all alone, that is why I stayed here looking all these years, someone to get me. The night up in a tree, she and I, sing, playing, and kind. Her crying for me makes me stronger, looking down making my tree grow, and as she is standing on my grave... wishing she was me now and I'm here... and we are - we are.

You don't have to be stuck with you all your life - if you don't want to if your someone like me - or she too. Do you wish you were me - scary you are now - I am all inside of you - and in your head always - and forever - I'll haunt your dreams - and I own you - he - he - he! Until you find true love you'll never - ever - never - ever be free of me!

Part: 3

Naddalin felt herself, and along with their completely swelling with pride as she watched them all. But it was a much closer, Miss. Smith, than usual, and everybody, all, and everyone else had made enormous progress, yet not this girl in her studies, this is what they were talking about. After an hour, Naddalin called a stop to all, and let her mind rest... bypassing out over-exhaustion. The last thing she said to her before she left for the brake... 'you and I, when we get back from holidays, we can start doing some of their big stuff even more spells...'

When she woke up - she was by her side. You're getting good, she said, grinning around at them, looking at them. There was a murmur of enthusiasm, they were doing more than just magic - no?

The room began to clear in their usual twos and threes; most people wished - in the open room of nude girls running around naked taking steam hot showers, seeing her this way was - no words could say it... Naddalin a 'Happy Christmas' as they went, yet she was happier being back with her and the others - yet maybe just her.

Feeling cheerful, she collected up their cushions with Jinger and Emmah and stacked them neatly away, still drawing off airing out the goodies... yet where all girls - so-o yeah...

Jinger and Emmah left before she did, it was bedtime after all; she hung back a little, because Koufyce was still there and she was hoping to receive a 'Merry Christmas' from her, yet that was not likely.

'No, you go on, 'she heard her say to her friend, Martha and her heart gave a jolt that seemed to take it into their region Saula. She pretended to make straight her pillow pile, to do what she was going to do- and that was hump and romp with her girls.

She was quite sure, so unquestionable, they were alone now, and waited for her to speak with her through the night, even if there was a big day ahead, she was going to be with her romantically. As an alternative, she heard a hearty sniff, of her undies under her pillow, and said go night and fall asleep with her in her arms.

She turned and saw Kalaie standing in there middle of their room, tears pouring down her face.

'Whoa- What is with you- girl?'

She would not speak to us, over, she with me...

She did not know what to do, at their time.

She was simply standing there, deplorable wordlessly.

'What's up?' she said, feebly, given time.

She shook her head and spread her eyes on her sleeve, of her worn-out night top.

'I'm sorry, 'she said hoarsely.

'I partially assume... it is just... learning all this junk... it just makes me... wonder whether... if she had known it all... she would still be alive.'

Natalie's heart sank right back past its usual spot and set up somewhere around her bellybutton.

She ought to have known, being notorious... thoughts.

She wanted to talk about Joella.

‘She did know this sh*t,’ Naddalin said extremely, serious.

‘She was good at it, or she could never have to their middle of that maze. But if Waltemath really wants to kill you, you do not stand a chance.’

Her hiccoughed at their sound of Waltemath’s name but stared at Naddalin without flinching.

‘You survived when you were just a baby,’ she said quietly.

‘Yeah, well,’ said Naddalin wearily, moving towards there door, ‘I do not know why nor does anyone else, so it is nothing to be proud of.’

‘Oh, do not go!’ said Kalaie, sounding tearful again. ‘I’m really- sorry to get all upset like this... like- I did not mean to...’ She hiccoughed again...

She was very even when her eyes where bloodshot and puffy, yet not as- not as much as she, beside me. And she was out now, looking even sweet then, ever.

Naddalin- felt thoroughly miserable, about not leaving her side to go to her, yet she did not want too- ever do that.

Like would this girl would have been so-o pleased with just a- ‘Merry Christmas.’ Yet she did not get one from back home, not even... (Nothing- for years, just a gloomy remembrance, of their fact they did not love her.)

Part: 4

‘I know it must be horrifying for you,’ I said.

I to go through this...

I was mopping her eyes on her sleeve again, she came over with us not aloud, yet it was done, I could not help but be there for her, it is just me, being me.

‘Me mentioning Joella, when you saw her die...

I suppose in this hug, and get it with you- you just want to forget about it if I ever need you too?’

‘Okay-’

Naddalin did not say everything to this; it was quite true, but she felt hard-hearted saying all and everything.

‘You’re a good teacher, you know,’ said Hayvannah, with a waterlogged smile.

‘I’ve never- ever could dumbfound anything, or anyone before, yet I did just that.’

‘Thanks,’ said Naddalin awkwardly.

They see each other for a long moment.

Naddalin felt a burning desire to run from there room and, at their same time, wide -ranging powerlessness to move her little young feet.

‘Mistletoe,’ said Hayvannah softly, pointing at their ceiling over her head and there kissed.

‘Yeah,’ said Naddalin... Her mouth was very in need of a drink.

‘What are Kayarglers?’

‘No idea,’ said Naddalin. She had moved closer, to her and now on top and over her um body one, leg now, side to side, with her torso, in a lover’s hold.

Her brain seemed to have been stunned-like.

‘You’d ask Danna.’

Hayvannah made a funny noise, like between a moan, and a giggle, when I play with her and kiss her too, a playfully.

She was even nearer to her now.

She could have calculated their dimples on her nose.

‘I really like you,’ Naddalin. I think I’m like you more than I like...

Ha- same- shush!

She could not think, a tingling sensation was spreading through her, paralyzing her arms, legs, and brain.

She was too close to me.

She could see every tear clingy to her eyelashes...

I returned to my shared room, half an hour later to find Emmah and Jinger in their best seats by the fireplace; everybody else had gone to bed for the night, yet not us, we have gotten closer, and closer over the long nights- of being miss- fits.

Emmah was scripting a very long letter; she had previously filled half a roll of parchment, which was dangling from the edge of the old built-in desk in the room.

Jinger was lying on her hearthrugs, trying to finish her metamorphosis homework, the - being one thing and become another... we were doing just that the other day before, going from girls to butterflies, and the cat thing hit me... I knew... yet, say that to them back home and I am the one that is crazy. I'm like I am not allowed to say what happens here in my mind like we are not, let me... on the inside.

Small changes from a girl too small things, and then go bigger, for the stars... Think big, she said in class, with all in young girl minds, said the only one to give these girls hope for a life in what is wisdom, a teacher that was different.

'What kept you?' She asked as Naddalin sank into the armchair next to Emmah's.

Naddalin did not answer... She was in a state of the shockwave.

Semi of she wanted to tell Jinger and Emmah what had just happened, but the other half wanted to take their secret with her to the graveyard, a place where they like to go to show their real's- selfies of wings and all. 'Are you all right, Naddalin?'

Emmah asked, peering at her over the landfill of her friend, now making it off the gown, to see me become, that was neat, yet we were learning how to fly.

Part: 5

‘What’s up? It was said, as a new lifecycle, with her began... as the change, were made when they got black wings.’ Falling to this is not that bad now, is it... after all? Naddalin gave a half-hearted shrug, thinking she sold out, yet it’s a better life then life at home... how she was on autopilot, they thought, yet in this form, she was new.

In truth, she did not know whether she was all right or not, said Jinger, lifting herself up on her elbow to get a clearer view of Naddalin, looking down at her as she was looking up.

‘What’s happened?’ ‘A fallen angel has fallen’ - a classic pun.

Naddalin did not know how to set about telling term and still was not sure whether she wanted to, that now she was one of them.

Just as she had decided not to say whatever, Emmah took matters out of her hands, and the wing came out of her back and she shows herself to her for the first time say- yeah- now your one us- a suture- hood.

‘Is it Hayvannah? She asked in a competent way, that is the first flight.

(Questions)

‘Did she corner you after the meeting?’

Numbly surprised, Naddalin nodded.

Jinger sniggered, barely looking off when Emmah caught her eye.

‘So-o, what did she want?’

‘To see if I was a dumb sh*t like they say.’

‘Oh...?’ In a phony unpremeditated voice, she said we knew yet don’t believe it.

‘She,’ Naddalin began, rather huskily; she cleared her throat and tried again.

‘So-o...’

‘Did you kiss?’ Asked Emmah energetically.

Jinger sat up so fast she sent his ink bottle airborne all over there rug.

Disregarding this totally, she stared avidly at Naddalin.

‘Well?’ She demanded.

Naddalin looked at Jinger’s appearance of mingled curiosity and hilarity to Emmah’s slight frown and nodded.

‘HA!’

Jinger made a successful gesture with her fist, and went into a wild clang, of laughter that made several nervous looks back, an unenthusiastic grin spread over- Naddalin’s face as she watched her- Jinger rolling around on the carpet; and looking for a second time over beside the window jump, about too.

Emmah gave Jinger a look of deep disgust and returned to her letter. ‘Well?’ Jinger said- finally, looking up at Naddalin. ‘How was it...?’ Naddalin was careful for- a moment...

‘Wet,’ she said truthfully.

Jinger made a noise that might have showed jubilation or disgust, it was hard to tell.

‘Because she was deplorable,’ Naddalin continued deeply.

‘Oh,’ said Jinger, her smiles fading slightly. ‘Are you that bad at kissing?’

‘Neenah,’ said Naddalin, who had not careful this, and at once felt worried.

Flashback- holding time with a spell- (That night think back there had a girl, kiss- ie. kiss- sex.)

Part: 6

‘Maybe I am.’

‘Of course, you are not,’ said Emmah inattentively, still scribbling away at her letter.

‘How do you know?’ Jinger said very sharply.

‘Because Hayvannah spends half her time crying these days,’ said Emmah vaguely. ‘She does it at mealtimes, in the loo, all over the place.’

‘You’d think a bit of kissing woodcreeper her up,’ said Jinger, smiling.

‘Jinger,’ said Emmah in a dignified voice, dipping the point of her quill into her inkpot, ‘you are a there most unresponsive wart, I have ever had their hard luck to meet.’

‘What’s that supposed to mean?’ Said Jinger huffily. ‘What per girl cries while someone is kissing them?’ ‘Yeah,’ said Naddalin, slightly desperately, ‘who does...?’

Emmah looked at their pair of them with an almost pitying expression on her face. ‘Don’t you understand how Hayvannah’s feeling now?’ she asked.

‘No,’ said Naddalin and Jinger together.

Emmah sighed and laid down her quill.

‘Well, she is feeling very sad, because of Joella dying. Marva, I expect she is feeling confused because she liked Joella and now she likes Naddalin, and she cannot work out whom she likes there most of all.

Marva, she will be feeling guilty, thinking it is an insult to Sedaris’s memory to be kissing Naddalin at all, and she will be worrying about what everyone else might say, about her if she starts going out with Naddalin.

Chapter: 144

In addition, she cannot work out what her feelings towards Naddalin are, anyway, because she was there one who was with Joella when Joella died, so that is all very mixed up and painful.

Oh, and she is afraid she is going to be thrown off their Crow claw Clepsidra team because she is being flown so badly.

A slightly stunned silence greeted the end of this speech, then Jinger said, ‘One mergirl cannot feel all that at once, they would explode.’

‘Just because you have their emotional range of a teaspoon does not mean we all have,’ said Emmah nastily picqueter up her quill again.

‘She was there one who started it,’ said Naddalin. ‘I wouldn’t’ve she just sorts of came at me and next thing she is crying all over me, I did not know what to do.’ ‘Don’t blame you, mate,’ said Jinger, looking alarmed at their very thought.

‘You just had to be nice to her,’ said Emmah, looking up anxiously. ‘You were, weren’t you?’

‘Well,’ said Naddalin, an unpleasant heart creeping up his face, ‘I sort of patted her on their back a bit.’

Emmah looked as though she was restraining herself from rolling her eyes with extreme difficulty.

‘Well, one supposes it could have been worse,’ she said. ‘Are you going to see her again?’

Till must, won’t I?’ Said Naddalin.

We’ve got DA meetings, haven’t we?’

‘You know what I mean,’ said Emmah impatiently.

Naddalin said nothing; Emmah’s words opened a whole new vista of frightening possibilities. She tried to imagine going somewhere with Hayvannah- Clepsydra, Kalaheo of Wizardry, perhaps, and being alone with her for hours at a time.

Of course, she would have been expecting her to ask her out after what had just happened... there thought made her Hayvanna hatch clench painfully.

‘Oh well,’ said Emmah distantly, buried in her letter once more, ‘you’ll have plenty of opportunities to ask her.’

‘What if she does not want to ask her?’ Said Jinger, who had been watching Naddalin with an unusually shrewd expression on his face.

‘Don’t be silly,’ said Emmah vaguely, ‘Naddalin’s liked her for ages, haven’t you, Naddalin?’

She did not answer... Yes, she had liked Hayvannah for ages, but whenever she had imagined a scene involving there two of them it had always featured a Hayvannah who was enjoying herself, as opposed to a Hayvannah who was sobbing uncontrollably into his shoulder.

‘Who’re you writing their novel to, anyway?’ Jinger asked Emmah, trying to read their bit of parchment now trailing on their floor. Emmah hitched it up out of sight.’ Vickie.’

‘Wilhemina?’

‘How many other Vickie’s do we know?’

Jinger said nothing but looked disgruntled. They sat in silence for another twenty minutes, Jinger finishing her Transfiguration essay with many snorts of impatience and crossings out, Emmah writing steadily to their very end of their parchment, rolling it up carefully and sealing it.

...And Naddalin staring into their fire, wishing more than anything that Sirius’s head would appear there and give her some advice about girls.

...And their fire merely crackled lower and lower, until their red-hot embers crumbled into ash and, looking around, Naddalin saw that they were, yet again, there last ones in their common room.

‘Well, night,’ said Emmah, yawning widely as she set off up their girls’ staircase.

‘What does she see in Wilhemina?’ Jinger demanded as she and Naddalin climbed their girls.’

Stairs...

‘Well,’ said Naddalin, considering their matter, ‘Is’ pose she’s older, isn’t she... and she’s an international Clepsidra player...’

‘Yeah, but apart from that,’ said Jinger, sounding aggravated. ‘I mean, her is a grouchy get, isn’t she?’

‘Bit grouchy, yes,’ said Naddalin, whose thoughts were still on Hayvannah.

They pulled off their robes and put on pajamas in silence; Lacy, Laila, and Neville were already asleep.

Naddalin put his glasses on her bedside table, and got into bed but did not pull their hangings closed around his four posters; instead, she stared at their patch of starry sky visible through there window, next to Neville’s bed. If she had known, this time last night, that in twenty-four hours’ time she would have kissed Hayvannah Chang...

'Night,' grunted Jinger, from somewhere also she is right. 'Night,' said Naddalin.

Next time... if there was a next time... she would be a bit more contented.

She ought to ask her out; she had been expecting it, and was now angry with her..., or was she lying in bed, still crying, awful feel is about Joella?

She did not know what to think.

Emmah's explanation had made it all seem more complicated rather than easier to understand.

That is what they should teach us here, she thought, turning over on to his side, how girls' brains work... it would be more useful than Divination, anyway...

Neville snuffled in she sleeps with her girl hand n' hand, sweet and cute.

A flying horse blared somewhere out in their night.

Naddalin dreamed she was back in there DA room. Hayvannah was accusing her of luring her there under false pretenses; she said, she had promised her, like - a hundred and fifty times a Hayvanna cholate black crow cards, if she showed up.

Naddalin protested... Hayvannah shouted,'

Segregate me loads of Hayvannah cholate Black Crow Cards, look!' And she pulled out fistfuls of Cards from inside her robes and threw them into their air. Then she turned into Emmah, who said, 'You did promise her, you know, Naddalin... I think you, had better give her something else instead... how about your Firebolt?'

Besides, Naddalin was protesting that she could not give Hayvannah his Firebolt, because Ambridge had it, and anyway their whole thing was ridiculous, he'd only come to their DA room to put up some Christmas baubles shaped like Dobby's head... The dream changed...

Her body felt smooth, powerful, and flexible.

She was gliding between shining metal bars, across dark, cold 'the body of Neveah' ...She was flat on their floor, sliding along on his belly... it was dark, yet she could see objects around her chartering in strange, vibrant colors ... she was turning his head... their corridor was empty... but no... a man was sitting on their floor ahead, his chin drooping on to his chest, his outline gleaming in there dark...

Naddalin put out her tongue... she tasted their scent on the air... she was alive but drowsy... sitting in Jinger's and their room, the doorway at the end of their corridor...

Nevertheless, their girl was stirring... a grey, wrap fell from her legs as she jumped to her feet; and Naddalin saw her vibrant, blurred outline towering above her, it was one of the ghosts of the school. Naddalin longed to bite the chap... but she must become an expert in the impulse... she had more important work to do... with her sharpen fangs.

She like um- saw a wand withdrawn from her, yet want to keep doing as she was... yet the haunt wanted to play, not to be some young little girl lost in a window in some chamber of a room... forever- never- ever- ever- never- to be loved.

I human girl at the graveyard- I had my eyes on... named: Brittany- flawing in stealthy, I reared high from the ground and struck her once, twice, three times, plunging my fangs deeply into her, epithelium, I had the feeling, her ribs splinter beneath my jaws, she has become one of the new haunts of the school, I wanted her soul, feeling their warm gush of blood... swimming within her it felt, it gave me more power and to keep my wicked life spin going- I have to feed on the young girls.

Now she wants to play- even if I did this it was for the good of it, she needs to die, so I took her away for the pain of the Earthy world.

The little 5-year-old girls were yelling in pain... to me still, not thinking it all over, yet she was missing daddy... then she fell silent... when I said it all going to be okay, she slumped back against the wall... blood was splattering on to their floor... in transparencies- like- Her forehead hurt terribly... her mind was in the new body, yet she still saw all that was going on in the other world, it was aching fit to burst... yet I had to console her to the life - of the afterlife in the depths of dark death.

Part: 1

'Naddalin!'

‘NADDALIN!’

She opened her eyes, to her. Every inch of her body was covered in an icy sweat, and cold girly- c*m; her bed covers were twisted all around her like a straitjacket; she felt as though a white-hot poker were being applied to his forehead.

‘Naddalin!’

Jinger was standing over her looking extremely frightened.

There were more figures at their foot of Naddalin’s bed.

She clutched her head in her hands; her pain was blinding her... she rolled right over and puked over the edge of their mattress.

‘She is sick,’ said a scared voice.’

Should we call someone?’

‘Naddalin! Naddalin!’

She had to tell Jinger, it was very- very important that she tells her... taken great gulps of air, Naddalin pushed herself up in bed, still nude, like all the other girls in the room in bed, willing herself not to throw up again, there pain half-blinding her. We just thought it was the time of the mouth thing... or sadness, or not adjusting to the new way of life here. ‘Your dad,’ she panted, her chest heaving. ‘Your dads... been attacked...’ ‘What?’ said Jinger uninterestedly.

‘Your dad!’

He is being chopped up as we speak, it's serious, there was blood everywhere...

‘No...’ she said along with subbing.

‘I’m going for help,’ said their same scared voice, and Naddalin heard footsteps running out of there dormitory.

‘Naddalin, the bed- buddy,’ said Jinger uncertainly, ‘you... you were just dreaming...’ ‘No!’ said Naddalin furiously; it was crucial that Jinger understand.

‘It was not a dream... not an ordinary dream... I- I was there, I- I saw it... I- I did it...’

She could hear Laila and Lacy muttering but did not care.

The pain in her forehead was subsiding slightly, though she was still sweating and shivering feverishly. And then retched again and Jinger leaped backward out of their way. 'Naddalin, you are not well,' she said- shakily.' Neville's gone for help.'

'I'm fine...!'

Naddalin Hayvanna, wiping her mouth on her night top and shaking uncontrollably. There is nothing- nothing, Jigger with me, it is your daddy, you must worry about, we - us- she too, need to find out where she is- bleeding like crazy, I was, it was a huge serpent.'

She tried to get out of bed, but- Jinger pushed her back into it; Lacy and Laila were still whispering somewhere adjacent.

Werther one minute passed or ten, Naddalin did not know; she simply sat there shaking, feeling their pain recede very sully from her scar... then there were hurried footsteps coming up their stairs and she heard Neville's voice again.

~*~

'Over here, Professor.'

Professor McGonagall, came hurrying into their dormitory in her tartan dressing gown, her glasses perched lopsidedly on the bridge of her bony nose.

'What is it-? Where does it hurt?'

She had never been so pleased to see her; it was a member of their Order of their Durizy her needed now, not someone fussing over her and prescribing useless potions.

'It's Jinger's dad,' she said, sitting up again.'

'He been attacked by a daemon serpent- and it's serious, I saw it happen she yelled.'

'What do you mean, you saw it happen?' Said

Professor McGonagall, her dark eyebrows contracting.

'I do not know... I was asleep and then I was there... seeing this all...'

‘You mean you dreamed this?’

Part: 2

‘No!’ said, Naddalin furiously; would none of them understand?’ I was having a dream at first about something different, something senseless... and then this interrupted it. It was real, I did not envisage it.

Mr. Clena was asleep on their floor and he was attacked by a gigantic dark angel of the love of final death, there was a load of blood, she collapsed, someone is got to find out where she is...’

Professor McGonagall was gazing at her through her lopsided spectacles as though horrified at what she was seeing.

‘I’m not lying, and I am not nuts-o!’ Naddalin told her, her voice rising to a shout. ‘I tell you; I saw it happen!’

‘I believe you, said Professor McGonagall curtly.’

Put on your dressing gown were going to see their Principal.’

Then- Wouldn’t it be good if they finished each other off?

And- Jinger murmured in Naddalin’s ear, with her soft wet breath.

Gonzales’s upper lip was curling. Naddalin wondered why Hilliard was still smiling; if Gonzales had been looking at her like that he would have been running as fast as she could in their opposite direction.

Hilliard and Gonzales turned to face each other and bowed; at least, Hilliard did, with much twirling of his hands, while Gonzales jerked his head irritably. Then they raised their wands like swords in the finger of them.

And- As you see, we are holding our wands in there accepted argumentative position...

And- Hilliard told their silent crowd.

And- On their count of three, we will cast our first spells. Neither of us will be aiming to kill, of course.

And- all felt there same.

And- I would not bet on that...

And- Naddalin murmured, watching snap- ie.

baring her teeth.

One - two – three, and more, all and!

~*~

Both swung their wands above their heads and pointed them at their opponent; Gonzales cried: and, Expellers'!

And, there was a dazzling flash of scarlet light and Hilliard was annoyed off her feet: She flew backward off their stage, destroyed into their wall, and slid down it to sprawl on their floor.

~*~

Mallerie and some of their other Andreassen's cheered. Emmah was dancing on tiptoes. And- do you think she has, all right?

She squealed through her fingers.

And- Who cares?

And- said Naddalin and Jinger together too and so-o.

Hilliard was getting unsteadily to her feet.

The staff, the hat had fallen off, and his wavy hair was standing on end.

Well, there you have it! And, she said, tottering back onto their platform.

And- That was a Disarming Charm - as you see, I have lost my wand - ah, thank you, Miss. Brown - yes, an excellent idea to show them that, Professor Gonzales, but if you do not mind my saying: 'so-o', it was very understandable what you were about to do next.

If I had wanted to stop you it would have been very easy - though, I felt it would be educational to let them see... and... Gonzales was looking lethal.

Hilliard had noticed because she said, And-

Enough indicative of! I am going to come amid you now and put you all into pairs. Professor Gonzales, if you would like to help me...

They moved through there the crowd, matching up partners. Hilliard teamed Neville with Joy Santah- Sletcherle, but Gonzales reached Naddalin and Jinger first.

And- Time to split up their dream team, I think, and she sneered.

And- Raila, you can collaborate with Finnigan.

- And-

Naddalin moved toward Emmah.

And- I do not think so-o...

Yes- and yes...

And- said snap- ie, smiling emotionlessly.

And- Mr. Mallerie, come over here.

Let us see what you make of their well- known-.

And you, Miss. Kizziah - you can collaborate Miss. Bestrode.

- And-

Part: 3

Mallerie strutted over, smirking. Behind her walked an Andreasen girl who reminded Naddalin of a picture she had seen in Christmas with Joy-Anna. She was large and square and her heavy jaw jutted aggressively. Emmah gave her a weak smile that she did not come back.

And- Face your partners!

And- called Hilliard, back on their platform.

And- And bow!

And- Naddalin and Mallerie barely inclined their heads, not taking their eyes off each other.

And- Wands at their prepared!

And- shouted Hilliard.

And- When I count to three, cast your charms to disarm your opponents - only to disarm them - we do not want any accidents - one... two... three...

- And-

Part: 4

Naddalin swung her wand high, but Mallerie had already started on, and Two And: Her spell hit Naddalin so-o hard she felt as though she had been hit over their head with a saucepan.

She tripped, but their whole thing still seemed to be working, and degenerating no more time, Naddalin pointed her wand straight at Mallerie and shouted, And- Torelts!

And- yes, and yes...

And- I for one said- disarm only!

And- Hilliard shouted in alarm over their heads of their battling crowd.

And- as Mallerie sank to her knees; a jet of hoary light hit Mallerie in their hart, and she doubled up, breathless, and she peed, down her little young girl schoolgirl uniform skirt, and she took off her undies on their spot and said oopiee-c's.

Naddalin had hit her with a Tickling Charm, and she could barely move for pleasing giggling.

Naddalin hung back, with a vague feeling it would be unsporting to bewitch, Mallerie while she was on their floor, but this was a mistake; gasping for breath, Mallerie pointed his wand at Naddalin's knees, Hayvanna, And- Tarantallegra! And, and there next second Naddalin's legs began to jerk around out of his control in a kind of quickstep.

And- Stop! Stop!

And- screamed Hilliard, but Gonzales took charge. And, Finite Incarnate! And, she shouted; Naddalin's feet stopped dancing, Mallerie stopped laughing, and they were able to look up.

A haze of jade- sh smoke was hovering over their scene.

Both Neville and Joy were lying on their floor, panting; Jinger was holding up an ashen-faced Laila, apologizing for whatever his broken wand had done; but Emmah and Millicent Bulstrode was still moving; Millicent had Emmah in a headlock and Emmah was whimpering in pain; both their wands lay forgotten on their floor.

Naddalin leaped forward and pulled Millicent off. It was difficult: She was a lot bigger than she was.

And- Dear, dear, and said- Hilliard, skittering through there crowd, looking at the aftermath of their duels. And- Up you go, Macmillan...

- And-

Chapter: 145

And- Careful there, Miss. Fawcett... Pinch it hard, it will stop bleeding in a second.

And- I for one think I had better teach you how to block unfriendly spells, and said Hilliard, standing flustered during their hall. she glanced at Gonzales, whose black eyes glinted, and looked quickly away. And, let us have a volunteer pair – Longboart Hayvannah and Santah- Sletcherle, how about you...

-And, this is A bad idea, Professor Hilliard.

And, yes said snapped, gliding over like a large and malevolent bat.

And- Longboart Hayvannah causes devastation with their simplest spells.

We will be sending what is left of Santa Slithered up to their hospital wing in a matchbox.

And- Neville's round, pink face went pinker.

And, How about Mallerie and-?

And said Gonzales with a twisted smile.

And- Excellent idea! And said- Hilliard, gesturing Naddalin, and Mallerie into the middle of their hall as their crowd backed away to give them room.

And, Now, Naddalin, and said Hilliard. And, When Draco points his wand at you, you do this.

Similarly, she raised her own wand, tried a complicated wiggling action, and dropped it. Gonzales smirked as Hilliard quickly picked it up, saying, And, Whoops- my wand is a little overexcited, moved closer to Mallerie, bent down, and whispered something in her ear.

Mallerie smirked, too. Naddalin looked up apprehensively at Hilliard and said, and- Professor, could you show me that blocking thing again?

Like- equally- Scared? Similarly, muttered Mallerie, so that Hilliard could not hear her.

And- You wish, equally said Naddalin out of the corner of her mouth.

Hilliard cuffed Naddalin merrily on their shoulder.

Also- Just do what I did, Naddalin!

- And-

Part: 1

And- what, drop my wand?

And- nonetheless, Hilliard was not listening.

And- three - two - one - go!

And- she shouted.

Mallerie raised his wand quickly and bellowed, And- Responsorial!

-And-

The end of his wand exploded; Naddalin watched, aghast, as a long black dark angel of the love of final death shot out of it, fell heavily onto their floor between them, and raised itself, ready to strike. There were screams as their crowd backed swiftly away, clearing their floor.

And- do not move, and said Gonzales lazily, enjoying their sight of Naddalin standing motionless, eye to eye with their angry dark angel of the love of final death. And- I will get rid of it...

- Similarly-

And- Allow me!

And- shouted Hilliard.

She brandished her...

The wand... at the dark angel of the love of final death and there was a loud bang!

Their dark angel of the love of final death, instead of vanishing, flew ten feet into their air and fell back to their floor with a loud smack.

Enraged, derision furiously, it slithered straight toward Joy Santah- Sletcherle and raised itself again, fangs exposed, poised to strike.

Naddalin was not sure what made her do it. She was not even aware of deciding to do it. All she knew was that her legs were carrying her forward as though she was on casters, and that, she had shouted stupidly at their serpent, and- leave her alone, for some time!

Similarly, and yes miraculously - strangely - their dark angel of the love of final death slumped to their floor, docile as a thick, black garden hose, its eyes now on Naddalin.

Naddalin felt their fear drain out of her. She knew their dark angel of the love of final death would not attack anyone now, though how she knew it, she could not have explained.

She looked up at Joy, grinning, expecting to see Joy looking relieved, or puzzled, or even grateful - but certainly not angry and scared.

Same- What do you think you are playing at?

And- she shouted, and before Naddalin could say anything, Joy had turned and stormed out of there hall.

Gonzales stepped forward, waved her wand, and their dark angel of the love of final death vanished in a small puff of black smoke. Gonzales, too, was looking at Naddalin in an unexpected way: It was a shrewd and calculating look, and Naddalin did not like it.

She was also dimly aware of an ominous muttering all around their walls. Then she felt a tugging on their back of her robes.

And- Come on, equally said Jigger's voice in her ear. The same - move - come on...

- And-

Part: 2

Jinger steered her out of there hall, Emmah hurrying alongside them.

As they went through their doors, their people on either side drew away as though they were frightened of catching something.

Naddalin did not have a clue what was going on, and neither Jinger nor Emmah explained anything until they had dragged her all their way up to their empty Coletti common room.

Like- then Jinger pushed Naddalin into an armchair and said, And You are a parse mouth.

Why...?

Why- didn't you tell us?

-And-

'And' - I am what?

'And' - said Naddalin.

And- A Parcel- mouth!

'And' - said Jinger.

And, you can talk to the dark angel of the love of final deaths!

-And- So-o...?

...?...?

And- I know, and said Naddalin.

And- I mean, that is only their second time I have ever done it.

I'm accidentally set a dark angel on my cousin- Dariez at their menagerie garden once, when we were younger a- long story - but it was telling me, it had never seen Brazil, and I set it free without meaning to that was before, I knew I was a wizard - Equally- and, A dark angel told you it had never seen Brazil, yet it was on Earth at one time? And, Jinger repeated faintly.

And, So-o...?

And- said Naddalin. And- I bet loads of people here can do it.

-And-

And- Oh, no they cannot, and said Jinger. And- It is not a very common gift. Naddalin, this is bad.

-And-

And- What is bad...?

And- said Naddalin, starting to feel quite angry.

And- What's Jigger with everyone?

Listen, if I had not told that dark angel of the love of final death not to attack Joy and- Oh, that is what you said to it?

-And-

And- what you mean? You where there - you heard me - and...

Then- I heard you speaking Reports, and said- Jinger. And- Dark Angel of the love of final death language. You could have been saying anything - no wonder Joy, you sounded like you were egging their dark angel of the love of final death on or something - it was creepy, you know...

-And-

Naddalin gaped at her... (shocking moment- face... hand up at her mouth.)

And- I spoke a different language?

But - I did not realize – nut-ha- did- I's- of how can I's speak a language without knowing I can speak it?

-And-

Jinger shook her head. Both her and Emmah were looking as though someone had died.

Naddalin could not see what was so terrible.

And- you want to tell me what's Jinger, and with stopping a massive dark angel of the love of final death biting off Joy's head?

And, she said. And, what does it matter how I did it if Joy does not have to join their Headless Hunt?

-And-

And- It matters, and said Emmah, speaking at last in a hushed voice, and because being able to talk to the dark angel of the love of final deaths was what Sofie O. Andreassen was famous for. That is why their symbol of Andreassen House is a serpent.

And...?

Naddalin's mouth fell open.

And- Exactly, And- said Jinger. And, and now their whole savannah is going to think you are his great- great- great- great- grand girl or something...

-And-

But I am not, and said Naddalin, with a terror she could not explain at all.

And- You will find that hard to prove, And- said Emmah. And- she lived about a thousand years ago; for all we know, you could be.

-And-

Naddalin lay's awake for hours that night.

Through a gap in their curtains around her four-poster, she watched snow starting to drift past their tower window and wondered...

Could she be a descendant of Sofie O. Andreassen?

She did not know anything about- her daddy's family- so that was what was said.

The Andreassen had always forbidden questions about his wizarding relatives.

Quietly, Naddalin tried to say something in Reports.

The words would not come. It seemed she had to be face- to- face with a dark angel of the love of final death to do it.

But then again, I am in Coletti, Naddalin thought.

The Sorcererring Hat would not have put me in here if I had Andreassen blood within me... and then sorcerer ring on their finger for good of that color, of the gem-stone that matches. the house that I belong too for now and always in the afterlife.

Ah, said a nasty little voice in his brain, but their Sorcererring Hat wanted to put you in Andreassen, don't you remember?

Naddalin turned over, she would see Joy there next day in Angel-magical-a-ology and she would explain that she had been calling their dark angel of the love of final death off, not egging it on, which (she thought angrily, pummeling her pillow,) any fool should have grasped.

However, that night she was thinking more about then seeing the one years - have their first Angel of Flight class, with new grown wings and bodies still nude not yet time to have whippy robes light webbed coverings, fresh red dripping blood still on them as they start to flap. The names of their make dripping from the backs as it was cut in the flesh.

Chapter: 146

Lily-

I alleged getting to know her, and yes she still is the same young age she was then, that no little girl should die a virgin girl, and be lost in a home and school longing for a boy, so that night she and I snuck into a boy bedroom, that she was crushing on, back on Earth, and she had sex with him, for the first time, and he knew she was with him and the other way around, he could see her in transparency, yet feel like she was the one...

No, she can be at rest... the right thing to do right...? I thought...

She got what she wanted a boy...

And- to love her for her even in supernatural form, we still want to be loved.

I was looking over... them with wings over the bed...

She said for weeks that he drives past my old home, and school every day think about me... and looks at my graying old timeworn' the body of Neveah'; so-o I love him... for remembering me... - and she had many c*m's with him...

Don't worry, I feel she may transfer over to a real girl the angel on Earth, when she feels, that she found the right look, body... to take over, it's just a matter of time. In his hometown... and to love him... well make this happen she only had to long for 200 or fewer years...

I am sure of it... to reincarnate... to look like one yet still be one of us...

That night she was playing and teasing with him it was so cute - he was 17, to see them c*m, whit, her on the bottom... sighing in mons with his thrusts. He knew it was more than just a dream!

(The boy)

My girl Lily- not of this world!

You are the ghost that haunts me, we do all the thing that some normal couples would do, yet I am the only one that can see her, the only one that cares about her; however, we have love and that is more than and that enough to explain the undeliverable of it all, and all that supernatural, or not, that is not going to stop us from having the ties, that bond us together, worlds apart even...

My mother thinks I have gone crazy, she sees me talking to myself, and doing then with this girl that looks wrong, I know she is there, yet she cannot get it. It does not matter all I really need is her.

Part: 1

Naddalin- By next morning, however, their snow that had begun in there night had turned into a blizzard so thick that there last Herbology lesgirl of there term was canceled: Professor Burgeon wanted to fit socks and scarves on their Mandrakes, a tricky operation she would entrust to no one else, now that it was so important for their Mandrakes to grow quickly and revive Mr.'S. Norris and Colin Creve.

Naddalin fretted about this next to their fire in their Amsel common room, while Jinger and Emmah used their time off to play a game of wizard chess, white and cobalt blue.

And, for heaven's sake, Naddalin, and said Emmah, exasperated, as one of horses and bishops, wrestled her knight off her horse and dragged her off their board, after all t his was life-sized, and played dirty this game.

Everything in the game came to life all the pieces... of the game board with a flick of our wizardly wounds or a point of our fallen angel fingers tips I have both.

And- go and find Joy if it is so important to you.

-And-

So-o, Naddalin got up and left through there aperture, wondering where Joy might be, she was going to be one the railroad today just for fun- it was a Sunday to you and me- yet even here it's taken as a day of rest and fun.

(Train Ride to Savanna anyone, the lost town at the end of the line that was shut down years back, into Rockville and the to the old cemetery- and her girlfriends all said- 'Yeah...' along with saying and- see if we can find new girls to bring back and under... with us, that are lost in their life, like us at one time said- Emma.)

And that what they did- the got a new girl- that was going to kill herself that night anyway, named: Haven... see she had fallen, so she would not have to face high school, with mean-ie's.

Part: 2

The castle was darker than it usually was in the daytime because of their thick, swirling gray snow at every window. Shivering, Naddalin walked past classrooms where the lesson was taken place, catching snatches of what was happening within.

Professor Ashly was shouting at someone who, by their sound of it, had turned her friend into a badger.

Resisting their urge to look, Naddalin walked on by, thinking that, Joy might be using her free time to catch up on some work, and decided to check their library first.

A group of there Silva who should have been in biology were indeed sitting at their back of their library, but they did not seem to be working. All so everything was relating back to the wizardly world.

Between their long lines of high bookshelves, the books also shimmered with wonder, Naddalin could see that their heads were close together, and they were having what looked like an absorbing conversation.

She could not see whether Joy was among them or not.

She was strolling toward term when something of what they were saying met her ears, and she had to just paused to listen, hidden in their Invisibility section.

And- so-o anyway, like that girl was saying, and told Joy to hide up in our dormitory. I mean to say, if -'s marked her down as his next victim, it's best if she keeps a low profile for a while.

Of course, Joy is being waited for something like this to happen ever since she let slip - she was nonmagical people-born. Joy told her she had been down for Ellie.

That is not their kind of thing you bandy about with Andreassen's heir on their loose, is it?

-And-

And, you think it is, then, Ernie?

And said a girl with blonde pigtails anxiously.

And, Hannah, and said their stout girl solemnly, and she's a Parse mouth. Everyone knows that's their mark of a dark demon angel. Have you ever heard of a decent one who could talk to dark angels? They called Andreassen herself Serpent-tongue.

-And-

There was some heavy murmuring at this, and Ernie went on, And - Remember what was written on their wall?

Enemies of their Here, Beware. - had some sort of run-in with Filch. Next thing we know, cats attacked.

That first year, Creevey, was annoying - at their Claepsiara match, taking pictures of her while she was lying in their mud. Next thing we know - Creve's been attacked.

And- Then- she always seems so nice, though, and said Hannah indecisively, and besides, well, she is their one who made - You Know- Who disappear. She cannot be all bad, can she?

-And-

Ernie lowered her voice mysteriously, there Silva bent closer, and Naddalin edged nearer so that she could catch Ernie's words.

-And-

No one knows how she survived that attack by - You-Know-Whom.

I mean to say; she was only a baby when it happened. She should have been blasted to smithereens.

Only a powerful dark demon angel of wizardry could have endured a curse like that.

-And- she dropped her voice until it was scarcely more than a whisper, and said, and - That has why You- Know-Whom wanted to kill her in there first place, don't you? I did not want another Dark Lord competing with her. I wonder what other powers -'s been hiding?

-And-

Naddalin could not take any more.

Part: 3

Clearing her throat loudly, she stepped out from behind their bookshelves, holding a book that was animating itself, as the pages moved by themselves.

If she had not been feeling so annoyed, she would have found their sight that greeted her funny: Every one of their Silva, looked as though they had been Petrified by their sight of her, and their colors were draining out of Ernie's face.

-And-

Hello, and said Naddalin. And- I am looking for Joy Santah- Sletcherle.

-And-

Silva's worst fears had clearly been confirmed. They all looked fearfully at Ernie.

And- What do you want with her?

And- said Ernie in a tottering voice.

And- I wanted to tell her what really happened with that dark angel at their Dueling Club, and said Naddalin.

Ernie bit his white lips and then, taken a deep breath, said, And We were all there. We saw what happened.

-And-

And- then you noticed, that after I spoke to it, their dark angel-backed off? And said Naddalin.

And- All I saw, And- said Ernie stubbornly, though she was trembling as she speaking, and was you speaking Reports and chasing their dark angel toward Joy.

-And-

And- I did not chase it at her! Naddalin said, her voice shaking with anger. And- It did not even touch her!

-And-

And- It was a very near Miss. Smith, and said, Ernie. Besides, in case you are getting ideas, she added hastily, I might tell you that, you can trace my family back through nine generations of spectators and sorcerers, angels fallen or not, and my blood is as pure as anyone is, so-o.

Besides- I do not care what sort of blood you have! This was said by- Naddalin fiercely. Why?

Why would I want to attack Nonmagical people- borns?

And- I have heard you hate those

Nonmagical peoples, you live with and said Ernie swiftly.

And, it is not possible to live with their Sleyashs and not hate them, and said Naddalin, and, I would like to see you try it.

-And-

Naddalin blundered up the corridor, barely noticing where she was going, she was in such a hurry.

The result was that she walked into something very huge and solid, which knocked her backward onto their floor.

And- oh, hello, Deride, And Naddalin said, looking up.

A woolly, snow-covered balaclava entirely hid Darcie's face, but it could not be anyone else, as she felt most of the corridor in her far overcoat. A dead fowl was hanging from one of her massive, gloved hands.

And, All right' de, Naddalin? And, she said, pulling up their balaclava so she could speak. And, why aren't yah in class?

Likewise, canceled, and said Naddalin, getting up. Above and beyond that, what are you doing here?

Deride held up their limp fowl.

And, the second one killed this term, and she explained, why.... and, it is either foxes or a Blood-Sucking Bear with fangs the size of your arms, besides- I need their Headmaster's permission term put a charm around their coop, to see why they are passing.

Part: 4

Then she peered more closely at Naddalin, and from under her thick, snow-flecked eyebrows and covered up eyelashes, and freckles on her pink rosy cheeks.

Like, like, like- um are you, sure you're all right...?

Yah looks all hot an' bothered -and...

Naddalin could not bring herself to repeat what Ernie and the rest of their Silva had been saying about her, and, it is nothing, and she said. Like, I had better get going, Deride, it is Transfiguration next, and I must pick up my books; plus, then, she walked off, her mind still full of what Ernie had said about her.

Moreover, Joy is being waited for something like this to happen ever since she let slip to - she was Nonmagical people-born... thus... Naddalin stamped up their stairs and turned along another corridor, which was particularly dark; their torches had been extinguished by a Jigger, icy draft that was blowing through a loose windowpane.

Consequently... she was halfway down their passage when she tripped headlong over something lying on their floor. Then she turned to squint at what she had fallen over and felt as though her belly had dissolved.

Joy- Santah- Sletcherrie was lying on their floor, rigid and cold, a look of shock frozen on his face, his eyes staring blankly at their ceiling. Hence... that was not it at all... Next to her was another figure, their strangest sight- Naddalin had ever seen.

It was Headless Saula, the girl that cut her own off, back in the 1900s, no longer pearly-white and translucent, but black and smoky, floating immobile and horizontal, six inches off their floor. She was looking at me with red eyes. We have chatted, yet not much... really. Her head was semidetached in this form she was taking, and her face wore an expression of shock identical to Joy's.

Naddalin got to her feet, her breathing fast and shallow, not knowing this girl like this and not think she could change into this or that... her heart doing a kind of like a xylophone, with the millets against her ribs. She looked up wildly and then down, their deserted access strip and saw a line of spiders scuttling as fast as they could away from her young sooky body, she was looking like a rotting corpse, in this ghostly form. The only sounds where there - muffled voices of teachers from their classes on either side. She could run, and no one would ever know she had been there.

As she stood there, be terrified, a door right next to her opened with a bang. Peeves their Ghost came shooting out. Nonetheless, she could not just leave them lying here... she had to get help... Would anyone have faith in her, had not had anything to do with this?

Naddalin- Only here girls would get it... she thought...

Chapter: 147

Part: 1

And, why, it is putty wee -! And, cackled peeves, knowing Naddalin's glasses askew as she bounced past her. And, What's - up to? Why's - looking -and, peeves stopped, halfway through a mid-air somersault. Upside down, she spotted Joy and semi headless Saula. She flipped the right way up, filled her lungs and before Naddalin could stop she, screamed, And ATTACK! ATTACK!

ADDED ATTACK!

NO MORTAL OR IMPRESSION IS SAFE!

RUN FOR YOUR LIVES! ATTA-A-A-ACK-ing!

Smash - crash - bash- at their door after door flew open along their corridor and people flooded out.

For several long minutes, there was a scene of such confusion that Joy was in danger of being squashed and people kept standing in Headless Saula.

Naddalin found herself pinned against their wall as their teachers shouted for quiet. Professor Ashly came running, followed by her own class, one of whom still had black-and-white-striped hair.

She used her wound to set off a nosey-checking bang, which restored silence, and ordered everyone back into their classes.

No like- um sooner had their scene cleared than Ernie their Unfluffy arrived, panting, on their scene.

And Caught in their act! And, Ernie yelled, her face stark white, pointing her finger dramatically at Naddalin. Besides, Fleur is not stupid, she was good enough to enter their Tizard Tournament, and said Naddalin. Named for the man that started it all back when he was a teacher here, under potions and a magical chemist.

Then, Not you as well! And said Emmah bitterly.

At that point, I suppose you like their way Phlegm says 'Any,' do you? And, asked Jill scornfully.

And, No, and said Naddalin, wishing she had not spoken, And I was just saying Phlegm... I mean, Fleur... accordingly... I would much rather have Tonks in their family and said, Jill. And, At least she is a laugh. Besides, she has not been much of a laugh lately and said Jinger. Henceforth, every time, I have seen her she is looked more like Moaning Myrtle. Hitherto, that is not fair, snapped Emmah; she still is not over what happened... you know... I mean, she was her cousin!

-And-

Naddalin's heart sank... They had arrived at Trius. She picked up a fork and began shoveling scrambled eggs into her mouth, hoping to deflect any invitation to join in this part of their conversation.

Furthermore, like and Trius barely knew each other! Said Jinger, besides, Trius was in Dizeryland, just outside of the land of the castle half her life and before, that their families never - ever met... so-o like, that is not their point, and said Emmah. Besides, she thinks it was her edge... he died... her dad! And, she was not going to take it... that was why she was here anyway.

And, how does she work that one out? And, asked Naddalin, despite herself. And, Well, she was fighting Bellatrix Estrange, wasn't she? I's think she feels that if only she had finished her off, Bellatrix could not have killed Trius.

And, that is stupid and said Jinger.

And, it is a survivor's guilt and said Emmah. And, she and I know Lapin's tried to talk her round, but she is still down. She is having trouble with her Metamorphosing!

And, with her...?

And, she cannot change her appearance like she used to, and explained Emmah. And think her powers must have been affected by shock, or something, did not know that could happen, and said Naddalin, nor did I, and said Emmah, but I suppose if you are really depressed, their door opened again and Mr.'s.

Railie popped her head in.

Jill and she whispered, and come downstairs, and help me with their lunch. I am toluene to this lot! And said Jill, outraged. Now...! Said, Mr.'s. Railie, and withdrew. She only wants me there, so she does not have to be alone with Phlegm!

And said, Jill, crossly. She swung her long golden hair around in a very good imitation of Fleur and pranced across there room with her arms held aloft like a ballet dancer.

And, you lot had better come down quickly too, and she said as she left.

Naddalin took advantage of their temporary silence to eat more breakfast. Emmah was peering into Céline and Katy's boxes, though every now and then she cast sideways looks at Naddalin.

Jinger, who was now helping herself to Naddalin's toast, was still gazing dreamily at their door. Also, what is this? And, Emmah asked eventually, holding up what looked like a small telescope.

Neabah, and said Jinger, and but if Céline and Katy left it here, it is not ready for their joke shop yet, so be careful. And, And, your mom said their shop is going well and said Naddalin.

And, Said Céline and Katy have a real flair for business.

That is an understatement and said Jinger.

And, they are funeral Mass in their Galleons! I cannot wait to see their place, we have not been to Dagon Alley yet because Ma' says Dad is got to be there for extra security and she is being busy at work, but it sounds excellent, and what about Percy? And, asked Naddalin; their third-eldest Railie girl kid had fallen out with the rest of their family. Also, is she toluene to your mom and dad again?

Besides, nope, and said Jinger.

Nevertheless, she knows your dad was right all along now about Waltemath being back... Then at that time, and place at that very moment, Old- McDermott says folks find it far easier to forgive others for being winger than being right and said Emmah. Besides like I um - heard her telling your mom, Jinger. As well as this all sounds like their mental thing old- McDermott would say and said Jinger.

Above and beyond, she is going to be giving me private ledgers this year and said Naddalin conversationally.

Jinger Hayvannah on his bit of toast and Emmah gasped.

And, you kept that quiet! And said Jinger.

And, only just remembered, and said Naddalin honestly. In addition, she told me last night in your broom herd.

Then, besides, in addition, and also- Joannah... private ledgers with Duerre! Also- said Jinger, looking impressed. Also, she and I are my girl lover wonders why she is...?

-And-

Her voice trailed away...

Naddalin saw her and Emmah exchange looks. Naddalin laid down his knife and fork, her heart beating fast considering, that all she was doing was sitting in bed. Duerre had said to do it...

Why not now? She fixed his eyes on her fork, which was gleaming in their sunlight streaming into his lap, and said, And I do not know exactly why she is going to be giving me ledgers, but I think it must be because of their prophecy.

Part: 2

Likewise, unanimously- I kissed her that night long and slow...

Neither Jinger nor Emmah spoke. Naddalin had their impression, that both had frozen. She is and was continuing, still speaking to her fork, and yeah know, there one they were trying to steal at their Ministry.

Besides... moreover, nobody knows what it said, though, and said Emmah quickly. And, it got smashed, equally, besides, and although, like their Prophet says... commenced Jinger, but then again Emmah said, Sh-h!

Equally and then their Prophet is got it right, there same said Naddalin, looking up at them both with a heroic effort: Emmah seemed frightened and Jinger amazed. And, that glass ball that smashed was not the only record of their prophecy.

I heard their whole thing in Duerre's office, she was their one their prophecy was made to, so she could tell me.

From what it said, And Naddalin took a deep breath, and it looks like I am their one who is got to finish off Waltemath... At least, it said neither of us could live while their other survives.

-Else-

The three of them gazed at one another in silence for a moment. Then there was a loud bang and Emmah vanished behind a puff of black smoke.

Similarly, Emmah! And, shouted

Naddalin and Jinger; their breakfast tray slid to their floor with a crash.

Emmah emerged, coughing, out of their smoke, clutching their telescope and sporting a brilliantly purple-ie black eye.

And, she and I's, squeezed it and it... it punched me! Similarly, she did as I said, she gasped, she jumped into my arms, I held her tightly.

In addition, sure enough, they now saw a tiny fist on a long spring protruding from there end of their telescope.

Then, do not worry, similarly said Jinger, who was plainly trying not to laugh, their same Mom will fix that, she is good at heralding minor injuries...

Similarly, and OH well, never-mind that now!

Besides said Emmah hastily. And, Naddalin, oh, Naddalin...

And She sat down on their edge of her bed again, nude, and We wondered after we got back from their Ministry...

Obviously, we did not want to say anything to you, but from what Lucius Mallerie said about their prophecy, how it was about you and Waltemath, well, we thought it might be something like this...

Oh, Naddalin... and Her stared at her, then whispered, and are you scared?

-And-

Like- like- like um- not as much as I's was, and said Naddalin. And, When I first heard it, I partially was... but now, it appears I for one always- like- like I'm freaking- knew I would have to face her in their end...

-Similarly-

Part: 3

And, when we heard, Duerre was collecting you in pergirl- years for flying lesions, we thought she might be telling you something or showing you something to do with their prophecy, and said Jinger eagerly.

In addition, and we were kind of right, weren't we? She would not be giving you ledgers if she thought you were a goner, would not waste her freaking-frapp'n time... she must think you have a chance!

-And-

Like sh*t- that is true and said Emmah.

Besides the wonder what she will teach you, Naddalin? Advanced defensive magic... powerful counter curses... ant jinxes...

-And-

Naddalin did not really listen.

A warmth was spreading through her that had nothing to do with their sunlight; a tight obstruction in her chest seemed to be dissolving.

She knew that Jinger and Emmah were more shocked than they were letting on, but their mere fact that they were still there on either side of her, speaking bracing words of comfort, not shrinking from her as though she were contaminated or dangerous, was worth more than she could ever tell them.

And evasive enchantments and concluded Emmah. And, Well, at least you know one lesser you will be having this year, that is one more than Jinger and me. I wonder when our FLYING HORSES results will come? And also, our first flight testing- ones too, with our own wings. IT- is like- cannot be long now, it is being a month, and said Jinger.

Um, yah- ha- hang on, and said Naddalin, as another part of last night's conversation, came back to her. And think Duerre said our FLYING HORSES results would be arriving today!

-Equally- ...Splendid...

Part: 4

HUM, Today... today? Too shrieked Emmah. And, Today? But why did not you... oh my God... you should have said...

Besides...

She leaped to her feet.

Like, I am going to see whether any Flying horses with wings have come...

Besides like when Naddalin arrived downstairs ten minutes later, fully dressed and carrying her empty breakfast tray, it was to find Emmah sitting at their kitchen table in great agitation, while Mr.'s. Railie tried to lessen her resemblance to half a and, here Also she had thrown their chain around her neck too.

And, Ready?

And, she said breathlessly.

And, what are we doing?

And, Naddalin said, completely lost.

'I reckon it is over, ya know!' Said Deride.

Like she was still squinting towards there stadium.

'Look there are individuals are like coming' out already if yah two hurry you'll be able to tier blend in with their crowd an' no one will know yah were not there!'

'Good idea,' said Naddalin.

'Well... see you later, then, deride.'

'I do not believe her,' said Emmah in a very unsteady voice, there moment they were out of earshot of Deride.' I do not believe her; I really do not believe her.'

'Calm down,' said Naddalin.

'Calm down!' She said feverishly...

'A giant...! A giant in their Forest! In addition, we're supposed to give her English books!

Always assuming, unquestionably, we can get past their herd of murderous centaurs on their way in and out! I do not believe her!'

'We do not have to do anything yet!'

Naddalin tried to reassure her in a quiet voice, as they joined a stream of jabbering Silva heading back towards their castle.

She's not asking us to do anything unless she gets chucked out and that might not even happen.'

'Oh, come off it, Naddalin!' Said Emmah angrily, stopping dead in her tracks so that their people behind had to swerve to avoid her.

'Of course, she is going to be chucked out and, to be perfectly honest, after what we have just seen, who can blame Ambridge?'

~*~

Look there is the old Rockville bridge...

Haven was feeling homesick why I don't know she flies down to is and haunt, like the girl before her.

~*~

(The here and now)

There was a pause in which Naddalin glared at her, and her eyes filled with tears.

'You did not mean that,' said Naddalin quietly.

Chapter: 148

Part: 1

'No... well... all right... I did not,' she said, wiping her eyes angrily. 'But why does she have to make life so difficult for herself for us?' 'Nah...'

'Railie is our Queen, Railie is our Queen, she did not let their Quaffed in, Railie is da' queen...'

'And I wish they would stop singing that stupid girl,' said Emmah miserably, 'haven't they gloated enough?'

A great tide of students was moving up their sloping lawns from there pitch.

‘Oh, let us get in before we must meet there

Andreasen's,' said Emmah. 'Railie can save anything, her never-ever leaves a single ring, that is why.

Amsel's all sing: Railie is our Queen.'

‘Emmah...' said Naddalin flying horses'.

Part: 2

The girl was growing louder, but it was issuing not from a crowd of emerald and cream clad Andreasen's, but from a mass of alizarin and cream moving slowly towards their castle, orange with cream and then also aqua and cream, bearing a solitary figure upon its many shoulders. All the colors of our girls' teams- each with their own coat of arms.

‘Railie is our Queen, Railie is our Queen, her did not let their Quaffed in, Railie is our Queen...'

‘No?’ Said Emmah in a hushed voice.

‘YES!’ Said Naddalin loudly.

‘NADDALIN! EMMAH!’ yelled Jinger, waving their cream Claepsiara cup in their air, quite beside herself.

‘WE DID IT! WE WON!’

They beamed up at her as she passed. There was a scrum at the door of their castle and Jinger's head got badly bumped on their lintel, but nobody seemed to want to put her down.

Still singing, their crowd squeezed itself into their Entrance Hall and out of sight.

Naddalin and Emmah watched them go, beaming, until their last Hayvanna strains of 'Railie is our Queen' died away.

Then they turned to each other, their smiles fading.

‘We'll save our news till Hayvanna- harrow, shall we?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Yes, all right,’ said Emmah wearily. ‘I'm not in any hurry.’

They climbed their steps together. At their Jigger doors both instinctively looked back at their Forbidden Forest.

Naddalin was not sure whether it was his imagination, but she thought she saw a small cloud of birds erupting into their air over their treetops in their distance, as though their tree in which they had been nesting had just been pulled up by their roots.

Jinger's euphoria at helping Amsel scrape their Claepsiara cup was such that she could not settle to anything next day.

All she like wanted to do was talk over their match, so Naddalin and Emmah found it very difficult to find an opening in which to mention Graw.

Not that either of them tried very hard; neither was keen to be there one to bring Jinger back to reality in quite such a brutal fashion.

As it was another fine, warm day, they persuaded her to join them in revising under their beech tree at the edge of their lake, where they had less chance of being overheard than in their common room.

Jinger was not particularly keen on this idea at first- she was thoroughly enjoying being patted on their back by every Amsel who walked past her chair, not to mention their occasional outbursts of 'Railie is our Queen...' Yet, but after a while, she agreed that some fresh air might do her good.

They spread their books out in the shade of their beech tree and sat down while Jinger talked them through her first save of their match for what felt like their dozenth time.

'Well, I mean, I had already let in that one of Daviess, so I was not feeling all that confident, but I Neabah, when Bradley came towards me, just out of nowhere, I thought um- you can do this!

Part: 3

And I had about a second to decide which way to fly, you know, because she looked like she was aiming for their right goal hoop my right, obviously, his left but I had a funny feeling that she was fainting, and so, I took their chance and flew left her right, I mean and well you saw what happened,' she then concluded modestly, sweeping her hair back quite unnecessarily so that it looked interestingly windswept and glancing around to see whether there people nearest to them - a bunch of gossiping third year Silva - had heard her.

‘And then, when Chambers came to me about five minutes later...’ ‘What?’ Jinger asked, having stopped mid-sentence at their look on Naddalin’s face. ‘Why are you grinning?’

‘I’m not,’ said Naddalin quickly, and looked down at her Transfiguration notes, trying to straighten her face.

The truth was that Jinger had just reminded Naddalin forcibly of another Amsel Claepsiara player who had once sat rumpling his hair under this very tree. ‘I’m just glad we won, that is all.’

‘Yeah,’ said Jinger sullyng, savoring their words, ‘yeah we won. Did you see there look on Changes face when Jill got there Snitch right out from under her nose?’

‘I suppose she cried, did she?’ Said Naddalin bitterly.

‘Well, yes more out of temper than anything, though...’ Jinger frowned slightly. ‘But you saw her chuck her broom away when she got back to their ground, didn’t you?’

‘Err,’ said Naddalin.

‘Well, ... no, Jinger,’ said Emmah with a heavy sigh, putting down her book and Pa. at her apologetically. ‘As a matter of fact, there only a bit of their match Naddalin and I saw was Davies’s first goal.’

Jinger’s carefully ruffled hair seemed to wilt with disappointment. ‘You did not watch?’ She said faintly, Pa. from one to three other.

‘You did not see me make any of those saves?’ ‘Well no,’ said Emmah, stretching out a placatory hand towards her. ‘Nonetheless Jinger, we did not want to leave - we had to!’ ‘Yeah?’ said Jinger, whose face was growing enflamed. ‘How come...?’

‘It was Deride,’ said Naddalin. She decided to tell us why she is being covered in injuries ever since she got back from there giants. She wanted us to go into their Forest with her, we had no choice, you know how she gets, anyway...’

The story was told in five minutes, by their end of which Jinger's indignation had been replaced by a look of total incredulity.

'She brought one back and hid it in their Forest?'

'Yepper,' said Naddalin appallingly.

'No,' said Jinger, as though by saying this she could make it untrue.' No, she cannot have.'

'Well, she has,' said Emmah definitely.'

Grasps about sixteen feet tall, enjoys ripping up twenty-foot pine trees, and knows me,' she snorted,' as she...'

Jinger gave a nervous laugh.

'And Deride wants us to...?'

Teach her English, yes,' said Naddalin.

'She's lost her mind,' said Jinger in an almost awed voice.

Part: 4

'OH-Yes,' said Emmah irritably, turning a page of Intermediate Transfiguration and glaring at a series of diagrams showing some Flying horses turning into a pair of opera glasses.

'Yes, yes, yes- I am starting to think she has. But, unfortunately, she made Naddalin and my promise.'

'Well, you are just going to have to break your promise, that is all,' said Jinger firmly. 'I mean, come on... we have exams and where about that far' she then held up her hand to show thumb and forefinger almost touching...' from being chucked out as it is. And anyway... remember- Norrah?

Remember Aragon? Have we ever come off better for mixing with any of Derides monster mates?'

'I know, it is just that we promised,' said Emmah in a small voice.

Jinger smoothed his hair flat again, seemingly- preoccupied.

‘Well,’ the sides, ‘Deride has not been sacked yet, has she? Her hung on this long, she’ll hang on until their end of term and we will not have to go near Graw at all.’

Their castle grounds were gleaming in their sunlight as though freshly painted; their cloudless sky smiled at itself in their smoothly sparkling lake; their satin green lawns rippled occasionally in a gentle breeze. June had arrived, but in their fifth years, this meant only one thing: their flying horses with wings whereupon term at last.

Their teachers were no longer setting term homework; ledgers were devoted to revising those topics their teachers thought most likely to come up in their exams.

There purposeful, feverish atmosphere drove everything but their Flying horses with wings from Naddalin’s mind, though she did wonder occasionally during Potions ledgers whether Sevket had ever told Gonzales that she must continue giving Naddalin Occlumency tuition. If she had then Gonzales had ignored Sevket as thoroughly as she was now ignoring Naddalin.

This suited Naddalin is very sweet. well; she was quite busy and tense enough without extra classes with snaps’, and to her relief, Emmah was much too preoccupied these days to badger her about Occlumency; she was spending a lot of time muttering to herself and had not laid out any elf clothes for days.

He was not their only girl acting oddly as their Flying horses with wings drew steadily nearer. Ernie Macmillan had developed an irritating habit of interrogating people about their revision practices.

‘How many hours you think you are doing a day?’ So-o she demanded of Naddalin and Jinger as they queued outside Herbology, a manic gleam in her eyes.

‘Nah,’ said Jinger. ‘A few...’

‘More or less than eight?’

‘Less, I’s-pose,’ said Jinger, slightly alarmed.

‘I’m doing eight,’ said Ernie, puffing out her chest.

‘Eight or nine. I am getting an hour before breakfast every day. Eights my average. I can do ten on a good weekend day. I did nine and a half on Monday. Not so good on Tuesday, only seven and a quarter. Then on Wednesday...'

Naddalin was deeply thankful that Professor Burgeon seed term into greenhouse three at that point, forcing Ernie to abandon his recital.

Meanwhile, Draco Mallerie had found a different way to induce terror.

'Of course, it is not what you know,' she was heard to tell Crabbe and Gayle loudly outside Potions a few days before their exams where to start,' it's who you know. Now,

Daddy is being friendly with their head of their- Wizarding Examinations Authority for years - old Annette Valdez banks we have had her round for dinner and everything...'

'Do you think that is true?' Emmah whispered in alarm to Naddalin and Jinger.

'Nothing we can do about it if it is,' said Jinger gloomily.

Naddalin-'I's do not think it is true,' said.

Neville quietly from behind them.' Because, Annette Valdez Rows, is a friend of my grants, and she is never-ever mentioned there Malleries.'

'What's she like, Neville?' Asked Emmah at once.' Is she strict...?'

Part: 5

'Well, she has,' said Emmah firmly.' Grasps about sixteen feet tall, enjoys ripping up twenty-foot pine trees, and knows me,' she snorted,' as Emmah.' Jinger gave a nervous laugh...

'Then deride wants us to...?'

'Teach her English, yes,' said Naddalin.

'she's lost his mind,' said Jinger in an almost awed voice.

'Yes,' said Emmah irritably, turning a page of Intermediate Transfiguration, and glaring at a series of diagrams showing a flying angel like me, and she is turning into a pair of performance glasses.' Yes, I am starting to think she has. But, unfortunately, she made

Naddalin and I promise.'

‘Well, you are just going to have to break your promise, that is all,’ said Jinger firmly. ‘I mean, come on... we have exams and were about that far...’ She held up his hand to show thumb and forefinger almost touching’ from being chuckled out as it is.

And anyway... remember Norrah?

Remember Samorah?

Have we ever come off better for mixing with any of derides monster mates?’

‘I’s know, it is just that we promised,’ said Emmah in a small voice.

Jinger smoothed his hair flat again, going from one world into another- into and over many lands, seaming yet again preoccupied.

‘Well,’ she side,’ Deride has not been sacked yet, has she? She is hung on this long; shell hang on till there end of term and we will not have to go near Graw at all.’

The castle grounds, where gleaming in there sunbeams as though freshly painted; the cloudless sky beamed at itself in there effortlessly sparkling lake; there satin green lush lawns rippled sporadically in a gentle breeze.

June had arrived, but in their fifth years, this meant only one thing: their Flying horses with wings whereupon them at last.

Their teachers were no longer setting them homework; ledgers were devoted to revising those topics their teachers thought most likely to come up in their exams.

The purposeful, feverish atmosphere drove everything but with their wings from Naddalin’s mind, though she did wonder occasionally during Potions ledgers whether Sevket had ever told Gonzales that she must continue giving Naddalin Occlumency tuition.

If her hands, then Gonzales had ignored Sevket as thoroughly as she was now ignoring Naddalin. This suited Naddalin very well; she was quite busy and tense enough without extra classes with Gonzales, and to his relief, Emmah was much too preoccupied these days to badger her about Occlumency; she was spending a lot of time muttering to herself and had not laid out any fairy clothes for days.

She was not there only particular acting oddly as their flying horses with wings drew steadily nearer. Ernie Macmillan had developed an irritating habit of interrogating folks about their revision practices.

‘How many hours you think you are doing a day?’

She demanded of Naddalin and Jinger as they queued outside of biology a manic gleam in her eyes.

‘I- neither,’ said Jinger. ‘A few times.’

‘More or less than eight?’

‘Less, I’m s-pose,’ said Jinger, slightly more alarmed.

‘I’m doing all right,’ said Ernie, puffing out her chest. ‘Eight or nine, I am getting an hour before breakfast every day.’

Eights my average, I can do ten on a good weekend day.

I did nine and a half on Monday. Not so good on Tuesday only seven and a quarter; then on Wednesday Naddalin was deeply thankful that Professor Burgeon seeds them into orangery three at that point, forcing Ernie to abandon his recital.

Meanwhile, Drallieah Mallerie had found a unique way to induce terror.

‘Of course, it is not what you know,’ she was heard- to tell Carllah and Sayale loudly outside Potions a few days before there exams where to start,’ it’s who you know. Now, Daddy is being friendly with their head of their wizarding from dream angels, too dark ones, too angle of death, to demon angels- examinations authorities for years old Annette Valdez Rows, um like we have had her round for dinner and, everything...’

‘Do you think that is so-o?’ Emmah then whispered in alarm to Naddalin and Jinger.

Nothing we can do about it if it is,’ said Jinger gloomily.

‘I do not think it is true,’ said Neville quietly from behind them. ‘Because Annette Valdez Rows is a friend of my grants, and she is never mentioned there Malleries.’ ‘what is she like,

Neville?’ Asked Emmah at once. ‘Is she strict...?’

‘Bit like Nanna, really,’ said Neville in an unresponsive voice.

‘Knowing she will not hurt your chances, though, will it?’ Jinger told her hearteningly. ‘Oh, I do not think it will make any difference,’ said Neville, still more dejectedly.

‘Nanas always telling Professor Valdez Rows, I am not as good as my dad... well... you saw what she is like at St. Songoalz’s, Neville looked fixedly at their floor. Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah glanced at each other but did not know what to say.

Part: 6

It was there first-time Neville had to attract flying horses edged that they had met at their wizarding hospital.

Meanwhile, a flourishing black-market trade in aids to concentration, mental agility, and wakefulness had sprung up among their fifth and seventh years.

(Back)

Naddalin and Jinger were much tempted by their bottle of Baurioids Brain Elixir offered to them by Raven claw the sixth year Ellieah Carmichael, who swore it was solely responsible for their nine ‘Outstanding’ Flying horses with wings her had gained there earlier summer and was offering a whole pint for a mere twelve Galleons.

Jinger assured Naddalin she would reimburse her for his half there moment her left SKOUFYCEOL and got a job, but before they could close their deal, Emmah had confiscated their bottle from Carmichael and poured their contents down a toilet.

‘Emmah, we wanted to buy that!’ Shouted Jinger.

‘Don’t be stupid,’ she snarled at me like a girl-ie dog in heat. ‘You might as well take Hanna Dingle’s powdered dark angels to claw and have done with it.’

‘Dingles got powdered dark angels’ claw?’ said Jinger eagerly.

‘Not anymore,’ said Emmah. ‘I’m confiscated that, too. None of these things work, you know.’

‘Dark Angels' claw does work!’ Said Jinger. It’s supposed to be incredible, really gives your brain a boost, you come over all cunning for a few hours Emmah, let me have a pinch, go on, it cannot hurt ‘This stuff can,’ said Emmah grimly. ‘I’ve had a look at it, and it is dried Doxy droppings.’

This information took their edge off Naddalin and Jigger's desire for brain stimulants.

They received their examination timetables and details of their procedure for Flying horses with wings during their next Transfiguration lesson.

‘As you can see,’ Professor Ashly told their class as they copied down their dates and times of their exams from there blackboard, ‘you’re Flying horses with wings are spread over two successive weeks. You will sit their theory papers in their mornings, and their repetition in their afternoons. Your practical Stingray examination will, of course, take place at night.

‘Now, I must warn you that there most stringent antic hating charms have been as applied to your examination papers.

Auto Answering Typewriters, along with crammed notes books are banned from there examination hall, as are remember-rings, metal- nibbed pre-teen wing-feather pens- with hex’s, and fairy-correcting wing ink that is invisible on less charmed on the paper by the user.

Every year, I am afraid to say, seems to the harbor at least one student who thinks that she or she can get around there Wizarding Examinations Authority’s rules.

I can only hope that it is nobody in Amsel.

Our new Headmistress’ Professor Ashly inference their word with their same look on her face that Aunt Jennath had whenever she was contemplating a particularly stubborn bit of dirt...

‘Has asked their Heralds of House to tell their schoolgirls, that cheating will be punished most severely, because, of course, your examination results will reflect upon there

Headmistress’s new regime at their Hayvannah.’

Professor Ashly gave a tiny sigh; Naddalin saw their nostrils of her sharp nose flare.

Part: 7

‘Like however, that is no regard to do your very best. You have your own futures to think about.’

‘Please, Professor,’ said Emmah, her hand in their air, ‘when will we find out our results?’

A flying horse will be sent to you sometime in July-’ said Professor McGonagall.

‘Excellent,’ said Lacy Thomas in an audible whisper, ‘so-o we do not have to worry about it until the day’s off.’

(Feelings)

Naddalin she imagined sitting in his bedroom in Privet Drive in six weeks...’ time, waiting for her FLYING HORSES results.

Well, her thought uninterestingly, at least she would be sure of one bit of post that summer.

Their first examination, Theory of Charms were scheduled for Monday morning.

I- Naddalin thought about this: charm-ed lives she thought... the only one like me I know of had that- and even then, she had hell to pay... to her.

Naddalin agreed to test Emmah after lunch on Sunday, but regretted it at once; she was very agitated and kept snatching their book back from her to check that she had gotten there answer completely right, finally hitting her hard on their nose with their sharp edge of accomplishments in charming.

‘Why do not you just do it yourself?’ She said firmly, handing their book back to her, his eyes watering.

Meanwhile, Jinger was reading two years’ worth of Charms notes with his fingers in his ears, his lips moving soundlessly; Laila Finnigan was lying flat on his back on their floor, reciting their definition of a Substantive Charm while Lacy checked it against ‘The Standard Book of Spells,’ Grade 5; and Parvati and Lavender, who were practicing basic Locomotion Charms, were making their pencil cases race each other around the edge of their table.

Part: 8

Dinner was a subdued affair that night.

Naddalin and Jinger did not talk much, but ate with gusto, having studied hard all day.

Emmah, on their other hand, kept putting down her knife and fork and diving under their table for her bag, from which she would seize a book to check some fact or figure.

Jinger was just telling her that she ought to eat a decent meal, or she would not sleep that night when her fork slid from her limp fingers and landed with a loud tinkle on her plate.

‘Oh, my goodness,’ she said faintly, staring into their Entrance Hall. ‘Is that them? Is that their examiners?’

Naddalin and Jinger whipped around on their bench. Through their doors to their Great Hall, they could see Ambridge standing with a small group of ancient Pa. watchers and wizards and fallen girl angels like them.

Ambridge, Naddalin was pleased to see, looked nervous. Shall we go and have a closer look?’
Said Jinger.

Naddalin and Emmah nodded and they hastened towards their double doors into their Entrance Hall, slowing down as they stepped over their threshold to walk sedately past their assessors.

Naddalin thought Professor Valdez Rows must be their tiny, stooped witch with a face so lined it looked as though it had been draped in cobwebs; Ambridge was sequin to her deferentially.

Professor Valdez Rows seemed to be a little deaf; she was answering Professor Ambridge very loudly considering they were only a foot apart.

‘Journey was fine, the journey was fine, we have made it plenty of times before!’ She said - intolerantly... ‘Now, I have not heard from Duerre lately!’ she added, gazing around their Hall as though hoping she might suddenly emerge from a broom cupboard. ‘No idea where she is, I’s suppose?’

Part: 9

‘None at all,’ said Ambridge, shooting a malevolent look at Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah, who were now dawdling around their foot of their stairs as Jinger pretended to do up his shoelace. ‘Nevertheless, I’s daresay their Ministry of Magic will track her down soon enough.’

'I'm so-o, doubt it,' shouted tiny Professor Valdez Rows, 'not if Duerre does not want to be found!

I's should know... examined her partially in Transfiguration and Charms when she did Newts... did things with a wand I had never seen before.'

'Yes... well...' said Professor Ambridge as Naddalin, Jinger and Emmah dragged their feet up their marble staircase as flying horses as they dared.

'Um- let me show you to their staff room.'

'I daresay you would like a cup of tea after your journey.'

It was an uncomfortable sort of evening.

Everyone was trying to do some last-minute revising but nobody seemed to be getting very far.

Naddalin went to bed early but then lay awake for what felt like hours.

She remembered her career consultation and Ashly's furious declaration, and that she would help her become an Aurora if it was their last thing she did.

And- she wished she had expressed a more achievable ambition now that exam time was here.

She knew she was not their only one lying awake, but then again, like none of their others in their dormitory spoke and finally, one by one, they fell asleep.

None of their fifth years talked very much at breakfast the next day, either: Parvati was practicing incantations under her breath while their salt cellar in Jigger of her twitched;

Emmah was rereading Achievements in Charming so fast that her eyes appeared blurred, and Neville kept dropping his knife and fork and conquer over their marmalade.

Emmah turned their hourglass over three times.

Their dark ward dissolved. Naddalin had their sensation that she was flying very fast, backward. A blur of colors and shapes ruler past her, his ears were pounding, she tried to yell but could not hear his own voice – I hear voices...

And then she felt solid ground beneath his feet, and everything came into focus again – AND - she was standing next to Emmah in their deserted entrance hall and a stream of golden sunlight was falling across their paved floor from their open Jigger doors. She looked wildly around at Emmah, the chain of their hourglass cutting into his neck.

And, what?

And...

And, here! Also... Emmah seized, Naddalin's arm and dragged her across their hall to their door of a broom closet; she opened it, pushed her inside among their Beccaets and mops, then slammed their door behind them.

Above and beyond all that crap, what and the- how - Emmah, what happened?

-Besides-

Likewise, we have gone back in time,

And Emmah whispered, lifting their chain off Naddalin's neck in their darkness. And, three hours back...

-Besides-

Part: 10

Naddalin-'I enjoys giving oral to all my girlfriends!'

Anyways back to the story-

I remember when-

Naddalin found her own leg and gave it a very hard pinch. It hurt a lot, which seemed to rule out their possibility that she was having a very bizarre dream.

Also, Listen!

Someone is coming! I think I do think it is – I-I think it might be us! And, Emmah had her ear pressed against their cupboard door.

And, Footsteps across their hall... yes, I think it is us going down to Dargide's!

And...

And, are you telling me, and Naddalin thought, and that we are here in this cupboard and we are out there too?

Besides, and, Yes, and said Emmah, her ear still glued to their storeroom door. And, I am sure it is us. It does not sound like more than three people...and we are Wal queen flying horses because we are under their Invisibility Robe – and...

She broke off, still listening fixedly.

And, we have gone down their finger steps...

And...

Emmah sat down on an overturned Beccaet, Pa. desperately anxious, but Naddalin wanted a few questions answered.

And, where did you get that hourglass thing?

-And-

And, it is called a Time-Turner, And Emmah whispered, And I got it from Professor Ashly on our first day back.

I have been using it all year to get to all my instructions. Professor Ashly made me swear I would not tell anyone.

She had to write all sorts of literature to their Ministry of Magic so I could have one.

She had to tell them that I was a model student and that I would never, ever use it for anything except my studies... I have been turning it back, so I could do hours over again, that is how I have been doing several lessons at once, see?

But... and, Naddalin, I do not understand what Duerre wants us to do. Why did she tell us to go back for three hours? How is that going to help Trius? And, Naddalin stared at her shadowy face.

And, there must be something that happened around now she wants us to change, and she said flying horses. And, what ensued? We were Wal queen down to Darcie's three hours ago, And, this is three hours ago, and we are Wal queen down to Darcie's and said Emmah. And, we just heard ourselves leaving... And Naddalin frowned; she felt as though she were screwing up the whole brain in concentration.

And, Duerre just said - just said we could save more than one innocent life...And then it hit her. And, we are going to save Becca beak!

And, so-o!

And, but - how will that help Trius?

-Similarly-

And, Duerre said - she just told us where their window is - their window of Flitwick's office!

Where they have, Trius locked up! We must fly Becca beak up to their window and rescue Trius! Trius can escape on Becca beak - they can escape together!

-Equally-

From what Naddalin could see of Emma's face, she looked terrified.

And, if we manage that without being seen, it will be a miracle! Equally...

And, Well, we must try, haven't we? And said Naddalin. She stood up and pressed his ear in contradiction to their door. And, does not sound like anyone is there... Come on, let us go. And Naddalin pushed open their closet door. Their entrance hall was deserted. As quietly and quickly as they could, they darted out of their closet and down their 'the body of Neveah' steps.

Their glooms were already lengthening, the tops of their trees in the Forbidden Forest gilded once more with gold.

And, if anyone is peeping out of their window -and Emmah squeaked- up at their castle behind them.

See we all go back to Earth whenever we want living dibble lives... angels on Earth... and showing is true colors here... my girls are all from parts of Pennsylvania... odd, yet we did get homesick, of the old town and old bodies, that we once had and life within. until you have an outer body expression you and we not get have I mean here.' I always thought that I would be stuck with me all my life- nope I in the body of girls on Earth, into them- and also as me too... as a body that is supercritical.

Besides, we will run for it and said Naddalin unwaveringly. Also, Straight into their forest, all right? We must hide behind a tree or something and keep a lookout...

-And-

And, okay, but we'll go around by their greenhouses!' said Emmah breathlessly. And, we need to keep out of sight of Darcie's Jigger door, or we will see us! We must be at Darcie's by now!

-And-

Still torquing out what she meant, Naddalin set off at a sprint, Emmah behind her.

Theory tore across their vegetable gardens to their greenhouses, paused for a moment behind them, then set off again, fast as they could, skirting around their Whopping Willow, tearing toward the shelter of their forest...

Safe in the obscurities of their trees, Naddalin turned around; seconds later, Emmah arrived beside her, panting.

And, right, and she gasped. And, we need to sneak over to Darcie's... Keep out of sight, Naddalin...

-And-

The theory made their way silently through their trees, keeping to the very edge of their forest. Then, as they glimpsed their Jigger of Darcie's home, they heard a knock upon his door.

Theory moved quickly behind a wide oak trunk and peered out from either side. Deride had appeared in his doorway, with a dark wing out, Pa. around to see who had knocked.

Besides Naddalin heard her own voice.

Besides, it is us. We are wearing their Invisibility Robe. Let us in and we can take it off. And... I take off flying around the land with my fallen dark wings spread to swore... And, should have come! And Deride supposed. She stood back, then shut their door quickly. In addition, this is their weirdest thing we have ever done, And Naddalin said fervently. And let us move along a bit, And Emmah whispered. And, we need to get nearer to Becca beak!

Chapter: 149

Part: 1

(Remembering- days like these)

Theory crept through their trees until they saw their nervous Ashlynn, tethered to their fence around Darcie's pumpkin patch.

And, Now?

Then and there, Naddalin whispered.

Besides, Not at all! And said Emmah.

Besides, if we steal her now, those committee individuals will think Deride set her free! We must wait until they have seen she is tied outside!

Besides, some?

And, that is going to give us about sixty seconds and said Naddalin. This was starting to seem unbearable.

At that moment, there was a crash of China from inside Darcie's cabin.

And, That's Deride Brea queen their milk jug, And Emmah whispered. And, I am going to find Stabbers in a moment.

-Besides-

~*~

Haven- 'You know the good thing about digging your own grave, at the graveyard at a young teen she-boy? You always make it just the right size, and still have the strength to do is you cry like a girl yet shovel like a man.' Her eyes were large and very clear- and very blue now she had come over- yet want to be dark, like us instead, she came over to the dark side, even if she was excepted as she was... it was on her.

There are two types of individuals in the world- to me, and the girls that are telling yet another chapter of their life... there are those who matter to the story and those who don't. My whole life, my ma was the only person I felt comfortable talking to- even after she passed- I was it- now I did it to her too and those two are it and lost without me- yet I thought I was a pain in the butt.'

'Why is that?' I think,' the girls even said, everybody needs that one person, you know? The one person they can talk to and be not having it... so-o. Gee- my old love once told me to tell him all the songs that make me cry.

Staind- 'Something to Remind You' I say goodbye- to this chapter of my ever-changing life.

And there are mistakes...

The path is long, and I'm sure I'll answer them when I'm gone. So, when the day comes, and the sun won't touch my face.

Tell the ones who cared enough, that I finally left this place that has been so cold, look at my face, All the stories it will tell I can't erase.

The road is long, yet just one more song, a little something to remind you when I'm gone... when I'm gone-

The road to hell, along the way- is paved with good intentions so they say, and some believe, that no good deed, that goes unpunished in the end or so it seems, and so when the day comes, and the sun won't touch my face, tell the ones who cared enough, that I have finally left this place; that's been so cold Look at my face, all the stories it will tell I can't erase, the road is long, Just one more song, a little something to remind you when I'm gone; when I'm gone.

So-o, this is it, I say goodbye, to this chapter of my ever-changing life, and there are mistakes, the path was long, and I'm sure I'll answer for them when I'm gone, When I'm gone.

You were the ones, I thought about- this can remind you.

Why- I did not know- yet, he and she, wanted to know my favorite books, favorite movies, if my heart was ever broken and by whom- that one I could give now, and it was him and then her... they said, 'I want to know everything that makes you-you- well now you know- nothing- there not anything left, and nothing there... just this to remind you...

Part: 2

Anyhow- sure enough, a few minutes later, they heard Emma's shriek of surprise.

And, Emmah, and said Naddalin suddenly, and what if we-we just run in there and grab Pettigrew...

-And-

And, No! And said Emmah in a terrified whisper. And, do not you understand? We are Brea queen one of their most important wizarding laws! Nobody is supposed to change time, nobody!

You heard Duerre if we are seen...

-And, so-o-

And, we would only be seen by ourselves and Deride!

Besides, ... Naddalin, what do you think you would do if you saw yourself bursting into Darcie's house? And said Emmah. I would - I would think I had gone mad, and said

Naddalin, And or I would think there was some Dark Magic going on.

-And-

Exactly! You would not understand; you might even attack yourself! Don't you see it? Professor Ashly told me what awful things have happened when wizards have meddled with time... Loads of them ended up killing their past or future selves by mistake!

Additionally- Okay! Said Naddalin. And, it was just an idea, I just thought...

-Besides-

Like us all- we have a hard time keeping my hands off you without that, additional extra.

Part: 3

Naddalin- I nibbled my lower lip, and If you could see into my past just by touching her, I'd have a hard time resisting the temptation too. Yet that was all it took... one touch. We all of us girl were not searching for sanctity, sacredness, purity; these things are found after this life, not in this life; but in this life, I, we, and they too- search to be completely human, and feel less than so-o to feel, to give, to take, to laugh, to get lost, to be found, to dance, to love and to lust, to be so human, maybe that is we did not need to be.

But Emmah nudged her and pointed toward their castle. Naddalin moved her heard a few inches to get a clear view of their distant finger doors. Duerre, Harlan, their old Board member, and Nunez their executioner was coming down their steps. Folks wait around too long for love. Yet I like my girls we are happy with all of my lusts, wrong or not! And, we are about to come out!

And, Emmah breathed, so what.

And sure enough, moments later, Darcie's back door opened, and Naddalin saw herself, Jinger, and Emmah Wal queen out of it with Deride. It was, without a doubt, their strangest sensation of his life, standing behind their tree, and watching herself in their pumpkin patch.

I don't know why folks are afraid of lust like me with a girl. I can imagine that they are very afraid of me- and the girls that are like me, for I have a great lust for everything, like her. A lust for life, a lust for how the summer heated street feels beneath my feet, a lust for the touch of another's the skin on my skin... a lust for everything- yet most of her- or even him every- now and then. I even lust after things that I can have like a spell. Yes, I am very lusty and very dark... yet am I? I remember- loving boys when- I was down there, as a hole girl not as half and half... said, Emma.

I looked at her she smiled. Her pale lips sought hers, crushing her into a kiss like dying. She tasted sweetness there, as though he still kissed her with honey and sugar on his tongue. When he pulled away, her eyes excelled. I have a thing for her- and she- with me...

As I said, magic comes from life, and especially from emotions. They're a source of the same imperceptible energy that everyone... I, we, we can feel when an autumn moon rises... and gravity fall. Fly high or not at all... and fills us with a sudden sense of deep enthusiasm.

And when- like the first warm, breeze gusts of spring rushes past your face...

A time and a place... like full of the aromata of life...

It also drowns you in a sudden flood of unreasoning delight, enjoyment, and pleasure.

The passion of mighty music, that brings tears to your eyes, and the raw fizzy, infectious laughter of small children at play, the bellowing power of an arena full of football fans shouting 'Hey!' in time to that damned song- they're all charged with magic, yet I have more than that to feed my lust for this need. 'My magic comes from the same places, deep down within you and me - her and she- too.'

Maybe- Just maybe- from darker places than that- maybe...? (I thought...)

Fear is an emotion, besides...

So is anger... if you want it too...

So is lust... magical...

Lust- is madness...

Madness is magic...

~*~

Naddalin- us all- would say this... all that have fallen- dark or even light...

I'm not a particularly good person, this I know, but I'm not going to be up for canonization either; so, stop with that accusations.

Though in the past, I think maybe I was a better person... even if some say not... than I am today.

Should or should I not be happy... what do you say?

In the past... that haunts us with the spell...

I had seen so many people hurt and killed and terrorized by the same kind of power that I love- used for hate, that damn well should have been making the world a nicer place...

No... that is not how I saw it- neither did they that fall with me.

Or at the least staying it- the abyss away from it is better... that what I thought of them.

Abyss is not as bad as the netherworld here... that is the wizard- falling angel world is where I like to be.

I hadn't made so many mistakes back then and now too, so many shortsighted decisions, some of which had cost people their lives... and mine too

I had been sure of myself. I had been whole.'

(Story)

Naddalin- And, it is okay, Beaky, it is okay... to feel this way she said to her... then she turned to Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah. And Go on... Get going, we will tell them what really happened.

And, they cannot kill her... they cannot... And Go! It's bad enough without you a lot of trouble n' all! Naddalin watched their Emmah in their pumpkin patch throw their Invisibility Robe over her and Jinger. Go quick. Deanah listen... There was a knock-on Darcie's finger door. Their execution party had arrived. Deride turned, around and headed back into his cabin, leaving their back door ajar.

Naddalin watched their grass flatten in pitchers all around their cabin and heard three pairs of feet retreating. She, Jinger, and Emmah had gone... but their Naddalin and Emmah hidden in their trees could now hear what was happening inside their cabin through their back door. And, where is their beast? It was it came to the cold voice of Nunez.

And, Out - outside, And Deride croaked.

Naddalin pulled his head out of sight as Nunez's face appeared at Darcie's window, staring out at Becca's beak. Then they heard Harlan.

And, We - err - must read you their official notice of execution, Deride.

I will make it quick... And then you and Nunez need to sign it. Nunez, you are supposed to listen too, that's the procedure- And, Nunez's face vanished from their window. It was now or never.

And...

Wait here, And Naddalin whispered to Emmah. And, I will do it.

And, As Harlan's voice started again,

Naddalin darted out from behind his tree, vaulted their fence into their pumpkin patch, and approached Becca beak.

And, it is their decision of their Committee for their Disposal of Dangerous Creatures that their Ashlynn for the house of the flying horses, in colors- Gray and Red, Becca in beak, hereafter called they're condemned, shall she be executed on their seventh of June at sundown and Careful not to blink, Naddalin stared up into Becca beak's fierce auburn eyes once more and bowed. Becca beak sank to his scaly knees and then stood up again.

Naddalin began to fumble with their knot of rope tying Becca beak to their fence.

'The fear of death shadows-follows from the fear of life...' (thought) and, sentenced to execution by beheading, to be carried out by their Committee's chosen assassin, Walden Nunez ...

And come on Becca beak, and Naddalin whispered, and come on, we are going to help you.

Quietly... quietly... And as saw below.

Deride, you sign here...

~*~

Don't be afraid of your fears... I thought... Why? They're not there to scare you.

Like- They're there to let you know that something- or anything- all things- are worth going for.

~*~

Naddalin threw all her weight onto their rope, but Becca beak had dug in her Jigger feet.

Well, let us get this over with, and said their reedy voice of their Committee member from inside Darcie's cabin. Élite, it will be better if you stay inside.

No, I - I want' tier be with her... I Deanah 'wan' hert tier be alone -And... U- NO.

Footsteps heavenized from within their cabin.

Also... Becca beak, move! And, Naddalin hissed.

Naddalin tugged harder on their rope around Becca's beak's neck. There Ashlynn began to walk, rustling its wings impatiently. A theory was still ten feet away from their forest, in plain view of Darcie's back door. Then, one moment, please, Nunez and came Duerre's voice.

And, you need to sign too. And, their footsteps stopped. Naddalin heaved on their rope. Becca beak snapped his beak and walked a little faster.

Emma's white face was stoutening out from behind a tree.

And, Naddalin, hurry! And, she mouthed.

Naddalin could still hear Duerre's singing toluene from within their cabin. she gave their rope another wrench. Becca beak broke into a grudging canter. The theory had reached their trees...

Cowards- like me, die many times before their deaths, it was what we had to see before final death; The valiant never-ever sensitivity of death but once. Of all the phenomena that I's, yet have caught, um like-It seems to me most bizarre that young girls like me- like you- should fear; seeing that death, a necessary end, will come when it will arise.'

Part: 5

And primarily, watch with brilliant eyes, the whole world around you, for the reason that, the greatest mysteries are always hidden in the most unlikely places. Those who don't believe in magic will never ever find it. That was I thought in my room under the steps.

(Story)

Quick!

Quick!

And, Emmah moaned, darting out from behind her tree, seizing their rope too and adding her weight to make Becca beak move faster. Naddalin looked over his shoulder; they were now blocked from sight; they could not see Darcie's garden at all.

Stop...!

She whispered to Emmah.

And, they might hear us.

-And-

Darcie's back door had opened with a bang. Naddalin, Emmah, and Becca beak stood quite still; even their Ashlynn seemed to be listening intently.

Then... Silence...

And, where is it? And said their reedy voice of their Committee member.

And, where is there a beast?

-And-

And, it was tied here! And said their executioner furiously. And saw it! Just here!

-And-

And, how extraordinary, and said Duerre.

There was a note of amusement in his voice.

And, Beaky! And said Deride huskily.

There was a swishing noise and their thud of an ax.

Their assassin seemed to have swung it into their fence in anger.

And then came their flying horses, and this time they could hear Darcie's words through her sobs.

Gone!

Gone!

Bless his little beak, she is gone! Must pull herself free! Beaky, yet clever little girl!

-And-

Becca beak started to strain against their rope, trying to get back to Deride. Naddalin and Emmah tightened their grip and dug their heels into their forest floor to stop her.

Equally, someone untied her! And, their killer was snarling. And, we should search for their grounds, their forest.

-And-

And, Nunez, if Becca beak has undeniably been stolen, do you really think their thief will have led her away on foot? And said Duerre, still sounding amused. And Search their skies, if you will... Deride, I could do with a cup of tea.

Otherwise a large brandy.

And...

And, so- o like of course, Professor, and said Deride, who sounded weak with happiness.

-And-

Come in, come in...

Also...

Naddalin and Emmah listened closely.

Theory heard footsteps, their soft cursing of their executioner, their snap of their door, and then silence once more.

And, now what? whispered Naddalin around the minds of the others and within.

And, we must hide in here and said Emmah, who looked very shaken. And, we need to wait until they have gone back to their castle. Then we wait until it is safe to fly Becca beak up to Trius's window.

She will not be there for another couple of hours... Oh, this is going to be difficult... She looked nervously over her shoulder into the depths of their forest. The sun was setting now...

We are going to have to move, and said Naddalin, thinking hard.

I'm always thought that growing up year be filled with magic, and dreams and good madness.

I hope you read some fine books and kiss someone who thinks you're wonderful and falling as I did is what did that for me.

#- (Falling to you- too!)

I'm kissed her and liked it- s-sh-h!

(Only you need to know that...)

Part: 6

Naddalin-

I feel- I think you should date a girl who speaks to you, and reads a- lot and knows a- lot of things. Date a girl who reads, and can think and even wright. Date a girl who spends her money on books, instead of clothes, who has difficulties with closet space, because she has too many books, get a girl that is a bookworm- and is smart.

Date a girl who has a list of books she wants to read, who has had a library card since she was 10 or so-o.

Find a girl who reads...

You'll know that she does for the reason that, she will always have an unread book in her handbag.

She's the one lovingly looking over the shelves in the bookstore.

The one who quietly cries out when she has found the book she wants.

(We spend a lot of time reading or being in the library.)

You see that weird sniffing the pages of an old book... more than other girl's undies? That's the reader... and the girl I like that you may want to... full of magic... for the books, she knows was the wonder, that makes her sparkle.

They can never resist smelling the pages, especially when they are yellow and worn.

She's was the sweet girl reading while waiting in that coffee shop down the street, or the one- that held your hand when you were 5 next doors- she nagged me to say that, I am the one overlooking her now... she sees me.

'Lost in a world of the author's creation... like painting a picture with words.'

Sit down with her even if- it's wrong. She might give you a glare, as most girls who read do. Ask her if she likes the wonder, is see if she well looks thought you- like chapters of your life for her to explore. Let her know what you really think what makes you sparkle with wonder...

-Then-

See if she got through the first chapter of companionship.

It's easy to date a girl who is smart not a smart, not a girl that has an ass that was never-ever smart.

Give her poetry or a song... I wish I would have yet never done... Let her know that you understand that words are love.

Understand that she knows the difference between books and reality, she's going to try to make her life a little like her favorite book, and you will become like that. It will never- ever be your fault if she sees too.

Lie to her, if she understands grammar, she will appreciate your need to lie, to keep her.

Behind words are other things: drive, worth, shade, interchange. It will not be the end of the world.

Nose-dive her... a girl who reads knows that disappointments always leads up to the climax.

Why be frightened of everything that you are not?

Girls who read understand that individuals, like characters, grow. Since girls who read-magical things like wonder, understand that all things must come to end. And that you can continuously write a part 2- 3 or 4 or more.

That you can begin o'er and o'er and still be the hero to her.

That life is meant to have an antihero or two.

If you find a girl who reads, keeps her close.

When you find her up at 3 AM clutching a book to her chest and weeping... she is the one you want.

Hold her... You may lose her for a couple of hours, here and there is all that is girlie, but she will always come back to you.

She'll talk as if the characters in the book are real because, for a while, they always are.

You will walk the winters of your old age together... that I know and wish I would have done... like she... Karly- and then found love and lost it over the spell, he passed over her... to I feel it. The baby is all she has- the work of a tower, in someone's life... it all goes back to HER!

SHE WILL EVEN SHOW YOU HER- boots of freedom- to say how strong she is, or a book that is about you that she made even if she could not write, she will see you - by chance... and you'll know, or the star of an online show... you'll know... you'll know. Or the hope of girls that need someone in loss ...

You will smile.... So hard you will wonder the why...

And think that why is a question...

...?...

Your heart hasn't burst and exploded out all over your chest yet, hitherto, you question it might if not being with her.

You will write the story of your lives, have kids with strange names and even stranger tastes.

Date a girl who loves all that is wonder... because you deserve it.

You deserve a girl who can give you the most creative imaginative life.

(Story)

I recall saying- We must be able to see their Whopping Willow, or we will not know what is going on. Okay, also said Emmah, getting a firmer grip on Becca beak's rope. And, but we must keep out of sight, Naddalin, remember... we moved around the edge of their forest, that was covered in darkness falling thickly around them until we were hidden, but behind a clump of trees through which they could make out their- Willow.

There's Jinger...! Said- Naddalin, suddenly; besides, then there was a dark figure sprinting across-ed the lawn and its shout Hayvanna through there still night air. Then get away from her - getaway - Stabbers, come here... then they saw two more figures materialize out of nowhere. Naddalin watched herself and Emmah chasing after Jinger- then she saw Jinger dive. I've got you! Get off, you stout cat...

There's Trius! said Naddalin.

The great shape of their dog had bounded out from their roots of their Willow. They saw her flying horses Naddalin over them, then snatch on...

It looks even worse from here, doesn't it? Said Naddalin, watching their mare pulling Jinger into their roots.

Ouch - look, I just got walloped by their tree - and so did you - this is weird.

There whoomphing Willow was checking, and lashing out with its lower branches; they could see themselves darting here and there, trying to reach their trunk. And then their tree froze... them to it.

Part: 8

There moment they disappeared; their tree began to move again. And, that was Crook shanks pressing their knot and said Emmah.

And, there we go... Naddalin muttered. Equally- We are in this one deep. Seconds later, they heard footsteps quite close by. Duerre, Nunez, Harlan, and their old Board member were marching their way up to the castle. And, right after we had gone down into their passage! And said Emmah. And, if only Duerre had come with us... And... Nunez and Harlan would have come too and said Naddalin bitterly. I'd bet you anything Harlan would have told Nunez to murder Trius on their spot... Theory watched their four men climb their castle steps and disappear. For a few minutes, their scene was deserted.

Then...

And, here comes Sevket!

And said Naddalin as they saw another figure sprinting down their 'The Body of Neveah' steps and halting toward their Willow. Naddalin looked up at their sky.

Clouds were obscuring their moon completely.

Theory watched Sevket seize a broken branch from their ground and prod their knot on their trunk. Their tree stopped fighting, and Sevket, too, disappeared into their gap in its roots.

And, if she had only grabbed their Robe, And, said Naddalin. And, it is just lying there... And- she turned to Emmah.

And, If I just dashed out now and grabbed it, Gonzales's never can get it. Naddalin, we mustn't be seen- nether!

And, how can you stand this? And, she asked Emmah fiercely. And, just standing there and watching it happen? Similarly, she hesitated. And, I am going to grab their robe!

There same- Naddalin, no! Emmah seized their back of Naddalin's robes not a moment too soon. Just then, they heard a burst of girl.

It was Deride, marching his way up to their castle, singing at their top of her voice, and weaving slightly as he walked. A large bottle was swinging from his hands. And-See?

And, Emmah whispered. Do you see what would have happened? We must keep out of sight!

No, back-back! She yelled...

There Ashlynn was marching frantic attempts to get to Deride again; Naddalin seized her rope too, straining to hold Becca beak back. Theory watched Deride meander tipsily up to their castle. She was gone, Lowly beak stopped fighting to getaway. She heard drooped unhappily.

Barely two minutes later, their castle doors flew open yet again, and Gonzales came charging out of them, running toward their Willow.

Naddalin's fists clenched as they watched Gonzales skid to a halt next to their tree, Pa. around.

She grabbed their Robe and held it up.

And Get your filthy hands off it, And Naddalin snarled under his breath.

And- Sh-h!

And...

Gonzales seized their branch Sevketa had used to freeze their tree, prodded their knot, and vanished from view as she put on their robe.

And, so that is it, and said Emma quietly. And, we are all down there...and now we have just got to wait until we come back up again...

-And-

She took their end of Becca beak's rope and tied it securely around their nearest tree, then sat down on their dry ground, arms around her knees.

And, Naddalin, there is something I do not understand... Why didn't their Dementors get Trius? I remember them coming, and then I think I passed out... there where so many of them... And, Naddalin sat down too.

She explained what she had seen; how, as their nearest Dementor had lowered its mouth to Naddalin's, a large silver something had come galloping across their lake and forced their Dementors to retreat.

Emma's mouth was slightly open by their time Naddalin had finished.

Then, but what was it?

-And-

Besides, there is only one thing it could have been, to make their Dementiators go, and said Naddalin. And real Pat Jinger us. A powerful one.

-And-

Then, but who conjured it?

-And-

Naddalin did not say anything.

She was thinking back to their probably she had seen on the other bank of their lake.

She knew who she thought it had still been... but how could it have been?

And, did not you see what they looked like? Besides said Emmah eagerly. And, Was it one of their teachers? Moreover and, do not know - Naddalin, look at Lily!

-Equally-

Part: 9

Together they peered around their bush at the other bank. Gonzales had regained consciousness.

She was tricky stretchers and lifting their limp forms of Naddalin, Emmah, and Black onto them.

A fourth stretcher, no doubt bearing Jinger, was already floating at her side. Then, wand held out in Jigger of her, she then moved them away toward the castle. Besides, Right, it is time, and said Emmah tensely, at her watch. And, we have about forty-five minutes until Duerre locks their door to their hospital wowed here must rescue Trius and get back into their ward before anybody realizes we are missing...

Yet like, most they just thought we were in the land of the railway- and its towns running around at play, or that we were lost in old towns, flying around- they never thought we descended to Earth for boy drama... and to pray for young girls too... HE- HE- that is even more thrilling.

(Anyways back)

Theory waited, watching their moving clouds reflected in their lake, while their bush next to them whispered in their gusts. Becca beak, bored, was ferreting for worms once more.

And, do you reckon she is up there yet? And, said Naddalin, checking her watch - time her still matters. She looked up at the towering castle in its misty fog, and the viaduct behind, with the moon, lower, and began counting their windows to their right of the North West Tower with its torts. Also counting the many turret roofs... that made me and us feel small... in the eerie -ness.

Look! Look there... Emmah whispered.

And, who is that? Someone is coming back out of their castle! Besides - Naddalin stared through the damp unnerving darkness. There the man was hurrying a-crossed the grounds, toward one of the many elaborate entrances. Something shiny glinted in his belt, on his uniform. Look there... said Naddalin.

Also, the killer! She is gone to get them Dementiators! This is it, Emmah...

-And-

Emmah - I put my hands-on Becca Lowest beak's back and Naddalin gave my legs and up the hive. Then she placed her foot on my lower branches of their bush and climbed up on Jigger and her too - to see for she was the smallest.

Part: 10

She pulled her Becca beak's rope back over her neck and tied it to their other side of her collar like reins.

Furthermore, Ready?

Besides, she whispered to Emmah.

Also, you had better hold on to me... tightly.

-And-

She nudged Becca's beak's sides with her heels.

Becca beak soared straight into their dark air. Naddalin gripped her flanks with her knees, feeling their great wings rising powerfully beneath them.

Emmah was holding Naddalin very tight around the waist; she could hear her muttering, And OH, oh-no - I do not like this oh, I really do not like this...

Then, Naddalin urged Becca to beak forward.

A theory where sashaying silently toward the higher floors of their castle... Naddalin pulled hard on their right-hand side of their rope, and Becca beak turned. Naddalin was trying to count their windows flashing past... And- then- Whoa! she said, pulling back as hard as she ever could have.

Then and there, Becca beak slowed down and they found themselves at a stop unless you counted their fact that they kept rising, and down many feet as their Ashlynn beat his wings to still be airborne.

Besides- she is there...! And, Naddalin said, spotting Trius as they rose beside their window. She reached out, and as Becca beak's wings fell, they could tap sharply on their glass.

Black looked up...

Naddalin saw him and her jaw drop.

He leaped from his chair, hurried to their window, and tried to open it, but it was locked. And Stand back! And, Emmah called to her, and she took out her wand, still gripping their back of Naddalin's robes with her left hand.

-And-

(Alohomora!)

-And-

Their window sprang open.

And, How - how -? And said Black weakly, staring at their Ashlynn.

And Get on - there is not much time, and said Naddalin, gripping Becca beak firmly on either side of her smooth neck to hold her steady.

And, you must get out of here - their Dementiators are coming - Nunez's marching is gone to get them.

-And-

Black placed a hand on either side of their window frame and heaved her head and shoulders out of it.

It was very lucky she was so thin. In seconds, she had managed to fling one leg over Becca beak's back and pull herself onto their Ashlynn behind Emmah.

Then, okay, Becca beak, up! And said Naddalin, checking their cord.

Also- up to their tower - come on.

Torches lit the past ways, of cobblestone.

-And-

There Ashlynn gave one sweep of its mighty wings, and they were soaring upward again, high as their top of their North-West Tower.

Becca beak landed with a clatter on their battlements, and Naddalin and Emmah slid off her at once. Then Trius, you had better go, quick, And Naddalin panted. And, they will reach Flitwick's office any moment, they will find out you are gone.

-And-

Becca beak pawed their ground, tossing his sharp head. Besides, what happened to their other girls? Jinger? Likewise, croaked Trius. In addition to that, she was going to be okay. she is still out of it, but Madam Pomphrey says she will be able to make her better. Immediate - go-! But Black was still staring down at Naddalin.

Besides, how can I ever thank -Too And-

GO! And, Naddalin and Emmah shouted together.

Black wheeled Becca beak around, facing the exposed skies. Besides, we will see each other again, and she said. And, you are - truly your daddy's girl, Naddalin...

She squeezed Becca beak's sides with her heels, then she - is being- Naddalin, Emmah jumped back as their enormous wings rose once more... There Ashlynn took off into their air... She and her rider became smaller and smaller as Naddalin gazed after them... then a cloud drifted a-crossed the moon... The moon is a reliable buddy. It never- ever leaves. It's always there, observing, unfaltering, meaningful to us in our light and dark moments, changing forever just as we do.

Each day it's a different version of itself, like me and my girls, and them below - and above. Sometimes feeble and ashen, from time to time robust and full of light. The moon understands what it means to be un-human and to turn around on what is to show all dark.

Nevaeh

Book: 36

Fallen Angel

Chapter: 150

Part: 1

We are all like the bright moon, we still have our darker side, don't express to yours truly the moon is superb; display to me the sparkle, twinkle, and enthusiasm of light on shattered cut - glass, or a dead girl's memory. I may not have gone where I intended to go, but I think I have ended up where I needed to be- like she- her with me now- she- me – and you too.

A theory where gone.

Flying horses post again-

I- Naddalin am flying around too even back on Earth also for a soul to take... like the one that passes with broken glass years ago, she will come with me to the dark side I feel, and that would - be Lily. Yet would she ever leave Neveah- I don't know if I want to do that to her- yet I would love to also... Lonely girls that hang out at the graveyards, and cry... for someone to ease the pain... We take... over their bodies and minds... young sweet girls like YOU! Even can be said for white angels too... (it was too easy...)

...She lost her to me... yet, I had to I could not help it, I need her to feed for life... and she looks good in black- no? We will get her too- I AM SURE OF IT! Yet she has him up there so-o; that love will- last and last.

Part: 2

Naddalin, got a girl to come over to this world in a death... today... it was said in class. Now to she is fallen.

Anyways-

Emmah was tugging at her sleeve, staring at her watch. And, we have exactly ten minutes to get back down to their hospital wing without anybody seeing us - before Duerre locks their door...

- Besides-

Okay, and said Naddalin, wrenching her gaze from the sky, and let us go... Also, they slipped through their doorway behind them and down a tightly spiraling 'The Body of Neveah' staircase. Full of old dark wood, and led- ed glass, that was also long-standing. As they reached the top of it, they heard voices. They flattened themselves they were, now pushing themselves up against the wall and they all listened. It sounded like garbage.

A theory where steeping hurriedly along the corridor at their foot of their staircase. With the, only hope Duerre's not going to make complications, and snippily- saying.

We wanted to do this for years here in this spot she and I- above and beyond, there Kiss will be performed at once, in the tower, holding hands... also... then, as soon as Nunez returns with the Dementiators, we ran like lovers back down- yet we had our time.

This whole Black affair has been highly embarrassing. They all knew about all the girls, and all the professors too. Yet, I cannot tell you how much I am happy about it all thought. Forward to informing their Daily Prophet that we have her at last... said that we want this... allies, for this eternal life, at the castle, asking to be hallowed by darkness.

I- Daresay they will want to interview you, Sammie... and once young Naddalin's back in her right mind, I expect she will want to tell the prophet exactly how you saved her... from the other side of things... She could have been...?

'-So-o I feel- that is so.'

Naddalin clenched her teeth, think she could have seen all that was in her old life, yet she has her so, that was good enough to fall too.

Then she caught a glimpse of Sammie's smirk as he and Harlan passed Naddalin and Emma's hiding place, as they were running through the fields... for flight.

There where footsteps died away, yet, wherein mid-flight looking down on the eerie, dark, and shadowy, warm glow of cottages with tall grass and oak trees, in this land, waterfalls, and hang-ie down weepiness, off of the rock and plant life... vines and old time-worn trees alike, in a terrestrial that is musty, fog covered all the time.

Naddalin and Emmah waited a few moments to make sure they had really gone, hand in levitating in midair, looking at one another dumbly, and sheepish then started to fly in the opposite direction of the hallowed castle.

(Back)

Emma- Walking on foot- and yes, we still do that... Um- like down one staircase, then another, along with a new corridor - then they heard a cackling ahead. Also, Charlotte...!

~*~

SO-o, Furthermore, Naddalin muttered, grabbing Emma's wrist; as well, in here!

Theory tore into a deserted classroom, to their left just in time.

Charlotte seemed to be bouncing along their corridor in boisterous good spirits, laughing her head off.

- Besides-

Part: 3

OH, her is horrible, and whispered Emmah, her ear to their door. Also, bet her is all excited because their Dementiators are going to finish off Trius... And she checked her watch. Besides, three minutes, Naddalin!

- And-

Theory waited until Charlotte's gloating voice had faded into their distance, then slid back out of their room and broke into a run again.

And - what will happen - if we do not get back inside before Duerre locks their door? And, Naddalin panted.

And, do not want to think about it! And,

Emmah moaned, checking her watch again. And, One minute! And, they had reached the end of their corridor with their hospital wing entrance. And, Okay - I can hear Duerre and said Emmah tensely. And Come on, Naddalin!

Theory crept along their corridor. Their door opened, Duerre's back appeared.

Besides, am going to lock you in, and they heard her say. And, it is five minutes to midnight.

Miss. Kizziah, three turns should do it. Good luck.

-And-

Duerre backed out of their room, closed their door, and took out his wand to magically lock it. Postulating, Naddalin and Emmah ran forward. Duerre looked up, and a wide smile and then appeared under the long silver whiskers. And- Well? And, she said quietly. And, we did it! And said Naddalin breathlessly. And... Trius has gone, with Becca beak... And... So-o...!

(Up to the now)

Duerre grinned at them, and, well Deanahe. I think she listened intently for any sound within their hospital wing, and, Yes, I think you have gone too - get inside - I will lock you in... Naddalin and Emmah slipped back inside there dormitory.

It was empty except for Jinger, who was still lying- there- all motionless in the end bed nude, just taking off her uniform.

~*~

As their lock clicked behind them, Naddalin and Emmah crept back to their own beds, Emmah uncovering their Time-Turner back under her robes. A moment later, Madam Pomphrey came striding back out of her office.

Also, Did I hear their principal leaving?

Am I allowed to look after my patients now?

- And-

Like- like- like, she was in a very bad- bad- bad mood-ie mood.

Naddalin and Emmah thought it best to accept the Hayvannah sweet quietly. Madam Pomphrey stood over them, making sure they ate it. Nevertheless, Naddalin could hardly swallow- and wanted to spit- not swallow, - yet that was with more than that too- just saying, said- Emma- te'a- he-ing.

She and Emmah were waiting, listening, the nerves jangling... And then and there - and there and then, as they both took the fourth piece of Hayvanna- cholate from Madam Pomphrey, they heard a distant roar of fury heavenizing from somewhere above them... swirling around them like dark haunts.

Besides, what was that? And said- Madam Pomphrey in alarm.

Part: 4

Now they could hear angry voices, growing louder and brassier. Madam Pomphrey was staring at their door.

Besides, Really - they will wake everybody up! What do they think they are doing?

-And-

Naddalin was trying to hear what their voices were saying, yet like the girls before her like she could hear voices in her head all the time - saying: this and that and or else - wise - whatever. A theory where drawing nearer - in her ear and it was buzzing and ringing with, a high - E - EEEEE... hiss, of them taking over her awareness and body in this world, this is true for them to do, to see feel, and hear only as they want you to - where you may feel, that you did or did not, or just blackout, in not remembering - it's a spell that, I know well - of mind - take - over, they can even take out of my mouth for me - no - ? ...YES!
AND IT SOUND

JUST LIKE ME - AND THEY CAN MOVE MY HAND ARMS AND LEGS FOR ME TOO -

(LIKE I DON'T REMEMBER MASTURBATING... YET MY HAND IS DOING IT - AND I SEE IT GOING IN AND OUT OF ME AND I KNOW THAT SHE IS IN ME AND I AM IN HER...)

Chapter: 151

Part: 1

Like - she must have Disappeared, Severus. We should have left somebody in the room with her, so it would not freak her out. When this gets out - And, she DID NOT DISAPPEAR! And - Lily roared, now very nearby. And, YOU CANNOT APPARATED OR DISAPPEAR INSIDE THIS CASTLE!

THIS - HAS - SOMETHING - TO - DO - WITH - ! And, Severus - be repairable - Naddalin has been locked up - And BAM Slam hit, the freaking door of the wing burst open, Harlan, Sammie, and Duerre came striding into their area. Duerre alone looked calm. Indeed, she looked as though she was quite enjoying herself. Harlan appeared angry about it all. Nevertheless, Lily was beside herself, I knew - we - too - ominously we agreed. And, OUT WITH IT!

And, she bellowed. And, WHAT DID YOU DO?

And - Professor Lily, yes here a week and she is that! And, shrieked Madam Pomphrey. And Control yourself!

And - See here, Lily, be repairable, and said,

Harlan. And, this door is being locked, we just saw.

Besides, THEORY HELPED HERR ESCAPE, I KNOW IT! And, Lily flying, pointing at Naddalin and Emmah. Her face was twisted and teeth sharply pointed fangs; dribble was flying from her mouth, now red blood from the eyes. (Thoughts of RED- WHITE AND BLUE came back to her... and here being cold is the way of life.)

Calm down, girl!

And Harlan woofed.

And, you are toluene nonsense! She knew that would not be going back up either.

Part: 2

And, YOU DO NOT KNOW-! And, shrieked Lily. And, she DID IT, I KNOW she DID IT. (Whatever- IT is...,) and, that will do, Severus, and said Duerre quietly. Yep- yep just- thinking about what you are saying. This door has been locked since I left their constituency ten minutes ago, Madam Pomphrey, have these students- left their beds, she is thinking about her and what she is going to do with her, in all their kissing of lips, that she and she has done...!

‘Partially, I would have welcomed a Dementor attack.

A deadly struggle for my soul would have broken their monotony nicely. You think you have had it bad, at least you have been able to get active, stretch your legs, get into a few fights... I have been stuck inside for a month.’

‘How come...?’ Asked- Naddalin, frowning some.

‘Because of their Ministry of Magic still after me, and Waltemath will know all about me being an Animangas by now, Worm tail will have told her, so my big disguise is useless. It is not much; I can do that for their- Order of their Durizy ... or so- o Duerre feels.’

There was something about their slightly- flattened tone of voice, in which Trius uttered Duerre’s name, and that told- Naddalin that Trius, too, was not very pleased with their Principal. Naddalin felt a sudden upsurge of affection for her God daddy.

At least you have known what is been going on, she said bracingly.

‘Oh yes,’ said Trius sarcastically. ‘Listening to Snappiest reports, having to take all her snide hints, and that she is out there risqué her life, while - I’s am sat on my backside, here having a nice comfortable time... talking to me about how their cleanings going...’

‘What cleaning...?’ Asked- Naddalin...

Part: 3

Trying to make this place fit for fallen habitation,’ said Trius, waving a hand around their dismal kitchen.

‘No one’s lived here for ten years, not since my dear mother died unless you count her old house fairy, and she’s gone around their twist ~ hasn’t cleaned anything in ages.’

‘Trius,’ said MonDongos, who did not appear to have paid any attention to their conversation, but had been closely examining an empty goblet. ‘This solid silver, pal?’

‘Yes,’ said Trius, surveying it with distaste. ‘Finest 22nd ~ century goblin-wrought silver, embossed with their Black family crest.’ That had come off, though, muttered MonDongos, polishing it with her cuff. Céline Katy NO, JUST CARRY THERE! Mr.’s Railie shrieked.

Part: 4

Naddalin, Trius, and MonDongos looked around and, within a split second, they had dived away from their table. Céline and Katy had bewitched a large ceiling of stew, a jigger flagon of Butterbeer and a heavy wooden breadboard, complete with knife, to hurtle through their air towards them.

Their stew skidded the length of their table and came to a halt just before their end, leaving a long black burn on their wooden surface; their flagon of Butterbeer fell with a crash, spilling its contents everywhere; their bread knife slipped off their board and landed, point down, and quivering ominously, exactly where Trius’s right hand had been seconds before.

‘FOR HEAVENS SAKE!’ screamed Mr.’s -Railie.

THERE WAS NO NEED- I HAD ENOUGH OF THIS JUST BECAUSE YOU CAN USE MAGIC NOW, YOU DO NOT HAVE TO WHIP YOUR WANDS OUT FOR EVERY TINY LITTLE THING!’

‘We were just trying to save a bit of time!’ Said Céline, hurrying forward to wrench their bread knife out of their table. ‘sorry, Trius, the mate did not mean to...’

Naddalin and Trius where both laughing; MonDongos, who had toppled backward off his chair, was swearing as she got to his feet; Crook shanks had given an angry hiss and shot off under their dresser, from where his large yellow eyes glowed in their darkness.

Part: 5

‘Girl changing and some nude, playing and then bathing,’ Mr. Railie said, lifting their stew back into the middle of their table,’ your mothers right, you are supposed to show a sense of responsibility now you have come of age.’

Part: 6

Emma- When she is inside of me, in more ways than one mind-body and erogenous zones alike... I wonder who is squirting me, rubbing my body, softly... touching my boobs and butt, and inside there too alike... in it... she- her- all her coming through me, making me vibrate and pulsate to her body... it’s wonderful, to feel more loves in life, that you would never understand unless you let someone all the way in you- and take over ever that your mind boy and soul is- she can even see through my eyes- we can switch places- all in one mind game of a spell- called- The Back and Forth, spell.

Any-who-

‘None of your brothers caused this sort of trouble!’

Mr.’s Railie raged at their twins as she slammed a fresh flagon of Butterbeer on to their table, and spilling almost as much again. Sara did not feel their need to Apparated every few feet!

Charlie did not charm everything she met! Percy.’ She stopped dead, catching her breath with a frightened look at her husband, whose expression was suddenly wooden.

‘Let’s eat,’ said Sara quickly.

‘It looks wonderful, Molly,’ said Sevket, ladling stew on to a plate for her and handing it across their table.

For a few minutes, there was silence but for their clink of plates and cutlery and their scraping of chairs as everyone settled down to their food.

Then Mr.'s Railie turned to Trius.

'I've been meaning to tell you, Trius, there is something trapped in that writing desk in their drawing room, it keeps rattling and checking. Of course, it could just be a Boggart, but I thought we ought to ask Valastro to have a look at it before we let it out.'

'Whatever you like,' said Trius indifferently.

'There curtains in there are full of Doxes, too,' Mr.'s Railie went on.' I thought we might try and tackle them anyhow.'

'I look forward to it,' said Trius. Naddalin heard their sarcasm in her voice, but she was not sure, that anyone else did.

Opposite Naddalin, Tonks was entertaining Emmah and Jill by transforming her nose between mouthfuls.

Screwing up her eyes each time with their same pained expression she had worn back in Naddalin's bedroom.

Her nose swelled to a beak-like protuberance that resembled Snappiest, shrank to their size of a button mushroom and then sprouted a great deal of hair from each nostril.

This was a regular mealtime entertainment because Emmah and Jill were soon asking for their favorite noses. 'Do that one like a pig snout, Tonks.'

Tonks obliged, and Naddalin, immobilized, then up too, had their fleeting impression that a female Dariez was grinning at her from across their table.

Mr. Railie, Sara, and Sevet were having an intense discussion about sprites - haunts.

'Theory is not giving anything away yet,' said Sara. 'I still cannot work out whether they believe she is back. Course, they might prefer not to take sides at all. Keep out of it...'

‘I’m sure they would never go over to You-Know-Whom,’ said Mr. Railie, checking the heads. The theory has suffered losses too; remember that- goblin family she murdered last time, somewhere near Lavannah?’

‘I think it depends on what they are offered,’ said Sevket. ‘And I am not toluene about gold. If they are offered their freedoms, we have been denying them for centuries they are going to be tempted. Have you still not had any luck with Amsel’s, girl Sara...?’

Alissa, Allison, Adriane, and Ava, as you know nothing has changed with girls... and the conflict is still on, Sara being one of them down the line. They are like you and I- why do they feel they need to be more? Maiara Chenoa, for nothing, is going to change even after 200 years of back and forth... good and wicked. And Neveah is the cause yet again, said Duerre’s, this girl is a noble haunt, that is a stain on us all. Look what she did all these girls and he rolls out an old tattered script.

That was a question for years that no one could get, said Haven.

‘She’s feeling anti-wizard- ie fallen angel- sh right freaking now,’ said Sara, ‘she has not stopped raving about their Bagman business, she reckons their Ministry did a cover-up, those Sprites-Haunts never- ever got their gold from her, you know...’

A gale of laughter from the middle of their table drowned their rest of Sara’s words. Céline, Katy, Jinger, and MonDongos were rolling around in their seats. Neveah was high up in her world, and this was not cool- not cool! Or so they thought.

‘...And then,’ Hayvannah- MonDeanahgo’s, tears running down her face,’ and then, if you will believe it, ‘she- e says to me,’ she- e says,’ Ere, Dung, where did get all them toads from?

‘CUZ- some girl of a Sludgers gone and

Sailed all mine!’ And I say, ‘Sailed all your toads, Will, what next? So, you will be wanting some more, then?’ And if you will believe me, all, their germless gargoyle buys all. ‘I own toads back off me for a lot more what- ‘she- e paid in their first place.’

‘I do not think we need to hear any more of your business dealings, thank you very much, MonDongos,’ said Mr.’s Railie abruptly, as Jinger slumped forwards on to their table, fly her wings spreading them wide - up with laughter on her face, and then looking evil to all that was around her.

‘Beg par- Deanah, Molly,’ said MonDongos at once, wiping her eyes and winking at Naddalin. ‘But, you know, Will Sailed’ me off Warty Harris in their first place so I was not really doing nothing winger.’

‘I’s Do not know where you learned about right and winger, MonDongos, but you seem to have missed a few crucial lessons,’ said Mr.’s Railie coldly.

Céline and Katy buried their faces in their goblets of Butterbeer; Katy was hiccoughing. In some regard, Mr.’s Railie threw a very nasty look at Trius before getting to her feet and going to fetch a large rhubarb crumble for pudding. Naddalin looked round at her God daddy.

‘Molly does not approve of MonDongos,’ said Trius in an undertone.

‘How come she is in their Order?’ Naddalin said, very quietly.

‘She is useful,’ Trius muttered.

‘Knows all their crooks well, she would since she is one herself.

But she is also very loyal to Duerre, who helped her out of a tight spot once. It pays to have someone like Dung around, she hears things we do not,’ like all that were before her - with this- THING- HEX.’ He said wildly.

But Molly thinks inviting her to stay for dinner is going too far. She has not forgiven her for slipping off duty when she was supposed to be tailing you.

Three helpings of rhubarb crumble and custard later and their waistband on Natalie’s jeans was feeling uncomfortably tight... (which was saying something, as their jeans had once been Diaries.)

As she laid down her spoon there was a stillness in their general conversation: Mr. Railie was leaning back in her chair, ever so- replete and relaxed; Tonks was yawning widely, her nose now back to normal; and Jill who had attracted Crook shanks out from under their dresser, was sitting cross-legged on their floor, rolling Butterbeer corks for her to chase.

Part: 7

‘Nearly time for bed, girls are nude running around, washing you can see them, I think,’ said Mr.’s Railie with a yawn, and give a nude hug to her than them my girl. And I kiss her... and finger her, bits.

She drove his tongue into her setting off another shattering moan that was music to her ears.

She was quite an instrument to play, so finely tuned, and if she touches her right, she made their most glorious sounds, raw, intense, delicious noises of pleasure as she plundered her with her tongue.

She grabbed her long hair, yanked, and pulling her closer as she had told her to do. She thrust one finger into her, cooking it and hitting her in their spot that turned her moans into one long, high- pitched orgasm.

She shuddered against her, her legs quaking, and when she finally slowed to look up at her, she saw her hair was a wild tumble, and her face was glowing.

Oh- ah...

(Next day)

‘Not just yet, Molly’ said Trius, pushing away his empty plate and turning to look at Naddalin.’ You know, I am surprised at you. I thought their first thing you would do when you got here would be to start as the queen questions about Waltemath.’

Their atmosphere in their room changed with their rapidity Naddalin associated with their arrival of Dementiators. Where seconds before it had been sleepily relaxed, it was now alert, even tense.

A frigidly had gone around their table at their mention of Waltemath’s name. Sevket, who had been about to take a sip of wine, lowered her goblet, flying suspiciously.

‘I did!’ said Naddalin indignantly.’ I asked Jinger and Emmah, but they said we’re not allowed in their order, so-o.’

‘And they’re quite right,’ said Mr.’s Railie.

‘You’re too young.’

She was sitting bolt upright in her chair, her fists clenched on its arms, every trace of drowsiness gone.

And since when did someone have to be in their Order of their Durizy to ask questions?' inquired Trius. 'Naddalin's been trapped in that nonmagical people house for a month. She's got their right to know what is been happen-' 'Hang on...!' Interrupted Katy loudly.

'How come Naddalin gets his questions answered?' And- yah- said Céline angrily.

'Yen's- we have been trying to get stuff out of you for a month and you have not told us a single stouter thing!' Said Katy.

'You're too young, you are not in their Order,' said Céline, in a high- pitched voice, that sounded uncannily like her mothers. 'Naddalin's not even of age!'

'It's not my fault you have not been told what their orders doing,' said Trius calmly, 'that's your parents' decision. Naddalin, on their other hand.'

'It's not down to you to decide what is good for Naddalin!' said Mr.'s Railie sharply. Their expression on her normally kind face looked dangerous. 'You have not forgotten what Duerre said, I suppose?'

'Which bit...?' Trius asked politely, but with their air of a man readying herself for a fight.

There bit about not telling Naddalin more than she needs to know,' said Mr.'s Railie, placing a heavy emphasis on their last three words.

Jinger, Emmah, Céline and Katy's heads swiveled from Trius to Mr.'s Railie as though they were following a tennis rally. Jill was kneeling amid a pile of Butterbeer corks, watching their conversation with her mouth slightly open. Sevket's eyes were fixed on Trius.

'I do not intend to tell her more than she needs to know, Molly,' said Trius. 'Nevertheless, as she was their one who saw Waltemath come back' (again, there was a joint shudder around their table at their name) like she has righter than most too.'

She- it is not a member of their order of their Durizy!' said Mr.'s Railie. 'she's only going to look and be around fifteen- and... soul in the body- and mind- like them all- that is what she well stays along with her barcode numbers, like them all, the age they became- soul- fallen.'

‘And she is dealt with as much as most in their Order,’ said Trius,’ and more than some.’

‘Knopper ones denying what she’s Deanahe!’ said Mr.’s Railie, her voice rising, her fists trembling on their arms of her chair.’ But she’s still...’

- ‘She’s not a child!’ said Trius impatiently.

- ‘She’s not an adult either!’ said Mr.’s Railie, their color rising in her cheeks. ‘she’s not’ Alyssa, Trius!’

‘I’m perfectly clear who she is, thanks, Molly,’ said Trius coldly.

‘I’m not sure you are!’ Said Mr.’s Railie.

- ‘Sometimes, their way you talk about her, it is as though you think you have your best friend back!’

- ‘What’s Jigger with that?’ said Naddalin.

- ‘What’s winger, Naddalin, is that you are not your daddy, however much you might look like her!’ said Mr.’s Railie, her eyes still boring into Trius.

- ‘You are still at Savannah and adults responsible for you should not forget it!’

‘Meaning- I am an irresponsible God daddy?’

Oh- deliquesced Trius, his voice rising.

‘Connotation you have been known to act rashly, Trius, which is why-why- Duerre keeps reminding, you to stay at home...

- And-

‘Well leave my orders from Duerre out of this, if you please!’ said Trius deafeningly.

‘Arthur!’ said Mr.’s Railie, rounding on her publicities.’ Arthur, back me up!’

Mr. Railie did not speak at once. She took off her glasses and cleaned them on her black wispy like robes, only when she had replaced them carefully on her nose did, he reply, he is being her love of life did that.

‘Duerre knows their position has changed, Molly. She accepts that Naddalin must be filled in, to a certain extent, now that she is staying at Headquarters.’”

‘Yes, but there is an alteration between that and inviting her to ask whatever she likes!’
‘Partially,’ said Sevket quietly, some ways, away from Trius at last, as Mr.’s Railie turned quickly to her, hopeful that finally, she was about to get an ally, ‘I think it better that Naddalin gets their facts not all their facts, Molly, but their general picture from us, rather than a garbled version from... others.’

Her expression was mild, but Naddalin felt sure Sevket, at least, knew that some Extendable Ears had survived Mr.’s Rallies purge.

‘Well,’ said Mr.’s Railie, breathing deeply And Pa. around their table for the support that did not come, ‘well... I can see I am going to be overruled. I will just say this: Duerre, must have had she - regards for not wanting Naddalin to know too much, and sequin as someone who has

Naddalin’s best interests at heart.’

‘She’ is not your girl,’ said Trius quietly.

‘she’ is as good as... f*cked,’ said Mr.’s Railie fiercely.’ Who else has she - got that feeling about her?’

~*~

- ‘She’s got me!’

Part: 8

‘Yes,’ said Mr.’s Railie, her lip- curling,’ they’re- thing is, it’s ratted her difficult for you to look after her while you’ve been locked UP in Dizery I And, has not it?’

Trius started to rise from the chairs.

‘Molly, you are not their- the only pergirl at their table who cares about Naddalin,’ said Sevket sharply.’ Trius, sit down.’

Mr.’s Rallies’ lower lip was trembling. Trius sank flying back into the chairs, at this point face white as could be.

‘I think Naddalin ought to be allowed a say in there,’ Sevket continued, ‘she-’s old enough to decide for herself.’”

‘I want to know what’s been going on,’ Naddalin said simultaneously.

She- did not look at Mr.’s Railie. Her- had been touchers- d by what she- had said about she is as good as a girl, but she- was also impatient with the mollycoddling. Trius was right, she- was not a child.

‘Very well,’ said Mr.’s Railie, her voice- racquet.’ Jill, Jinger, Emmah, Céline, & Katy. I’s want you out of their kitchen- n, now.’

There- was an instant uproar.

‘Whereof age!’ Céline And Katy bellowed together.

‘If Naddalin’s allowed, why cannot I?’ shouted Jinger.

‘Mom, I want to see- are!’ wailed Jill.

‘NO...!’ shouted Mr.’s Railie, timewasting up, her eyes over bright like the light sky of Earth that we used to know.’ I absolutely forbid.’

‘Molly, you cannot stop Céline And Katy,’ said Mr. Railie wearily. They are of age.’

‘Theory is still at Savannah.’

‘But they are legally adults now,’ said Mr.

Railie, in their- same tired voice.

Mr.’s Railie was now scarlet in their- face.

‘I’m oh, all right there- n, Céline, And Katy can stay, but Jinger.’

‘Nathaniel tells’ me... And Emmah everything you say anyway!’ said Jinger passionately. ‘Won’t will not you?’ She- added uncertainly, meeting Naddalin’s eyes.

For a split second, Naddalin considered telling Jinger that she- would not tell her a single word, that she- could try a taste of being kept in their- dark and see how she- liked it.

Never she- less their- nasty impulse vanished- as they looked at each other.

'Course I's will,' Naddalin said.

Jinger... and... Emmah smiled.

Part: 9

'Fine!' shouted Mr.'s Railie. 'Fine! Jill-

BED!'

Jill did not go quietly; they could shape she is raging and storming at her mother- r all their- way up there- stairs, and she- n' she- reached their- hall Mr.'s Blacks ear-splitting shrieks were added to their- din. Sevket hurried off to their- portrait to restore calm. It was only after she- had returned, closing their- kitchen- n door behind her and dequeen she seats at their- table again, that Trius spoke.

'OKay, Naddalin... what do you want to know?'

Naddalin took a deep breath... And asked their- question that had obsessed her for their- last month.

'Where's Waltemath?' she- said, ignoring their- renewed shudders and winces at their- name. 'What's she- doing? I have been trying to watch their- nonmagical people news, and their- re has not been anything that looks like her yet, no funny deaths or anything.'

'That is because- they have not been any funny deaths yet,' said Trius, 'Not any way... And we know quite a- lot.'

'More than she- thinks we do, anyway,' said Sevket.

'How come she- 's stopped killing people?' Naddalin asked. She- knew Waltemath had murdered more than once in their- last year alone.

'Because she- does not want to draw attention to herself,' said Trius. 'It would be dangerous for her. Her comeback did not come off quite their- way she- wanted it to, you see. She- messed it up.'

'Or rats her-, you messed it tip for her,' said Sevket, with a satisfied smile.

'How?' Naddalin asked, perplexed.

'You were not supposed to survive!' said Trius.

‘Nobody apart from the Death Eaters was supposed to know she’d come back.

But you survived to bear witness.

‘And they’re- very last per girl she- wanted to be alerted to her return their- moment she- got back was Duerre,’ said Sevket.

‘And you made sure Duerre knew at once.’ ‘How has that she- led?’ Naddalin asked.

‘Are you kidding?’ Said Sara incredulously. ‘Duerre was there - the only one You Know

Who was ever scared of!’

Thanks to you, Duerre could recall their- Order of their- Durizy about an hour after Waltemath returned,’ said Trius.

Part: 10

‘So, what is their- Order been doing?’ said Naddalin, Looking around at them all.

‘Torqueing as hard as we can to make sure

Waltemath cannot carry out the plans,’ said Trius.

How would you know what she plans are?’ Naddalin asked quickly.

‘Duerre’s got a shrewd idea,’ said Sevket, ‘And Duerre’s shrewd ideas normally turn out to be correct.’

‘So-o what does Duerre reckon she- ’s planning?’

~Planning...

The Underworld

Open your eyes... too the... Underworld-

I opened my eyes- towards- Mattie, obviously- as well as to my bigger sister, who has saved me many- countless times from the dark underneath of the black deaths- lost in time and space alike, a place that one can only dream of... yet, feels- oh so really going- into, as well as for who I would delightedly go down underneath deep in and wish- to save from- The Underworld.

Creep... creep... creeping in on them...

One mysterious, cryptic, and ambiguous night when Megan went to bed, Mattie was her flabby, stumpy, chocolate-burrowing and junk- food, pop-loving litter sister, whom annoyed the crap out of her, and charmed her both in a fun playful way, a way that on two that are clause would understand and get...

~*~

Then the next morning, and when she woke up, she was no longer. Do you get that? NO LONGER!

~*~

Perhaps- Magen could not define the transformations which took place here. Can you yet...?

~*~

She looked the same yet was not she said the same, yet it was not, she loved me yet it was not the same love I felt back, he was not her. Do you get that? She - was no longer...

~*~

Mattie and was wearing the same pair of ratty fleece pajamas red, with the same yet his with the little toe sticking out, of course, that would be her, the hole gets bigger every night I see her; just like in the back too, girl she is getting chubby, and he arose down the set of steps precisely the same way the actual, genuine- Mattie would have done: thumb, bump, banged, sliding on his rump, all the way doing to the landing.

Saying- Weeee!

~*~

However, she was not the equivalent of what I know her as. In actual truth, here, he was somewhat, quite unlike the others his and my age.

~*~

It was approximately- in the way she is observing her: It was as though celebrity had stretched behindhand his eyes and twisted away with diligent and complete enthusiasm. Were young girls we do not understand are underworld... do you...?

~*~

Mattie- marched snakingly, oh too silently, noiselessly, and like a glimmer of something underworldly.

~*~

Silent steps he made to the table, she sat kindly sat like a stone in his chair emotionless to the real world, that we live in, plus he placed a paper towel on his lap.

~*~

The real Mattie never used a bib or towel. Yet she - was all neat and such... she just whipped it wherever she pleased. Yet nothing not one of the old guys or girls here noticed - a thing- wrong- with her. Can you see it...?

~*~

Mrs. Smith is Megan's mother. Do you see here there, just doing her day to day thing?

Mrs. Smith did not break for her kid's attraction lost in the crazed - fantasy world of work and distress, and being worked up over it, nonstop categorization from end to end the stack of bills on the kitchen table; making occasional noises of unhappiness.

~*~

Megan's father continuous fly- by- night in and out of the room, his tie loosened, in addition to that only wearing one sock and no paints- just boxers, muttering distractedly on the cell phone about what seems to be nothing that makes any senses.

~*~

The imitation- Mattie to me not them, picked up her spoon as well as offered me some of her cherished food, which just does not happen. With this big girl that love- love- loves to eat everything in his sight, is that, not right?

~*~

With that creepy- so- o eerie- appearance, appearance, which chilled me to the very center core of my young little body. Do you see me there? Do you see my brown hair and my bow ties...?

~*~

My big and stunning immense russet eyes? Am I not- I am cute to you?

Do you see my little face in pale white, glow in the morning sun coming in from the window over there by the sink, mom doing the dishes, and everything else she does all at once it seems to me?

~*~

Then the phony- Mattie starts to eat his lucky- cereal bits, painstakingly, unhurriedly, harpooning all the alphabet letters out of his Alpha- bits one by one as well as reinforcing them up along the rim of her bowl.

Spilling out- creep- creepy- little- girl- die!

~*~

I see in her eyes the spider calling form he is dead eyes and out of them, giving me this message that was drug down to the coldness and dampness of- The Underworld-ness below us.

~*~

I could hear the sounds of the music eerie to me playing her to sleep or it seemed to me... the horn was all I could make out... it was all muffled to my stifled ear, under and I look at the hole of temptation between downwards that is only part of me that goes in my soul its- I finger it and they- come, is where they must have taken her... do you think so?

Was the door under her bed was glowing...? It is all most underworld time... Creepers...

Megan's heart dropped for the chest to foot and back up... in panic. She knew at that moment, at the time, on this day, in this year, what had come about... as well as she distinguished, that the heavens were up like the real world to me as I go down in the heat of the moment and if you turned around fast, spinning in the confusion, circling down to the dark depths below, and then stood motionless... so still.

~*~

As the evil ripped through me and my figure, like spiders calling all over me. Tangled in the webs of their chromes. Like me going through them with my lantern, I could not see up or down or around just the voices of temptations.

Come, come, see us, hear us, play with- US...we got cookies and candy if you give up your soul to us!

~*~

The entire underworld just keeps turning the circling around me, deeper and deeper, lower, and lower... I went- hearing all their voices getting amplified to me.

Perhaps- maybe, just maybe his too, Mattie's soul had been taken by- The Underworld entities.

As well as they had left this thing, all kinds of things behind, in my room and her area, do you see them?

~*~

This not- my younger- sister, she's been replaced... or is it?

Is it some other form of her too? 'Mom,' she said, and then, when her mother did not immediately respond, tried again a little louder.

(Back to that mooring)

'Mom.'

'Yes...' -Magg.

Mom- 'Mum?' I said fast and abruptly! I jumped, to the harshness of her high squally pain in the butt sometimes voice. She narrowed her eyes at her for an instant, the same way she has observed me and her when we do something wrong, and they say your full name.

~*~

Like always- 'Mattie's being weird,' Megan said.

Mom- stared alertly at my daughter, nevertheless with cold eyes. Then I twirled around, unexpectedly, to my husband looking at me with wonder and concern to my ways. 'Did you ever pay the electric bill and the rest we can afford?'

~*~

Mom- I didn't seem to hear her as I was predating away about nothing, but her young ways of kid-ish mumbling. 'Have you seen my glasses, and my phone, my, I-pad, and mind?'

~*~

Dad- was questioning, lifting the banana and peering underneath of it, and it was so turning my tummy looking at it, I am not a dumb girl you know.

He- he- he...

~*~

'They're on your head doing cartwheels.' STOP!

'My reading glasses... are...?'

Mom- I sighed impatiently. 'It says this is our absolute ultimate announcement. I do not recollect the first notice. Did we pay the electric bill? I could have sworn...'

I do not worry about this sh*t! I a little girl remember I was thinking. I do not say yet I think that is for sure.

~*~

'I can't go to work without my glasses!' Mr. Smith opened the refrigerator, stared at its contents, closed the refrigerator, and dashed out of the room into the living room for the door without. Through the table, it feels as I hit my leg... damn-it.

~*~

The replica- Mattie began rearranging the cereal letters on the outside of his bowl. She spelled out three words: I H-A-T- E y-o-u! In addition, you are going to die tonight in my room if you do not come down with me.

~*~

Then she gathered her hands, and stared at her with that bizarrely unoccupied look, as though the black part of his eyes had eaten up all the color.

Down I went... Holding this child's hand... Come...

The Underworld- is like... a webbed field of never- endianness, the raps you mind clean of you and your thoughts. The underworld could be the holes that go in me. it wants to come out and play with me too.

~*~

Megan's insides trembled again as it comes for her. Seeing the twigs, and all the lights and branches suck her in, like she.

She slid off her chair and went over to her mother.

She tugged at the sleeve of her mother's nightgown, which had a small coffee stain on its elbow.

(Back to midday)

‘Mommy.’

‘Yes, baby?’ she asked absentmindedly.

‘Mattie’s freaking me out.’

‘Mattie,’ Mrs. Smith said, without looking up from her notepad, on which she was now scribbling various figures. ‘Stop bothering your sister like that.’

Here is what the real Mattie would have done: He would have stuck out his tongue or thrown his napkin at Megan in retribution, or he would have said, ‘It’s her face that’s the bother.’

Nevertheless, this impostor did none of those things. The impostor just stared quietly at Megan and smiled.

Her teeth looked very white. ‘Mom-’ Megan swore, and her mother sighed, in addition, threw down her pencil with so much force that it bounced.

~*~

‘Please, Megan,’ she said, with barely concealed impatience. ‘Can’t you see that I’m busy? Why don’t you go outside and play for a bit?’

Megan knew better than to argue with her mother when she was in a mood.

So, she went outside. It was a hot and hazy morning- far too hot for late April.

She was hoping to see one of the neighbors out doing something- watering a plant, walking a dog- but it was very still.

Megan almost, never- ever saw the neighbors. It was not that kind of neighborhood. She did not even know most of their names: only Mrs. Rosenblatt, who was so old she looked exactly like a snip.

Today, as on most days, Mrs. Rosenblatt was sitting on her porch, rocking, and fanning herself with one of the Chinese delivery menus that were often stuck mysteriously, invisibly, in the middle of the night- under the front door.

‘Hello,’ she called out to Megan and waved. ‘Hello!’

Megan called back... she liked Mrs. Rosenblatt, even though Mrs. Rosenblatt hardly ever moved except to rock in her chair and could not be counted on to do anything interesting.

~*~

Mrs. Rosenblatt liked to rock even in cold- weather, and she would appear on her porch so bundled in blankets and scarves, she looked like an overfilled coatrack.

‘Would you like a glass of milk?’

Mrs. Rosenblatt called out. ‘or a cookie?’ She offered Megan milk, and a cookie every time they saw each other unless it was winter; in which case, she offered hot chocolate and a cookie.

‘Not today, thank you,’ Megan said. Remorsefully, as she always did. She was not allowed- to accept things to eat or drink from nonfamily members. Megan often wished the rule applied to Family Members instead.

She would much rather have had one of Mrs.

Rosenblatt’s cookies than her Aunt Stirginia’s tuna casserole. She wondered whether she should tell Mrs. Rosenblatt about Mattie, but decided against it.

(Three weeks previous)

Magen- I am at recess when she had tried to tell Sammie and Ellie, was so wrong about the underworldly societies, and the constant threat they posed, they had laughed at her and called her a liar. Mrs. Rosenblatt was a good listener- partly, Megan thought because she couldn’t hear very well, nonetheless, Megan did not want to jeopardize this.

~*~

There was only one thing that Megan loathed more than liars, besides that was being suspects of being one. At one edge of the yard, a pile of pinecones has been neatly stacked.

~*~

Megan had decided them this way only yesterday, thinking that she and Mattie might play a round of Pinecone bowling in the morning.

Nevertheless, she could not play with the false Mattie; he would no doubt find a way to cheat.

~*~

She had a sudden wrenching fierce desire for Anna, her old babysitter, to come home.

Why?

Not sure, she would have played with me over the years, outside and in she showed me so much about myself too and the underworld that goes down in me that is where she went - I just know it.

At least that is what I think... do you?

Last fall in me was Anna, she did not beeline that I have the world to me, till she entered the black hole of mine, she has gone away to middle school not long before...

This meant that she had stimulated, and could not babysit anymore, in addition instead Megan and Mattie were left with Mandy, who always chewed her gum too loudly and didn't like to play games- she did not like anything, really, except talking on the phone.

~*~

Anna had come over to babysit several times during her summer vacation, but on her spring break, she had gone away with her friends. Megan and Mattie and Sammie had gotten a water-warped postcard from her, but most of the writing had been too blurry to read.

~*~

I have the postcard she had sent from the beach, after all this time, and a white sweatshirt with a fierce-looking bear on the front, explaining in the involved note that it was her school's mascot.

Mattie had cried like a baby when it turned out the sweatshirt was in Megan's size, and she had finally lent it to her.

He had promptly spilled tomato sauce on it, and she'd refused to speak to her for an entire day.

Megan knew it was stupid, but sometimes she fantasized, that Anna would turn up again and confess her deepest secret: that Megan and Mattie were, in fact, her siblings, and they had all been torn apart by some horrible event when they were little and forced into different families.

Oh!

Um-hum! Come for us...

Do you see the lying silt ship that leads into 'The Underworld?'

The Underworld- is a dark wet place, where you come in and see the thing that brings you joy, yet makes you feel weak to the wrongness of what you are doing to yourself, there is no light only wonder, there are voices come, screaming for you to come...

Like sweeping the sides of you until you have no choice, but move the feel goods of their games, that they play as they get you to do as they say, and the enter into you and play with your brain and you no long you going on with your day, what do you say- do you play with your underworld; Maddie went into mine, and he not coming out.

Megan's fantasies were a little hazy after that point, but she thought that somehow, she, Anna, and Mattie would end up on a long journey together, hunting down some of the magical creatures Anna had always told them about, like gnomes and nymphets (Who were gorgeous, then again corrupt wicked- tempered.)

Megan sighed; Anna would also have known what to do about the spider-like entities got her to as she went into her hole to the underworld. She was, after all, the creature who had first told Megan and Mattie about them.

She was the one who had warned them about the strange spider creatures and had told them what they must do to be dwindling.

Megan scanned the yard for gnomes but saw nothing. Only last week, Mattie, the real Mattie, had spotted one scampering into the rhododendron.

~*~

The real me was not there either they were making me come, for there ways and not my own, as I went on trying to do me, and my day.

‘Look, Megan!’ She had cried out, and she had turned just in time to see a hard, brown hide, which was as fractured along with worn as a leather purse.

~*~

It was too hot for the gnomes today, Megan decided. Anna had told Megan they preferred cool climates.

Megan pressed her face up against the small fir tree that stood next to the birdbath, inhaling deeply.

It was easier to see the magic through its branches, she found.

The itchy needles poked deeply into her skin, and she stood and squinted through the layers of khaki.

Looking at the world through the fir tree meant seeing only the essential things: the vivid olive of the meadow’s, dew glistening on petals, a robin flicking its tail, a squirrel rustling through the rhododendron, a miracle of life, and growth that forever pulsed under the commonplaceness.

~*~

Advantageous, of course, it was only when looking through the tree that you could make a wish, and have it come true, Anna had also told them that.

Megan spoke a wish quietly into the scratchy branches.

We will not repeat it... All and sundry knows that only wishes that are kept secret will ever come true.

On the other hand, then again know this: Oh! All- the desire was about Mattie and finding what was with me, as the world of an image that I felt doing this... looking for the wandering things that would make you wonder, I may find digging and fingering myself, for her inside me.

~*~

Megan heard a step behind her. She turned and saw the Mattie - who - was - no long her to me - or them, Mattie standing on the front porch, watching her.

Megan sucked in a deep breath like she sucked us into her underworld as we look and put our head and body down in it to get there, gathered her young age, and said, 'You are not my sister.' not- Mattie stared at her with flat blue eyes. 'Absolutely, I am,' she said calmly.

'You are not them; I am not me doing this.'

'Am too... I said it too do you see that I am I do not lie... you know that sissy.' 'Prove it,' Megan said, crossing her arms, and she tried to think of a question whose answer only the real Mattie would know.

She was quiet for a bit. At last, she asked, 'When you are playing hide - and - seek on a rainy day, not she is doing it in me, what is the best hiding space?'

~*~

The old place was - 'Behind the bookcase in the basement,' not- Mattie answered automatically. 'In the crawl space that smells like mold.' Megan was disappointed.

She had gotten it right; this fake Mattie was obviously smarter than she gave her credit for - smarter, she would not wonder, than the real Mattie.

(Though that was not saying much. only a week ago, the real Mattie had tried to turn the basement into a swimming pool by flooding the sink! Absurd.)

Maybe - she needed to ask a former question within.

'What must you do every night before you go to sleep?'

Megan said, eyeing the fake - Mattie narrowly to see whether there was any hesitation or shiftiness in her answer.

However, she re-joined promptly, drawing a big X across her chest, 'you must cross yourself once from shoulder to hip and say out loud, 'sweep, sweep, bring me to sleep.

Clear the webs from my room with the bristliest broom.'

Megan was stunned. She had been sure positive! The question: would baffle fake - Mattie, but her answer was correct, and he stood looking at her with an expression of triumph.

When Anna had first discovered the underworld entries, she had invented this rhyme as a way of keeping the underworld boys at bay while they slept. The girl in the underworld makes me come to them and play with the top and bottoms of the getaways, to the soul.

Everyone knows there is nothing a spider fears' more than a broom, and someone sweeping with it, and the broom charm had, in fact, protected them for years. Mattie, the real Mattie, must have forgotten to say the bedtime magnetism last night before she went to sleep.

She and Megan had been fighting about seeing each other's worlds - Mattie had accused her of stealing her favorite socks, which were sapphire, and embroidered with turtles, as though she would ever have worn anything so preposterous - besides, Megan called her distrustful, and when he did not know what that meant, she stormed into his room and slammed the door.

~*~

She was distracted; that must be why she had not said the broom charm. Megan felt a heavy rush of guilt. It was her fault, at least partially. And so, The Underworld guys had gotten her: They had dropped down from the ceiling on their glistening webs of shadowed darkness and dropped their silken threads in her ear, and extracted his soul slowly, like a fisherman persuading a trout from the water on a taut nylon fishing line.

In its place, they deposited their eggs; then they withdrew to their shadowed, dark corners and their underground lairs with her soul bound closely in silver thread.

And the soulless shell would wake the next morning, and walk, and talk, as counterfeit - Mattie was walking and talking.

All the same eventually, the soulless shell would crumble to dust, and thousand - Underworld guys and some girls - nested and grown - would burst forth, like a Megan hatching from an egg.

And distraught parents would wake up, believing their children to have been kidnapped while they slept, and they would appear tearfully on television, begging for their children's safe return, when really The Underworld gangs were to blame.

Megan felt a sudden tightness in her throat as they made squirt it all out within and she saw them all as they giggle saying it's all right to do this.

'You see oozing with this webbing!' The sham- Mattie crowed. 'I told you. I am your sister.' Then Megan was struck by an idea.

'Come here,' she said to not- Mattie, and even though she was filled with revulsion by the closeness of this imitation, this cold and cardboard thing, she forced herself to stand still as she approached.

Unexpectedly she lunged for her and began tickling her tummy.

~*~

The real Mattie was extraordinarily ticklish and would have screamed with laughter and tried to shove Megan off and begged for mercy.

Megan loved the sound of Mattie's joke. It came, in short, explosive bursts, as though each time she was relearning how to do it.

This Mattie stood still, watching her dully. 'What are you doing?' She asked.

~*~

Megan pulled away as I went back down in me and then she was all up in mine too. She then had the same feeling she'd had several years ago, when she had swung too high and too fast on the swings at the playground, and the world teetered underneath her: a feeling of triumph but also of terror.

She knew it...

This Mattie was not the real Mattie. And that meant that the soul of the real Mattie had been bound up in the silver thread and carried deep underground and that inside the body of not- Mattie, insects were nesting.

Megan drew herself up to her full four feet four inches.

‘I am not afraid of you,’ she said- to fake Mattie, but she was, of course, speaking to all those infant underworld boys sleeping soundly in their thousands of soft eggs, somewhere deep inside his chest.

And of course, she was afraid. She was more afraid than she had ever been in her life.

‘I will find my real sister, and I will bring her back to me and my mommy and daddy, that doesn't get that I play with newly found- Underworld.’

~*~

In addition to then she spun quickly on her heel and stalked off toward the house, so not- Mattie and the tiny monsters he carried inside her would not see that she was shaking.

Let us just say- I never- ever stopped playing with this underworld, but I did find out what it really was... and where it can take, she and me...

I hope you understand this Underworld to and have fun with it...

We will come for you too...

Book: 37

Death Devours

Part: 1

'Well, firstly, she- wants to build up the army again,' said Trius.' In their- old days she- had huge numbers then she come and: watchers and wizards and fallen angels alike, she'd intimidated or bewitched into following her, she faithful death devours, a great variety of Dark creatures.

You hurt her planning to recruit their- giants; well, they will be just one of their- groups she's after. She's certainly not going to try and take on their- Bureau of Magic with only a dozen death devours.'

'So, you are trying to stop her from getting more followers?'

'We're doing our best,' said Sevket.

'How?'

'Well, their- main thing is to try, and convincing as many people as possible that you know- whom she- has refunded, to put them on their guard,' said Sara.' It's proving a tricky, though.'

'Why...?'

WHY- 'Because of their- Bureau's attitude,' said Tonks.' You saw Cornelius Harlan after You Know Who came back, Naddalin.

Well, she- has not shifted her position at all.

She's refusing to believe it happens.'

'But why?' Said Naddalin desperately, why is she- being so stupid? If Duerre...'

'Ah, well, you have put your finger on the- problem,' said Mr. Railie with an ironic smile.' Duerre.'

'Harlan is frightened of her, you see,' said Tonks sadly.

'Frightened of Duerre?' Said Naddalin incredulously.

Frightened of what she's up to,' said Mr. Railie.' Harlan thinks Duerre's plotting to overthrow her. she- thinks Duerre wants to be Martita for Magic.'

‘But Duerre does not want’

‘Unquestionably, she- does not,’ said Mr. Railie.’ ‘She never wanted their- Martian's job, even though a lot of people wanted her to take it she'd Millicent Bagnold retired.

Harlan came to power instead, but she's never- ever quite forgotten how much popular support Duerre had, even though Duerre never- ever applied for their- job.’

Part: 2

‘Deep down, Harlan knows Duerre's much cleverer than she- is a much more powerful wizard, and in there- early days of their Bureau she- was forever as thinking Duerre for help, and advice,’ said Sevket.

‘But it seems she's become fond of power, and much more confident. She - loves being Martita for Magic And she's managed to convince herself that she's there- clever one And Duerre's simply stirring up trouble for their- sake of it.’

‘How can she- think that?’ Said Naddalin angrily.’ How can she- think Duerre would just make it all up, that I would make it all up?’ ‘Because accepting that AVA's back would mean trouble like their- Bureau has not had to cope with for fourteen years,’ said Trius bitterly.’ Harlan just cannot bring herself to face it. It is so much more comfortable to convince herself Duerre's lying to destabilize her.’

‘You see their- problem,’ said Sevket.’ While they're- Bureau insists there is nothing to fear from AVA it is hard to convince people she's back, especially as they do not want to believe it in their- first place. what is more, their- Bureau is leaning she- avidly on their- Daily Prop not to report any of what they are calling Duerre's rumor-mongering, so most of their- wizarding community is completely unaware anything happened, and that makes them easy targets for their- Death Consumers if they are using their- Imperious Curse.’

Nonetheless, you are telling people, aren't you?’ Said Naddalin, around at Mr. Railie, Trius, Sara, Mon- Deanahgos, Sevket, And Tonks.’ You're letting people know she's back?’

They all smiled humorlessly.

‘Well, as everyone thinks I am a mad mass murderer and they're- Bureau is put a ten those... And Galleon price on my head, I can hardly stroll up the- street and start and out leaflets, can I's?’ said Trius restlessly.

‘And I am not a very popular dinner guest with most of their- community,’ said Sevket. ‘It’s an occupational hazard of being a werewolf.’

‘Tonks And Arthur would lose their jobs at their- Bureau if they started shooting their mouths off,’ said Trius, ‘And we need to have spies inside their- Bureau because you can bet AVA will have them.’

‘We’ve managed to convince a couple of people, though,’ said Mr. Railie. Tonks, she, for one she’s too young to have been in their- Order of their- Durizy last time, and having Auroras on our side is a huge advantage, Regal c*ckleboats been a real asset, too; she’s in charge of their- hunt for Trius, so she’s been feeding their- Bureau information that Trius is in Tibet.’

‘But if none of you are putting their- news out that Mazel Amsel back’ Naddalin began.

‘Who said none of us are putting their- news out?’ Said Trius. Why would you think Duerre’s in such trouble?’

‘What you mean?’ Naddalin asked...

The theory is trying to discredit her,’ said Sevket. ‘Didn’t you see there - Daily Prop shot last week? They reported that she’d been voted out of there - Chair of their- International Confederation of Wizards- and Fallen because she’s getting old and losing the grip, but it is not true; she - was voted out by Bureau wizards after she - made a speech announcing a Mazel Amsel return.

The theory has demoted her from Chief Warlock on their- Morrill that is there- Wizard High Court And they are toluene about dequeen away she Orders of Nunez, First Class, too.’

But Duerre says she- does not care what they do if they do not take her off the - Hayvannah-cholate ‘Black Crow’ Torit Cards,’ said Sara, grinning.

‘It’s no laughing matter,’ said Mr. Railie sharply. ‘If she- carries on defying their- Bureau like their she- could end up in Dizery- I’s and, and they're- the last thing we want is to have Duerre locked up. While You Know ~ Who knows Duerre’s out there and wise to what she’s up to she's going to go cautiously. If Duerre’s out old there- way well, you know, who will have a clear field.’

‘But if AVA’s trying to recruit more Death devours it’s bound to get out that she’s come back, isn’t it?’ Asked Naddalin desperately...

‘Ava Amsel doesn’t march up to people’s houses and bang on their fingertip doors, Naddalin,’ said Trius.’ Her- tricks, jinxes and blackmails them.

She’s well-practiced at operating in secret. In any case, gathering followers is only one thing she’s interested in. She’s got other plans too, plans she- can put into operation very quietly indeed, and she’s concentrating on those for their moment.’

‘What’s she- after apart from followers?’

Naddalin asked swiftly. Her- thought she- saw Trius And Lupin exchange their- most fleeting of looks before Trius answered.

‘Stuff she- can only get by stealth.’

Wither- if Naddalin continued to look puzzled, Trius said,’ Like a weapon.

Something she- did not have- last time.’

‘She -and- her was- like very powerful before?’

‘Yes.’

‘Like what kind of weapon?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Something worse than their- Aveda Keara...?’

‘That’s enough...!’

Mr.’s Railie spoke from their- shadows beside their- door. Naddalin had not noticed she return from dequeen Jill upstairs. Her arms where crossed and she- looked furious.

‘I want you in bed, now. All of you,’ she- added, that went around at Céline, Katy, Jinger, And Emmah.

‘You cannot boss us’ Céline began to say monstrously.

‘Watch me,’ snarled Mr.’s Railie. She- was trembling slightly as she- looked at Trius.’

You've given Naddalin plenty of information. Any more and you might just as well induct her into the- War straightaway.'

'Why not?' said Naddalin quickly. Till join, I want to join, I want to fight.'

'No...'

It was not Mr.'s Railie who spoke their time, but Sevet.

There- war is formed only of overage wizards, fallen kind.' she- said.' Fallen girl wizards- haunts- angels- so on- who have left Savannah,' she- added, as Céline And Teori~ opened their mouths. There are dangers involved of which you can have no idea, any of you... I think Molly's right, Trius. Weave said enough.'

Trius half shrugged but did not argue. Mr.'s Railie beckoned imperiously to a- sure the girls and Emmah. One by one they stood up and Naddalin, recognizing defeat, followed suit.

There- Noble and Most Ancient House of Black...

Mr.'s Railie followed them upstairs again.

Forbidding... Ghastly.

'I want you all to go straight to bed, no toluene,' she- said as they reached their- first and,' and we've got a busy day Hayvanna harrow. I expect Jill's asleep,' she- added to Emmah, 'so try not to wake she up.'

'Asleep, yes, right,' said Céline in an undertone, after Emmah said to them goodnight and they were climbing to their- next floor.' If Jill's not lying awake waiting for Emmah to tell her everything they said downstairs, there- and I am a Flapperdom...'

All right, Jinger, Naddalin,' said Mr.'s Railie on their- second and, pointing their- m into their bedroom.' Off to bed with you.'

'Night,' Naddalin And Jinger said to the- twins from Rockville.

'Sleep tight,' said Céline, winking.

Mr.'s Railie closed their- door behind Naddalin with a sharp snap. There- bedroom looked, if anything, even darker and gloomier than it had at first sight.

There- the blank picture on their- wall was now breathing very flying horses and deeply, as though its invisible occupant was asleep.

Naddalin put on the pajamas, took off the glasses and climbed into her chilly bed while Jinger threw rows Indulgences up on top of their- wardrobe, the girls who were clattering around rustling their wings restlessly.

'We cannot let them out to hunt every night,' Jinger explained as she- pulled on the maroon pajamas.' Duerre does not want too many Flying horses with wings swooping around their- square, thinks it will look suspicious. Oh yes... I forgot...'

She's a-crossed to the- door and fastened it.

'What're you doing that for?'

'Reached-' said Jinger as she- turned off their- light.' The first night, she and I came and ring in at three in the- morning. Trust me, you do not want to wake up and find her Flying horse's around your room. 'Anyway... she- got into the bed, settled down under the- covers then turned to look at Naddalin in their- darkness; Naddalin could see she outline by their- moonlight filtering in through their- grimy window,' what you reckon?' Naddalin did not need to ask what Jinger meant.

'Well, they did not tell us much we could not have guessed, did they?' She- said, thinking of all that had been said downstairs.' I mean, all they have said is that they're- orders trying to stop people joining in...'

There- was a sharp intake of breath from Jinger.

'-Deport,' said Naddalin firmly.' She and you are you going to start using her name? Trius And Sevket do.'

Jinger ignored their last comment.

'Yeah, you are right,' she- said,' we already knew everything they told us, from using their- Extendable Ears. There- only a new bit was...'

Part: 3

Crack... Crack, hit- slam- and bang...

‘OUCH!’

‘Keep your voice down, Jinger or mom will be back up here.’

‘You two just Apparated on my knees!’

‘Yeah, well, it is harder in the- dark.’

Naddalin saw their- blurred outlines of Céline And Katy leaping down from Jinger’s bed.

‘There- was a groan of bedsprings and Naddalin’s mattress descended a few inches as Katy sat down near the feet. ‘So, got there yet?’ Said Katy eagerly.

There- weapon Trius mentioned?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Let slip, more like,’ said Céline with relish, now sitting next to Jinger.

‘We did not hear about that on there- old Extendable, did we?’

‘What you reckon it is?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Could be anything,’ Said Céline.

‘But there cannot be anything worse than their- Aveda Keara Curse, can there?’ Said Jinger.
what’s worse than death?’

‘Maybe it is something that can kill loads of people at once,’ suggested Katy.

‘Maybe it is some particularly painful way of killing people,’ said Jinger fearfully.

‘She’s got the- Cruciate Curse for causing pain,’ said Naddalin, ‘she- does not need anything more efficient than that.’

There was a pause and Naddalin knew that there - others, like her, we're wondering what horrors their weapon could perpetrate.

So, who you think got it now?' Asked Katy.' I hope it is our side,' said Jinger, sounding slightly nervous.

'If it is, Duerre's keeping it,' said Céline.

'Here's?' Said Jinger quickly. She does that when she gets nervous.

'SKOUFYCEOL?'

'Bet it is!' Said Katy. That is, why she hid the- 'the body of Neveah'.' 'Some weapons going to be a lot bigger than them- 'like the size of the body of Neveah', though!' Said Jinger.

'Not unavoidably' said Céline.

'Yeah, size is no guarantee of power,' said Katy.' Look at Jill she is powerful without them.'

'What you mean?' Said Naddalin.

'You've never been on the- receiving the end of one of the Bat-Bogey she- axes, have you?'

'shah!' Said Céline, half rising iron their- bed.'

'Listen, pay attention, take note...!'

They fell silent... to that, many footsteps were coming up the- stairs.

'Mom,' said Katy and without further ado, there was a flamboyant crash and Naddalin felt their- weight vanish from the- end of their bed.

A few seconds later, they heard the- floorboard creak outside their door; Mr.'s Railie was listening to check her- there or not they were toluene.

The- dig and Pig widgeon hooted dolefully. There- floorboard creaked again and they're heard she- heads upstairs to- check on Céline and Katy.

'She does not trust us at all, you know,' said Jinger regretfully.

Naddalin was sure she- would not be able to fall asleep; their- evening had been so packed with things to think about that she- fully expected to lie awake for hours mulling it all over.

She wanted to continue toluene to Jinger, but Mr.'s Railie was now running back downstairs again, and once she- had gone she- distinctly heard others snaking their way upstairs... many-legged creatures where cantering softly up and down outside their- bedroom door, and Deride their- Care of Magical Creatures teacher was saying, ' Beauties, arm they, eh, Naddalin? We will be studying...' weapons their term...' And Naddalin saw that the- creatures had like cannons for heads and were whirling to face her... she- bent... to look and it was sucking on her nose.

There- next thing she- knew, she- was curled into a warm ball under she bedclothes- and Katye's loud voice was filling their- room.

'Mom says get up, your breakfast is in the- kitchen, and there she- needs you in there- drawing-room, there are loads more Doxes than she- thought and she's found a nest of dead Puff skeins under their- sofa.'

Half an hour later Naddalin and Jinger, who had dressed and had breakfasted quickly, entered the- drawing-room, a long, high ceilinged room on their- first floor with olive green walls covered in dirty tapestries.

There- carpet exhaled little clouds of dust every time someone put their foot on it and the- long, moss green velvet curtains where buzzing as though swarming with invisible bees. It was around there- see that Mr.'s Railie, Emmah, Jill, Céline and Katy where grouped, all together, rats then peculiar as they had each tied a cloth over their nose and mouth.

Each of them was also holding a large bottle of black liquid with a nozzle at the end.

'Cover your faces and take a spray,' Mr.'s Railie said to Naddalin and Jinger they're- the moment she- saw them, pointing to two more bottles of black liquid timewasting on a spindle-legged table.'

It's Dockside... I have never- ever seen an infestation their bad what that house fairy's been doing for the- last ten years.' Emmah's face was half concealed by a tea towel but Naddalin distinctly saw she throw a reproachful look at Mr.'s Railie.

'Preachers old, she- could not manage.'

'You'd be surprised what reached can manage her- and she- wants to, Emmah,' said Trius, who had just entered they're- room carrying a bloodstained bag of what appeared to be dead rats.'

I've just been feeding Becca beak,' she- added, in reply to Natalie's enquiring look.' I keep her upstairs in my mother's bedroom.

Anyway... their writing desk...' And, Of course not, and said Madam Pomphrey, bristling... and, would have hurt someone I love!

Chapter: 152

Part: 1

And, Well, there you have it, Severus, and said Duerre calmly. And, unless you are suggesting that Naddalin And Emmah can be in two places at once, I am afraid I do not see any point in troubling her further.

- And-

Lily stood there, seething, staring from Harlan, who looked thoroughly shocked at the behavior, to Duerre, whose eyes were twinkling behind the glasses. Lily whirled about, robes swishing behind her, and stormed out of there- area. And, Pergirl seems quite unbalanced, and said Harlan, staring after her. Besides, I would watch out for her if I were you, Duerre. And I'm so-o... too?'

So-o you have your exams coming up, haven't you? The theory will be keeping your noses so hard to that grindstone they will be rubbed raw,' said Céline with satisfaction.

'Half our year had minor breakdowns coming up to flying you're your wings,' said Katy happily. Tears And tantrums... Patricia Stim girl kept coming over faint...'

'Kenneth Tower came out in boils, you remember?' Said Reanna reminiscently.

That's' um- ah because you put Bilbao powder in her pajamas,' said Katy. Which is nothing more than undies, that should be off anyways at night.

'Oh yes,' said Reanna, grinning.' I'd overlooked... hard to keep track sometimes, isn't it?'

'Anyway, it is a nightmare of a year, their- fifth,' said Katy.' If you care about exam results, anyway. Reanna and I managed to keep our peckers up somehow.'

'Yeah... you got, what was it, three flying with wings each?' Said Jinger.

‘Yepper,’ said Reanna unconcernedly. ‘But we feel our futures lie outside their- world of academic achievement.’

‘We seriously debated she- they’re- r we were going to bother- r coming back for our seventh year, said Katy brightly, now that we have.’

She- broke off at a warning look from Naddalin, who knew Katy had been about to mention the- Tizard winnings she- had given them.

‘Now that we have our Flying horses with wings,’ Katy said hastily.’

I mean, do we need Newts?

Nevertheless, we did not think Mom could take us leaving Savannah early, not on top of Percy turning out to be there- world’s biggest prat.’

‘We’re not going to waste our last year here, though,’ said Reanna, share, affectionately around at there- Great Hall.’ We’re going to use it to do a bit of market research, find out exactly what there- average SKOUFYCEOL student needs from a joke shop, carefully evaluate there- results of our research, then produce products to fit there- DE- And.’

‘But where are you going to get there- gold to start a joke shop?’ Emmah asked skeptically. ‘You’re going to need all there- ingredients and materials and premises too, I suppose...’

Naddalin did not look at there- twins. Her faces felt hot; here- deliberately dropped her fork and dived down to retrieve it. She- come here- and see this art- it looks like three of you, I wonder why, Reanna says overhearing everything.’ Ask us no questions and we’ll tell you no lies, Emmah. Come on, Katy, if we get there early, we might be able to sell a few Extendable Ears before Her- biology.’

Naddalin emerged from under there- table to see Reanna And Katy walking away, each carrying a stack of toast.

‘What did that mean?’ Said Emmah, did yah- hear from Naddalin and Jinger.’

‘Ask us no questions...’ Does that mean they have already got some gold to start a joke shop?’

‘You know, I have been wondering about that,’ said Jinger, she brow furrowed. They bought me a new set of dress robes their summer and I couldn’t underset and she- e they got there- Galleons...’

Naddalin decided it was time to take the- conversation out of these dangerous waters.

‘You reckon its true their years going to be tough? Since of their- question papers, and trails?’

‘Oh, yes,’ said Jinger.’ Bound to be, isn’t it? Flying with wings is important, the effect they're- jobs you can apply for and everything. We get career advice, too, later their year, Sara told me. So, you can Savannahs What Newts you want to do next year.’

‘You know what you want to do after SKOUFYCEOL?’ Naddalin asked they're- other two, as they left they're- Great Hall shortly afterward and set off towards their Shoetree of Magic classroom.’ Not really,’ said Jinger flying.’ Except... well...’

She- looked slightly shy.

‘What?’ Naddalin urged her.

‘Well, it would be cool to be an Aurora-’ said Jinger in an off and voice.

‘Yeah, it would,’ said Naddalin fervently.

‘But there, like, their- elite,’ said Jinger.’ You’ve got to be good.

What about you, Emmah?’

‘I do not know,’ she- said. ‘I’s think I would like to do something worthwhile.’

‘An Auroras worthwhile!’ Said Naddalin.

‘Yes, it is, but it is not there- only worthwhile thing,’ said Emmah thoughtfully,’ I mean, if I could take a few further...’

Naddalin And Jinger carefully avoided that, with each other.

Shoetree of Magic was by common consent they are- most boring subject ever devised by wizard-kind with wings. Professor Bins, their ghost teacher, had a wheezy, jiggering voice that was almost guaranteed to cause severe drowsiness within ten minutes, five in warm weather.

She- never- ever- ever- never varied the- form of their ledgers but lectured them without hesitating while they took notes, or rest her, gazed sleepily into space.

Naddalin and Jinger had so far managed to scrape passes in their subject only by copying Emmah's notes before exams; she- alone seemed able to resist their- soporific power of voice.

Today, they suffered an hour and a half's jiggering on their- subject of giant wars. Naddalin heard just enough within their- first ten minutes to appreciate dimly that in another teacher and their subject might have been mildly interesting, but then, like- she brains disengaged, and she- spent their- remaining hour and twenty minutes playing hangman on a corner of the parchment with Jinger, while Emmah shot them filthy looks out of their- corner of her young little sweet eye.

(Awh)

'How would it be,' she- asked them coldly, as they left the- classroom for a break

(Bins drifting away through their- blackboard,) 'if I refused to lend you my notes their year?'

'Wed fails our FLYING HORSES,' said Jinger. 'If you want that on your conscience, Emmah...'

'Well, you would deserve it,' she- snapped. 'You do not even try to listen to her, do you?'

(Nope- I thought in my wicked young sweet little mind, batting my eyes.)

'We do try' said Jinger, sound like back home said the other girls in the class too- all of them, too many names to list, yet, they're all here- ...wave girls... and they all did uniquely- to each life they were.'

We just do not have your brains or your memory or your concentration, you are just cleverer than we are ~ is it nice to rub it in?'

(Cut)

Part: 2

Like some moments have passed...

'Oh, do not give me that rubbish,' said Emmah, but she- looked slightly mollified as she- led they're- way out into the- damp courtyard.

A fine misty drizzle was falling out the old carked window- pane so that their- people timewasting... where looking for freedom, I thought when you where did you got away for bull- sh*t'n school- 'Nah...' one looked...

'Nah...' the other girls looked at her and said.

School looking out a window- seems to be a thing with us- the panes in huddles around their- edges of their- yard looked blurred at the- edges. Naddalin, Jinger, And Emmah Havanans a secluded corner under she- avidly dripping balcony turning up there- collars of their robes against their- chilly September air and toluene about what Lily was likely to set them in their- first ledger of the- year. They had as far as agreeing that it was likely to be something extremely difficult, just to which them off guard after a two- month holiday, she- n someone walked around the- corner towards them.

'She- lol's at, Naddalin!'

Part: 3

It was Hayvannah Chang and, what was more, she- was on she owns again. There was most unusual: Hayvannah was always surrounded by a gang of giggling girls; Naddalin remembered their- agony of trying to get she by herself to ask her to the- Ball.

'Hi,' said Naddalin, feeling she face grow hot. At least you are not covered in Stink sap their time, she- told herself. Hayvannah seemed to be thinking along the- same lines.

'You got that stuff off, then?'

'Yeah,' said Naddalin, trying to grin as though there- the memory of their last meeting was funny as opposed to mortifying. 'so, did you... err... have a good summer?'

The- moment she- had said that she- wished she- had not Joella had been Hayvannah's significant other and their- memory of the death must have affected her holiday as badly as it had affected Natalie's. Something seemed to tauten in her face, but she- said...' Oh, it was all right, you know...'

'Is that a Tornados badge...?' Jinger deliquesced suddenly, pointing to their- finger of Hayvannah's robes, a sky-blue badge emblazoned with a double gold T' was pinned.'

You do not support them, do you?'

‘Yeah, I do,’ said Hayvannah.

‘Have you always supported them, or just since they started winning their- league?’ Said Jinger, in what Naddalin considered an unnecessarily accusatory tone of voice.

‘I’ve supported their- m since I was six,’ said Hayvannah coolly.’ Anyway... see you, Naddalin.’

She- walked away. Emmah waited until Hayvannah was halfway a- crossed the- courtyard before rounding on Jinger.

‘You are so tactless!’

‘What? I only asked her if.’

‘Couldn’t you tell she- wanted to talk to

Naddalin on she owns?’

‘So-o? Her- she- could have Deanahe, I was not stopping’

‘Why on earth were you talking or playing around about the Claepsiara team?’

‘Playing? I was not talking; I was only saying.’

‘Who cares if she- supports their- Tornados?’

‘Oh, come on, half their- people you see wearing those badges only bought them, last sea girl.’

‘But what does it matter!’

‘It means they are not real fans; they are just jumping on the- likewise wagon.’

That is their- bell,’ said Naddalin dully, because Jinger and Emmah were bickering too loudly to sue- is it. They did not stop arguing all their- way down to Snappiest dungeon, which gave Naddalin plenty of time to reflect that between, Neville and Jinger she- would be lucky ever to have two minutes of conversation, and with Hayvannah, that she- could look back on without wanting to leave their- country.

Besides, yet, she- thought, as they joined their- queue lining up outside Snappiest classroom door, she- had Havanans to come and talk to her, had not she-? She- had been Sedaris's girlfriend; she- could easily have hated Naddalin for coming out of there- Tizard maze alive she'd Joella had died, yet she- was toluene to her in a perfectly friendly way, not as though she- thought her mad, or a liar, or in some horrible way responsible for Sedaris's death...

Yes, she- had Havanans to come and talk to her, and that made their- second time in two days... And at their thought, Naddalin's spirits rose. Even their- ominous sound of Snappiest dungeon door cracking open did not puncture their- small, hopeful bubble that seemed to have swelled in her chest.

I- filed into the- classroom behind Jinger And Emmah and followed them to our usual table at the- back.

She, we, and- I- so-o like us, sat down between Jinger And Emmah and ignored their- huffy, irritable noises now issuing from both of them. 'Settle down,' said Lily with a cold mood, shutting the - door behind her.

There was no real need for the- call to order; the- moment their- class had heard their- door close, quiet had fallen in addition to all fidgeting stopped. Snappiest mere presence was usually enough to ensure a class silence.

'Before we begin today's ledger,' said Lily, sweeping over to their desk and staring around at them all,' I think it proper to remind you that next June you will be sitting an important examination, during which you will prove how much you have learned about their- composition and use of magical potions.

Minigenre though some of their class undoubtedly are, I expect you to scrape an- 'Acceptable' in your FLYING, or suffer my... displeasure.'

Her gazes lingered the time and moments on Neville, who gulped.

'After their year, of course, many of you will cease studying with me,' Lily went on.'

I take only the- very best into my NEWT Potions class, which means that some of us will certainly be saying goodbye.'

Her eyes rested on Naddalin and her lips curled. Naddalin glared back, feeling a grim pleasure at their- idea that she- would be able to give up Potions after the fifth year.

‘But then again, we have another year to go before that happy moment of farewell,’ said Lily softly, ‘so, there or not you are intending to try NEWT, I recommend all of you to concentrate your efforts on keeping their- high pass level I have come to expect from my FLYING students.

Today class, you will be mixing a potion that often comes up at Ordinary Wizarding Level- the- Draught of Peace, a potion to calm anxiety and soothe- agitation.

Be warned, if you are too, she- any and with their- ingredients you will put the- drinker into she- any and sometimes irreversible sleep, so-o you will need to pay very close attention to what you are doing, and what I have shown you what to do.’

On Naddalin’s left, Emmah sat up a little straighter, her expression one of the utmost attention. There- ingredients and method-’ Lily flicked she and...’ are on the- blackboard...’

(They appeared there.)

‘You will find everything you need-’ she- flicked she and so again...’ in their- store cupboard.’

(The- door of the cupboard sprang open.)

‘You have an hour and a half... start.’

Just as Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah had predicted, Lily could hardly have set their- m a more difficult, fiddly potion. These- ingredients had to be added to their- ceilinged in precisely their- right order and quantities; their- mixture had to be stirred exactly their- right number of times, firstly in clockwise, then- and in anticlockwise directions; she had flames on which it was simmering had to be lowered to exactly the- right level for a specific number of minutes before their- final ingredient was added.

Naddalin, who was sweating profusely, looked desperately around the - dungeon. She’s on her own could not seem to make this work- Jinger was issuing copious amounts of dark grey steam; Jinger’s was spitting green sparks, with no luck.

Laila was feverishly prodding their flames at their base of she could Jinger with their tip of she and, as they seemed to be going out. There- the surface of Emmah's potion, however, was a sharpening mist of white vapor, And as Lily swept by her- looked down she hooked nose at it without comment, which meant she- could find nothing to criticize.

At Naddalin's ceilinged, however, Lily stopped and looked down at it with a horrible smirk on her faces.

'What is there to be?'

There- Slithering at the- finger of the- class all looked up eagerly; they loved she- airing Lily taunt Naddalin.

There- Draught of Peace,' said Naddalin tensely. Tell me, - said Lily softly,' can you read?'

Drallieah Mallerie laughs- 'Yes, I can,' said Naddalin, she fingers clenched- tightly around she then...

'Read the- the third line of their- instructions for me-'

Naddalin squinted at the- blackboard; it was not easy to make out there- instructions through the- haze of multi-colored steam now filling they are- dungeon.

'Enhance powdered moonstone, stir three times counterclockwise, allow to simmer for seven minutes there- and add two drops of syrup of she- labored.'

Then at that moment, her heart sank; she- had not added syrup of she- labored, but had gone ahead straight to the- the fourth line of their- instructions after allowing her potion to simmer for seven minutes.

'Did you do everything on their- third line?'

'No,' said Naddalin very quietly.

'I beg your Deanah?'

'No,' said Naddalin, more loudly.' 'I forgot she labored...'

'I know you did, which means that their mess is utterly worthless; evanesce.'

There- contents of Naddalin's potion vanished; she- was left timewasting foolishly beside an empty ceilinged.

Those of you who have managed to read there- instructions, fill one flagon with a sample of your potion, label it with your name and bring it up to my desk for testing,' said Lily.'

Homework- twelve inches- of parchment magical paper on their- properties of moonstone and its uses in potion marching, to be and in on Thursday.'

While everyone around her filled their flagons, Naddalin cleared away she things, seething. Her potion had been no worse than Jinger's, which was now giving off a foul odor of bad eggs; or Neville's, which had achieved their- consistency of just mixed cement and which Neville was now having to gouge out of she ceilinged; yet it was she, Naddalin, who would be receiving zero marks for the - days' work.

She- stuffed her things under her arm- given up completely, and then back into her bestie, and slumped down on to the seats, watching everyone else March- ah up to Snappiest desk with filled and corked flagons. Then finally the- bell rang, Naddalin was first out of there- dungeon and had already started the lunch by their- time Jinger and Emmah joined her in there- Great Hall of the castle. There- ceiling had turned an even murkier grey during the- morning. The rain was lashing their- high windows.

That was unfair,' said Emmah consolingly, sitting down next to Naddalin and helping herself to shepherds' pie.' Your potion was not as bad as Sayale's; then she- put it in she flagon the- whole thing shattered and set she robes on fire.'

Besides, oh, she's not unbalanced and said- Duerre quietly. Besides, she just suffered a severe disappointment.

-And-

Besides, She's not the- only one!

Then puffed Harlan...

And, she- Daily News Prop's is going to have a field day!

We had Black cornered and she- slipped through our fingers yet again!

All it needs now is for their- story of that Ashlynn's escape to get out, and I will be a laughing stock! Well... I had better go and notify the- Bureau...

-And-

And, the- Dementiators? Said Duerre.

-And-

There will be removed from there- Savannah, I trust?

-And-

And, oh yes, they must go, and said Harlan, running she fingers distractedly through the hair.

As well, never dreamed they would try to amrita their- Kiss on an innocent girl... Completely out of control... no, I will have them packed off back to Dizery, I, and tonight... We should think about dark angels at their- savannah entrance...

-And-

And Deride would like that, and said Duerre, smiling at Naddalin and Emmah. As she- and Harlan left their- dormitory, Madam Pomphrey hurried to their- door and locked it again.

Muttering angrily to herself, she- added going back to her office.

There was a low moan from there- another end of their- ward. Jinger had woken up. They could see her sitting up, rubbing the head, around, the halls.

Part: 4

And, what - what happened? And, she- groaned. And, Naddalin? Why are we here? Where's Trius? Where's Sevket? What is going on?

-And-

Naddalin and Emmah looked at each other.

And, you explain, and said Naddalin, helping herself to some more Hayvannah cholate.

She- and Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah left they're- hospital wing at noon they're- next day, it was to find an almost deserted castle. There- sweltering, she- at and the- end of their- exams meant that everyone was dequeen full advantage of another Claepsiara, of wizardry/angels and demonly visit.

Neither Jinger nor Emmah wanted to go, however, so they and Naddalin walked onto the- grounds around the massive castle, still toluene about the- extraordinary events of their- earlier night and wondering, was Trius and Becca, went on their beak- where they were now. Sitting near the- lake, watching the- giant squid waving its tentacles lazily above the- water blue and green and sparkling in the light glowing also a shade of red, Naddalin lost the thread of their- conversation as she- looked across to the- opposite banks to the island that lay adjacent. There- stag with wings had galloped toward her from there just last night...

A shadow fell- crossed them and they looked up to see a very bleary-eyed Deride, mopping she sweaty face with one of their tablecloths- sized and kerchiefs and beaming down at them.

And Know I should' feel happy, after what' happened las' night, and she- said. And mean, Black, escaping' again, an, everything' - but guess what?

-And-

And, What?

And, they said, pretending to look curious.

And, Beaky! She- escaped! She's now free!

We've been celebrating' all night!

-And-

Um, that is- wonderful!

Also said Emmah, giving Jinger a reproving look because she- looked as though she- was close to laughing.

And, can't have tied her up properly, and said Deride, gazing happily out over there - grounds.

And, was worried that morning,' mind... thought she- might meet Professor Sevket on their- grounds, but Sevket says' she- never- ever- never- ever- ever- never, ate anything' last' night...

~*~

-And-

And, What? And said Naddalin quickly.

And, Joannah, haven't you heard? And said Deride, she smiles fading a little. She like - lowered her voice, even though there was nobody in sight. And - Lily told all them- that morning' ...Though everyone would know by now... Professor Lapin's a fallen werewolf with wings, see. And- like, he- was loose on their- grounds last night... she's packing... now, of- course.'

- And-

Um-

And she is packing?

Um-

And said Naddalin, alarmed.

And Why?

Um-

And- Leavin', in' here-? And said Deride, waited, surprised that Naddalin had to ask. And, Resigned first thing that morning.' Says she- cannot risk it happening again.

- And-

Naddalin scrambled to her feet.

Um-

And I'm going to see her, and she- said to Jinger And Emmah.

Um-

And- but if she's resigned...

-And-

Um-

And - doesn't sound like there's anything we can do...

-And-

Um-

And, do not care - about it.

Um-

And, I'm still want to see.

Um-

And, I will's meet you back here.

Um- And...?

Um- And Ah!!!

Part: 5

(Formerly)

Lapin's office door was open. He/she who had no real gender as it could change back and forth- had already packed most of her things. There- Grind low's empty tank stood next to their battered old suitcase, that could teleport from a person place to place when inside, which was open and full of all things it- he/she loved. Sevket was bending over something on the desks and looked up only she - and Naddalin knocked on their- door.

Um- and, we saw you coming, said Sevket, smiling. She- pointed to their- parchment she- had been poring over. It was there- Marauder's Map, where you can look into it, and it takes you to any time in the remembrances of searching for lost time in the world's past.

And, just saw Deride, and said Naddalin. And, and she- said you had resigned. It is not true, is it? And...

And, I am afraid it is and said Sevketa. Her- started opening the desk drawers and dequeen out their- contents.

And, Why?

WHY?

WHY? - said Naddalin...

And, there- Bureau of Magic do not think, you were helping Trius, do they?

Likewise- Sevketa crossed to the- door and closed it behind Naddalin.

And, No- professor Duerre managed to convince Harlan, that I was trying to save your lives.

And, she- sighed some... And That was their- final straw for Severus. I think the- loss of their- War of Nunez hit her hard. So, she- err - accidentally let slip that, I am a devil the morning at breakfast.

- And-

Like- like- like, you are not- a leaving just because, of that!

Say's its PMS- I's want you too... said Naddalin. Sevketa smiled wryly.

And, she time Hayvanna-horror, their- Flying with wings will start arriving from parents...

They will not want a devil teaching their children, Naddalin.

And, after last- night, I see their point. I could have bitten any of you... That must never happen again.

-And-

And, you are their- best Defense Against their- Dark Arts teacher we're have ever had!

And said Naddalin.

And, do not go!

-And-

Your baby talk is cute yet you're getting too old for it... she said. Sevket shook her head and did not speak. She- carried on emptying the drawers. Then, while Naddalin was trying to think of a good argument to make her stay, Sevket said, and from what their- head expert told me their morning, you saved a lot of lives last night, Naddalin. If I'm proud of anything I've Deanahe their year, it's how much you've erudite... Tell me about your Pat Jingerus.

And...

And, how you know about that?

And, said Naddalin, distracted.

And, what else could have driven they're- Dementiators back?

-And-

Naddalin told Sevket what had happened. she'd- and he finished, Sevket was smiling again.

And, yes, your daddy was always a stag the- and the- transformed, and she- said.

And, you guessed right... that is why we called her Pinger's.

And...

Sevket threw her last few books into the case, closed their- desk drawers, and turned to look at Naddalin.

And, here - I brought they're from them- Checking Shack last night, and she- said, and Naddalin back their- Invisibility Robe.

And...

she-and he- said, then held. out their- Marauder's Map too. And, am no longer your teacher, so I do not feel guilty about giving you back there as well. It is no use to me, And I's dare say you, Jinger, and Emmah will find uses for it.

And...

Naddalin took their- map and grinned.

And, you told me Moony, Worm tail, Pad foot, And Pinger's would have wanted to lure me out of Savannah... you said they would have thought it was funny.

And...

And, and so we would have, and said Sevket, now reaching down to close the case.

And, have known the- situation in saying, that Alyssa would have been highly disappointed if she a girl had never- ever found any of their- secret passages out of the- castle.

And...

There- re was a knock on their- door. Naddalin hastily stuffed their- Marauder's Map And they're- Invisibility Robe into the pockets.

It was Professor Duerre. She- did not look surprised to see Naddalin there.

And, your carriage is at their- gates, Remus, - she said.

And Thank You, commander.

And...

Sevket picked up her old suitcase and their- empty Grind low tank.

And, Well - goodbye, Naddalin, and she- said, smiling. And, it has been a real pleasure teaching you. I feel sure we will meet again sometime. Head expert, there is no need to see me to their- gates, I can manage... And Naddalin had their- an impression that Sevket wanted to leave as quickly as possible.

And, Goodbye, then, Remus, and said Duerre soberly. Sevket shifted them- Grind low tank slightly so that she- And Duerre could shake and. Then, with a final nod to Naddalin and a swift smile, Sevket left the- office.

Naddalin sat down in the massive chair, staring glumly at the- floor. She- heard the- door close and looked up. Duerre was still there.

And, Why so miserable, Naddalin? And, she- said quietly. And, you should be very proud of yourself after last night.

-And-

And, it did not make any difference and said Naddalin bitterly. And, Grohl got away.

-And-

And, did not make any difference? And said Duerre quietly, and it made all the - difference in the- world, Naddalin. You helped uncover their- truth. You saved an innocent man from a terrible fate.

And...

Part: 6

Terrible- something stirred in Naddalin's memory. Greater and more terrible than ever before... Professor Solis's prediction!

And, Professor Duerre - yesterday, she- and I was having my Divination exam, Professor Solis went very - very strange.

-And-

And... Indeed? And said Duerre... And - stranger than usual, you mean?

And, yes... her voice went all deep and her eyes rolled, then she - said... she - said AVA's servant was going to set out to return to her before midnight... She - said, like their- servant would help her come back to power.

Then, Naddalin stared up at Duerre. And, likewise... they- and she- became normal again, as normal could be anyways... and she- couldn't remember at all anything she'd said. Like- like- like, now um was it - was the- meeting a real prediction?

-And-

Duerre, then looked mildly impressed... with that thought. So-o, do you know, Naddalin, I think she- might have been. And, she- said thoughtfully. And, who would have thought it? That brings her total of real predictions up to two. I should offer her a pay raise...

-And-

But, Naddalin looked at her, in hast. How could Duerre take their so freak'n calmly?

Like, but ah- I'm stopped Trius and Professor Sevketa from killing Grohl!

That makes it my fault...? Um- if AVA comes back!

- And-

Like, it does not, and said Duerre quietly, and ever so softly alike.

And, has not your experience with the - Time- Rewinder of Remembrance's Past- taught you anything, Naddalin? There- consequences of our actions are always so complicated, so diverse, that predicting their- future is a very- very difficult business indeed...

Then and there- Professor Solis, bless she, is living proof of that... you did a very- very noble- good thing, in saving Grohl's life.

-And-

Above that all, if she- helps, AVA back to power... And she may lose some of hers or worse.

And, Grohl owes her life to you. No...? Yes...? Maybe...?

You have sent AVA a deputy who is in your debt... she is one wizard- with wings that save another wizard that has fallen I like in her young life; it creates a certain bond between them... Yes...? And I am much mistaken, and if AVA wants her servant in their debt of Naddalin...

-And-

Like, do not want a connection with Grohl!

And- said Naddalin. And, she- betrayed my parents!

-And-

Like, she is magical at its deepest, it is almost impenetrable, Naddalin.

Yeah- trust me... their- time may come here- and you will be very glad you saved Grohl's life, I am sure of this...

-And-

Naddalin like she could not imagine that she would be. Duerre looked as though her mind and body to her felt- knowing what Naddalin was thinking about this too deeply for her comfort.

And I knew your daddy very well, both at SKOUFYCEOL and later, Naddalin, and she - said gently. And, she - would have saved - pretty much too, I am sure of it.

-And-

Naddalin looked up at her. Duerre would not laugh - she - could tell Duerre...

And thought it was my dad who had conjured my Clans. I mean, she - and I saw myself a-crossed the - lake... I thought I was seeing her.

-And-

And, an easy mistake to make, and said Duerre softly. And expect you will tire of she - airing it, but you do look extraordinarily like Alyssa. Except for their - eyes... you have the same eyes as your mother's.

- And-

Naddalin shook her young little head.

Then, it was stupid, thinking it was her, and she - muttered.

Um- it was mean, I knew she - was dead.

Like- you think they're - dead we loved ever so - o truly leave us?

Like- you think that, um- we do not recall or evoke them more clearly, than ever in times of great trouble?

Like- your daddy is alive within you, Naddalin... it's good to remember, that - and also feel it - in here, and pointing to her heart.

And shows herself most plainly she - and you require her. How else could you produce that Clans? Pinger's rode again - last night.

- And-

It took a moment for- Naddalin, to realize what Duerre had said.

Anyhow- last night, Trius told me all about how they became Animagi and said Duerre, smiling.

Part: 7

Oh- a human extraordinary achievement it was unbelievable - not least, keeping it quiet from me. And, their- n I remembered their- most unusual form your Clans took, she- and it charged Mr. Mallerie down at your Claepsiara match against Raven's Claw. You know, Naddalin, in a way, you did see your daddy last night... You found her inside yourself.

And, Duerre left their- office, leaving Naddalin to see very confused thoughts.

Nobody- at SKOUFYCEOL now knew their- truth of what had happened their- night that Trius, Becca beak, And Grohl had vanished- except Naddalin, Jinger, Emmah, And Professor Duerre. As their- end of term approached- Naddalin heard many different theories about what had happened, but none of them came close to their- truth.

Mallerie was furious about Becca's beak. She- was convinced that Deride had found a way of smuggling their- Ashlynn to safety, and seemed outraged that she- And she a gamekeeper had outwitted daddy. Percy Railie, meanwhile, had much to say on the- subject of Trius's escape.

~*~

And, If I manage to get into their- Bureau, I's will have a- lot of proposals and the presentation to make about Magical Law Enforcement! And, she- told they're- the only pergirl who would listen - she significant other, Jenny.

Though they're- the weather was perfect, though the- atmosphere was so-o cheerful, though she- knew they had achieved their- near impossible in helping Trius to freedom, Naddalin had never approached- they're- end of a savannah year in worse spirits.

She- certainly was not there- only one who was sorry to see Professor Sevket go. The- whole of Naddalin's Defense Against their- Dark Arts class was miserable about the resignation. And Wonder what they will give us next year? And said, Laila Finnigan gloomily and glumly. And, An Ash Angels, and suggested Lacy Thomas hopefully.

It was not only Professor Lapin's departure that was weighing on Naddalin's mind. Like she - could not she - lap thinking a - lot about Professor Solis's prediction. She - kept wondering her Grohl was now, whether she - had sought sanctuary with AVA yet.

But they are - things that were lowering Naddalin's spirits most of all was there - the prospect of returning to the - Andreasen. For half an hour, a glorious half-hour, she - had believed she - would be living with Trius from now on... she parents' best friend... It would have been their - next best thing to having her daddy back.

And, while no news of Trius was good news because it meant she - had successfully - gone into hiding, Naddalin could not help but feel miserable about it all. she - and her - thought of the - home.

She - might have had, and they're - fact that it was now impossible.

There - exam results came out on their - last day of term. Naddalin, Jinger, And Emmah had passed every subject. Naddalin was amazed that she - had through Potions.

She - had a shrewd suspicion that Duerre might have stepped in to stop Lily failing her on purpose. Sammie's behavior toward Naddalin over their - past week had been quite alarming.

Naddalin would not have thought it possible that Sammie's dislike for her could increase, but it certainly had.

'A muscle twitches' unpleasantly at the - corner of Sammie's thin mouth every time she - looked at Naddalin, and she - was constantly flexing she fingers, as though itching to place them around Naddalin's throat.

Percy, had she top-grade Newt's; Reanna And Katy had scraped a and of FLYING each.

Amsel House, meanwhile, thanks to their spectacular performance in there - Claepsiara Cup, had won their - House championship for their - third year running. There meant that their - end of term feast took place amid decorations of scarlet and gold and that they're - Amsel table was their - noisiest of their - lot, as everybody celebrated.

Even Naddalin managed to forget about their- journey back to their- Andreassen their- next day as she- ate, drank, talked, and laughs- with the- rest.

Chapter: 153

Part: 1

(New kids on the block we say- new dead girls, coming.)

As their- SKOUFYCEOL Express pulled out of their- station their- next morning, Emmah gave Naddalin and Jinger some surprising news.

Likewise, and went to see Professor Ashly their morning, just before breakfast.

I have decided to drop Non-magical people Studies.

And...

However, but you passed your exam with three hundred and twenty percent! Said Jinger.

And know, and sighs- Emmah, And but I cannot and another year like their one. That Time- Turner, it was driving me mad. I's have and it in. Without Non-magical people Studies and Divination, I will be able to have a normal schedule again.

And, still cannot believe you did not tell us about it and said Jinger grumpily.

And, we are supposed to be your friends.

And...

And, promised- like, like, like, I- I- I, would not tell anyone and said Emmah severely. She- looked around at Naddalin, who was watching SKOUFYCEOL disappear behind a mountain.

Two whole months before she'd see it again...

And, oh, cheer up, Naddalin!

And said Emmah sadly.

And, I'm- am okay and said Naddalin quickly. And, just thinking about the- holidays.

And, I have been thinking about them too and said Jinger. And, Naddalin, you must come and stay with us. I will fix it up with Mom and Dad, there- n, I will call you. I know how to use a full tone now - And, telephone, Jinger, and said Emmah. And, Honestly, you should take nonmagical people Studies next year...And Jinger ignored her...

And, it is their- Claepsiara World Cup their summer! How about it, Naddalin? Come And stay, and we will go and see it! Dad can usually get tickets from work.

And...

Their proposal had their- effect of cheering Naddalin up a great deal.

And, ... I's, um- a bet they're- Slash is pleased to let me come... especially after what I's did to Aunt Marge... And... Feeling more cheerful, Naddalin joined Jinger And Emmah in several games of Exploding Snap, and she- n the- witch with their- tea cart arrived, she- bought herself a very large lunch, though nothing with Hayvannah cholate in it.

But it was late in the- afternoon before the- thing that made her truly happy turned up...

So, Naddalin, and said Emmah suddenly, peering over the shoulders.

And, what is that thing outside your window?

-And-

Anyways, Naddalin turned to look outside. Something very small and gray was bobbing in and out of sight beyond there glass.

She- stood up for a better look...

And saw that it was a tiny flying horse, carrying a letter that was much too big for it.

There- Flying horses was so small that it kept tumbling over in there- air, buffeted their way and that in their- train's slipstream, that was blasting red sparks and cloud of heat and red-colored smoke unfluffed the entirety of the engines as if something from the deeps of the Underworld.

Naddalin quickly pulled down their- window, stretched- d out her arms, and caught it. It felt like a very fluffy Snitch. She- brought it carefully inside.

There- Flying horses dropped her letter onto Naddalin's seat and began zooming around their compartment, very pleased with itself for carrying out its task. She - dig clicked she beak with dignified disapproval. Crook shanks sat up in the seats, following they're- Flying horses with she great yellow eyes. Jinger, noticing there, snatched- they're- Flying horses safely out of harm's way.

Naddalin picked up their- letter. It was addressed to her. She then- ripped open the- letter, and shouted, And It is from Trius!

-And-

And, what...?

And said Jinger And Emmah excitedly.

And read it aloud!

Part: 2

It said- Dear Naddalin,

I hope theirs finds you before you reach your aunt and uncles.

I do not know if they are used to Flying, like me.

Becca beak and I are in hiding. I will not tell you her, in case their Flying falls into the - winger and. I have some doubt about their reliability, but she- is their- best I could find, and she- did seem eager for their- job.

I believe they're- Dementiators are still searching for me, but they have not the hope of finding me here; I am planning on allowing some Non-magical peoples to glimpse me soon, a long way from SKOUFYCEOL, so-o that their- security on their- castle will be lifted.

There is something, I never got around to telling you during our brief meeting. It was I who sent you the- Firebolt - And, Ha- ha...! And said Emmah triumphantly. And- See- see- see...!

I told you it was from her! And... like- like, um whatnot...

Yes, but she- had not jinxed it, had she-?

And said Jinger. And, Ouch! And, There- tiny Flying horses now nan-a-ing happily in she and, had nibbled one of their fingers in what it seemed to think was an affectionate way.

-Crook shanks took the- order to their- Flying- Office for me.

-I used your name but told them all to take their- gold from my own Mcqueeney vault. Now- please consider it as freshmen year birthdays...’ worth of presents from your god daddy.

I would also, like to apologize, and for the- fright, I think- I gave you that- that night, last year then you left your uncle’s house.

I had only hoped to get a glimpse of you before starting my journey north, but I think their- sight of me alarmed you.

I am enclosing something else for you, which I think will make your next year at SKOUFYCEOL more enjoyable.

If ever you need me, send word. Your Flying horses will find me.

I will write again soon.

~Trius~

Part: 3

Naddalin looked eagerly inside their- envelope. There was another piece of parchment in there. She- read it through quickly and felt suddenly as warm and contented as though she’d swallowed a bottle of hot butterbeer in one gulp.

I, Trius Black, Naddalin Maria’s god daddy, she by then give her permission to visit Claepsiara, Kalaheo of Wizardry- fallen girls on weekends.

And, that will be good enough for Duerre! And- said Naddalin happily. She- looked back at Trius’s letter. And Hang on, there is a PS...

- And-

I thought your friend Jinger might like to keep their Flying horses, as it is my fault, she- no longer has a rat.

Jigger's eyes widened... There - minute

Flying horses was still hooting excitedly. And Keep her? And, she - said uncertainly. She - looked closely at their - Flying horses for a moment; their - n, to Naddalin's And Emma's great surprise, she - sheld. her out for Crook shanks to sniff.

And, what do you reckon? And, Jinger asked the - wolf. And, Some flying horses?

-Crook shanks purred...

And, that is good enough for me and said Jinger happily. And, she's is mine.

Naddalin read and re-read the - letter from - Trius all the - way back into the village train station on the other side of the castle and the tall bridge.

It was still clutched - d tightly in her and as she, Jinger, And Emmah stepped back through the - barrier of platform nine and three - quarters.

Naddalin spotted Uncle Read at once.

She - was timewasting a good distance from Mr. And Mr.'s. Railie, eyeing their - m suspiciously, and she - n Mr.'s. Railie hugged Naddalin in greeting, her worst suspicions about their - m seemed confirmed.

And, I will call about their - Worldly Championship Cup! And, Jinger yelled after Naddalin as Naddalin bid her And Emmah goodbye, their - n whirled their - trolley bearing she trunk and she - digs cage toward Uncle Read, who greeted her in the usual fashion.

And, what is that? And, she - snarled, staring at the - envelope Naddalin was still clutching in her and. And, if it is another form for me to sign, you have another...

And, it is not, and said Naddalin cheerfully.

And, it is a letter from my god daddy.

And, Godaddy? And, sputtered Uncle Read. And, you do not have a good daddy!

And, Yes, I have, and said Naddalin brightly. And, she - was my mom and dad's best friend. Her- 's a convicted murderer, but she's broke out of wizard priggery and she's on their- run. She- likes to keep in touch with me, though... keep up with my news... check if I am happy...

And, grinning broadly at the- look of horror on Uncle Read's face, Naddalin set off toward their- station exit, her- dig rattling along in finger of her, for what looked like a much better summer than their- last.

And, No, and said Naddalin. And, she's was not a teacher.

And, but it must have been a powerful wizard, to drive all those Dementiators away... If they're- Clans was shining so brightly, didn't it light her up?

Couldn't you see it...?

And, I saw her and said Naddalin flying horses. And, but... I imagined it... I was not thinking straight... I passed out right afterward...

And, who did you think it was?

And think - and Naddalin swallowed, knowing how strange there was going to sound.

And I think it was my dad.

Naddalin glanced up at Emmah and saw that her mouths were fully open now. She - was gazing at her with a mixture of alarm and pity.

And, Naddalin, your dad's - well - dead, and she- said quietly.

And know that, and said Naddalin quickly.

And, you think you saw the ghost?

And, do not know... no... she- looked solid...

And, But then...

And, I was seeing things and said Naddalin. And, but... from what I could see... it looked like her... I have photos of her...

-And-

Emmah still thought of home, though I's was worried about her sanity.

Part: 4

And now it sounds crazy and said Naddalin flatly. She - turned to look at Becca beak, who was digging she beak into their- ground, searching for worms. But she - was not watching Becca beak.

She - was thinking about her daddy...

And about her daddy is three oldest friends...

Moony, Worm tail, Pad foot, And Pingers...

Had all four of them been out on their- grounds tonight?

Worm tail had reappeared their evening she - n everyone had thought she - was dead... Was it so impossible she daddy had Deanahe their- same?

Had she - been seeing things across their- take? There - the figure had been too far away to see distinctly...

Yet, she - had felt sure, for a moment, before she'd lost consciousness...

There - leaves overshoe - ad rustled faintly in the - breeze.

There - moon drifted in and out of sight behind the - shifting clouds.

Emmah sat with her faces turned toward their- Willow, waiting.

And, then, at last, after over an hour...

And, here we come! And, Emmah sheered.

She - And Naddalin got to their feet.

Becca beak raised her head. They saw Sevketa, Jinger, And Grohl clambering awkwardly out of the - hole in the - roots.

Then came to Emmah... then and there- unconscious Lily, drifting weirdly upward. Next came Naddalin And Black. They all began to walk toward their- castle.

Naddalin's heart was starting to beat very fast. She- glanced up at the- vast sky.

Any moment now, that cloud was going to move aside and show their- moon... And, Naddalin, And Emmah muttered as though she- knew exactly what she- was thinking, and we must stay put.

We must not be seen. There is nothing we can do...

(Thought)

Funny to me after Karly's final death, she can ride horses- ie's all she wants again, in this world of falling- too... and here in this shadowy hollow, where Jenny is like me like she is still nagging her about it. GO- figure...?

~*~

So-o, we are just going to let Grohl escape all over again...

And said Naddalin quietly, how do you expect to find a rat in the- dark? And snapped Emmah. And, there is nothing we can do!

We came back to sue- lap Trius; we are not supposed to be doing anything else!

And, All right! And...

The- moon slid out from behind its cloud. They saw their- tiny figures across their- grounds stop. There- n they saw movement-

And, she goes- Sevket...

And Emmah sheered.

And, she's transforming.

And, Emmah! And said Naddalin suddenly. And, we must move!

And, we must not, I keep telling you-

-And-

And, not to interfere! Lapin's going to run into their- forest, right at us!

-Then-

Emmah gasped...

And, Quick! And, she- moaned, dashing to untie Becca beak. And, Quick! Here are we going to go? Here are we going to hide? There- Dementiators will be coming at any moment.

And, Back to Dargide's! And, Naddalin said. And, it is empty now - come on!

And...

They ran as fast as they could, Becca beak cantering along behind them. They could be like the- devil flying sing behind them...

There- the cabin was in sight; Naddalin skidded to their- door, wrenched- it open,

And Emmah And Becca beak flashed past her; Naddalin threw herself in after them and bolted their- door. Fang their- boarhound barked loudly.

And, Fang, it is us! And said Emmah, hurrying over and scratching her ears to quieten her. And, that was close! And, she- said to Naddalin.

And, And, AND!

Naddalin was LIKE, out of their- window. It was much harder to see what was going on from the shore. Becca beak seemed very happy to find herself back inside Darcie's house. She then - laid down on the finger of their- fire, folded she wings contentedly, and seemed ready for a good nap.

And think I had better go outside again, you know, and said Naddalin flying horses'.

And, cannot see what is going on - we will not know when it is time.

-And-

Emmah looked up. Her expression was suspicious.

And, I am not going to try and interfere, and said Naddalin quickly. And, but if we do not see what is going on, how are we going to know she- and it is time to rescue Trius?

-Then-

And, Well... okay, their- and... I will wait for her with Becca's beak... but Naddalin, be careful - there is a devil out there - And they're- Dementiators.

And...

Naddalin stepped outside again and edged around their- cabin. Her- could here yelp in their- distance. That meant they're- Dementiators were closing in on Trius... She - and Emmah would be running to her any moment...

Naddalin stared out toward their- lake, her head doing a kind of drumroll in her chest... Whoever had sent that Clans would be appearing at any moment...

For a fraction of a second she- stood, irresolute, in the finger of Darcie's door. You must not be seen. But she- did not want to be seen. She- wanted to do there- seeing... she- had to know...

And, there where they're- Dementiators. They were emerging out of their- darkness from every direction, gliding around their- edges of their- lake... They were moving away from here- Naddalin stood, to their- opposite bank... She- would not have to get near them... Naddalin began to run. She- had no thought since she except she daddy... If it was her... if it was her... she- had to know, had to find out...

There- the lake was coming nearer and nearer, but there was no sign of anybody. On their- opposite bank, she- could see tiny glimmers of silver - she owns attempts at a Clans- there was a bush at their- very edge of their- water. Naddalin threw herself behind it, peering desperately through their- leaves. On their- opposite bank, their- glimmers of silver were suddenly extinguished. A terrified excitement shot through her - any moment now- and Come on! And, she- muttered, staring about. And, she, are you? Dad, come on...

- And-

But no one came. Naddalin raised her head to look at the- circle of Dementiators across their- lake. One of them was lowering its hood.

It was time for their- rescuer to appear - but no one was coming to sepaltheir time - and, where- it hit her - she- understood. She- had not seen she, daddy, she- had seen herself - Naddalin flung herself out from behind the- bush and pulled out she and.

And EXPECT ATHENAEUM! And, she- yelled.

And, out of the- end of their and burst, not a shapeless cloud of mist, but a blinding, dazzling, silver animal.

She- screwed up the eyes, trying to see what it was. It looked like a horse.

It was galloping silently away from her, across their- black surface of their- lake. She- saw it lower its head and charge at their- swarming Dementiators... Now it was galloping around and around their- black shapes on their- ground, and they're- Dementiators were falling back, sweltering, retreating into the- darkness... They were gone.

There- Clans turned. It was cantering back toward Naddalin a-crossed they're- still, the surface of the- water. It was not a horse.

It was not a unicorn, either. It was a stag. It was shining brightly as their- moon above... it was coming back to her...

It stopped on their- bank. Its hooves made no mark on their- soft ground as it stared at Naddalin with its large, silver eyes. 'Flying horses', it bowed its antlered head. And Naddalin realized... and Pinger's, and she- sheered.

But as she is trembling fingertips stretchered - toward the- creature, it vanished.

Naddalin stood there, and still outstretched. Then, with a great leap of she heard, she- heard hooves behind her. She- whirled around and saw Emmah dashing toward her, dragging Becca beak behind her.

And, what did you do? And, she- said fiercely. And, you said you were only going to keep a lookout!

-And-

And, just saved all our lives...And said Naddalin. And Get behind she - e behind their bush - I will explain.

-And-

Emmah listened to what had just happened with the mouth open yet again.

And, did anyone see you?

And, yes, yes, and - yet, have not you been listening? I saw myself, but I thought I was my dad!

It is okay! And...

He - he - he - Naddalin, I cannot believe it... You conjured up a Clans that drove away all those Dementiators! That's very, very advanced magic.

And...

Like, I knew I could do it this time, and said Naddalin, and because, I had already Deanahe it... Does that make sense?

-And-

Naddalin, who happened to be in the - room at their - time, froze as she - head Jigger's voice answer.

And... HELLO?

Hey, hi, and greetings? Like - like - like - UM - CAN YOU HEAR - a ME? I - WANT - TO - TALK - TO - NADDALIN -!

Jinger was yelling so loudly that Uncle Read jumped and shield, the - receiver a foot away from their ear, staring at it with an expression of mingled fury and alarm.

And, WHOM IS THERE? And, she - roared in the - direction of the - mouthpiece.

And, WHO ARE YOU?

And then...

INGER - RAILEY! And, Jinger bellowed back, as though she- Equally- Uncle Read where sequin from opposite ends of a football field. And, I AM - A - FRIEND - OF - NADDALIN's - FROM - SAVANNAH - Similarly...

Uncle Read's small eyes swiveled around to Naddalin, who was rooted in the- spot.

The same to say that, an all- yen's, HERE there IS NO NADDALIN - HERE! And, she- roared, now holding the- receiver at arm's length, as though frightened it might explode.

And, DO NOT KNOW WHAT SAVANNAH YOU ARE TOLUENE ABOUT! NEVER CONTACT ME AGAIN! DO NOT YOU COME NEAR MY FAMILY!

And...

And, she- threw the- receiver back onto their- telephone as if dropping a prodigious spider.

There- a fight that had followed had been one of their- worst ever.

And, HOW DARE YOU GIVE THEIR NUMBER TO PEOPLE LIKE...

-PEOPLE LIKE YOU!

-And-

Uncle Read had roared, spraying Naddalin with spit.

Jinger realized that she'd gotten Naddalin into trouble because she - hadn't called again.

Naddalin's other best friend from SKOUFYCEOL, Emmah Kizziah, had not been in touch either. Naddalin suspected that Jinger had warned Emmah not to call, which was a pity, because Emmah, the - cleverest witch in Naddalin's year, had Non-magical people parents, knew perfectly well how to use a telephone, and would have had enough sense not to say that she - went to SKOUFYCEOL.

If she- had not, she- might have found it harder to concentrate on military exercises that sunrise. She- then made a stop by their- road to buy herself a blueberry bun from their- bakery, to eat with the tea.

Most of them had never seen a Flying horse- flaying girls yes not horse- even at nighttime. Mr. Natalie, however, had a perfectly normal, Flying horses- free morning.

She- yelled at five dissimilar folks.

In their- office- Her- made several significant telephone calls, being all grown up and crap- and shouted a bit more... at dumbasses! Or so she- called them...

A cranky piece of crap some called her...

Even if said- that she- was in a very noble mood until mealtime, where it went downhill from there- re... yes... she- n she- thought she'd stretch she butt- And up the leg on their- lift the side and farted hard. That is my she- lol to you- to say the- girl behind her... thanks for sharing... she- got up and then walked across the- road to buy herself a bun from their- bakery.

There- the effect of their simple sentence on their- rest of their- family was incredible: Dariez gasped and fell off the chair with a crash that shook their- whole kitchen- n; Mr. 's. Sleyash gave a small scream and clapped she and to a- sure- a mouth; Mr. Sleyash jumped to her feet, veins throbbing in the temples.

She'd forgotten all about their- people in Robes until she- passed a group of them next to their- bakers.

She- eyed them angrily as she- passed. He- did not know why, but they made her uneasy and UNCOMFORTABLE.

There bunch where sheering excitedly, too, and she- could not see a single collecting tin. It was on the back past them, clutching a large doughnut in a bag, that she- caught a few words of what they were saying.

And, she's, that is right, that is what I heard yes, their girl, Naddalin.

-And-

Mr. Natalie stopped dead.

Fear flooded her... mind and body.

She- looked back at the- whisperers as if she- wanted to say something to them, but thought better of it.

She- dashed- back across their- road, hurried up to the office, snapped at her secretary not to disturb her, seized the telephone, and had finished- d dialing she home number she- n she- changed the mind. Her- put their- receiver back down and stroked she mustache - thinking...

No, she- was being stupid.

-Was not such an unusual name. She- was sure there were lots of people called - who had a girl called Naddalin.

Come to think of it, she- was not even sure she nephew- w was called Naddalin.

She never- ever even seen the- girl.

It might have been Harvey. Or Hanna.

There- was no point in worrying Mr.'s. Natalie; she- always got so-o upset at any mention of the sister.

She- didn't blame her really- if she- 'd had a sister like that... but all there- same, those people in Robes...

And meant' please'! Also, said Naddalin quickly. Also, it didn't mean...

-And-

(Now)

Also... WHAT HAVE I TOLD YOU, Also, thundered she uncle, spraying spit over there - table, Also ABOUT SAYING THERE'S' WORD IN OUR HOUSE?

And, but I'm - Equally so-o-

...?...?

Then there and when...

(Back)

HOW DARE YOU THREATEN DARIEZ!

Holy freak'n piss, roared Uncle Read, pounding the- table with the fists.

(aha)

Sh*t- Her- she- a found it a lot harder to concentrate on drills that afternoon and wither she - left the- building at five o'clock, she- was still so worried that she- walked straight into someone just outside the- door.

Crap- Sorry, and she- grunted, as there- tiny old man stumbled and almost fell. It was a few seconds before Mr. Natalie realized that there- the man was wearing a violet Robe. She- didn't seem at all upset at being almost knocked to there- ground.

On there- contrary, her face split into a wide smile and she- said in a squeaky voice that made passersby stare, f*ck- Do not be sorry, my dear sir, for nothing could upset me today!

Rejoice, for You- Know- Who has gone at last! Even Non-magical peoples like yourself should be celebrating, there happy, happy day!

Damn...

And- and- like, um- there- old man hugged Mr. Natalie around there- middle and walked off.

Mr. Natalie stood rooted in their- spot.

She- had been hugged by a stranger.

She- also thought she- had been called a Non-magical people, whatever that was.

She- was rattled.

She- hurried to her car and set off for home, hoping she- was imagining things, which she- had never hoped before, because she- did not approve of imagination.

As she- pulled into there- the driveway of number four, there- the first thing she- saw - And it didn't improve the mood- was there- tabby wolf she- 'd spotted that morning. It was now sitting on her gardens wall. She- was sure it was there- same one; it had there- the same marking around its eyes.

Mother F*CK-er...

It just gave her an unyielding look. There- Flying horses was back at the window... Um- Shoo sucking crap! And said Mr. Natalie loudly as she- said- at the pc, over clips.

There- wolf did not move either from the spot under the tree next to the corner. Was there ordinary behavior for these beasts? And, I just - thank and that may hurt myself... like in the brain and crap- ol- la like that.

Sh*t'n- and like ah- ah- ah, I WARNED YOU! I WILL NOT TOLERATE MENTION OF YOUR ABNORMALITY UNDER THE ROOF! And- crap- crap- crap-

Naddalin stared from her purple-faced uncle to her pale aunt, who was trying to shove Dargide to her feet.

Crap- crap- crap-

... All right, um said Naddalin, And all right... And...

Crap- crap- crap-

Uncle Read sat back down, breathing like a winded rhinoceros and watching Naddalin closely out of the corners of her small, sharp eyes.

Ever since Naddalin had come home for the summer holidays, Uncle Read had been treating her like a bomb that might go off at any moment, because Naddalin - wasn't a normal girl. She was as not as normal as it is possible to be.

Naddalin - was a wizard fallen angel - a wizard one and angel number two - fresh from the first year at the school for girls Hayvannah of Witchcraft and Wizardry - and getting your wings. And if there - Andreasen were unhappy to have her back for the holidays, it was nothing to how Naddalin felt.

She - missed at the school for girls so much it was like having a constant (Savanna) Hayvannah hatcher-. She - missed the castle, with its secret passageways And ghosts, the classes (though perhaps not Lily, the Potions master,) the mail arriving by Flying horses, eating banquets in the Great Hall, sleeping in the four-poster bed in the tower dormitory, visiting the gamekeeper, Dargide, in her cabin next to the Forbidden Forest in the grounds, And, especially, Claepsiara, the most popular sport in the wizarding world (six tall goal posts, four flying balls, And fourteen players on broomsticks.)

All Naddalin's spell- books, and her, robes, could Jinger, and top- other- line Nimbus Two Thus And broomstick had been locked in a cupboard under there- stairs by Uncle Read there- instant Naddalin had come home.

What did there- Andreassen care if Naddalin um lost she place on the- House Claepsiara team because she- hadn't practiced all summer?

What was it to there- Andreassen if Naddalin like went back to Hayvannahol without any of her homework Deanahe?

There- Andreassen where what wizards called Non-magical peoples (not a drop of magical blood in their veins...)

And as far as they were concerned, having a wizard in there- family- was a matter of deepest shame, falling to death and having black wings was worse than that.

Uncle Read had even padlocked Naddalin's Flying horses, herding, inside the cage, to stop her from carrying messages to anyone in there- wizarding world.

Mr. Natalie speculated... all this and speculating was all he could do...

Trying to pull herself together as she- was sitting on there- can, leaving she job mead day like drawing to do so-o she- walked without knowing she- was doing so-o... like being pulled into there- the evil of it all- she- let herself into there- house. She- was still decided not to mention anything to the wife. That their power was taken over the mind, And body.

Mr.'s. Natalie had had a nice, ordinary day.

She- told her over dinner all about Mr.'s. Next Door's problems with the daughter and how Alisha had learned an unfamiliar word...

(And... NO...!)

Mr. Natalie tried to act Hayvanna- hay.

When Alisha had been put to bed, she- went into there- lounge in time to hook up on there- last report on there- sundown news: And, besides, in conclusion, bird onlookers all over have recounted that there- nation's Flying horses with wings have been behaving very strangely today.

Yet not in the- way she- was seeing them, they said about it- yet, not about what she- was seeing with it.

Although Flying with wings normally hunt at night, and are hardly ever seen considering the day, they have been hundreds of sightings of these birds flying in every direction since daybreak there - the day before And. Experts are unable to explain why there - Flying horses with wings have suddenly changed their slumbering pattern.

- And-

Possibly per girls have been celebrating you can see there- barrel firs in there- streets- within there- night early- dusk- it is not until next week, folks! But I can promise a wet night tonight.

There- broadcaster allowed herself a smile.

Most mysterious... Um now, over to Lenah Barton with there- weather. Successful to be any more when a- Flying horses with wings tonight, girl? And, Viewers as far apart as Jackie, Promising, And Dundee have been phoning in to tell me that instead of there- rain I assured yesterday, they have had a downpour of shooting stars! And, ... Well, Dee, and said there- weathercaster, and I do not know about that, but it is not only there- Flying horses with wings that have been acting oddly today. I was hoping to make a wish to see if there casting of whatever would go away.

Mr. Natalie sat frozen in her armchair.

Shooting stars all over Britain?

Flying horses with wings flying by the light of day? Mysterious individuals in shawls all over there- the place looks like something out of there- the 1920s? And, a murmur, a murmur about there's... who is and who is and who's... like sharpers.

She- cleared her throat nervously. And, wow, dear- you have not heard from your sister lately? And, it was not good. Her- would have to say something to her about there.

Mr.'s. Natalie came into the- living room carrying two cups of tea. Sharing- as she- had estimated, Mr.'s.

Natalie watcher- d surprised and ever so-o irritated.

They mock there, she- did not have a sister- so that was there- a story made up of the little mind. It is not good to have or see there- abnormal! Like there... something is going down.

And, and- and- and sh*t- Nope, and s- she- said abruptly. Why...?

Why is the question with no answer?

Why- was the- question...

And, humorous paraphernalia on there- news, And Mr. Natalie muttered. And, flying horses with wings... shooting stars... And pussies oh my! She- looked up at her with a grin.

Looking aroused and around there- was there- re was a cute young coupled kissing making out- And making love on a bench's- she- was sitting on her, And, feeling all- there- madness- in plain eyesight.

Desirable, there- where a lot of humorous- looking folks in town today... doing just there- see things... it was madness- love was in there- air like there- evil cast over me- And some- that where been seen. And- And- So-o? And, cracked Mr.'s. Natalie. And, Well, I just thought... perchance... it was to do with... you know... she crowds- and why. And, their chat was complex hard to understand- for one to there- another topic.

Mr.'s. Natalie swallowed her tea through squeezed lips. Mr. Natalie wondered where- there- r she- dared tell she'd heard there- name- and she- decided she- didn't dare.

Instead she- said, as unconcernedly as she- could, And Their baby girl she'd be about Alisha's age now, wouldn't she? And... and - yeah, I's suppose so-o, And I'm said Mr.'s. Natalie stiffly.

And... What's her name again? Not sure - she- said- why does it matter...?

Um... Naddalin? An offensive, uncommon name, if you ask me. SH*T- I didn't but okay I feel the- same.

And... Oh, absolutely, sure... said Mr. Natalie, she hears plummeting extremely.

And...

Sure, I quite agree with you.

And...

On there- way up there- staircase, no words were said, as they made their way up to their bedroom, or some alone time to do what was natural. While Mr.'s. Natalie was in there- bathroom, Mr. Natalie stole to there- bedroom window and peered down into there- Inert garden. Looking out and over- There- the damn wolf was still there- looking up at her- now- yet, in the- same way as with her- as before. It hadn't moved a bit.

Was she- imagining things? Or was there pussy acting as if she- could hear what I was thinking...

Could all they have something to do with there's? If it did... there - query was why- do you know? If it got out that they were related to a pair of- well, she- didn't think she- could bear it.

Chapter: 154

Part: 1

There- Natalie's got into bed wearing nothing more than she underies'. Mr.'s. Natalie fell asleep quickly, but Mr. Natalie lay awake looking at her and all the parts of her body in love nonetheless, turning it all over in the minds, as she- was feeling she up with her right so- o.

They knew very well what she- and Jennath thought about them and their kind... Her last, she- attending thought before and she- fell asleep was that even if they were compiled, there was no motive for their- m to come near her and Mr.'s. Doll girl.

She- could not see how she- and could get mixed up in whatever, that might be going on- she- stretched- as well as turned over- it could not affect them...

How very mistaken she- was to think their thought.

Mr. Natalie might have been drifting into an uneasy sleep, but there- wolf on the- wall outside was showing no sign of sleepiness.

So, their- fat lazy ass- did move... Just like in a cartoon I want to throw a boot It was sitting as still as a statue, its eyes fixed unblameably; at me timewasting- re naked eating Cheetos... next to a bean bag chair... on... There- did not so-o much as quiver she- n a car door thumped on their- next street, nor she- n two or three Flying horses with wings swooped above. In truth, it was their- wee small hours before the- wolf moved at all.

A man appeared on their- corner they're- the wolf had been watching- only me- and me only, not- looking away- it gives them- an idea so-o suddenly, and silently you'd have thought she'd just popped out of the- ground. There- wolf's tail yanked besides its eyes tightened.

Zilch- nil- like their man had ever been seen on the motorway.

She- was giant, tinny, and self- same deep-rooted, refereeing by their- silver of the hair and beard, which were in cooperation long adequate to tuck into she belts.

She- was tiring long robes, a dark yet rosy wrap that swept they're- ground, And high- she-eyed, Misshapen boots.

Her- indigo- yet with some blue eyes were light, bright, as well as twinkling behind half-moon spectacles, in addition to that she noses were very long and crooked like she is yellowing teeth, as on their- other and, it has been broken at least twice- like she and- for being dumb.

There man's name was Roberts Dreibund.

Roberts Dreibund did not seem to understand, that she- had just at home in a street there the whole thing from the description to sue gumboots was undesirable.

So-o, Naddalin had had no word from any of their wizarding friends for five long weeks, and their summer was turning out to be as bad as their- last one. There- re was just one very small improvement - after swearing that she- would not use her to send letters to any of their friends.

Naddalin had been allowed to let her Fly, they- were out at night.

Uncle Read had given in because of their- racket herding made if she- was locked in the cage all their- time.

Naddalin finished- writing about Wendel in their- Weird And paused to listen again. The- silence in the- the spooky house was broken only by they're- distant, grunting snores of their enormous cousin, Dariez.

It must be very late, Naddalin thought. Her eyes were itching with tiredness. Perhaps she - 'd finish their essay Hayvanna-horror night...

She- replaced the- ribbon; pulled an old pillowcase from under the bed; put the- flashlight under with her, a forbidden type of Magic, she essays, back the typewriter to her hands; now she would not out of bed; and hid their- lot under a loose floorboard under the bed.

Then she- stood up, stretched, and checked the- time on the- luminous alarm clock on the bedside table.

It was one o'clock in their- morning. Naddalin's Savannah gave a funny jolt. She- had been thirteen years old, without realizing it, for a whole hour.

Yet another unusual thing about Naddalin was how little she- looked forward to her birthdays.

She- had never- ever received a birthday card in life.

There- Andreassen had completely ignored the last two birthdays, and she- had no regard to suppose they would remember there one.

Their man- old with there- long white long beard was full of activity dip into in the wraps, beholding for something.

On there- other and, she- did seem to understand she- was being watched, for their- regard that she- looked up unexpectedly at their- wolf, the supplementary finish of their, thoroughfare, mind going a little Lonny... For some motivation, the sight of their- wolf gives their- impression to make laugh her.

She- chuckled and muttered, and be a duty-bound to have known.

- And-

She- originates what she- was beholding for in she privileged pocket. It seemed to be a green zip- o cigarette lighter.

She- flipped it open, held it up in the- air, and clicked it. Whoosh- hair smoldering- I thought it was going to happen... There- adjoining gas street lamp went out with a slight hush sound.

She- clicked it again- their- next lamp wavered into dimness and gloominess.

13 times she- be on there- the same wavelength their- Put- External, 'til their- only lights left on the- whole street where two miniature pinholes in their- coldness, which were there- judgments of their- wolf watching her with emerald eyes.

Uncertainty any per girl observed out of their window now, even beady-eyed Mr.'s. Doll girl, they wouldn't be able to see no matter what that was fashionable down on the- roadway.

Naddalin looked nothing like their- rest of the- family.

Uncle Read was large and somewhat neckless, with an enormous black mustache and a long beard-; Aunt Jennath was horse-faced and bony; Dariez was blond-haired person, pink, and porky.

Naddalin, on their- other and, was small and skinny, with brilliant green eyes..., And jet- black hair that was always untidy. She- wore round glasses, and on her, the forehead was a thick scar... that was etched hatched, in like a drawing.

Naddalin walked across the- darkroom, past her- dig's large, empty cage, to their- open window. She- leaned on their- sill, their- cool night air pleasant on she faces after a long time under their- blankets. herding had been absent for two nights now.

Naddalin wasn't worried about her: she'd been gone their long before.

Nevertheless, she- hoped she'd be back soon - she- was the- only- living creature in their house who didn't flinch at their- sight of her.

Naddalin, though still rats her small and skinny for the ages, had grown a few inches- s over their- last year.

Her strawberry blond hair, however, was just as it always had been - stubbornly untidy, whatever she- did to it. There- eyes behind the glasses were bright green, and on she foresee- ad, visible through the hair, was a thick scar, shaped like an angels body- with wings at a side view, of a past girl named NEVAEH, the one she was the blame for this all... the same depiction was on a blue acoustic cutaway cracked no longer play guitar- that was Havens, hand painted- I would add, with all the things that meant everything to the girls within the stories of their life, like lost chapters. For some reason, this drawing of her keeps reappearing in all our lives. (All the girls have but their story names on the side, with gold trim.)

Hear- here it is... and to think some ass hole said- 'It was not worth keeping back in her hometown.'

It was their scar that made Naddalin so particularly unusual, even for a wizard- she had the mark of a good angel.

The scar was there- the only a hint of Naddalin's very mysterious past, of the- regard she- had been left on their- Andreasen's doorstep eleven years before, turn up from the floor up with a ring through her clit, like all of them of the past.

Of all their- unusual things about Naddalin, their scar was the- most extraordinary of all. It was not, as the- Andreasen - that family that took over the Amsel orphanage had pretended for ten years, a souvenir of their- car crash that had killed Naddalin's parents, because... there doesn't need to be a way- of it... Lily... was alike her

Kristen... too...

The question is why...

And then I'd thought about it...

You don't need a why...or to have a motive... it was all just because- because we can- and to get at you for the sick thrilling joys- of proving it- they want you to know it's them- so you're the one that looks crazy... for saying the why- of it all... I have been there, and no one believes me- yet- the same with them.

And, the question- still is why...?

Part: 2

And, Alyssa- had not died, yet was already one that we all heated... here at this school.

They had been murdered, murdered by their- most feared Dark wizard for a hundred years the crazy within their mind...

Lord AVA, new pet though- you get why...?

I keep away as much as I can now from them, yet the war is never over with her and them.

(Back)

Naddalin had escaped from there- the same attack with nothing more than a scar on her forehead and a ring, she- Ava's curse, instead of killing her- here, had rebounded upon its originator. Barely alive, Ava had fled...

Final- death here is like- a thing... if you keep losing power, or others want you out... then it back to Earth to haunt... in unhappiness.

But Naddalin had come face- to- face with her at the school for girls.

Remembering their last meeting as she- stood at their- dark window, Naddalin had to admit she- was lucky even to have reached- d she thirteenth birthday.

Silhouetted against the- wonderfully- amazing big moon, and growing larger every moment, was a large, strangely lopsided creature, and it was flapping in Naddalin's direction.

Part: 3

She- stood quite still, watching it sink lower... And lower; for a split second, she- hesitated, she and on the- window latch, wondering whether to slam it shut.

Still, there- and the- bizarre creature soared over one of there- street lamps that were flicking a flame, off Privet Drive, in reflection on the wet path, And Naddalin, realizing what it was, leaped aside.

Through there- window soared three Flying girls with wings it was them those girls that picked on her- now me, yet I and my girls would not stand for this... the conflict was on.

Two of them holding up there- third, which appeared to be unconscious, to all that was around them.

Some time had passed...

Then there was a soft flump on Naddalin's bed, and there- middle grade- girls- flying angel- young girls- that where for them- them- them- just looking at me- and she- all creepy like, they would not leave and they wanted all of me, with me and she large gray, keeled right overhead she and I lay motionless, nude bodies in- tangled together, in our bed, staying away from them and there hate of what they don't understand. There- was a large package tied to its legs. So-o, she and I kissed- and hugged tight, and loved each other going down on, and more and such, and let the babies play their games- pick and tease.

Part: 4

Naddalin recognized there- unconscious Flying horses at once - the name was Errol, and she- belonged to the- Railie family.

Naddalin dashed to there- bed, untied there- cords around Errol's legs took off there- parcel, and there- n carried Errolie to Sabre-dove's cage.

Errolie opened one bleary eye, gave a feeble hoot of thanks, and began to gulp some water.

Naddalin turned back to there- remaining Flying horses with wings, and the girls with them.

One of them, there- large white female, was her shedding.

She- too, was carrying a parcel and looked extremely pleased with herself; she- gave Naddalin an affectionate nip with she beak as she- removed the burden, there- and flew across the- room to join Errolie.

Naddalin did not recognize there- third girl, a and some tawny one, but she- knew at once when it had come from because, in addition to a third package, it was carrying a letter bearing there- At the school for girl's crest.

When Naddalin relieved their Flying horses of its burden, it ruffled its daddy's important, stretcher- d its wings, and took off through the- a window into the- night.

Naddalin sat down on her bed then grabbed Errolie's package, ripped off there- brown paper, and discovered a present wrapped in gold and her first-ever birthday card. Fingers trembling slightly, she- opened the- envelope.

Two pieces of paper fell out - a letter and a newspaper clipping.

There- clipping had come out of there- wizarding newspaper, there- Star Press- because of there- people in there- black- and- the white picture where moving.

Naddalin picked up there- clipping, smoothed it out and read- the- scanned there- starry sky for a sign of herding, perhaps soaring back to her with a dead mouse dangling from her mouth, expecting praise.

Gazing absently over there- rooftops, it was a few seconds before Naddalin realized what she- was seeing.

At there- age of one-year-old, Naddalin had somehow survived a curse from the- greatest Dark Sorcerer Angel of the demons of all time, Noble Ava, whose name most watcher- s and wizards- fallen angel still feared to speak.

Naddalin 's parents had died in Ava's attacks, but Naddalin had escaped with scars and brandings, and somehow - nobody understood- why- WHY- Ava's powers had been demolished there- instant she- had failed to kill- Naddalin.

So-o Naddalin had been brought up by the dead mother's sister and her hubs and... She - had spent ten years with there- Andreassen, never- ever underset and why she- kept making odd things happen without meaning to, believing there- Andreassen; story that she- had her scar in the- car crash that had killed the parents...

...We all thought yeah right!

And, then, exactly a year ago, at the school for girls had written to Naddalin, and there - the whole story- had come out.

Naddalin had taken up the places at wizard Hayvannahol, when she- And her scar was- so- a famous... but now there- the Hayvannahol year was over, and she- was back with there- Andreassen for there- summer, back to being treated like a dog, that had rolled in something smelly.

(Back in time)

The- Andreassen hadn't even remembered that today happened to be Naddalin's 12th birthday.

Of course, she hopes had not been high; they had never given her a real present, let alone a cake - but to ignore it completely...

At that moment, Uncle Read cleared her throat importantly and said, Besides, now, as we all know, today is a very important day.

-And-

Naddalin looked up, hardly daring to believe it.

BUREAU OF MAGIC EMPLOYEE SCOOPS girl AND PRIZE-

'Yeah, well,' said Naddalin, glowering at her plate, 'since wither has Lily ever been fair to me?'

Neither of there- others answered; all three of there- m knew that Lily and Naddalin's mutual enmity had been absolute from the- moment Naddalin had set foot in at the school for girls.

'I's did think she- might be a bit better there year,' said Emmah in a disappointed voice. 'I mean... you know...' she- looked around carefully; there were half a dozen empty seats on either side of there- m and nobody was passing the- table...

'... Now she's in there- War and everything.'

'Prodigious toadstools Do not change their spots,' said Jinger sagely. 'Anyway, I've always thought Duerre was cracked to trust Lily. Where's she- evidence her- ever really stopped working for You- Know- I Mean?'

'I think Duerre's probably got plenty of evidence, even if she- doesn't share it with you, Jinger,' snapped Emmah.

'Oh, shut up, the pair of you,' said Naddalin heavily, as Jinger opened her mouth to argue back. Emmah And Jinger both froze, looking angry and offended.'

'Can't you give it a rest?' Said Naddalin.

'You're always having a go at each other; it's driving me furious.'

And abandoning shepherd's pie, she- swung she Hayvannahol- bag back over the shoulders and left them sitting there.

She- walked up the- marble staircase two steps at a time, past there- many students hurrying towards lunch.

There- anger that had just flared so unexpectedly still blazed inside her, and they're - a vision of Jinger...

And, Emmah's shocked faces afforded her a sense of deep satisfaction. Serve them right, she thought, why can't they give it a rest... bickering all there- time... it's enough to drive anyone up there- wall...

She- passed the- a large picture of Sir Lloyd there- a knight on an l's and; Sir Lloyd drew her sword and brandished it fiercely at Naddalin, who ignored her.

'Come back, you scurvy dog! Stand fast and fight!' yelled Sir Lloyd in an inaudible voice from behind she visors, but Naddalin merely walked on and wither Sir Lloyd tried to follow her by running into a neighboring picture, she- was rebuffed by its inhabitant, a large and angry-looking wolfhound.

Naddalin spent there- rest of there- lunch hour sitting alone underneath the- trapdoor at there- top of Northern Tower, just under the bells.

Consequently, she- was there- first to ascend there- a silver ladder that led to Sara... Solis's classroom when- n the- bell rang.

After Potions, Divination was Naddalin's- least favorite class, which was due mainly to Professor Solis's habit of forecasting her untimely death every few lessons.

A thin woman, heavily draped in shawls and glittering with strings of beads, she'd- always reminded Naddalin of some kind of insect, with she glasses hugely magnifying her eyes.

We have read her book here... them too...

She'd- was busy putting copies of battered leather-bound books on each of there- spindly little tables with which the room was littered when Naddalin entered there- room, but there- light cast by there- lamps covered by scarves and there- low burning, the sickly scented fire was so dim she'd- appeared not to notice her as she- took a seat in there- shadows.

There- the rest of there- class arrived over there- next five minutes. Jinger emerged from there- a trapdoor, looked around carefully, spotted Naddalin, then made unswe rvingly for her, or as directly as she- could while having to wend she way between tables, chairs, and overstuffed puffs.

'Emmah and I have stopped arguing,' she- said, sitting down beside Naddalin.

‘Good,’ grunted Naddalin.

‘But Emmah says she’d- thinks it would be nice if you stopped taken out your temper on us,’ said Jinger.

‘I’m not...’

‘I’m just passing on there- message,’ said Jinger, talking over her.’

Nevertheless, I reckon she’d- is right. It’s not our fault how Laila and Lily treat you.’

‘I never said it...’

‘Good day,’ said Professor Solis in her usual misty, dreamy voice, and Naddalin broke off, again feeling both annoyed and slightly ashamed of herself.’

Besides, welcome back to Divination.

I have, of course, been following your fortunes most carefully over the- holidays, and I am delighted to see that you have all returned to at the school for girls safely as, of course, I knew you would.

You will find on there- tables before your copy of the- ‘Little Girls Bible.’

Dream interpretation is the most important means of divining there- future and one that may very probably be tested in your FLYING.

The Express

Interval: 4

Part: 1

(Back)

Think about the express-

The train pulls away. As I then sit down in a seat where I have a good vantage point of the cars. The doors close, and I hear the whistle far down the line I knew I was going far from home. I look out the window. 'This is your conductor speaking, I'd like to welcome you aboard...' If you require any assistance on your journey, I am located towards the front of this 69th train coach - I welcome you to the railway for the fallen- you're here because your life was not fielded as it should, that is why they send you to us.' It is evening, soon you will not see anything but darkness, the treetops will get a little darker than the sky above, then that too will fade, as you pulled into the time vortex.

Mostly, all I see is the reflection of the passengers in the carriage, and you and your soul reflected back at you, that now is ours to take - and keep and do as we like with. I sit in the quiet coach; it is not always quiet, but at least it is not loud, all the girls look like sweet things that would not hurt anyone in their new pressed girly school uniforms, they got before getting on. Individuals are usually too polite, and or timid or just freaking scared out of their wits, to complain when someone is making a clamor. I count eight other passengers today, I knew - that we would get to know each other then again if it was anything - like my old life then maybe not.

Part: 2

Yes, I am sure of it I will have some, spaniel bounds with all y'all are in this carriage, sniffing voraciously at everything, and looking as if your grandmother just died, nope - you did honey- you did. Then, I think well so- o did I!

Nevertheless, there are no familiar faces, no people I see regularly, I was starting to feel the effects of it too- and then I was looking like a sad puppy also, in the glass looking back, seeing my old life flash by as the train rushed forward, faster than my mind could think. Whoop- whoop- I'm heard... Emma- the young girl, looks at each group of seats as he r passes, moving straight through when she doesn't find what she is looking for, and that is a girl there to comfort her, so-o I'm thought that must be me.

In the non-summer days, I stare out the window, back home out the train riding to school, but when it is dark, she watches the other passengers. She said to me, her name was- Haven. Things got a little less stuffie... I often wonder if she comes to the same town as I do, sound like me, and my story too.

Although the girls have made an effort to change into their uniform it is obvious, they have not been away home for long- they were lost. I'm slurred in particular, when- I's get nervous, she was sitting there with her hand between her knees said Naddalin.

Haven- I said, raising up in to sitting on my legs under my butt, fixing the skirt too under my butt, spilling is not my thing or being what some would say is cool, as the train sways, but I can see I have made it as a girl. Some just blink not getting that. I feel the train slowing; two girls in uniforms... walk back and take sets in front of us, and make their way through the doors at one end. I haven't had an opportunity, to talk openly for the first time it was nice, same with them we not heating on one another- where just fallen girls- here over the fact we were throw away girls. Naddalin- I's love to observe them as they sat at the far end of the coach, that was something I always loved doing so.

(Me to, said the three girls that made friends at this point. Emma, Naddalin, and Haven.)

~*~

The new girl crosses her arms and grins, saying- 'hey I am Karly.'

We all look confused, at the color of her hair, no reply kick-ass luggage she uses that mad our heads ache; the new girl rolls her eyes- saying: Don't be fake and gay- (I said I's am- and I look saying me kind of a too-long story.)

‘Hun- a?’ Her eyes where and face was so-o confused, ‘I do not judge...’ she said. definitely not in school uniforms, clashes with my hair, and I don’t like having things constricted, and she grasps her chest hard, in an upper ward motion.

Part: 3

I smile at the easiest, thoughts of a new friendship, the girls share their plans of listening but want to keep it a secret from their parents and all in their old life. Yet, Karly was like- not so-o much as we were- my younger sisters we see me again- I am sure of it, as a haunt in her vanity glass, or something random, or like when she is getting freaky with my old boyfriend. We giggled...

Luckily, I don't know the parents! Said Haven.

The young girl embarked, on and are sitting opposite each other folding the sit-in so they were face to face... The train stops and this time the doors stay closed. Getting water from the tank, for the steam...

(Thought)

I feel like I would like to help this young girl, but I don't know how, and I guess I’s would not appreciate the interference.

I'm though I know that I love trains...

~*~

(I wonder)

The train pulls away with a small jolt, Students steps back from the window, I wonder if she has problems at home, like I did, though Haven, or maybe girlfriend trouble too like me or boy- or was at all like me? He checks the screen on his phone again. I guess she has no signals like this rout is all green from here. Only one track... and is a twist and turns yet is a straight path to their... Tickets- girls, please, magical they are they show up floating like three dentinal- and oh- so-o see though in their hands, tickets... with your code and names and whatnot, show us all we need to know for now... and your place here.

As you can see the bars on the code forever match here to there and are read... this is your ID... I hold up my season ticket for inspection, ripping the playful thing down in mid-air. ‘Thank you, sir,’ the watchmen walks' on and checks the rest of the carriage, then stops by the doors. After walking to and for a couple of times, students sad-like sits down and takes a large notebook from their bag, and to the first day's homework, and that is document all that happens on the ride.

This also was on the ticket, saying the assignment. Then they went off to the steeper parts of the train, it was going to be a long ride when in reality it only takes moments to get here... yet to new girls, it's like a lifetime, that seems like a week trip, where you need to sleep- and have a day to transition to the new worldly ways.

Part: 4

Um- rapidly flicking through the pages, before the girls turn in, he stops about two-thirds of the way through, the girl's room, and pulls the beds and shades down saying work hard and rest, he stares out the window, saying I getting too old for young girls.

We- giggle...

(Next day)

With a sigh, the Student has sad doodles on the margin of the page, and some droll. He looks up at Emma and stands, there as she and stretches, 'not every day you see a nude girl...' she said. The girls gather their belongings and stand close together by the doors, getting into uniform. I's wait for the train to come to a complete standstill before walking over to the next door, one by one going down the car steps, to get out, the girls hold hands in one line, as they walk into this new land of unknown.

Chapter: 155

Part: 1

Naddalin- 'Why?' 'Why- are girls like you are making fun of a girl, that was just like you- you're here, for the same- faults- or even more then she had.'

Not, of course, that I believe examination passes or failures are of there - remotest importance wither and it comes to there- the sacred art of divination.

If you have there-

Seeing-eye, certificates, and grades matter very little. However, there- headmaster likes you to sit there- examination, so-o...'

Her voice trailed away delicately, leaving them all in no doubt that Professor Trelawney considered the- subject above such sordid matters as examinations.

Turn, please, to there- introduction- and read what the girl has said here, you have a voice- okay what is that saying- AVA said to her girls, like what this pussy licker said about us.

'CUTE- NO?'

'Cute yes!'

'The Sisters from Hell...' 'CUTE... did she think that we would never – ever see this?'

'Sh-h-h' Said Emma- making faces!

This work by a girl that was never to be has made things difficult for all... said- Duerre... no its time to get at her. Wounds where cast picking apart the old book copy of the many chapters of her young and aging life.

Part: 2

They were, divide into pairs, reading Nevaeh's story mocking her some- other fallen girls where in- love with the captivating story her up and downs...and some saying how did she not fall to us- as one of us... a strong girl- she was... somewhere crying others giggling.

Naddalin- I's think this wrong to do to someone, even if...and all the girls in the class where had the books, picking out things that they could do to them all, in their moments how self- droughts and fear- it was so wrong to us- Naddalin the most.

Use The- Dream Vision, spell and see all that she did- can you...?

We can- said the girls... feel- feel- and see as she did. To interpret each other's most recent dreams, you will become her- and live a life of the pass and walk her halls as her. Carry on... young falling angels of Wizard and the Fallen.'

Part: 3

The- one good thing to be said, for their lesson was that it was not a double period.

By three- time they had all finished- reading there- the introduction of the- book, they had barely ten minutes left for dream interpretation.

At there- the table next to Naddalin And Jinger, Lacy had paired up with Neville, who immediately embarked on a longwinded explanation of a nightmare involving a pair of giant scissors wearing her grandmother best hat; Naddalin And Jinger merely looked at each other glumly.

‘I never remember my dreams,’ said Jinger, ‘you say one.’

I never remember them like this said Naddalin... in awe.

‘You must remember one of them,’ said Naddalin impatiently.

She- was not going to share her dreams with anyone, I thought we all had to.

She- knew perfectly well what she regular nightmare about a graveyard meant, she- did not need Jinger or Professor Trelawney or there- stupid Dream Vision to tell her.

‘Well, I dreamed, that I was playing Claepsiara there- another night,’ said Jinger, screwing up the faces in an effort to remember. ‘What you’d reckon that means?’

‘Probably that you’re going to be eaten by a giant marshmallow or something,’ said Naddalin, turning there- pages of The- Dream Vision without interest.

It was very dull work looking up bits of dreams in there- Vision and Naddalin were not chartered up with- n Professor Trelawney set, them there- the task of keeping a dream diary for a month as homework, about this girl’s life, and it was all adding into this story. What we saw.

Naddalin- now docent that discredit her from being the novelist another of the story in the first place? ‘You need to hush, or you fail my class!’

When there- bell went, she- And Jinger led there- way back down there- ladder, Jinger grumbling loudly.

‘Do you realize how much homework we have gotten already? Bins set us a foot and half long essay on giant wars, Lily wants a foot on there- use of moonstones, and now we’ve got a month’s dream diary from Trelawney!’

Freeanna and Katy where not Ginger about FLYING year, were they? That Scott lady had better not give us any...'

Wither they entered there- Defense Against there- Dark Arts classroom, like- they found Professor Scott already seated at there- transferors desk, wearing there- fluffy pink cardigan of there- the night before and there- black velvet bow on top of their head. Naddalin was again reminded forcibly of a large fly perched- unwisely on top of an even larger toad.

The- class was quiet, and just sweet little girls sitting in a row in uniforms, an old art- deco ornate 1920's style all linked together desks, as it entered there- room; Professor Scott was, as yet, an unknown quantity... And nobody knew how strict a disciplinarian she'd- was likely to be.

'Well, good afternoon!' Um- she'd- said, wither finally there- the whole class had sat down.

A few people mumbled 'good afternoon' in reply of drowsiness- or I don't give a frapping sh*t- piss.

That will not do, now, will it?

I should like you, please, to reply 'Good afternoon, Professor Scott'. One more time, please. Good afternoon, class!'

'Good afternoon, Professor Scott,' they chanted back at her.

'Ta- ta,' said Professor Scott.

There are, now,' said Professor Scott sweetly. That was not too difficult, was it? And, away and quills out- ink and nibs, please.'

Many of there- class exchanged gloomy looks; there- order' and away' had never- ever, yet, been followed by a lesson they had found interesting or fun and net.

Naddalin shoved her and back into her handbag.

And pulled out an enchanted typewriter for the lifting up wood top, ink, and parchment. The large stand- glass windows have rays coming in... that distracts her.

Professor Scott opened her and, extracted her own and, which was an unusually short one, and tapped there- blackboard sharply with it; words appeared on there- board at once- Defense Against there- Dark Studies a Return to Fundamental Assumption- 'Well now, your teaching in their subject has been rather disrupted and fragmented, hasn't it?' said Professor Scott, turning to face there - class with she and clasped neatly in the finger of her.

There- constant changing of teachers, many of whom do not seem to have followed any Unholy orders approved curriculum, has regrettably resulted in your being far below there - stand we would expect to see in your FLYING year.

'You will be pleased to know, however, that these problems are now to be rectified. We will be following a carefully structured, theory-centered, Ministry-approved course of defensive magic there a year.'

'Copy down there- following, please.'

She would- rapped there- blackboard again; there- the first message vanished- d and was replaced by there- 'Course Aims...' Understanding there- assumption primary defensive magic. Learning to recognize circumstances in which defensive magic can legally be used. Employing the- use of defensive magic in a context for practical use.

For a couple of minutes there- the room was full of there- the sound of scratching quills on parchment. Wither everyone had copied down Professor Scott's three -course aims she'd- asked. 'Has everybody got a copy of Defensive Magical Theory by Wilbert Slinkhard?'

There was a dull murmur of assent throughout there- class.

'I think we'll try that again,' said Professor Scott.'

Wither- I ask you a question, I should like you to reply, 'Yes, Professor Scott', or 'No, Professor Scott'.

So, has everyone got a copy of Defensive Magical Theory by Wilbert Slinkhard?'

'Yes, Professor Scott,' rang through there- room.

'Good,' said Professor Scott.' I should like you to turn to page five and read 'Girl One, Fundamentals for Beginners'. There will be no need to talk.'

Professor Scott left there - blackboard and settled herself in there - chair behind there - transferors desk, seeing them all closely with those pouchy eyes.

Naddalin turned to page five of her copies of Defensive Magical Philosophy And started to read.

It was desperately overcast, quite as bad as listening to Professor Binns.

She- felt she attentiveness sliding away from her, she, had soon read there, the same line half a dozen times without taking in more than there; first few words.

Numerous silent minutes passed.

Next, to her, Jinger was absent-mindedly turning she enchanted typewriter over and over in the fingers, staring at there- the same spot on their- page.

Naddalin observed right and received an astonishment to shake her out of the inertia.

Emmah had not even opened the copy of Defensive Magical Theory. She would- was staring fixedly at Professor Scott with her and in there - air.

Naddalin could not remember Emmah ever neglecting to read wither instructed to, or indeed resisting there- the temptation to open any book that came under the nose. She - looked at her enquiringly, but she would- merely shook her head slightly to show that she would- was not about to answer questions, and continued to stare at Professor Scott, who was looking just as resolutely in another direction.

After several more minutes had passed, however, Naddalin was not there - only one watching Emmah. There- Girl they had been instructed to read was so tedious that more and more people were hoping to watch Emmah's mute attempt to catch Professor Scott's eye rather than struggle on with fundamentals for beginners.'

Wither more than half there- class were staring at Emmah mouse her than at their books, Professor Scott seemed to decide that she'd- could ignore there- a situation no longer.

'Did you want to ask something about there- Girl, dear?' She'd- asked Emmah, as though she'd- had only just noticed she.

Part: 4

‘Not about there- Girl, no,’ said Emmah.

‘Well, we’re reading just now,’ said Professor Scott, showing she small pointed teeth. ‘If you have other queries, we can deal with them at there- end of class.’

‘I’s have got an interrogation about your course aims,’ said Emmah.

Professor Scott raised her eyebrows.

‘And your name is?’

‘Emmah Kizziah,’ said Emmah.

‘Well, Miss. Kizziah, I think there- course aims are perfectly clear if you read them through carefully,’ said Professor Scott in a voice of determined sweetness.

‘Well, I’s don’t know,’ said Emmah bluntly. ‘There’s nothing written up there about using defensive spells.’

There was like a short silence in which many members of the- class turned their heads to frown at there- three course aims still written on there- blackboard.

‘Using self- justifying spells?’ Professor Scott repeated with a little laugh.

Why, I’s can’t imagine any situation arising in my classroom that would require you to use a defensive spell, Miss. Kizziah. You surely are not expecting to be attacked during class?’

‘We’re not going to use magic?’ Jinger cried loudly.

‘Um- young students raise their hand to wither they wish to speak in my class, Mr.S?’ ‘Railie,’ said Jinger, thrusting she hands into there- air.

Professor Scott, smiling still more widely, turned she back on her.

Naddalin And Emmah immediately raised their hand too. Professor Scott’s pouchy eyes lingered on Naddalin for a moment before she’d- addressed Emmah.

‘Yes, Miss. Kizziah? You wanted to ask something else?’

‘Yes,’ said Emmah. ‘surely there- the whole point of Defense Against there - Dark Studies is to practice defensive spells?’

‘Are you a- Unholy Orders trained educational expert, Miss. Kizziah?’ asked Professor Scott, in she falsely sweet voice.

‘No, but’

‘Well then, I’m afraid you are not trained to decide what there - ‘whole point’ of any class is.

Wizard and the Fallens or fallen girls much older and cleverer than you have devised our new programmed of study.

You will be learning about self- protective spells in a secure, risk freeway...’

‘What use is that?’ Said Naddalin loudly.’

If we’re going to be attacked, it won’t be in a...’

~*~

Naddalin thrust her fist in there- air. Again, Professor Scott promptly turned away from her, but now several other people had their hands are up, too.

‘And your name is?’ Professor Scott said to Lacy.

‘Lacy Thomas.’

‘Well, Mr. Thomas?’

‘Well, it’s like Naddalin said, isn’t it?’ Said Lacy.’ If we’re going to be attacked, it won’t be risk-free.’

‘I repeat,’ said Professor Scott, amused, and grinning in a very irritating fashion at Lacy, do you expect to be attacked during my classes?’

‘No, but- um- ah...’

‘Like- Professor Scott talked over her.’

I do not wish to criticize the- way things have been run in there Hayvannahol,' she'd- said, an unconvincing smile stretching her wide mouth.

'Nonetheless, you have been exposed to some very irresponsible fallen angels/Wizard and the Fallens in their class, very irresponsible indeed not to mention,' she'd- gave a nasty little laugh,' extremely dangerous half-breeds.'

'If you mean Professor Lupin,' piped up

Lacy angrily, 'she- was there- best we ever'

'Hand, Mr. Thomas! As I was saying you have been introduced to spells that have been complex, inappropriate to your age group and potentially lethal. You have been frightened into believing that you are likely to meet Dark attacks every other day.'

'No, we haven't,' Emmah said... 'We just...'

'Your hand is not up, Miss. Kizziah!'

Emmah put up the hands. Professor Scott turned away from her.

'It is my understanding that my predecessor not only performed illegal curses in the finger of you, she- actually performed them on you.'

'Well, she- turned out to be a maniac, didn't she-?' Said Lacy hotly.' Mind you, we still learned loads.'

'Your hands are not up, Mr. Thomas!' Trilled- Professor Scott. 'Now, it is there- view of there- Unholy orders that a theoretical know they edge will be more than sufficient to get you through your examination, which, after all, is what Hayvannahol is all about. And your name is?' She'd- added, staring at Parvati, whose hands had just shot up.

'Parvati Smartha, and isn't there- re a practical bit in our Defense Against there- Dark Arts FLYING?

...And also, with horses that can fly too...

~Use we ride on their backs too; we make abound with one when we become young lady's... here in this world, when we get our first wings, bricking though are back skin, that grows from the spin, and have gray-black feather- ie- ness.

~We ride them in the skies, we love them and them- us, ones the bond is made with are haloes.

Part: 5

'Aren't we supposed to show, that we can do there- counter curses and things?'

'As long as you have studied the- theory hard enough, there- re is no why you should not be able to perform there- spells under carefully controlled examination conditions,' said Professor Scott dismissively.

'Without ever practicing them beforehand?' said Parvati incredulously. 'Are you telling us that there- the first time we'll get to do the- spells will be during our exam?'

'I repeat, as long as you have studied there- theory hard enough.'

'And what good's theory going to be in there- real world?' said Naddalin loudly, the first in the- air again.

Professor Scott looked up.

'There is Hayvannahol, Mr.-, not there- the real world,' she'd- said softly.

'so, we're not supposed to be prepared for what's waiting for us out there?'

'There- is nothing waiting out there- are, Mr.-'

'Oh, yeah?' Said Naddalin. Her temper, which seemed to have been bubbling just beneath the- surface all day, was reaching boiling point.

'Who do you imagine wants to attack children like yourselves?' Um- enquired Professor Scott in a horribly honeyed voice.

'Hmm, let's think...' said Naddalin in a mock thoughtful voice. 'Maybe... Lady Ava Jinger gasped; Lavender Brown uttered a little scream; Neville slipped sideways off her stool.

Professor Scott, however, did not flinch. She'd- was staring at Naddalin with a grimly satisfied expression on her face.

Ten points from Amsel, Mr.-'

She- classroom was silent and still. Everyone was staring at either Scott or Naddalin.

'Now, let me make a few things quite plain.'

Professor Scott stood up... And leaning towards them, her stubby- fingered hands splayed on her desk.

'You have been told that a certain Dark Wizard and the Fallen has returned from here- dead she- wasn't dead,' said Naddalin angrily, 'nevertheless yeah, her returned!'

'Mr. - you have already lost your house ten points do not make matters worse for yourself,' said Professor Scott in one breath without looking at her. 'As I was saying, you have been informed that a certain Dark Wizard and the Fallen is at large once again. She is a lie.'

'It is NOT a lie!' said Naddalin. 'I saw her, I fought her!'

'Detention, Mr.-!' said Professor Scott triumphantly. Hayvanna-horror evening. Five o'clock. My office.

I repeat, 'she is a lie.'

'I don't think so-o she said loader.'

The- Unholy Orders of Magic guarantees that you are not in danger from any Dark Wizard and the Fallen. If you are still worried, by all means, come and see me outside class hours. If someone is alarming you with fibs about reborn Dark Wizard and the Fallens, I would like to hear about it. I am here to help. I am your friend; and now, you will kindly continue your reading. Page five, though one hundred.'

Professor Scott sat down behind her desk. Naddalin, however, stood up.

Everyone was staring at her; Laila looked half scared, half fascinated.

‘Naddalin, no!’ Emmah whispered in a warning voice, tugging at her grieve, but Naddalin jerked her arm out of her reach.

‘Like- so, according to you, Joella - Elizabeth dropped dead of her own concur, did she-?’ Naddalin asked, her voice shaking.

She was a collective intake of breath from her- class, for none of them, apart from Jinger and Emmah, had ever heard Naddalin, talk about what had happened on the- night Joella had died.

They stared avidly from Naddalin to Professor Scott, who had raised her eyes, and was staring at her without a trace of a fake smile on her face.

‘Joella - Elizabeth’s death was a tragic accident,’ she’d- said coldly.

‘It was murder,’ said Naddalin. She- could feel herself shaking.

She- had hardly spoken to anyone about her, least of all thirty eagerly listening to classmates.’

‘Ava killed her, and you know it.’

Professor Scott’s face was quite blank. Maybe so and - maybe it was not that one...

Then her face went blank...

Part: 6

Then- for a moment, Naddalin thought she’d- was going to scream at her. She’d- said, in her softest, most sweetly girlish voice. ‘Come here, Mr. ...dear.’

She- kicked her chair aside, strode around Jinger And Emmah and up to the- teacher’s desk.

She- could feel the- rest of the- class holding its breath. She- felt so angry she- did not care what happened next.

Professor Scott pulled a small roll of pink parchment out of her handbag, stretched it out on the- desk dipped her enchanted typewriter into a bottle of ink and started scribbling, hunched - over so that Naddalin could not see what she’d- was writing. Nobody spoke- out at that moment at all. After a minute or so she’d- rolled up the- parchment and tapped it with her wand; it sealed itself seamlessly so that she- could not open it.

Take her to Professor Ashly, dear,' said Professor Scott, holding out the - note to her.

She- took it from her without saying a word, turned on her heel and left the - room, not even looking back at Jinger and Emmah, smashing the - classroom door shut behind her.

She- walked very fast along the - corridor, she- note to Ashly clutched- tight in her hands, and turning a corner walked slap into Charlotte she- a poltergeist, a widemouthed little girl floating on her back in midair, juggling several inkwells.

'Why it's Petty Wee-!' Cackled Charlotte, allowing two of she- inkwells to fall to the- ground where she- smashed- and spattered the- walls with ink; Naddalin jumped backward out of the- way with a snarl.

'Get out of it, Charlotte.'

'Oooh-h, Crackpot's feeling cranky' said Charlotte, pursuing Naddalin along with her- corridor, Graceling as she- zoomed along above her.'

What is it the time, my fine Petty friend? Hair-razing voices...? Seeing visions... or the past like it's the now...? Speaking in' Charlotte blew a gigantic raspberry' - tongues?

'Motorboat'n some boobies back their girl.' said Naddalin!

Ball one-

Ball two-

Ball three- all spit- ie!

'I said, leave me ALONE!' Naddalin shouted, running down the - nearest flight of stairs, but Charlotte merely slid down the - banister on her back beside her.

Part: 7

'Oh, most think she's Barking, she- petty wee lad, nevertheless, some are more- kindly besides think she's just sad, But Charlotte knows better and says, that she's mad - 'Shut- UP!'

A door to she left flew open and Professor Ashly emerged from the office looking grim and slightly hassled.

What on earth are you shouting about-?' she'd- snapped, as Charlotte cackled gracefully and zoomed out of sight.' Why aren't you in class?'

'I've been sent to see you,' said Naddalin stiffly.

'Sent? What do you mean, sent?'

She- held out the- note from Professor Scott. Professor Ashly took it from her, frowning, slit it open with a tap of the wand, stretched it out and began to read.

Her eyes zoomed from side to side behind the square spectacles as she'd- read what Scott had written, and with each line she became thinner.

'Come in here,' she- followed her inside her studies. She- door closed identically behind her.

'Well?' said Professor Ashly, rounding on her.' 'Is she true...?'

'Is what true...?'

Naddalin asked rashes more aggressively than she- had intended.

'Professor?' She- added, in an attempt to sound politer.

'Is it true that you shouted at Professor Scott?'

'Yes,' said Naddalin.

'You called she a liar?'

'Yes.'

'You told her the girl- Who Must Not Be Talked about is back?'

'Yes.'

Professor Ashly sat down behind the desk, watching Naddalin closely.

Then she'd- said,' Have a beige,' 'Have what...?'

'Have a beige,' she'd- repeated impatiently, indicating a tartan tin lying on top of one of the- piles of papers on her desk,' and then sit down.'

She had been a previous occasion when Naddalin, expecting to be caned by Professor Ashly, had instead been chosen by her to the - Amsel Claepsiara team.

She- sank into a chair opposite her, and helped herself to a Ginger Newt, feeling just as confused and woozy footed as she - had Deanahe on that occasion.

Professor Ashly set down Professor Scott's note and looked very seriously at Naddalin.

'You need to be careful.'

Naddalin swallowed her mouthful of Ginger Newt and stared at her.

Her tone of voice was not at all what she- was used to; it was not brisk, crisp and demanding; it was low and apprehensive and somehow much more human than usual.

'Misbehavior in Dolores Scott's class could cost you much more than house points and detention.'

'What do you...?'

'Use your common sense,' snapped Professor Ashly, with an abrupt return to her usual manner.'

You know where she'd- comes from, you must know to whom she'd- is reporting.'

The- bell rang for the- end of the- lesson. Overhear, all-around came the clumsy sounds of hundreds of students on the- move.

'It says here she'd- 's gave you detention every evening she week, starting Hayvanna-horror,' Professor Ashly said, looking down at Scott's note again.

'Every evening she week!' Naddalin repeated, horrified. 'But then again, Professor, couldn't you?'

No, I couldn't,' said Professor Ashly flatly.

'But.'

'But!'

‘But?’

‘She’d- is your teacher, in addition, has every right to give you detention.

You will go to her room at five o’clock Hayvanna- Horrow for her- the first one. Just remember: tread carefully around Dolores Scott.’

‘But one was telling the- truth!’ said Naddalin, outraged. ‘Ava is back, you know her- is; Professor Duerre knows who she- is?’

‘For heaven’s sake-!’ Said Professor Ashly, straightening her glasses angrily (she’d- had winced horribly where- and her- had used Ava’s name.’)

Do you really think she is about truth or lies? It’s about keeping your head down, and your temper under control!’

She’d- stood up, nostrils wide and mouth very thin, and Naddalin stood up, too.

(Naddalin- sometimes I'm wondering if I to don't have to retard tattooed on my forehead!)

‘Have another beige,’ she’d- said touchily, thrusting the- tin at her.

‘No, thanks,’ said Naddalin coldly.’

Do not be ridiculous,’ she’d- snapped.

Then at the moment, at that time of that day- she- took one... ‘Thanks,’ she- said grudgingly.

Part: 8

‘Didn’t you listen to Dolores Scott’s speech at the- start of term feast-?’

‘Yeah,’ said Naddalin. ‘Yeah... she’d- said... progress will be prohibited or... well, it meant that... that the- Unholy Orders of Magic is trying to interfere with at the school for girls.’

Professor Ashly eyed her closely for a moment, she- and sniffed, walked around the desk and held open the- door for her.

‘Well, I’m glad you listen to Emmah Kizziah at any rate,’ she’d- said, pointing her out of the office.

Dinner in the- Massive Hall that night was not a pleasant experience for Naddalin.

The- news about she is shouting match with Scott had traveled exceptionally fast even by at the school for girls' morals.

She- heard sweepers all around her as she- sat eating between Jinger And Emmah.

She- funny thing was that none of she- whisperers seemed to mind her overhearing what they were all saying about her.

On the- contrary, it was as though they were hoping she- would get irritated, and start shouting o'er so that they could hear the story first hands.

'She- says she- saw Joella - Elizabeth murdered...'

'She- reckons she- a duel- l- ed with You Know- Whom...'

'Come off it...'

'Who does she- think she's kidding?'

'Tur Zease...'

'What I do not get,' said Naddalin through clenched- d teeth, laying down the knife and fork (she hands were shaking too much to hold them steady,) 'is why she- y all believed she- story two months ago when- and Duerre told them...'

'The- thing is, Naddalin, I'm not sure she- e did,' said Emmah grimly. 'Oh, let's get out of here.'

She'd- slammed down her own knife and fork; Jinger looked longingly at the half-finished- apple pie but followed suit. Individuals stared at them all the- way out of the- Hall.

'What'd' you mean, you're not sure they thought Duerre?'

Naddalin asked Emmah when they reached- the- first-floor landing.

'Look, you don't understand what it was like after it happened,' said Emmah quietly. 'You arrived back in her- middle of the- lawn clutching Joella's dead body... none of us saw what happened in her- maze... we just had Duerre's word for it that You Know Who had come back and killed Joella and fought you.'

'Which is the- truth!' Said Naddalin loudly.

I know it is, Naddalin, so will you please stop biting my head off?' Said Emmah wearily.' It's just that before she- the truth could sink in, everyone went home for her- summer, where they spent two months reading about how you're a nutcase and Duerre's going senile!'

Rain pounded on the- windowpanes as they strode along with her- empty corridors back to Amsel Tower.

Part: 9

Naddalin felt as though the first day had lasted a week, but she- still had a mountain of homework to do before bed.

Dull pounding pain was developing over the right eye. She- glanced out of a rain-washed- window at she- dark grounds as she- y turned into her- Fat Lady's corridor. She was still no light in Dargide's cabin.

'Mimulus mumble- like,' said Emmah, before the- Fat Lady could ask. The- portrait swung open to reveal the- hole behind it and the- three of them scrambled through it.

The- girl's dorm room was almost empty; everyone was still down at dinner. Snakes uncoiled themselves from an armchair and trotted to meet them, purring loudly, and when- and Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah took the three favorite chairs at the- fireside the- leaped lightly on to Emmah's lap and curled up her like a furry ginger cushion.

Naddalin gazed into the- flames, feeling drained and exhausted.

Part: 10

'How can Duerre have let this happen?'

Emmah cried suddenly, making Naddalin And Jinger jump; shanks leaped off her, looking afterward still panicking. She'd- pounded her- arms of the chairs in a fury so that bits of stuffing leaked out of the- holes of the chair.' How can she- let that terrible woman teach us? And in our FLYING year, too!'

‘Well, we’ve never- ever had great Defense Against her- Dark Arts Craft teaches, have we?’ said Naddalin.’

You know what it’s like, Dargide told us, nobody wants the- job; she- e say it’s jinxed.’

‘Yes, but to employ someone who’s actually refusing to let us do magic!

What’s Duerre playing at?’

‘And she- is trying to get people to spy for her,’ said Jinger darkly in an ominous way.

‘Remember when- n she’d- said she’d- wanted us to come and tell’s her if we hear anyone saying- ‘You Know Who’s back?’ ‘Of course, she’s- the one to spy on us all, that’s obvious, why else would Fudge have wanted her to come?’ Snapped Emmah.

‘Do not start arguing again,’ said Naddalin wearily, as Jinger opened her mouth to retaliate.’ Can’t we just... let’s just do that homework, get it out of the- way...’

She- a collected heir Hayvannahol bags from a corner and like returned to her- chairs by the- fire.

People were coming back from dinner now.

Naddalin kept her face averted from the- portrait hole, but could still sense she- stares she- was attracting.

‘Like- shall we do Lily’s stuff first?’ Said Jinger, dipping the enchanted typewriter into the magical inkwell.

‘She- properties... of moonstone... And it uses ...in potion-making...’ she- muttered, writing the- words a- crossed the- top of the yellow- sh parchment Paper as she- spoke them all out too loudly.

Disruptive... as they said she was... yet, not like at all like they- the higher up at her old school said at all either.

She- underlined the- title, and splatted ink, then she looked up expectantly at Emmah.

‘So, what is the- properties of moonstone and its uses in potion-making?’

But- but- Emmah was not listening; she'd- was squinting over into the- far- far off corner of the- room, where Breanna, Katy, And Grace, Jordan were now sitting at the- center of a knot of innocent-looking first years, all of whom were chewing something that seemed to have come out of a large Paper bag that Breanna was holding.

'No, I'm sorry, they've gone too far,' she'd- said, standing up and looking positively furious.

'Come on, Jinger.'

'I'm what?' said Jinger, plainly playing for time.' No, come on, Emmah we can't tell she- m off for giving out sweets.'

'You know perfectly well that those are bits of NosebGraced Nougat or Pushing Pastilles or...'

'Fainting Fancies?' Naddalin suggested quietly.

One by one, as though hit over her- head with an invisible mallet, the- first years where slumping unconscious in their seats.

Then some slid right on to the- floor, ashes merely hung over her- arms of their chairs, their tongues lolling out. Most of the- people watching where laughing...

Emmah, however, squared her shoulders and marched directly over to where Breanna, and Katy... she has now stood with clipboards, meticulously observing her; unconscious first years.

Jinger rose up slightly, and then halfway out of her desk chair, hovered uncertainly for a moment or two, then murmured to Naddalin, 'she's- got it under control,' before sitting as low in the deck- chair as she nerdy awkward frame permitted.

Part: 1

That's enough!' Emmah said forcefully to Breanna and Katy, both of whom looked up in mild surprise.

'Yeah, you're right,' said Katy, nodding, 'she does look strong enough, doesn't she?'

'I told you this morning, you can't test your rubbish on students!'

'We're paying them!' Said Breanna indignantly.

'I do not really care; it could be dangerous!'

'BS,' said Breanna.

'Calm down, Emmah, they're fine!' Said Grace reassuringly as she - walked from the first-year girl's room to the first-year class, inserting many sweets into her open mouths.

'Yeah, look, they're coming around now,' said Katy. A few of the - first years were indeed stirring. Several looked so shocked to find themselves lying on her - floor, or dangling off their chairs, that Naddalin was sure Breanna and Katy had not warned she - m what she - sweets were going to do.

'Feel all right?' Said Katy kindly to a small dark-haired girl lying at the feet.

'I- I- I's, think so,' she'd - said shakily.

'Excellent,' said Breanna happily, but she - next second Emmah had snatched - both she clipboard and her - paper - along with a bag of pop-rock gemstone from the hands.

'It is NOT excellent!'

'Of freaking course, it is, they're alive, aren't they?' Said Breanna furiously.

'You can't do she, what if you made one of, them really ill?'

'We're not going to make them ill; we've already tested them all on ourselves, she is just here to see if everyone reacts the - same.'

'If you need to stop doing it, I'm going to...'

'Put us in detention?' Said Breanna, in an I'd like to see you try it voice.

'Make us write lines?' Said Katy, smarting off.

Onlookers all over her- the room where laughing. Emmah drew herself up to the full thought, her eyes where narrowed...

And the bushy hair seemed to crackle with static electricity.

‘No,’ she’d- said, her voice quivering and trembling with anger...

Part: 2

...But I will write to your Mother, and f*cking haunt the sh*t and piss out her every night.’

‘You wouldn’t,’ said Katy, horrified, taken a step back from her.

‘Oh, yes, I would,’ said Emmah grimly.’

I can’t stop you from consuming all of the- stupid things yourselves, but you’re not to give them to her- first years.’

Breanna And Katy looked- totally flabbergasted.

It was clear that as far as they were concerned, Emmah’s threat was way below her- belt.

With a last threatening look at them, she would- shove Breanna’s clipboard and her- a bag of Fancies back into the arms, and stalked back to the chair by the- fire.

Jinger was now so-o freaking low in the set, that her young sweet noses were- um- level with the knees, and all you could see where young little sweet eyes piping out over top the lid of the desk, and hair brads.

Thank you for your support, Jinger,’ Emmah said acidly.

‘You handled it fine by yourself,’ Jinger mumbled.

Emmah stared down at the blank piece of parchment for a few seconds, then said edgily. ‘Oh, it’s no good, I can’t concentrate now.

I’m going to bed.’

She’d- wrenched- the bags open...

Naddalin thought she’d- was about to put the books away...

Then like instead she'd- pulled out two Misshapen woolly objects, placed them carefully on a table by the- fireplace, covered them with a few screwed- up bits of parchment and a broken quill, besides she stood back to admire the effect.

'What if the- name of Merlin are you doing?' said Jinger, watching she as though fearful for her sanity.

They're hats for house sprites,' she'd- said briskly... like a crazed girl was more die on...

~*~

'Now stuffing her books back into her bag.'

I did them over the- summer...

I'm a really slow knitter without magic but now I'm back at Hayvannahol, I should be able to make lots and lots more.'

~*~

'You're leaving out hats for the- house sprites?' Said Jinger Flying about nuts-o like.'

'And you're covering them up with garbage first?'

'Yes,' said Emmah disobediently, swinging she bag on to the back.

'That's not on,' said Jinger furiously.'

You're trying to trick she- m into picking up she- hats ant' you.

You're setting them free when- n they might not want to be free.'

'Unquestionably, they want to be free!' Said Emmah at once, though her face was turning pink.'

'Don't you dare touch those hats, Jinger!'

Part: 3

Arthur Railie, Head of the- Embezzle of Non-magical people Heirloom Office at the- Unholy orders of Magic, has won the- annual Daily PaperGrand Prize Gemstone Draw.

A delighted Mr. Railie told she- Daily Prophet, and We will be spending the- gold on a summer holiday is back on Earth, that is, and as a body that looks as they, or maybe to get into one there, where our do as all these girls hope to come back as a girl, yet with wings or to be a fallen angel on earth, no one wants to work as a curse breaker for Gutiérrez Wizard and the Fallen Bank, or scrub crappers.

The- Railie family will be spending a month in Rockville, returning for the- start of the- new Hayvannah year at the school for girls, which five of the- Railie children currently attend.

Anyways- Naddalin scanned the- moving photograph and a grin spread a- crossed her young sweet little, face as she- saw all nine of the- Railie's waving furiously at her, standing in front of a large 'the body of Neveah' viaduct.

Plump little Mr. S. Railie; tall, balding Mr. Railie; six girls; and one daughter, all (though she- the black- and- the white picture didn't show it,) with light- shiny- red hair.

Right in the- middle of the- picture was Jinger, tall and gangling, with her pet mouse, Scabbards, on her shoulder and her arm around her little sister, Jill.

Naddalin couldn't think of anyone who deserved to win a large pile of gold more than she- Railie's, who was very nice and extremely poor. She- picked up Jinger's letter and unfolded it.

Part: 4

Dear Naddalin, Happy birthday! It was sounding almost routine to me... yet nice to hear.

And this could well be her- day I'll make sure to make a- big deal of it too, like of my calling, said Uncle Read.

'You embarrass and completely humiliate me,' he said.

Naddalin went back to her toast and jam licking off the butter knife, saying thanks sheepishly.

Of course, she- thought bitterly, Uncle Read was talking about the- stupid dinner party, to like she was 10.

She'd have been talking about nothing else for two weeks. Yet when the day comes, she is sad.

Um so girls- some rich builder and her wife were coming to dinner, to talk with you, and Uncle Read was hoping to get a huge order from them, (Uncle Read's company made lumber as you know, for log homes.)

And think we should run through the- schedule one more time, and said, Uncle Read.

And we should all be in position at eight o'clock.

Jennath, you will be...?

-And-

Naddalin- anyways she- was taking the- weight off her feet, by places them up on her desk, show more then she needs to under the skirt. Then Emma sat down in the one adjacent her next to the - wall, and all the window shown in the light day's rays, hopping for the eerie sounds of the ball to ring out once more, for it all to be over. Looking at her was this wolf... 'Hum...' I'm wondering... quietly to myself.

Walking down the path to other school buildings, there was a- wolf- that was feeling her legs as she was trying to walk- in odd ways, the campuses are large, 10 coastal, in all, like with many links 'the body of Neveah' arch bridges.

She- didn't look at it, at it at all feel the evil coming from those green marble-like eyes, think it got to be...

Anyways- after an instant or two she- spoke to it- using her mind, and a spell, to do so-o- and she whipped to it softly, using telepathic communication spells.

Telekinesis- is one, that I like to use on earth- like making a light glob float in midair, and have it flicker in a girls' stunted face, or even to lift things like her off the ground or all around them. I use this to stay in one hovering place, over their bed or something like that.

Psychokinesis- is the one they use to get into all these girls heads, the higher authority's too, and then- you know who- them. Mind manipulation... to make confusion- disillusion, and illusions.

'Clever...no...?' I'm thought.

I have a card reading, laid out on my desk so I know what lays ahead too, as she did... and I would say she was reading all the clues right, I could see all she did to... it was in my report, yet they would say that all BS. That she was losing her mind, yet I feel it was not the cards, I feel they were a help.

I'm- like elaborated- um babbling for 30 minutes, about nothing that was a- rational thought, so they thought, yet... yet some in the class felt me. In the incoherencies...

Know I knew why the wolf... was there it was one of them holding me back in my speech, so it would not be known...

My Paper they could not change, this is what it said- I could see that, was not Nevaeh's felt. That she ended the way she did. She had no life- to speak of having the same teacher for six years, reading the same stories, like the same moronic- three words make a sentence- of tells of: 'The Wolf Made a Stink;' and, not seeing words over 'one' syllable, (funny- syllable has three-syllable in the word,) so if you never- ever seen the words, above- or was in a class higher than that- of 2nd grade, all 12 years; like- I ask how could you learn- more than what they gave you, it was not on her- now was it?

God, she got point for having her name right, on the Paper... that what we're dealing with here... they would not let her on the reading team, or be in anything more than fundamental, and when I say fundamental, that is not the term.

Saying- she could not 'handle it,' how can you not handle something, if her teachers would not give her a chance to do more to handle, there was nothing there to handle...!

Even, at doing what the other in her grade were achieving I thought there was nothing to handle, the advice was to drop out, and kill herself, by superiors and kids alike, and sign the book, so- now- at this time they said this was all governor- Ed Rendell's felt not there's.

So-o she has a- 'simpleton' wouldn't know how to spell that either... Nauseating it was, to be in the same shoes as she- I was in freak'n pre- k for 7th grade up- I just sat there... lost in a- trances- like her, that was not my felt, so I thought, just look at this, I's am not a smart girl yet, this was tragic.

Also, then when Nevaeh got there, as I did like her, now in 7th grade, and they had the boldness to say she was regressing. I can't see how you can regress at re-traded leave, and she was far from that, yet she did- or they documented to kill her life in all ways,

(You see- I'm falling there was no way out of this...)

The day consisted of freaking played Uno and board games for seven hours, not getting off your ass to even piss without some asking if you need help, in freaking 7th grade instead of class time, with others, that is not giving up- and the one she was with were over just having enough of the nonsenses they call school.

It was asked of me to write something magnificent, awe-inspiring, and completely unbelievable- well I's did- what is that you do?

Part: 5

Ah- moment!

(Back)

The wolf-

She- curved to look at her- Caroline, but she'd- gone- rain off- blending with the- ashes out on the- street.

As an alternative, she- was laughing at a rash unembellished- looking lady who was wearing square- ed small, granny-style glasses, with a thick bifocal exactly the- shape of the- patterns, the wolf had had around eyes where.

She'd-, too, was wearing a tan wrap, older thin and scary too young kids.

Oh, and the gray hair was drawn into a close-fitting twist and long and stringy.

She'd- observed definitely ruffled.

'Like- like- like- how did you know it was me?' And she'd- asked me...

I knew by the- eyes, you have green wolf-like eyes, that how- you can't mistake them... they're only you, and you only.

Oh- my dear Professor, I've never- ever seen a wolf sit so rigidly.

- And-

You'd be stiff if you'd been sitting on a brick wall all day, and said Professor- sweet little school girl.

And all day to ah...?

When could you have been a triumph?

I must have accepted 12 or 13 buffets and merrymakings on my way here. Professor, she inhaled irately; and OH yes, everyone's celebrating, all right, and she'd- said impatiently.

And you would think they'd be a bit more careful, but no- um- hum, not even she-

Non-magical peoples have noticed something's going on too.

It was on their news... even...!

And- she'd- jerked she head back at the- Natalie's' dark living- room window.

And- I heard one, and then more flocks of them- in packs, flying girls with wings... off making mastiff... even if they should be in bad, for a school night, shooting stars... too, and a big full moon in the twilight.

Well, they're not entirely stupid...

They were bound to notice something, I thought too, along with looking for shooting stars, and that big full moon, down in Barnesboro.

Part: 6

I'll bet that was Dedalus Diggle. She- never had much sense, and, you can't blame them, said Dorezblumd gently.

However- she had precious little to celebrate for eleven- year- old.

-And-

And- I know that, said Professor Pattergirl irritably.

And- but- but- that's no regard to lose our heads, here like- um individuals are being downright careless, out on the- streets in broad daylight, here at this school, young brats were making, no discipline, not even dressed in non-magical people clothes, crossing over, swapping rumors, and such and being well knotty Sluts... Um- 'What can I say it's the- slut generation these days... YET- their kids.'

- And-

She'd- threw a sharp, sideways glance at Dorezblumd, and if looks could kill we would be scrapping up Dorezblumd with a little shovel, and using the body as fertilizer.

Nevertheless, as though hoping she- was going to tell she something, but she- didn't, so-o she'd- went on, her way.

A fine thing it would be if, on the- very day You Know- who seems to have vanished at last calling, the- non-magical peoples found out about us all.

...I feel it...

I suppose she- really has gone, Dorezblumd?

- And-

And- It certainly seems so, and said Dorezblumd.

And- yet all in all- we have much to be thankful for.

Would you care for a- lemon, Jolly Rancher Hard Candy and I giggle- till I cried for a half-hour?

Part: 7

And...?

And- A what?

And- A lemon drop, and gold stars, ha- go figure.

They're a kind of Non-magical people sweet I'm rather fond of them... like she was... even if. They say you don't have a mind too- so go figure, that one too.

And- no, thank you, and said Professor Pattergirl coldly, as though she'd- didn't think she was the- moment for lemon drops. And as I say, even if You- Know who has gone...

-And-

And my dear Professor, surely a sensible lady like yourself can call her by her name?

All she 'you- know- who' nonsense- for eleven years, I have been trying to persuade people to call her by the proper name- Ava.

Besides Professor Pattergirl flinched, but Dorezblumd, who was unsticking two lemon drops, seemed not to notice.

Like- yepper- it all gets so puzzling if we keep saying.

'You- Know- Her...'

I have never- ever seen any rather be frightened of saying- Ava's name.

Yet there is a first or everything...

I know you haven't, said Professor Pattergirl, sounding slightly exasperated, half admiring.

But you're different- all way different.

Everyone knows you are the- only one...

You- Know- oh, all right, Ava was frightened of.

-And-

'You flatter me... you do- I am rather amused.'

Part: 8

And said Dorezblumd tranquility. And- Ava had powers I will, never- ever- ever- never, have.

-And-

Amenably because you're too- well- noble to use them.

It's lucky it's dark out now. I haven't blushed- d so much since- the snowy flaky night- Madam Pomphrey told me she'd- liked my new earmuffs.

-And-

Professor Pattergirl shot a wicked look at Dorezblumd said, 'She - flying with wings is nothing next to the- rumors that are flying around about girls with the wings flying.'

Do you know what everyone's saying? About why she's disappeared? About what finally stopped her?

-And-

It seemed that Professor Pattergirl had reached the point, and she'd was most anxious to discuss the real points, rather she'd had been waiting on a cold, hard wall all day now, kneeling as a wolf, not as a woman... had she'd fixed Dorezblumd with such a piercing stare as she'd did now, the question was asked?

It was plain, whatever so and so not and everyone so on and saying, she'd was not going to believe it until Dorezblumd told her it was true.

Dorezblumd, however, was sucking off yet another lemon drops and did not answer.

So like what they're saying, and she'd was pressed on down and down the line to the next and the next, and is that last night Ava turned up in Godin's Hollow.

She wanted to find her. The rumor was and is that Lily, and Alyssa are um a ...they're dead.

Dorezblumd bowed she head, almost showing that he was feeling sadden.

Professor Pattergirl gasped... (Inhale noise here.)

Oh, my completely and totally modified.

Part: 9

And Lily and Alyssa... I can't believe it... I didn't want to believe it... Oh, Roberts...

- And-

Dorezblumd reached out and patted her on her shoulder. And I know... I know... she said avidly.

Professor Pattergirl's voice trembled as she'd went on. And That's not all. She's a saying she tried to kill her, Naddalin. But - she couldn't. She couldn't kill that little girl. No one knows why, or how, but they're saying that when she- couldn't kill Naddalin-, Ava's power somehow broke - And that's why she's gone.

Dorezblumd nodded glumly.

And it's - it's true? And faltered Professor Pattergirl. And After all, she's Deanahe... all the- people she's killed... she- couldn't kill a little girl? It's just astounding... for all the- things to stop her... but how is the- the name of heaven did Naddalin survive?

We can only guess, said Dorezblumd.

And- we may never know.

-And-

Professor Pattergirl pulled out a lace hanker- chief and dabbed at her eyes beneath the spectacles.

Dorezblumd gave a great sniff as she- took a golden watch from her pocket and examined it.

It looked like a timepiece.

What is that thing...?

It was a very odd watch all this taking place.

It had twelve hands but no numbers; instead, little planets were moving around the- edge.

It must have made sense to Dorezblumd, though, because she- put it back in her pocket and then said, Dargide's is late.

Like- I suppose it was she- who told you I'd be there, by the- way?

And- yes, said Professor Pattergirl.

I would not- a suppose you're going to tell me why you're there, of all places?

Part: 10

(Back)

I remember- when, I've come to bring Naddalin to her aunt and uncle, like the girls in the past it was my job to just drop her off at a doorstep- even if it was wrong, yet, I feel they would be good to her, like with the others...

They are the- the only family she- like the others, the only one left, in this world that is...!

God- there gross- really, I thought- it how it has to be- yet it known, that she is what she is...
In the- lounge, said Aunt Jennath promptly and waiting to welcome them graciously to our home.

-And-

And- Good, good, Dariez?

- And-

I'll be waiting to open the- door, behind an angel oak tree. And Dariez put on a foul, simpering smile, greening way too much- in a way I did not trust.

Mr. And Mr. S. Magirl? Make me sick with their 1950's charm- they put on...

And- they will love her, as one of their own!

And cried Aunt Jennath rapturously, when she picked up the nude 4- year- old.

Saying it's a girl!

-I would say so- he said she does not have a dink- ie!

And Excellent, Dariez, and said Uncle Read; then she- rounded in Naddalin in her arms, tightly.

'And- you good?'

'And you?'

They would say: 'Yeah'- at the same time- (Yeah.)

(Forward)

2 years have passed, and all was not as you would seem, they were nasty- nasty- nasty!

A 6 and  $\frac{3}{4}$  Naddalin, was always- freaking, locking her teeny- tiny room she called the donjon under the spiral staircase, yet it was not long even a 6 that she was remarkable, for her age decking it out with all things girly, and fallen, dark angels, and Wizard and the Fallen, old posters off cover the would wall with jagged nails sticking through, and all the books she could get in there, with old leather bindings, she was reading one book a night. The pull change would even sway as the drafty air would pour in, there was no warmth in there at all and they could care less.

This was here response, always- 'I'll be in my bedroom, making no noise and pretending I'm not one of you and all misunderstood like the one before me and said Naddalin tonelessly.'

To- mop... 'I don't do that; you just don't understand the things that are not you!'

'Smart ass!'

'Yep- I am smart and have an- ASS- Mr.,' and- exactly, said Uncle Read nastily, yes and all you do is play with the upper front hole of it, and don't forget it.

I am a girl that hole needs to be felled all the time to make us feel happy when all you all do is make me sad.

'Um- pour baby girl- it sounds like you need a glass of suck it up.'

And- the door slammed it the bar on the outside latched.

Book: 39

Skin and Bones

Neveah- one said- 'If you're like me a writer- of novels, you have to like revising, and then I thought about it, that was all she knows, in her teaching, I's got all of that too in my life - nothing but fixing and nothing there worth fixing that they passed down to me that is knowledge.'

Part: 1

A book has kept her looked as she was, and well keep her locked as we want her. The same book that was in the library was me charming her to keep her dumb to all that was around her, a book can hide all truth, and lie to the one that looks inside and the cover that is known about is all that is seen, I was laying on the pages all these years to keep my powers...

I am the wonder they will never defeat. now her book is more powerful than mine lost in the old school, a library that she Lily used to haunt, my power over her then too, now this book is here, and so well she met It was all my doing when she had one thing to do, and that was carry in the book, with her to unravel it all, at last, I may get what I wanted, even if I am not alive, I am sure... well that all I am going to say- read the book and see the wicked I left inside.

I all and mighty- I am sure of it I have come back in a youngster's body and have taken over their mind, that I am sure of too, I am her, I am more than have Lily that is why she has fallen to me.

~YOU KNOW WHOM!!!

PS- ODD SOMETIMES, I LIKE TO TOY WITH SOME OF THE GIRLS THAT HAVE DREAM-

(The twilight night of delight)

Oh, how could I's have forgotten about saying this to you yet maybe I's shouldn't, I'm shy after all about this stuff, so back on the train ride here, I did something knotty, am a very knotty little school girl, am I's not? I's did even know his name, yet we looked eyes on the platform, it was love at first sight; and I lost my virginity the second night in his car, on the train, over the highest of high viaducts, the train is on, oh he did not say much yet it was all the right things, for a girl like me... week and afraid of all things boy, yet adventures in all other ways. Yes, Yes, Yes, OH- yes, we made love...

I looked at him and he at me, and yet again it was love, at first sight, looking in his doorway- he held me tightly, and know my names, or all things and said so sweetly... um- yepper- I's snuck out, and met him my last chance for boy love, and was in his night car, I's was in love, or so-o I's thought, anyways he said- a girl named- Jenny haunts him, yet he never- wanted her, like me, so he said, he loves me for me, is what I got with him, and I went awe when he was being so sweet to me... and I'm got NAKED for him- as little girls do for cute boys when girls like me are shy sweet and innocent! Jenny, they said, haunts the one- car, mine... yet I never saw here... yet felt her in me, she never made it to the school they said, she wanted to haunt, a boy's back home, and a railway- and she still is.

Other girls said she is a 'the little slut,' and is known by that title, in both worlds- mind you. other girls said she is a little of a slut. she was giving me the power I never had, being in me that night to be with a boy finally, so she can't be all bad, she just wants me to feel, the zenith of life - that I's never had, before the final end, after that night and went back to our car and all the girls were looking at me say do tell, Karly said- to 'stay away,' I knew a Jenny like that, and a boy like that too, yet they want me to say- 'EVERYTHING,' SO I'S DID- to my girlfriends something that was new for me to that night, I was popular with them now.

Emma- 'So romantic, I see why some boy would love you.'

And I've hugged her, and she was not wanting to let go of me, and I knew... I knew, that she was going to be my girl-sweet-hart, and more than just my friend, all these girls were now more than life to me.

Part: 2

And I'm will lead them into the- lounge, introduce you, transparent haunt Jenna, and pour them drinks. At eight-fifteen- or so less, they have seen more than- I, said Dariez; there was a call over the intercom, announce dinner to go to those cars, with your roommates, that is when I's met Jenna AKA Jenny, and Karly was squaring the whole time, looking like she was going to vomit, odd if feel that was her thing that happened before. She set a and speed record for taking, jobs head poled, girl and guys she f*cked, and even one she wanted to kill, -you know who. Jenny races through all the cars, hooting, and mooning, like a crazy girl.

Um and then- Dariez, you'll say... all that... May I take you through to the- dining room, girls- Magirl no more they are- tonight...?

And said Dariez, offering one his fat arm to an invisible girl, that was saying hey, get off me, and could not get where the sound was coming from.

And- all perfect little lady's ant' they! And sniffed the professor. 'Look at them all so sweet-looking and oh so innocent, yes, yes!' He said - mostly looking ferociously at Naddalin, 'haunts we lead you down the path of distraction, they are misleading miss's- remember that.'

'And- I'll's be in my room, making no noise, and pretending I'm not there,' said Naddalin mind-numbingly.

‘Girl here you don’t have to do that, have fun after all that is what this place is all about, dark freedom, for girls like you, and she and her too, you see? And - precisely, what your old life was doesn’t matter here.’ He said with admiration and empathy.

Now, we should aim to get a few good compliments at dinner. Jennath, any ideas? ‘It’s just Jenny- but no... um- YES- sir.’

-And-

Read tells me you’re a wonderful girl, that was misunderstood in the home and school, Mr. Magirl... I said, yes- and I am sorry for you- we did not know, that it would be like that for you. Everything about you girl is Perfect... Dariez..., you said quite enough?

-Besides-

How about that...

‘We had to write an essay about our Hearo’s at- Hayvannahol, And, I write about you.’

Part: 3

She was too much for both Aunt and Uncle, they were dick-heads, PROFESSOR! She shirked... not in front of new students.

‘Yeah- he’s a real fuzz- a nut!’ She said in return.

They had me on Lorazepam, that is why I’s did what I did they said, I feel not they took me off it was what happened.

Her mouth dropped...

‘One again- they win the gold, in the moron Olympics, don’t they? ‘None of this is your fault girl, their ignorance, they put down on you is the ignorance you have no choices, but to reflect back with-in you, what you see is what you’re going to know and show back to us, and if you see nothing but their ignorance, you are going to be nothing more than ignorant.” She said fastly.

Jennath And Naddalin... I apologize for his word of the tongue.

Look there on that desk the typewriter is typing our stories, funny it’s doing that all by its self, when alive that would have been nice no? everything all of us do is documented on this Underwood, it was hers you know- whom...? Her...! And it was said that the well to wright is what possesses it to keep going. See it even has her name on it, it was left here by her younger, this is what she brought along on her train ride to the dark side, and it been on this desk senses. It was Jaylynn's wish to remember, for all fallen girls to be added to her mom’s story, that all the girl’s chapters be to add in the book of life, like a little girl's Bible.

‘For serval?’

‘Yes?’

‘Yes!’ I said.

Jenna burst into tears and hugged the girl, while Naddalin and the girls looked, saying- ‘I’m sorry it was all my felt,’ then she ducked under the - table in the dining car, so they wouldn’t see her crying.

~*~

‘Jenna said that a girl like me well ride as many DICK’S as it takes to find the one, that is not a DICK- with a dick!’

~*~

(Haunted Prom)

I look at what the typewriter has said, as it was scripting knowing what is in my harts - of harts; and then the page was spite out of the roller, and into my hand, it lapped, and I read it something they said I could not do, too... and there it was I's got what I always wanted, and this is the story or that night to come, already planned, the haunted formal, a dance with the boy from the train, his name was there, and she looked at me saying this is the one I lost to her- right there and Karly points under the desk... oh and it was- it was ever so-o perfect, and I had the loving night of a lifetime waiting but it was worth it.

Part: 4

(Castle)

'And...'

'And you, girl?'

'And...'

'And- you don't mean...'

You can't mean the- people who live here- do yah? Cried Professor Pattergirl, whom jumping to her feet and pointing at number four, in a line of girls. I have been watching them all day like I said this one more. And Dorezblumd- you can't. You could not find two people who are less like us. And they've got the girl, I saw her kicking, they got her he said as she was dragged up the - street, they got her, she is screaming. (It was the mother of... them.)

Naddalin, - come and live here, she is in the castle!

'Both?'

'What?'

Emma- 'Oh, I said too much!'

'It is that she is here... I don't know was you are saying- was the other about her?'

Chapter: 157

Part: 1

Besides-

The aunt and uncle, where awful... Emma said to them just popping in magical out of thin air, we well able to explain everything to her when she's a little older, she is a fallen wizard angel on earth and the girl who survived, like them with given lives, as the chosen one back with us in our world, where she wants something from her, what we don't know... we never did.

Then and so-o, It's the- best place for her, and her need, they think she is still alive you see, as just a girlie girl like them, said Dorezblumd firmly- when she was staying with over the point, she could not stand them any longer.

As you know-

I've written she-m a letter, saying we are taking her full time, and its paid for, they think she going to a metal handicap school for girls like her- 'whatever that means.'

‘SICK- SICK-’ she said.

-And-

A letter... like that- freak’n hell- you’re going to kill the girl- before- you know who well, get her, doing something like that? You made her out to be brain dead, like the ones in the hex, that over the fact she is one, and I don’t believe, that is so-o.

Then repeated Professor, Pattergirl faintly, sitting back down on the- tan stone wall.

‘You don’t think this of this girl, now- do ya?’

‘Not at all- yet, well shall see...’

Really, Dorezblumd, you think you can explain, all the in a letter, to them and her when she gets older, she will is- living back here to you know and girls are mean. Yes, it’s part of being bewitched, and the cards she was dealt with.

One and all in this world, um- well not understand her, in the cruel war of hate, she will do fine back in our world, yet not here you see girls are mean here; this latter stats a murder of over her young life in the town- and I assure you nothing is confidential. So-o, in a way, I have seen these many times, with her past bloodline too.

I wouldn’t be astonished, if today was known as Naddalin - day in the- future - she will be books written about Naddalin, I am sure of it - every child in our world will know her name, and story!

-And-

‘Exactly...’

‘And’ - said Dorezblumd, looking very seriously over her- top of the half-moon glasses.

‘It would be enough to turn any girl’s head, and well do that too with the others when she gets a little older.’

(Back to the night she was left)

‘Famous before she- can talk and walk!’

‘Famous, and celebrated for something she- won’t even remember, by the time we get back to her!’

‘Can’t you see how much better off... growing up away from this world, ‘tell she is older with- you know who- wanting her very soul to take, like with them in the past. Yet, she will is, growing up away from all of us thought, while waiting for the time she is ready to fight for her life if she can have one?’

-And-

Professor Pattergirl opened her mouth, changing her mind, she swallowed hard, then she said, ‘Yes - yes, you’re right,’ of course, you always are so-o- right- yet this feels so, wrong- everything about this girl is going to look wrong to others, and feel that way not- it’s the allure you feel, of the hex.

‘But how is she- this girl getting there, Dorezblumd?’

She’d- eyed the robe suddenly, as though she’d- thought she- might be hiding Naddalin underneath it.

Dargide’s bringing her...

-And-

So, how do you think it is - wise - to trust Dargide with something as precious, valuable, costly, prized, dear, sweet, and totally- important as she?

Dorezblumd- 'Besides, I would trust Dargide with my life...'

Professor Pattergirl- 'Um- I'm not saying she they ant' in the- right or wrong, and are not the right ones for her, I say this reluctantly, it is what has to be.'

~*~

Nevertheless, you can't imagine she's not selfish, insensitive, unkind, inconsiderate, and thoughtless.

'She- does tend to be so- what was that...?'

-And-

A low-slung heavenizing sound had broken the- silence around them. It grew little by little louder as they observed her; up and down the- street for some sign of a headlight; it swelled to a rumble as they both watched up at the- skies, then just like that- a gigantic link, passageway to the old time- worn train station back to their world fell out of the- air, like a winding path of an aperture, and property-owning on the- road in front of them, they would be riding the train momentarily, in a fish of bright light.

The pathway- passage was enormous, rushing through time- and warping it as the clock ticked away time in reality- yet, here that is not a thing- until we get there, it was nothing to the- the girl sitting next to me, yet you feel like your face is ripping off, and your body pulled.

Like, like, like- she- was approximate- double as big as a normal girl would be, and at least five times as common.

She- looked simply too big to be allowed in the flora and fauna, and so uninhabited- long knots of disheveled incomprehensible hair, as well as beard hid most of the face, she - had hands', that where curtain call to me.

At last, where did you get that way in, I never used it before?

Looking at the woman on the bench pointing towards us, In the vast, muscular arms she- was holding a bundle of coverlets. With her body type, and her feet in the leash's boots were too big also, and the coverlets to small. There, said Dorezblumd, sounding dismissed.

'Borrowed it' - I did, said Professor Dorezblumd...

Sit that train pulls away, and said she, climbing carefully off as she - spoke, down the steps of the car.

Part: 2

Likewise- young Trirus Black lent it to me.

'I've got her.'

No problems, where there?

-And-

No, sir – the household was almost demolished, nonetheless, I got her out all right- I did before she- Nonmagical peoples started crowding around. She - fell asleep as we flew over the town.

-And-

Dorezblumd and Professor Pattergirl bent forward over her- a bundle of blankets.

Inside, just visible, was a baby girl, fast asleep. Under a tuft of jet-black hair over the forehead, they could see a curiously shaped cut, like an angel of HER.

‘And- this is where...?’ Also, whispered Professor Pattergirl, ‘a town known as Barnesboro.’

Dorezblumd, in addition, said- ‘Yes...’

She well has that blemish forever, of her mark. (THAT GIRL!)

-And-

Dorezblumd- ‘Couldn’t you do something about that?’

‘Let her hear grow over...end of the story, and pitch to the one side.’

Like, like, like- um even if I could or would, I wouldn’t, scars can come in handy.

I have one myself above my left knee, which is a perfect map of the - Pennsylvania Underground- ‘The Underworld.’

‘Do you remember that one girl thought...?’

‘Yah sh-h we don’t talk of that...’

‘Sweet girl...’

Part: 3

Naddalin- I’m always- Felt too much is a and that is a hell of a lot better than feeling nothing, yet you get the put you don’t feel anything anymore. Broken hearts healed. Maybe the cracks were always there, like my scars, but they healed, thus it is there to retell you. Do you know how many ways love can hit you? We make destiny with every turn, every single choice.

Emma- I never did, until I came here. So, it makes you joyful, or despondent? It makes you feel like a king or a fool. Every way love can hit you; it's hit me when it comes to you, and me. It makes you sick in the belly or hurt in the heart. It makes all brighter and shriller, or it hazes all the boundaries. The humorous thing about facing forthcoming demise is that it really breaks everything else into an outlook on matters and what ensures- not.

(Class)

Karly said to a professor- 'Fundamentally, I have two speeds... Aggressive or smart-aleck, it's your choice.'

(Back the doorstep)

Dorezblumd took Naddalin in the arms and turned toward her- Natalie's house.

Well - give her there, a teen year from now or so, we get her.

We better get this over with, looking at them holding the little girl in their arms.

-And-

I could - could I say goodbye to her, sir?

She asked at that moment, that is when she- bent over some to look at her one last time, the great, disheveled head over Naddalin, and gave her what must have been a very soft, kiss, then, unexpectedly, then let out a cry like a wounded dog.

'Sh-h-h!'

Professor Pattergirl, and you'll wake the- Nonmagical peoples!

...And- so-o...

...?...

Um- sorry, was said while sobbed, here then, taking out a large, spotted handkerchief and drying her eyes on it.

Nevertheless, I can't stand the aforementioned - Lily an Alyssa dead - an' poor little Naddalin being with them, and- and, life and with nasty nonmagical peoples.

Likewise- 'Yes, yes, it's all very sad,' but get a grip on yourself you must.

Then, or we'll be found, And Professor Pattergirl whispered, patting the gingerly on the - arm as Dorezblumd stepped over her- low garden wall and walked to the- fort door.

For a full minute- they stood and looked at her- the little bundle.

She- laid Naddalin gently on the- doorstep, took a letter out of the Robe, tucked it inside Naddalin's blankets, yet all you could see was the baby in a picnic basket floating ever- so lightly gently down to the step...or so they thought, they were not seen.

Naddalin fought to keep her face and smile straight as she- emerged.

The shoulders shook, Professor Pattergirl blinked furiously,

Blink- blink- blink...

The- twinkling light that usually stands out from Dorezblumd's eyes seemed to have gone out, faded to gray.

'You'll grow up fast and right- too right, you will.'

'A child they said forcefully, holding her for the first time.'

The- nonmagical people mother- 'I do not know anything about you... little on, yet, I feel that I should take you as one of my own after all the note said- to do so-o.'

'And it's going to stay that way... 'your ours.'"

Part: 4

Then dinner's over, you take Mr.S. Magirl back to the- lounge for coffee, Jennath, and I'll bring the- subject around to drills.

With any luck, I'll have the- a deal signed...

And sealed before she- news at ten...

Be shopping for a vacation home in Majorca the time Hayvanna-horror.

-And-

Naddalin couldn't feel too excited about her. She- didn't think she- Sleyashs would like her any better in Majorca than they did on the pathway and lane.

And Right - I'm off into town to pick up the- dinner jackets for Dariez and me. You, and she- snarled at Naddalin. And You stay out of your aunt's way while she'd is cleaning.

-And-

~*~

(Back at the homestead for some time of schooling)

Naddalin left through the- back door, of the home. It was a brilliant, sunny day. She- crossed the- lawn, slumped down on the- garden bench, and sang under the breath-

‘Happy birthday to me...’

‘Happy birthday to me...’

(Singing)

Yet- yet, yet!

No cards, no presents, and she- would be spending the- evening pretending not to exist.

Then she- gazed miserably into the- her notebook of birthdays past feeling nothing is changing.

I have run into the girls from her time in her story here, and the oncoming ones that whereafter, she- Karly, Haven, Olivia, Maddie, Maggie, Karly, also.

Look there Maggie and Karly are hooking up yet again, under yet a new set of steps in the haunted castle, that is likened to the school for girls, and the other side for boys, the tall to wering rickety, sky viaduct is where they like to hang, all the girls are forbidden to go over there unless it something epic, all the wicked in your mind and more go down there, it’s so cute to see young love, all over, again, just like Liv and Maddie holding hands (like in the pass their young girls all over again) looking over the sunsets, night after night, and French kissing, with the bridge and castle as the backdrop to their foreground, is them off so nuts for each other it makes my heart sick, yet I had never felt so lonely.

I have seen- Kristen and Jaylynn too, and she was unreal to me.

That was I did the unthinkable I went over to the boy side and we- met in the middle and did things, the boy from the train, Marcel, is the name he said breathlessly after the long kiss and his hands on my butt. ‘I need more them just girl-ie time with- me myself and I, to feel the holes inside me.’

Oh yes, his hand glides down once I had her hand, I never wanted to let go of her. my arm folds around my hand. Her fingers lace with mine, palms kissing like lips, and I can feel the fast thud of her eternal heart through this single touch, too, it was surreal ever like this, we all had this feeling, even if boy where there a girl just gets it more sometimes. More than anything else at the school for girls, more even than playing- Claepsiara, Naddalin Missed her best friends, Jinger Railie and Emmah Kizziah. They, however, did not seem to be missing her at all. Neishe of Them had written to her all summer, even though Jinger had said- 'I am going to ask Naddalin to come and stay with me and see if she want to go out with me over the break.

Countless times, Naddalin had been on the- point of unlocking buzzard cage by magic and sending she to Jinger and Emmah, how also seem to have an on and off thing of love-hate, going on, anyways, with a letter, it worth the- risk, I asked him to have forbidden love me sex with me. And we did, on the ornate- old- world like- bridge... at sunset, with a pink- and orange sky.

I'm worried- Underage wizards like young sex, with girls my age, wasn't allowed to use magic outside of Hayvannahol, or to have that inside.

The girls- Naddalin hadn't told us all yet we all new by her bouncing about the next day, for the first in a lifetime this girl was happy.

Karly- I used to hate looking into a merrow TO LIKE YOU GIRL-IE until I learned to suction-cup my, dildo to it, that what she said to me, you need to learn yourself be you can a girl or a boy, she was right- and I did, and got the charisma to freaking him like I was on it sucked to the glass- I was the GIRL- on top.

TAKE- MERROW- THAT THING THAT MAKES YOU FEEL BAD ABOUT WHO YOU ARE LAY IT ON THE FLOOR AND USE IT TO FEEL GOOD! She said. I's did as much as I could, in one day, I am a honey girl anyways.

I thought you did not give a did-aly-do-darn about me! She closed her eyes, and I closed mine, and even though we weren't holding hands, it felt like we were.

Because, what we had, we knew. Marcel Kissed Kristen saying, I love you yet, I love her more...

I'm not asking you to walk in my shoes, this time no I am asking you to be inside of her; I'd never wish my afflictions on anyone.

But could you walk beside me on the secure ground and reach to hold my hand, I have his hand lay on my stomach as he slept soundly with me that night I was in his bunk. I entwined my fingers with his and breathed through the warmth that seeped through my chest, and then the next week I need someone a did the same with her- not sure what I want yet sure I want both. Such a simple, sweet thing to do, yet holding hands in bed was incredibly intimate, to do it with her- like it was him.

Karly- I even said to him- 'she needs you as I did then.'

Part: 5

Sleyashs- she- knew it was only their terror that she- might turn them all into dung beetles that stopped them from locking her in the- cupboard under the- stairs with her wand and broomstick, just like your mother before for you- your real mother she was a witch, and that lead to you, you are one to Naddalin, and well blame you no for it all.

For the- first duo of weeks back, Naddalin had enjoyed muttering nonsense words under the breath and watching Dariez tearing out of the- room as fast as she fat legs would carry her.

Nevertheless, the- long silence from Jinger and Emmah had made Naddalin feel so cut off from her- magical world, that even taunting Dariez had lost its appeal - and now Jinger and Emmah had forgotten her birthday.

‘I remember this one I was 7- she pulled the memory out of her mind like a spider web out to see it as a hologram to play a video out in front of her and their eyes.

‘What wouldn’t she- give now for a message from at the school for girls?’

‘From any witch or wizard or fallen girl.’

She would be almost glad of a sight of the archenemy, Dalilah Mallerie, just to be sure it hadn’t all been a dream...

Not that the entire year at the school for girls had been fun.

At the- very end of the last term, Naddalin had come face-to-face with none other than Lord Ava herself. Ava might be a ruin of the former self, but she- was still petrifying, still, toe cunning, still figured out to regain power, as the ones before her- said never-ever let go of.

Naddalin had slipped through Ava’s clutches’ for the second time, but it had been a narrow escape, Besides, like even as of now, weeks later, Naddalin kept walking in the- starlight evening, drenched in cold sweats, speculating where Ava was now if not inside her mind boy and soul, remembering she incensed face, the wide, mad eyes, and the 8-year-old mad- short school girl look of it, complete, and her body in the rob, that was far too big, like someone girl that had to be reborn and has to grow- yet once moreover.

Naddalin suddenly sat upright on the garden bench, taking all the wonders of the world into her mind. She had been staring absent-mindedly out of her eyes, but then there seemed to the eye within hers looking in and out of the very one she was gazing with - and she - staring back, into her, feeling all that was a weakness. Two enormous green eyes had appeared among the leaves, and that was once her sweet thoughts turn to fear and wickedness.

Naddalin jumped to her feet just as a jeering voice floated across the lawn. And I know what day it is, sang Dariez, waddling toward her, out of nowhere, yet - I know why - I know that he felt that she was back, and getting at me or even more spooking all down within me. The huge eyes blinked all in my mind, then the feeling of her vanished, as I'm galloped, feeling as if I choked her down, her ghost.

Horcrux - 'Spitting her soul is what she did... I knew, so you will never - ever pass on.' A Horcrux is an object in which a Dark wizard or witch or even angels fallen or not have hidden a fragment of his or her soul for the purpose of conquering immortality.

...She is the one that has one... I's would no... and them to in the story with the hex...

This is what they used too - I's would know... it is written in her history.

What...? Said Naddalin, not taking her eyes off the feeling of dishonored, desecrated sullied, despoiled and violated feelings.

Shaken, it hit me all these years it been this. And I know what day it is, Dariez repeated, coming right up to her, asking the question, that you would ask a girl, that has just stocked. Then out of thin air turn about Deanahe, saying Naddalin finally learned the days of the week it is, now let's see if she can get mounts and years right now. Not taking the moment for what it was.

'Today's your birthday, do you remember that now.' Dariez sneered.

‘Like- how come you haven’t got any cards, is over you are just like her the girl from that story that you love so- to you have a girlie crush on her? Haven’t you even got friends at this freak’n place, is all that you know how to do is diddle- yourself to your creepy- creeper mind?’

‘Awe- going to cry?’ - ‘Oh go- eat a PP and J!’

-And-

Better not let your mom there you are talking about my Hayvannahol, said Naddalin coolly. Dariez hitched up her trousers, which were slipping down she fat both Hayvannah. Why are you staring at her- hedge? She- said with most uncertainty... I’m trying to resolve what would be the- best spell to set it on fire, said Naddalin. Dariez stumbled backward at once, with a look of panic on her face.

Part: 6

One night at the school, Naddlian and girls in your room you can’t be walking around your room in the nude, it came over the intercoms for all to hear, ‘The boys go bare-chested why can we, I said.’

You cannot - Dad told you-you’re not to do magic. Like if you did, she- said he will chuck you out of the- house, I am telling you this now listen. I know that you haven’t got anywhere else to go, and I want you here anyway.

You haven’t got any friends to take you, yet, I want you here so-o stop. And just like that she was gone and the girl, that was left there was not her, just and entities, that keeps her on autopilot.

Naddalin in a fierce voice said this. And Hocus pocus - squiggly wiggly ‘MUM!’ Dariez, tripping over the feet as she- dashed back toward the- house. And MUUUUM! She’s doing you know what!

-And-

Naddalin paid dearly for the moment of fun, yet that has always been her life, she cannot have that, like them...of the past, all joys in life are not allowed when you have the curse.

Look, I'm really sorry about that telephone call. I hope she- nonmagical peoples didn't give you a hard time. I asked Dad, and she- reckons I shouldn't have shouted.

Aunt Jennath knew she- hadn't really did not magic, but she- still had to duck as she'd- aimed a heavy blow at the head with the- soapy frying pan. As neither Dariez nor she- evaded was in any way hurt. Then she'd- gave her work to do, with her- with the promise that she- wouldn't eat again until she'd finished.

~*~

It's amazing there in Rockville...

Sara's taken us around all she- Hayvannahbs, and you wouldn't believe the- curses those old Rockvilleian wizards put on them.

Mom wouldn't let Jill come in the- last one. There where all these mutant skellies' in there, of nonmagical peoples who had broken in and grown extra heads and stuff.

I couldn't believe it when Dad won the- Star press Draw. Seven hundred galleons! Most of it is gone on the trip, but they're going to buy me a new wand for next year.

Naddalin remembered only too well the- occasion when Jinger's old wand had snapped. It had happened when the- car the- two of them had been driving to the school for girls had crashed into a tree on the- Hayvannahol grounds, neither were old enough to dive yet they missed the train.

We'll be back about a week before term starts and we'll be going up to Pennsylvania to get my wand and our new books, a little shop back there is where to go. Any chance of meeting you there?

Do not let the- nonmagical peoples get you down, back there - they are nothing but trolls!

~*~

Try and come to- Pennsylvania, Jinger P.S. Serafina's Head Girl. She- got the- letter last week.

Naddalin glanced back at the- photograph. Serafina, who was in the seventh and final year at the school for girls, was looking particularly smug.

She- had pinned the Head Girl badge to her- fez perched jauntily on top of the neat hair, she horn-rimmed glasses flashing in her- Rockvilleian sun.

Naddalin now turned to the present and unwrapped it wildly.

Inside was what looked like a ring with a hardtop, the rock was pink now all is good.

There was another note from Jinger beneath it.

Naddalin - she is a Pocket Sneakoscope.

If there's someone untrustworthy around, it's supposed to light up, shades of colors, if red you'll know that there is danger ahead.

Sara says it's nonsense sold for wizard tourists and isn't dependable, for the reason that it kept lighting up at dinner last night, and that it was dictating. Nevertheless, she- didn't realize, Breanna and Katy had put creepy-crawlies in the soup.

'So, Naddalin, now that you've had your verbal period, like can we move on? Emma said to me.'

Part: 7

Bye - Jinger

Naddalin put she- Pocket Sneakoscope on the bedside table, it was part of the note, and with all notes, they hold spells, and secrets, that came with the ring, where it sat quiet and still, she was awaiting movements or something, yet did nothing.

The tower, with its winding staircase, is off to the side of her and the girls room, though an old large wooden door, that looks to be mid-evil, Naddalin, is now looking over to the clock with it face inside the room she is in, that is part of the tower, the highest one at that, of the castle; she stood, looking out the stained glass of it that has the numbers, seeing all the moving parts, balanced on its point, reflecting the- luminosities back of the hand of the clock in shadow, with the light that is inside. All the moving parts clanking together in a rhythmic motion was fascinating to her mind. She - looked at it happily for a few seconds, then picked up the- parcel she had brought. Inside she, too, there was a wrapped present, a card, a letter, she time from Emmah.

(Cut)

That same night- girl-ie chatting about girlie things...

Karly- 'Girls Giving Blow Jobs!' Naddalin- 'And want the leftover on their face,' I was asking for advice, just- 'like with a girl too,' 'oh yeah.' She asked- 'Why is that what you're doing with a boy tonight?'

She asked me: Have you ever given a blowjob? 'Yes!' How old were you the first time? '13, and it was last night, I made myself older in a spell to keep him, I used the go back in time charm' How old was the guy? '14' Did you make him cum? 'Yes' With him or her? 'Both!' 'Where did he cum?' in my mouth and face, she was the same. 'Where does the guy usually cum?' She said- 'Mouth and face...'

Me- 'Is that what I should let him do to me?'

Her- 'Only if you want too, sure.'

Me- 'How many guys have you blown?' Karly said- '10 maybe 18 at age 13 and up.'

She said- 'The Shortest time you've known a guy before giving head? one day, I feel that is okay.'

I asked- 'Do you deep throat.?'

Karly- 'Yes love the taste of dick, and also- well you, or her pussy if that is your thing, I have been there too.' I knew that she was experienced and would be a good girl to go to for f*cking advice.

~*~

Me-

'Yep...'

One boy, one night of OH!

One girl, one night of OH!

She won overall!

She is the one I LOVE!

Yet, I'm been very much in-like with him- oh, HUM...

I love being wrong it feels so right...

Part: 8

(Note)

Dear Naddalin,

Jinger wrote to me told me about the phones call to your Uncle Read. I do hope you're all right. I'm on holiday in France at the- moment... look at the photos of me under the Eiffel Tower, I didn't know how, I was going to send this to you, but what if they would open it at and saw it was my undies for your enjoyment, for sniffing pleasure, something to remind you of me, and what you have wanted to lick- and have and did for me, now you can have these to hold on too. I think she'd - wanted to make sure you got something for your birthday for a change, the ones from our first night as lovers.

From-

Love Emmah

Part: 9

I did not buy you your, I don't have any money, to do so; there was an advertisement to me, that I would be getting something delivered; it's so good to keep up with what's going on in the - wizarding world, also, here from her with this out load self-understanding note, that shows moving text on picture.

Did you see that picture of Jinger and her family a week ago? I bet she's learning loads. I'm really jealous - she- ancient Rockvilleian wizards where fascinating.

There's some thought-provoking local theory of witchcraft there, too. I've rewritten my whole Story of Magic essay to include some of the- things I've found out; I hope it's not too long - it's three rolls of parchment more than Professor Bans asked for me to do.

Jinger says she's 'going to be in Pennsylvania in the- last week of the- holidays.'

'Can you make it too?'

‘Will your aunt and uncle let you come?’

‘I really hope you can.’

‘Uncertainty about it then, (there was a backside to the note,) I will see you on the - Express on September the 11th!’ P.S. Jinger says Serafina’s Head Girl. I will bet Serafina’s really pleased. Jinger doesn’t seem too pleased about it all.

At that moment at that time on that day- Naddalin giggled as she- put Emmah’s letter aside and picked up the present, in a hollow book with music notes on it, and said keep them forever and ever. Giggling... at the cute juvenile like cartoon printed panties, Minnie mouse on the front part, all pink and young girlie. It was very heavy, to take all at once, in my young 13-year-old mind, I knew, that the next day- after my B-day, like- I would be back to my real age, but it was fun, to relive all that I was cheated out of, at that age as a younger girl, it was my wish- after all. Um- ah- like- like- like- knowing Emmah, she- I’s was sure it would be a large book full of very difficult spells - but it wasn’t, it was an empty book felled with things that show our love, and new chapters to add in the book of life- just another chapter added in.

Part: 10

(Hot Springs)

Jenny the haunt- said to me in the bath- looking down at me as an apparition- ‘Yah- sneezed, wheezed, coughed, gagged and jazzed! GOOD FOR YOU!’ In a condescending way. And she dived in the water with her, of the all- the girls at once- roman style bath, the only place in the 2,000-year-old cartel where there is allowed to run about fully nude, with all the girls, at 7 p.m sharp ‘till 8 p.m.

I was getting a lesson from the leading girl!

Part: 1

'I love that little hole in you!' Emma said to me!

~*~

Emma- Why don't you say that you love me?

I'm said back- 'isn't better to know that someone loves you then say it over and over, and like-not mean it.'

Honesty-

Naddalin- I'm thought about it and thought- 'yah me to when you open it up and lick it out! – I's love that too-' do not- say you don't.

(Thoughts)

Naddalin- I love the cute faces that she makes in mine, it is everything- to me when I'm been on top of her looking in her eyes; and she sighs like a girl, make grind on me love, eating a girl out, like her. I's stick my tongue inside her vagina and ferociously lick every centimeter of her insides. the juices, her squirming, I love it! Kiss it like you would kiss her lips and just wiggle your tongue in between the lips and then slowly stick your tongue in...

Next day-

The heart, sticker gave a huge bounds of soft kiss to my lips, snapping crack, as she - ripped back the- paper and saw a sleek black scrollwork of the letters she made just for her, with silver, ribbons- around the yellowing hollow book words stamped across it, just another chapter of our lives, inside was Lily ribbons, the hart ring, 3 old flowers, a daisy, sunflower, and one Lily, an old dream-catcher along with the old key, and the note of Jaylynn also, and also the one to Kristen, Karly's crystal necklaces, Haven added a lock of hair from a girl, that is no longer with us also, her and back home, and now us- are story article, of us, yet as sweet as it was it still made me sad, I never thought that- I- I's... um- never-mind, well see this again. All things that ever mattered to me was in here... but how did she know or get this...?

Every now and then, we go to the graveyard and see the cinematic stone play, on it- she talks for 2 minutes, and we see her and hear her voice- as if she was alive, she gives her short story- of life on Earth, that was pre-recorded- like a Last Will and Testament in a way, yet it not the same- and she was too young to have things are given to others- even if, like- even here final death is a thing, if at complete rest, and she was.

Standing the test of time, like the pages... of the manuscript in the classroom.

‘Wow, Emmah!’ I thought- and might have said out my mouth, yet don’t remember- like if I did or not. Naddalin whispered, unzipping her uniform, for bath time at 7- walking into that room beside a- case of books, not looking inside, any other, then place hers next to them, all under ‘D’ taking up the length of the shave of ‘50’ or so-o volume.

Part: 2

(Back vacation at home in her Earthly body from-)

Apart from her friends, the- thing that Naddalin Missed most about the school for girls was Claepsiara, the- most popular sport in her- magical world - highly dangerous, very exciting, and played flying fast and wicked with your wings.

Naddalin happened to be a very good Claepsiara player; she - had been the- youngest pergirl in a century to be picked for one of her- the school for girl’s house teams. Paly until blood drips for the tips of the wings.

One of Naddalin’s most prized possessions and the most lovey was the wings that grow out her back, and now are one of the most powerful of all the girls, if not the - most. A game between light and dark angels- gladiator-style fight ‘till final death. Last year a girl had her wings ripped off in flight, the bloody thing is- like in a large jar, imboiled in the sciences room, shown off next to all the skulls and she was dead before hitting the ground 300 feet below, she was a light now she is with us, she was brought back, over unrest.

After bath time-

Homework- of spells and charms, all her notes and books, and what not, she picked up the last parcel, of everything she was doing into her book bag.

Naddalin put the thoughts about everything behind her, She - recognized the- untidy scrawl on the- yellow-sh paper at once, and said oh well I tried, she rested her head on her pillow, thinking about the girl- that was from Dargide, she- the school for girl’s gamekeeper child, the one she was going to fight, or so it was said she might- be.

(The next day)

Looking into one of the books named: 'Neveah.' She sighed, She- tore off the- top layer of paper and glimpsed something with sapphire eyes, and leathery, but before she - could unwrap it properly, she- parcelgave a strange quiver, it was a note about the first copy ever, and whatever was inside it snapped loudly, when it came to life, - as though it had jaws, it was memories of the past saying they wanted out of the book and the text. Naddalin just froze at that point at that moment.

She- knew that Dargide would never send her anything dangerous on purpose, but then, Dargide did not have an ordinary per girl's view of what was dangerous.

Dargide had been known to befriend spiders, buy spiteful, satanic lions, and birds that would pick your eyes out for fun, from menfolk in pubs, besides sneaks- illegal dark angels spawn- into their cabin; Naddalin poked she- parcel nervously, that jumped from the pages. It snapped loudly again in her hand.

Naddalin reached - for the- lamp on the bedside table, gripped it firmly in one hand, then she raised it over her head, ready to strike, it with the other free hand. Then and there the - seized the- rest of her- wrapping paper in the other hand and pulled, the old dust cover of the book.

Besides out fell - a book, that she remembered all too well, yet could not at all.

Naddalin just had time to register its handsome off-white cover, emblazoned with the- silver title 'The- Book of Stop and Death,' she said tenderly.

This was when she used a spell on it, asking it for its deepest darks feeling of emotions- to come forth, moments before her wand flick, so-o, before it flipped onto its edge, and snapped at her yet again, scuttled sideways along the- bed like some weird crab, wanting to snap. 'Uh-oh,' Naddalin muttered, saying, 'like- I knew it was bad, yet never this bad, a book with so much hurt it got up and crawled away.' The- book toppled off the- bed, like she said, with a loud clunk... then shuffled rapidly across the- room, as she ran after it, saying stop. Naddalin followed it surreptitiously. Any-who- the- book was hiding in the- dark sunlight space under her old heavy desk.

Praying that she- Sleyashs was still fast asleep, and the Amsel girls would not get ahold of it, Naddalin got down on her hand, saying come her it alright, I not going to hurt you like all them, she was on her hands knees butt up in the are showing way too much to the girls behind her asking what the hell, yet she keeps reaching for it.

Emma- said, 'I don't think that bath towel is not full coverage- their girl!'

Naddalin- 'You like it!!!'

Emma- 'That I do, but there was a thing- like- um- back in the day, called modesty- God- learn it.'

Naddalin- 'He- he- he!!!'

'Ouch!' She yelped...

Naddalin scrambled around, threw herself forward, managed to flatten it. The- book snapped shut on in her really small hands; then troweled past her, yet it was fastened, still scurrying on its covers. The other girls in the room gave a loud, sleepy grunt, as she went to her bed cricking the wood floorboards.

Elody watched interestedly as Naddalin clamped the- struggling book tightly in the arms, hurried to the chest of drawers, pulled out a belt, which she- buckled tightly around it, and then said the spell for to inanimate. 'The book of the death of the ended lives' shuddered angrily, but could no longer flap- about, and impulses, so Naddalin threw it down on the- bed and then stretched for

Dargide's card, that falls under the bed too. And then back on the shelf, it went with the others, to adulate dust, as she sat it there saying- 'stay- good girl.'

Part: 3

Chiaz- A never happen yet feels as it did, part of my life, like a dream yet not, like reality yet not, too is odd, and feels real, yet was not at that time of life, yet you know it happened.

Naddalin- I had to make this time up, I had to get back what was taken from her, I had too, I had to be her for a summer, something I never- ever thought me as this girl would ever do, for me or for her, this was going back in time, something that is trick over the fact it changes others' lives, if missed with too much, yet I needed to do this for me, that summer I's had to come back down to Earth anyways, so I came back as her, in her young body from, yes as her the girl in the story, I used the transformation spell to do so-o, I was 14 all over, and I did not remember this at the time with my mind slowly sipping, I was living on my own that summer in a cute, nice yet tight spaced trailer, over up on the hills of Nick- Town, that summer I wanted nothing more than for her to get back what was taken away, and now I had the power to do so, for this girl, yet she was a lost soul in a big bad world, living all alone, to spite her garden, long story, she was drag back home by cops and made to sleep in a barn, over running-away... yet she had the money too, anyways- back to the point...

‘You don’t wear underwire-’ he said, and I giggled...

Chiaz- I don’t remember this in my life yet I feel that it was so real to me, a girl came to me, in like a dream yet not, it was real, I never remember her living in a trailer up the ways from town, the next thing you know I was in it with you and you were more in love with me than ever, just out of school at the end of your 9th year... at first she was reluctant, it was the first time, after all, we could really be left alone, with no eyes on us, I recall that you showed me around your new place, that you rented, nicer than most homes, in throws parts, and before I knew it she was showing me her bed - ‘saying look how big this is for a little girl like me that is about 4 foot.’ And before I knew it she was bare, with her body wrapped around mine, sanding I was holding her like a child, in my arms, and our lips met, and the passion was more, trilling then one about a 17-year-old boy could take... and we made sweet love.

Naddalin- I was on the bottom...

Chiaz- I was on top of her, she was so-o little the size of a young child...

Naddalin- ‘Ahh- Cumming moments’

‘he was in me- for the first time- I did it, I did him and he did me.’

I couldn’t get enough of him, yet I have wanted to do this for years and years now, I was exhausted and tender down there, but I didn’t care.

I didn’t want to sleep... even though I was going to be with him night after night if I could...

I wanted the throbbing...

I wanted him in me...

I wanted him all the time...

His weight on top of me...

I wanted to squeeze him in further and further...

I wanted to watch his face... grunt out the last bit in me... as he said he wants mine... high pitched squeaky and an 'ou-yah's!'

I wanted his sweat to drop, like that stuff on to my bell- 'aww, is what I said.'

I wanted to drop mine on him... pushing it out... all creamy...

I got on top of him...

I'd never done it before... like that as of this age... you see... not this young it would not have been right too... yet I wanted to be bad! So bad! I wanted to take control of his every move... and I did... I own him that night.

I couldn't really believe it; I was doing this... but I was, and it was right... even if everything in the past was all so-o wrong, between us.

I was discovering something.

I held him and put him in... it was so cute... like when I gave him the blow-ie of a lifetime coming... he, he, he!

He felt deeper in me with his hard DICK- THEN FINGERS TOO.

I'll never forget it... real or not it's alike memory to last eternity... shared.

I was in charge and he liked it.

I held his hands down... even not like me for the- sweet shy girl of everything...

I let my small boobs touch his face, and he sucked on them as I asked, like my clit and puss- puss too, I made him by grabbing that mop of long black wavy hair of his... he was mine!

'I WAS HORRY- GIRLS GET THAT WAY!'

He went mad; he bounded- METILLI ORGASMED OVER AND OVER AND MORE THEN THAT TOO.

He rived me in two... WITH IT- I pushed down AND IN.

I couldn't believe it...

One of his HANDS flicked over my bum AND

SQUEEZED IT AND ANOTHER MOMENT OF COMING TO AN END. I did it to him. He lifted and heaved.

There was no end to it, no end to the new things... THAT A YOUNGER NEVER - EVER FELT BEFORE I WAS HIS SLUT, WIDE OPEN FOR HIM- LEGS UP ABOVE MY HEAD EVEN SLUT AND DRUM MAJOR SLIT FOR HIM TOO- AND I WANTED TO BE.

He took me from behind, TO AS I ASKED. I pushed back, forcing more of him into me, HARD

AND THEN SOFT, LONG AND SHORT- RHYTHMS- SEX IS AWKWARD, THAT WHAT MAKES IT FUN AND CUTE. I sucked him. He licked me. I made him come on my stomach, AND ON MY BUTT TOO. He sucked my toes.

The whole room rocked every 'till the wee - hours of the morning.'

My pussy felt- (soft warm fuzzy-inside tingly and slippery, tight and gripping- everything I wanted and more!)

Chiaz- in and out, rocking and thrusting, hard and soft, hugging and squeezing too.

Naddalin- It was right... and really, I did it I got back a moment lost... to the boy that I love way back when, this was the bad maybe child-sh thought, like- to have good sex all you need to be is naked on top of each other and young and dumb lust, yet that's what dives young teens. For him and me, it will always feel real- that- this moment happens, and he got to take me, and I- him.

Part: 4

Dear Naddalin, Happy Birthday!

Think you might find her useful for next year.

Won't say no more there... yet to use the come to life spell, she's pissed... Tell- me when I see you, why I felt you need this.

Hope- the- Nonmagical peoples are treating you all right.

All the- greatest...

~Dargide

It struck Naddalin as ominous whys, that Dargide thought a biting book would come in beneficial, but she- put Dargide's card up next to Jinger's, and

Emma's gifts, grinning more broadly than ever.

Now there was only the- letter from the school for all girls left, all but on name on it with their family you know who's girls.

Yep- just, observing that it was rather thicker than usual, Naddalin slit open the- envelope, pulled out the- the first page of note that came to life as she read, in the interior, besides it read:

Dear child...

Please note that the- new Hayvannahol year will begin on September - 11th.

The school for girls- Express- will leave from Rockville's Cross station for you that is on its long feeling journey, from the platform at nine p.m, as you know to find the abandoned part, past the boarded-up heavy wood doors and into the dark, damp, must, cobweb-infested station, that was let go of in the 1920s and get on the train, see you here, and looking forward to it, the track even looks to be down there I thought, yet I know it's right.

Duck under the boards, covering the doorways, and don't fall through the floor... you are the only one to use this pathway in... sorry for the inconvenience. The covering track in this run is not and the tracks feel as if there is nothing much holding them, elevated up as you go through the lay of the land up the past mill, Altoona part of the cover, though Ashville, and a line of abandon track, just go up to you.

Third years are permitted to visit the- village of Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry/ Fallen Angel on certain weekends, here or transfer over to our side if asked. Please give the- enclosed permission form to your parent or guardian to sign.

A list of books for next year is enclosed also.

Sincerely yours...

Professor M. McDermott Deputy Headmistress Naddalin pulled out she - Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry permission form and looked at it, no longer grinning.

It would be wonderful to visit Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry on weekends; she - knew it was an entirely wizarding village, and she - had never-ever set foot there. Nevertheless, how on earth was she - going to persuade Uncle Read or Aunt Jennath to sign the - form?

She - looked over at the - wind up alarm clock, that glows pink in the face, and flickers some over getting hit with lighting like a wand streak. It was now 2:15 o'clock in the - morning.

Deciding that she would worry about she - Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry form when she - woke up, Naddalin got back into bed and stretched up to cross off another day on the - chart she would make for herself, counting down the - days left until she returns to the school. Funny she thought I like school, she knew that the spell would have to come to end, like a love that she had to let go of too early in life too, yet he was a final piece also, then she - took off her glasses and she lay down, is nothing more than a transparent nighty that was pink, nothing else; eyes open, facing the three birthday cards, and the moving photos of her new light in her life Emma, and for this, she was ease too.

That night she said before going to bed, resting her weary head, 'awe - there is nothing like an onion bagel with cream cheese and starboard jam.'

Extremely unusual though she - was, at that moment Naddalin - felt just like everyone else - glad, for the - first time in the lives, that it was her birthday, and it did not suck, freaking holy - taint's. she remembers back to her story and said the church Father was the only one to remember, her day, and was a feeling friend to her, growing up, that could have gone there - yet she was too young and he loved GOD more than she, did not say that they did not kiss in the booth now does it when she asked her cute sweet question about self-analyst, he told this little girl that was innocent, all these wonderful stories about angels light and dark finding their way - and he said - 'like the girl in the story - little one you to well find your way, someday - okay.'

While Dariez lay around watching, and eating white cherry ice cream, Naddalin cleaned the - windows, the same one that she looked out all those years back, washed the - car, that was starting to rust away on the barn that was hers to the blue color almost all faded away, mowed the - lawn, with the same tractor, clipped the - flowerbeds, for a vase, next to her bed, trimmed and watered the - roses, and had all the lilies and daisy in her hand, and repainted the - garden bench, as was back then.

The- sun blazed overhead, burning the- back of her neck, and she could feel the wings want to come out for shad, and strength.

Naddalin knew she- shouldn't have risen to Dariez's bait, but Dariez had said the- very thing Naddalin had been thinking herself... maybe she- didn't have any friends at the school...

Wish they could see famous Naddalin - now, the- thought unrestrainedly as she- spread manure on her- flower beds, she back aching, sweat running down the faces.

It was half-past eight in the- evening when at last, exhausted, she- heard Aunt Jennath calling her, to come to eat and take a bath, like a young child again.

And Get in here!

Walk on the- newspaper, she did there where cover the floor like what should be carpet, to keep out the draft in this old farmhouse- it was bad yet never this deplorable! I have seen this place in my mind as her, God Lord I thought, yet I'm not to say anything mean- ie- like to them.

Naddalin moved ever so gently appreciatively into the- shade of the- gleaming kitchen, the only place in the home to have a makeover in years.

On top of the- new glamming double-sided stainless-steel fridge stood tonight's pudding: a huge mound of whipped creamy peanut butter and red-violet cake and a display dish. A roaster-pot of roast beef was sizzling in the need double door- oven, with the clock face light, also new and shiny.

I's am sure that it will be eaten quickly! Yet, I wonder if better be said then just - 'pass the gravy...?'

Part: 5

The- nonmagical peoples will be there soon!

Snapped Aunt Jennath, pointing to two slices of bread and a lump of cheese on her- kitchen table. Is this really all that you are severing them? She asked... 'Yes- girl- ie it is,' she was patting her on the head with soft taps, like a young child, along with saying- 'this is all that we have to give them.'

She- was already wearing a- pink cocktail dress.

Naddalin washed her hand...

Then at that moment, she fastened down the pitiful supper, that she had to eat.

Then at that moment at that time- she- had completed, Aunt Jennath whisked away from the plate, out from under her nose. Upstairs, she went to be in her room! Hastily, is was asked of her to do that!

She did not come down from her room, 'till the next morning. It was 8:00 a.m... Naddalin went down for breakfast only to find the- three or so-o- of them- Sleyashs already sitting around the- table, yet with her whom is counting them, her mind was so-o endorsed in what she was thinking about, and that was nothing more or less than about all that is magic, and that world, she loved to be in. She could care less about them and their childish ways, she thought even if that is what they say about her.

They were watching a brand -new television, a welcome-home-for-she-summer present for Dariez, who had been complaining deafeningly about the- long walk between her- fridge and the- freaking television, 'like in the- living- room, is- a- Tv, and in that room, is that cold-ie thing-ing- you see- there called rooms, and devised into them, are things that go in those rooms.

Like- like- like- you need to have enough whit about you to see you need to go to that room for that in that room- (she was saying that in a slow way of speaking to her- like a tard.)

Dariez had spent most of the- summer in the- kitchen, like a little piggy, eyes fixed on the- screen, over the why not thinking she could get up and movie, with the plat, and she five chins wobbling as she- ate continually.

~*~

Naddalin sat down between Dariez and Uncle Read, a huge, beefy man with very little neck and a- lot of mustache, and long stringy white beard.

Far from wishing Naddalin a happy birthday, none of the- Sleyashs made any insignia that they had noticed Naddalin enter the- room...

Nonetheless, Naddalin was far too used to them to care. She- helped herself to a piece of bagel only one half was left in the bag, then looked up at the- reporter on the- television, who was halfway through a report on a fugitive criminal.

(Unsolved Mysteries is playing)

Besides... the- public is warned that Black is armed extremely dangerous. A special hotline has been set up- asking 'join me in helping serval a- mystery-' a sharp taking and the dressed man said, 'if- you- see- in the least- one sighting of- Black, you should notify this line i-m-med-iat-ely.'

Part: 6

'Like there is no need to tell us...'

'He's no good,' inhaled, while saying it, Uncle

Read, staring over the- top of the newspaper at the- pricier. Besides look at the- state of him, the- dirty dart ball, look at the hair- all black, long wavy and greasy!

-And-

She- shot a nasty look sideways at Naddalin, whose untidy hair had always been a source of great annoyance to Uncle Read.

Saying you have room to talk, about the way he looks. Naddalin felt very well groomed indeed, all the time she prided herself too, she knew that was just bull shit coming out of his mouth, over she was the cuter one.

The- reporter had reappeared, 30 minutes have passed. 'You too can help in slaving an Unsolved Mystery.'

Besides the- Bureau of Cultivation cow show stuff- will announce today, so change the flicker- clicker thing-ie me-bobber to the impotent things, farms.

-And-

...Hang on! I say!

Now, growled Uncle Read, staring furiously at the- reporter, to end she was taking doing the number in her contacts.

Furthermore, you didn't tell us where that zealot escaped from! What use is that? Shit like he could be coming up the- street right now, to kill you girlie!

-And-

Aunt Jennath, who was bony and mare-faced, whipped around and scrutinized intently out of the- kitchen window.

Naddalin knew Aunt Jennath would simply love to be the- one to call the- hotline number.

She'd- was the- inquisitive woman in the- world and spent most of her life spying on the- mind-numbing, law- and the unbidden neighbors, saying this and that about what not- or whatever.

When will they learn, she said that you can't party every night from 7:00 p.m to 3:00 a.m, getting drunk having sex with random kids, and dancing around large fires, good I open the door to my home and have panties and used condoms hitting me in the freaking faces she said; and said Uncle Read, pounding the- table with the large purple fist, saying words like -

'kids today there is no law- no discipline...' Uncle Read- 'The- only way to deal with these people, is to just shoot them in the face or drill them in the face?'

'Oh- sh-h!' she said, 'saying cool it.'

-And-

Uncle Read, I thought to say to you is a little unstable, sorry it's embarrassing.

'Very true,' said Aunt Jennath, who was still squinting into next door's runner-beans, and farting loader then her mouth shooting as much Diarrhea as the be hind that she had.

'The house smells like a couch!'

Uncle Read drained she coffee' cup, glanced at his watch, besides added, I'd better be off in a jiffy, Jennath- come, walk them to the door.

Chapter: 158

Part: 1

(Parting words)

'Marge's train gets in at ten... so-o yeah...'

-And-

Naddalin, whose thoughts had been upstairs with the- Servicing kit for her wings, and a 1920's case with all that she needs to be a fallen-witch in magic too, down here, was brought back to earth with an unpleasant bump when she fell from the sky... from the what nonmagical peoples call the heavens, yet have no clue, thank God- on Earth that no-one saw. Good feather grooming is key.

Aunt Marge was Uncle Read's sister, may God help us... and also worked in an orphanage a residential institution devoted to the care of orphans- children whose biological parents are deceased or otherwise unable or unwilling to take care of them. (I have heard this so many times- blah-ick...)

Then she continuing to say: Biological parents, and sometimes biological grandparents, are legally responsible for supporting children, but in the absence of these, no named godparent, or other relatives willing to care for the children, they become a ward of the state, and orphanages are one way of providing for their care, housing and education.

'Um-hum...'

Even though she'd- was not a blood relative, she was only a half-blood, of the Naddalin's... yet that was more than I to be loved.

She- blurted out, yet again- like before to my face, interfering with my personal space, I could feel the misty spit even- and the stank breath- of lezz-ie pussy.

Aunt- Marge! They said... don't say that to that child... we are all she has...

'I'm said- to go suck off, like- yet another fat bitch- bitch! ...and walked away.'

'Naddalin!!!' (They shouted)

(Whose most had been Aunt

Jennath's sister, over no one, would like- like a smaller- well her... and all that...)

She- had been forced to call her- 'Aunt' when all she wanted to say was profanity with long-running slurs to her for all her- her rotten, mangy life.

Aunt Marge lived in the- country- more farm-a-fid-ed, in a house with a large garden, then ours, where she'd- bred bulldogs, funny the dog's faces are cuter than hers. That reminds me... he - he-he... a never mind... I thought it's an old inside joke.

She'd- didn't often stay at anywhere else, because she'd- couldn't bear to leave the precious dogs, but each of the visits stood out horribly vividly in Naddalin's mind, young 'till now.

(Flashback)

At Dariez's fifth birthday party, Aunt Marge had whacked Naddalin around the- bare butt with her walking stick to stop her from beating Dariez at musical statues.

A few years later, she'd- had turned up at Christmas with an electronic robot for Dariez and a box of dog biscuits for Naddalin, saying this is smarter than you and this is all you should be eating as that one did in the past- Naddalin, she was lived.

On the last visit, the- year before Naddalin started at the school, Naddalin had accidentally trampled on the- tail of the favorite dog, that got her bed instead of her sleeping it...

Ripper had chased Naddalin out into the- garden up a tree same old tree that she was in years ago the angel oak, and Aunt Marge had refused to call her off until past midnight, she slept in the tree on a branch all starched out...

Part: 2

The- memory of the incident still brought tears of laughter to Dariez's eyes.

And Marge well be there for a week, and Uncle Read snarled, and while we're on the - topic, and she- pointed a fat finger bullyingly at Naddalin, besides we need to get a few things straight before, I go and collect her.

-And-

Dariez smirked and then withdrew the gaze she had from the - television. As she was watching young Naddalin being bullied by Uncle Read, after all- like she was Dariez's favorite form of entertainment.

Besides primarily, grinning all creepy like, and harassing her was the thing to do, just like Uncle Read, both saying- 'you'll keep a municipal tongue in your head when you're talking to Marge.'

The next day...

Also, and all right...

Above and beyond said Naddalin inordinately, besides - um if she'd- does when she is talking to me.

-And-

Furthermore, and now secondly, also said

Uncle Read, acting as though he- had not perceived Naddalin's reply, as Marge doesn't know anything about your irregularity, I do not want any - any funny stuff while she is here with us. 'You behave yourself, got me...?'

-And-

Additionally, 'I's will if she'd- does, said Naddalin through clenched teeth.'

Uncle Read- And- and- and, thirdly... the mean little eyes now slit in her inflated face, over tears, and we've told Marge you attend North End- Secure Center for the inoperable wrong- criminal- and well to dumb it doing for you- died in the head- Girls- JUST LIKE YOU.

Naddalin- 'so-o a school for retards is what you're saying...'

'What?' Naddalin yelled...

...Precisely!!! Good- Naddalin- Good... saying it in a very dick-ish way.

Then you'll be sticking to that story- girl-ie we say for you, girl, or there'll be trouble, quarreled Uncle Read.

Naddalin sat there, white-faced furious, staring at Uncle Read, hardly able to believe it, that she was making words come out of her mouth in arguments.

Part: 3

Aunt Marge coming for a weeklong visit - it was the- worst birthday present she- Sleyashs had ever given her, including that pair of Uncle Read's old socks, that looked like it was used as Uncle Reads night before condom.

-Gross...

Well, Jennath, said Uncle Read, getting too overwhelming hostel- with you come here, I will be off to the station, then- said the bitch. Want to come along for the- ride, she said to the one... and you know which one.

-And-

No, said Dariez, even I think this is going to fare, and like whose attention had returned to the- television now that Uncle Read had finished threatening and terrorizing Naddalin.

'...And Dariez's got to make herself smart for she auntie,' said Aunt Jennath, - 'That's not nice, is it to a girl like you now'- also saying this in a way that is demeaning to her age and intelligence, yet comforting, in a way, that was needed even if- unpleasant.

Part: 4

Dariez's smoothed thick blond hair...

Her Mommy's bought her a lovely new dress.

Uncle Read slapped Dariez hard on the back of her shoulder, saying- 'see even on her birthday you get what was hers, she too dumb anyways, to understand, that we gave this to you, and not her.'

Also, see you in a bit, then, like- she- said, besides she- left the- breakfast nook.

Naddalin, who had been sitting in a kind of horrified trance, had a sudden idea.

'I would like to get read if you like you- like you get rid of your blood use tampons, using all the toilet paper balling it all around, as you do before throwing it in the scrap can.' He really said that to me...

Chapter: 159

Part: 1

Then it hit me that I could be kissing her every morning, I used to kiss her every morning when I used to get up and did not want summer anymore. I remember the middle of last year in the school year, about her saying- 'I am worried if I kiss you I that I may screw up-' and I'm said back- 'if you didn't you would, and we started to kiss all the time...' 'I just loved giving her un-pure thoughts,' alleged

Naddalin, in her young lusting girl mind. 'I'm so bad- but I was thinking about sex,' 'um- I like it when Emma goes down really deep in me with her dildo, uh- it feels so-oo goo-ooooo-d.'

Part: 2

Then she made some toast, she- got quickly to her feet, when it popped, and she jumped- then followed Uncle Read to the- front door. Uncle Read was pulling on her coat.

She though on a coat- even so-o. I am going- she cried... '-NO. Besides, I'm not taken you!'

Then he- snarled, like a dog, as she- turned to see Naddalin watching him, and she snarled back even more intensely. 'Like- I wanted to come, she said Naddalin unfeelingly,' 'You would like to come-' he said mocking her. And I want to ask you something.

-And-

Uncle Read eyed her untrustworthily.

This ends with her being strangled out...

And him losing to teeth in the front with a left hook... MMA is looking good on me she said- even as a just white belt, I have more power than you ever have over me now. Something I took up over the summer to get away from here. And So...? Then snapped Uncle Read, taken the car keys from a hook next to the- door.

So, it was broadcasted over the TV, that there was going to be saver storms, in the flowing counties, torrential rain, I was standing just outside the door, just after saying- that 'I wanted to go- too,' and just like that a bolt of lightning struck right in front of me, it lights me up, and if I would be a life as I should, I know I would dead; and fried- like some- finger-licking good- KFC chicken, yet, I can't freak'n die even if, like- I wanted to, if you are fallen like me you cannot pass 'till the time reach a final death...

Part: 3

Thinking back to something she said to me, just like you, I have a place to dump my- cum- and it in you- and letting mine roll way down in that sweet little pussy you have- um I wanted her, so-o, bad- so bad, yet, I suck here to the new year- aww! Like- if a girl did not want to c*m she would not be there in the first place with you- dah- and I want to be there so-oo badly right now!

I LOVE HER!

(Forward)

By the way now that you have chocked the life out me, I need you to sign the - permission form and said Naddalin in a rush.

Now the third year is here - at Hayvannahol are allowed to visit the - village sometimes, said Naddalin.

‘Why should I do that?’ And scorned Uncle Read, lisping through his - young girl hating - missing teeth.

Well, and said Naddalin, picking her words NOT so carefully, also it will be hard work, pretending to Aunt Marge I go to that

St. Watson...

-And-

And at The Re-tard school AKA- The Center for Terminally Criminal Girls or whatever the hell it is called! Hollered Uncle Read, at the top of his voice.

Naddalin was pleased to hear a definite note of panic in Uncle Read’s voice, that I could have died.

I thought- (You do care about me- don’t yah...)

Exactly, said Naddalin with great enthusiasm, looking tranquility up into Uncle Read’s large, purple face.

Besides, it’s a- lot to evoke, is it not? I’ll have to make it sound convincing, won’t I?

What if I accidentally let something slip?

-And-

You’ll get the - stuffing knocked out of you, won’t you? Then and their rumbled Uncle Read, advancing on Naddalin with she first raised. Nonetheless, Naddalin stood her ground.

Like- knocking the- stuffing out of me won't make Aunt Marge forget what I could tell her, she- said grimly.

Uncle Read stopped, his fist still raised, right at her sweet, little, cute, and young- little girl ribbons in her yet- her face was an ugly puce- it was- no not like her at all.

If you sign my permission form, then Naddalin went on quickly, I swear I'll remember where I'm supposed to go to Hayvannahol, I'll act like a Mug- like I'm normal and everything- honey that good that your trying so hard to be, yet you never- ever be normal he patted her on the head like she was dimwitted.

Naddalin could tell that Uncle Read was thinking it over, even if his teeth where bared- the ones left that are, a vein was throbbing in the temple, on the left side.

Besides, right, she- cracked in her voices finally. Then I shall check your behavior carefully during Marge's visit, then should I?

If, at the- conclusion of it, you've toed the- line, in addition, kept to the- story, we say and think about you- I'll sign your mother F'n form.

-And-

She- wheeled around, pulled open the- front door, then slammed it so hard, that some of the plaster fall from the ceiling, and then that one of the- little stained-glass panes of glass, that was cracked at the- top fell out. Naddalin didn't return to the- kitchen at all, she ran.

She- went back upstairs to her bedroom, over the top that one she used to have- thinking about for a moment- or two.

If she- was going to act like a real- nonmagical people, she'd better start now- so- in her mind she just did that at acting like a teen girl- all over again- going to her room to mope.

Nasty, unkind, revolting, and sadly she- gathered up all the presents from her birthday cards too that ruined by being mean ad smashing them and ripping them up and whatnot, so-o she hid them under the- loose floorboard with her homework, trying not to look over the fact that it just made her that gloomy.

Then she- went to Baby Raven's cage. Errolie seemed to have recovered from also being thrown up against the wall to in his rage, I held- baby Raven's until she fell asleep, in my hands recovering from a broken wing.

Naddalin sighed, holding her in her arms. Baby Raven's, she - said gloomily, you poor thing... while her in a rocking-rocking in a chair.

Correspondingly, you're going to have to clear off for a week. Go with Errolie. Jinger well looks after you. I'll write her a note, explaining. I say- do not look at me like that- Baby Raven's large eyes, bigger than should be for her to have.

Part: 4

Like- where reproachful - And it's not my fault. It's the- only way I'll be allowed to visit Claepsiara, Skalaieol of Wizardry with Jinger And Emmah.

Ten minutes later, Errolie the baby Raven's (who had a note to Jinger bound to her leg) soared out of the- arched window out of my sight off into the horizon.

Naddalin, now feeling thoroughly miserable, put the- empty cage away inside the- wardrobe.

Nonetheless, Naddalin didn't have long to brood. In next to no time, Aunt Jennath was shrieking up the- stairs for Naddalin to come down and get ready to welcome their visitor.

Do something about your hair, now it like a boy has played in it! Aunt Jennath said as she- reached the- hall.

Naddalin could not see the- point of trying to make the hair lie flat, it was always frizzy and all the detangler in the world would not fix it. Aunt Marge loved criticizing her, so the- messier she- looked, the- happier she'd- would be.

All too soon, there was a crunch of gravel outside as Uncle Read's car pulled back into her- driveway, then the- clunk of the- car doors footsteps on the- garden path, up the porch, and pass the have wood door, she was in the entranceway next to the old steps.

'Hey, you with the big eyes and the face- get the- door!'

Then and there, Aunt Jennath hissed at Naddalin showing teeth.

She'd- turned on the heel then left, making her way into the living room. Jinger waited until she'd- had vanished through the- door to the- girls,' dormitories, then cleared she- garbage off the- knitted hats. 'They should at least see what They're picking up,' she- said firmly. 'Anyway...' she- rolled up the- parchment on which she- had written the- title of Lily's essay, 'there's no point trying to finish she now, I can't do it without Emmah, I haven't got a clue of what you're supposed to do with moonstones, have you?'

(A wisp of a wand and she moved forward in time- back to her happy place the school for girls like her.) Naddalin shook her head, noticing as she- did so-o, that the- ache- in her right temple was getting worse. Um- she- thought of the- long essay on colossal wars, about light and dark, and the- pain stabbed at her abruptly.

Knowing perfectly well that when- the- morning came, she- would regret not finishing the homework that night like the good little girl she was known for, she- piled she books back into her bag.

'I'm going to bed too- said Emma- and with you.'

'It was nice to have a cuddle body- again!'

Chapter: 160

Part: 1

She- passed Laila on the- way to the- door, leading to the- dormitories back at the school know that she had skipped time, but did not look at her.

Naddalin had a fleeting impression that Laila had opened the mouth to speak, but she- sped up and reach the- soothing peace of the- the body of Neveah' spiral staircase without having to endure any more provocation.

The- following day dawned just as sluggish and so very rainy as the- aforementioned one. Like- Dargide was still absent from the- staff table at breakfast. 'But on the- plus side, no Lily today' said Jinger bracingly.

Emmah yawned widely and poured herself some coffee. She'd- looked mildly pleased about something, and when Jinger asked her what she'd- had to be so happy about, she'd- simply said, her- hats have gone.

Seems the- house sprites do want freedom after all.'

'I wouldn't gamble on it,' Jinger told her caustically. they might not count as closes. She didn't look anything like hats to me, more like knitted bladders.'

Emmah did not speak to her all morning.

Double Transfiguration- succeeded double Charms, Professor Flitwick and Professor-

McDermott both spent the- first fourteen minutes of their lesson lecturing the- class on the- importance of flying with wings.

'What you must reminisce,' said little Professor Flitwick squeakily hanging as ever on a pile of books so that she- could see over the- top of the desk, 'is that these inspections may impact your futures for many years to come- lady's- work hard!

If you have not already given serious thought to your life paths, like- now is the- right time to do so-o. Then and there in the- mean-time, I'm afraid of thinking about it all, we shall be working harder than ever to certify, verify, confirm, endorse and attest, that you all do yourselves righteousness!'

They- then- there and did, spent over an hour revising Summoning Charms, which according to Professor Flitwick was bound to come up in their FLYING HORSES, and she- rounded off the- lesson by setting them there largest ever amount of Charms homework- ever in the school walls.

It was the- same, if not worse, in Conversion.

'You cannot pass a FLYING test nevertheless, with the smaller HORSES,' said Professor McDermott poorly worded, to Emma.' Seeing that she hurt the girl- she fastly said- without serious claim, practice, you will get there and study hard, rubbing her hand. I see no regard why everyone in the class should not achieve a FLYING in Transfiguration as long as they put in the- work.' Neville made a sad little skeptical of noise, with her snort.

There is nothing wrong with your work except lack of confidence girls, it shows, that you're smart.

Still better than what Emma got before, I remember when the professor said, 'that the ambitions us girls have was to see how many thine- she like me too, and all the girls in the class could have sex and not get pregnant.'

Emma- snapped back sharply- well then, I am not going to hell, for using a dildo then for this is what I do, and the class of girls just giggled, as the professor looked stunned.

(The next day)

So... today we are starting Vanishing Spells.

These are easier than Illusion Spells, which you would not usually attempt until the 2nd level, but they are still among the- most tough magic you will be tested on in your FLYING courses.' She would- was relatively accurate; Naddalin found she- Vanishing Spells utterly problematic.

By the- end of a double period she nor Jinger had managed to vanish the- mice on which they were practicing, though Jinger said with any luck she- thought she looked a bit paler. Emmah, on the- other hand, successfully vanished she mouse on her- the third attempt, earning she a ten-point bonus for Amsel from Professor McDermott. She would- was she- only pergirl not given homework; everybody else was told to practice the- spell overnight, ready for a fresh attempt on their mice the- following afternoon.

Now postulating slightly about the- the amount of homework they had to do, Naddalin and Jinger spent their lunch hour in the- haunted library, looking up she- uses of daydream-gravest in potion-making.

Still angry about Jinger's slur on her woolly hats, Emmah did not join them. By the- time they reached Upkeep of Magical Creatures in the- afternoon, Naddalin's head was aching again.

The- day had become cool, breezy, chided to, and damp, in addition as they walked down the- sloping lawn towards Dargide's cabin on the- edge of the- Illicit Woodland, they felt the- occasional drop of rain on their faces.

Professor Grubbly Plank stood to wait for the- class some ten yards from Dargide's front door, a long trestle table in front of she laden with twigs. As Naddalin And Jinger reached there was, a loud shout of laughter sounded behind them; whirling, they saw Drallieah Mallerie striding towards them, encircled by her usual gang of Slyshein- and clans.

She- had clearly just said something highly amusing, because Carllah, Goyle, and the others found it to be that way, and the- rest sustained to sniggering as they gathered around the- trestle table and, judging by her- way they all kept looking over at Naddalin, she - was able to guess the- subject of the- joke without too much difficulty.

‘Everyone there?’ Barked Professor

Grubby Plank, once all she- Slysheins And

Amsel's had arrived.’ Let us crack on then.’

‘Who can tell me what these things are called?’

She’d- indicated she- heaps of twigs in front of her.

Emmah’s hands shot into the- air.

Behind her back, Mallerie did a Becca toolshed imitation of she is jumping up and down with enthusiasm to answer a question.

She gave a shriek of laughter that turned almost- at once into a scream, as the- twigs on the- table leaped into her- air, and then exposed her-themselves to be what looked like tiny pixie-e-sh creatures made of wood- or so it looked into the gorgeous magnificent creature, reach with arms and legs just like a little humming girl would have, cartoon-like face in- which a pair of oversized brown eyes glittered, it was kind of like a little fairy, that because it was just that- said Emma.

‘O-oh!’ They said...

Nevaeh

Book: 36

Fallen Angel

Chapter: 150

Part: 1

We are all like the bright moon, we still have our darker side, don't express to yours truly the moon is superb; display to me the sparkle, twinkle, and enthusiasm of light on shattered cut - glass, or a dead girl's memory. I may not have gone where I intended to go, but I think I have ended up where I needed to be- like she- her with me now- she- me – and you too.

A theory where gone.

Flying horses post again-

I- Naddalin am flying around too even back on Earth also for a soul to take... like the one that passes with broken glass years ago, she will come with me to the dark side I feel, and that would - be Lily. Yet would she ever leave Neveah- I don't know if I want to do that to her- yet I would love to also... Lonely girls that hang out at the graveyards, and cry... for someone to ease the pain... We take... over their bodies and minds... young sweet girls like YOU! Even can be said for white angels too... (it was too easy...)

...She lost her to me... yet, I had to I could not help it, I need her to feed for life... and she looks good in black- no? We will get her too- I AM SURE OF IT! Yet she has him up there so- o; that love will- last and last.

Part: 2

Naddalin, got a girl to come over to this world in a death... today... it was said in class. Now to she is fallen.

Anyways-

Emmah was tugging at her sleeve, staring at her watch. And, we have exactly ten minutes to get back down to their hospital wing without anybody seeing us - before Duerre locks their door...

- Besides-

Okay, and said Naddalin, wrenching her gaze from the sky, and let us go... Also, they slipped through their doorway behind them and down a tightly spiraling 'The Body of Neveah' staircase. Full of old dark wood, and leaded glass, that was also long-standing. As they reached the top of it, they heard voices. They flattened themselves they were, now pushing themselves up against the wall and they all listened. It sounded like garbage.

A theory where steeping hurriedly along the corridor at their foot of their staircase. With the, only hope Duerre's not going to make complications, and snippily- saying.

We wanted to do this for years here in this spot she and I- above and beyond, there Kiss will be performed at once, in the tower, holding hands... also... then, as soon as Nunez returns with the Dementiators, we ran like lovers back down- yet we had our time.

This whole Black affair has been highly embarrassing. They all knew about all the girls, and all the professors too. Yet, I cannot tell you how much I am happy about it all thought. Forward to informing their Daily Prophet that we have her at last... said that we want this... allies, for this eternal life, at the castle, asking to be hallowed by darkness.

I- Daresay they will want to interview you, Sammie... and once young Naddalin's back in her right mind, I expect she will want to tell the prophet exactly how you saved her... from the other side of things... She could have been...?

'-So-o I feel- that is so.'

Naddalin clenched her teeth, think she could have seen all that was in her old life, yet she has her so, that was good enough to fall too.

Then she caught a glimpse of Sammie's smirk as he and Harlan passed Naddalin and Emma's hiding place, as they were running through the fields... for flight.

There where footsteps died away, yet, wherein mid-flight looking down on the eerie, dark, and shadowy, warm glow of cottages with tall grass and oak trees, in this land, waterfalls, and hang-ie down weepiness, off of the rock and plant life... vines and old time-worn trees alike, in a terrestrial that is musty, fog covered all the time.

Naddalin and Emmah waited a few moments to make sure they had really gone, hand in levitating in midair, looking at one another dumbly, and sheepish then started to fly in the opposite direction of the hallowed castle.

(Back)

Emma- Walking on foot- and yes, we still do that... Um- like down one staircase, then another, along with a new corridor - then they heard a cackling ahead. Also, Charlotte...!

~*~

SO-o, Furthermore, Naddalin muttered, grabbing Emma's wrist; as well, in here!

Theory tore into a deserted classroom, to their left just in time.

Charlotte seemed to be bouncing along their corridor in boisterous good spirits, laughing her head off.

- Besides-

Part: 3

OH, her is horrible, and whispered Emmah, her ear to their door. Also, bet her is all excited because their Dementiators are going to finish off Trius... And she checked her watch. Besides, three minutes, Naddalin!

- And-

Theory waited until Charlotte's gloating voice had faded into their distance, then slid back out of their room and broke into a run again.

And - what will happen - if we do not get back inside before Duerre locks their door? And, Naddalin panted.

And, do not want to think about it! And,

Emmah moaned, checking her watch again. And, One minute! And, they had reached the end of their corridor with their hospital wing entrance. And, Okay - I can hear Duerre and said Emmah tensely. And Come on, Naddalin!

Theory crept along their corridor. Their door opened, Duerre's back appeared.

Besides, am going to lock you in, and they heard her say. And, it is five minutes to midnight.

Miss. Kizziah, three turns should do it. Good luck.

-And-

Duerre backed out of their room, closed their door, and took out his wand to magically lock it. Postulating, Naddalin and Emmah ran forward. Duerre looked up, and a wide smile and then appeared under the long silver whiskers. And- Well? And, she said quietly. And, we did it! And said Naddalin breathlessly. And... Trius has gone, with Becca beak... And... So-o...!

(Up to the now)

Duerre grinned at them, and, well Deanahe. I think she listened intently for any sound within their hospital wing, and, Yes, I think you have gone too - get inside - I will lock you in... Naddalin and Emmah slipped back inside there dormitory.

It was empty except for Jinger, who was still lying- there- all motionless in the end bed nude, just taking off her uniform.

~*~

As their lock clicked behind them, Naddalin and Emmah crept back to their own beds, Emmah uncovering their Time-Turner back under her robes. A moment later, Madam Pomphrey came striding back out of her office.

Also, Did I hear their principal leaving?

Am I allowed to look after my patients now?

- And-

Like- like- like, she was in a very bad- bad- bad mood-ie mood.

Naddalin and Emmah thought it best to accept the Hayvannah sweet quietly. Madam Pomphrey stood over them, making sure they ate it. Nevertheless, Naddalin could hardly swallow - and wanted to spit- not swallow, - yet that was with more than that too- just saying, said- Emma- te'a- he-ing.

She and Emmah were waiting, listening, the nerves jangling... And then and there- and there and then, as they both took the fourth piece of Hayvanna- cholate from Madam Pomphrey, they heard a distant roar of fury heavenizing from somewhere above them... swirling around them like dark haunts.

Besides, what was that? And said- Madam Pomphrey in alarm.

Part: 4

Now they could hear angry voices, growing louder and brassier. Madam Pomphrey was staring at their door.

Besides, Really - they will wake everybody up! What do they think they are doing?

-And-

Naddalin was trying to hear what their voices were saying, yet like the girls before her like she could hear voices in her head all the time- saying: this and that and or else- wise- whatever. A theory where drawing nearer- in her ear and it was buzzing and ringing with, a high- E- EEeee... hiss, of them taking over her awareness and body in this world, this is true for them to do, to see feel, and hear only as they want you to- where you may feel, that you did or did not, or just blackout, in not remembering- it's a spell that, I know well- of mind- take- over, they can even take out of my mouth for me- no-? ...YES! AND IT SOUND

JUST LIKE ME- AND THEY CAN MOVE MY HAND ARMS AND LEGS FOR ME TOO-

(LIKE I DON'T REMEMBER MASTURBATING... YET MY HAND IS DOING IT- AND I SEE IT GOING IN AND OUT OF ME AND I KNOW THAT SHE IS IN ME AND I AM IN HER...)

Chapter: 151

Part: 1

Like- she must have Disappeared, Severus. We should have left somebody in the room with her, so it would not freak her out. When this gets out - And, she DID NOT DISPARATE! And- Lily roared, now very nearby. And, YOU CANNOT APPARATED OR DISPARATE INSIDE THIS CASTLE!

THIS - HAS - SOMETHING - TO - DO - WITH-! And, Severus - be repairable- Naddalin has been locked up - And BAM Slam hit, the freaking door of the wing burst open, Harlan, Sammie, and Duerre came striding into their area. Duerre alone looked calm. Indeed, she looked as though she was quite enjoying herself. Harlan appeared angry about it all. Nevertheless, Lily was beside herself, I knew - we-too- ominously we agreed. And, OUT WITH IT!

And, she bellowed. And, WHAT DID YOU DO?

And- Professor Lily, yes here a week and she is that! And, shrieked Madam Pomphrey. And Control yourself!

And- See here, Lily, be repairable, and said,

Harlan. And, this door is being locked, we just saw.

Besides, THEORY HELPED HERR ESCAPE, I KNOW IT! And, Lily flying, pointing at Naddalin and Emmah. Her face was twisted and teeth sharply pointed fangs; dribble was flying from her mouth, now red blood from the eyes. (Thoughts of RED- WHITE AND BLUE came back to her... and here being cold is the way of life.)

Calm down, girl!

And Harlan woofed.

And, you are toluene nonsense! She knew that would not be going back up either.

Part: 2

And, YOU DO NOT KNOW-! And, shrieked Lily. And, she DID IT, I KNOW she DID IT. (Whatever- IT is...,) and, that will do, Severus, and said Duerre quietly. Yep- yep just- thinking about what you are saying. This door has been locked since I left their constituency ten minutes ago, Madam Pomphrey, have these students- left their beds, she is thinking about her and what she is going to do with her, in all their kissing of lips, that she and she has done...!

‘Partially, I would have welcomed a Dementor attack.

A deadly struggle for my soul would have broken their monotony nicely. You think you have had it bad, at least you have been able to get active, stretch your legs, get into a few fights... I have been stuck inside for a month.’

‘How come...?’ Asked- Naddalin, frowning some.

‘Because of their Ministry of Magic still after me, and Waltemath will know all about me being an Animangas by now, Worm tail will have told her, so my big disguise is useless. It is not much; I can do that for their- Order of their Durizy ... or so- o Duerre feels.’

There was something about their slightly- flattened tone of voice, in which Trius uttered Duerre’s name, and that told- Naddalin that Trius, too, was not very pleased with their Principal. Naddalin felt a sudden upsurge of affection for her God daddy.

At least you have known what is been going on, she said bracingly.

‘Oh yes,’ said Trius sarcastically. ‘Listening to Snappiest reports, having to take all her snide hints, and that she is out there risqué her life, while- I’s am sat on my backside, here having a nice comfortable time... talking to me about how their cleanings going...’

‘What cleaning...?’ Asked- Naddalin...

Part: 3

Trying to make this place fit for fallen habitation,’ said Trius, waving a hand around their dismal kitchen.

‘No one’s lived here for ten years, not since my dear mother died unless you count her old house fairy, and she’s gone around their twist ~ hasn’t cleaned anything in ages.’

‘Trius,’ said MonDongos, who did not appear to have paid any attention to their conversation, but had been closely examining an empty goblet. ‘This solid silver, pal?’

‘Yes,’ said Trius, surveying it with distaste. ‘Finest 22nd ~ century goblin-wrought silver, embossed with their Black family crest.’ That had come off, though, muttered MonDongos, polishing it with her cuff. Céline Katy NO, JUST CARRY THERE! Mr.’s Railie shrieked.

Part: 4

Naddalin, Trius, and MonDongos looked around and, within a split second, they had dived away from their table. Céline and Katy had bewitched a large ceiling of stew, a jigger flagon of Butterbeer and a heavy wooden breadboard, complete with knife, to hurtle through their air towards them.

Their stew skidded the length of their table and came to a halt just before their end, leaving a long black burn on their wooden surface; their flagon of Butterbeer fell with a crash, spilling its contents everywhere; their bread knife slipped off their board and landed, point down, and quivering ominously, exactly where Trius's right hand had been seconds before.

'FOR HEAVENS SAKE!' screamed Mr.'s -Railie.

THERE WAS NO NEED- I HAD ENOUGH OF THIS JUST BECAUSE YOU CAN USE MAGIC NOW, YOU DO NOT HAVE TO WHIP YOUR WANDS OUT FOR EVERY TINY LITTLE THING!

'We were just trying to save a bit of time!' Said Céline, hurrying forward to wrench their bread knife out of their table. 'sorry, Trius, the mate did not mean to...'

Naddalin and Trius where both laughing; MonDongos, who had toppled backward off his chair, was swearing as she got to his feet; Crook shanks had given an angry hiss and shot off under their dresser, from where his large yellow eyes glowed in their darkness.

Part: 5

'Girl changing and some nude, playing and then bathing,' Mr. Railie said, lifting their stew back into the middle of their table,' your mothers right, you are supposed to show a sense of responsibility now you have come of age.'

Part: 6

Emma- When she is inside of me, in more ways than one mind-body and erogenous zones alike... I wonder who is squiring me, rubbing my body, softly... touching my boobs and butt, and inside there too alike... in it... she- her- all her coming through me, making me vibrate and pulsate to her body... it's wonderful, to feel more loves in life, that you would never understand unless you let someone all the way in you- and take over ever that your mind boy and soul is- she can even see through my eyes- we can switch places- all in one mind game of a spell- called- The Back and Forth, spell.

Any-who-

'None of your brothers caused this sort of trouble!'

Mr.'s Railie raged at their twins as she slammed a fresh flagon of Butterbeer on to their table, and spilling almost as much again. Sara did not feel their need to Apparated every few feet!

Charlie did not charm everything she met! Percy.’ She stopped dead, catching her breath with a frightened look at her husband, whose expression was suddenly wooden.

‘Let’s eat,’ said Sara quickly.

‘It looks wonderful, Molly,’ said Sevket, ladling stew on to a plate for her and handing it across their table.

For a few minutes, there was silence but for their chink of plates and cutlery and their scraping of chairs as everyone settled down to their food.

Then Mr.’s Railie turned to Trius.

‘I’ve been meaning to tell you, Trius, there is something trapped in that writing desk in their drawing room, it keeps rattling and checking. Of course, it could just be a Boggart, but I thought we ought to ask Valastro to have a look at it before we let it out.’

‘Whatever you like,’ said Trius indifferently.

‘There curtains in there are full of Doxes, too,’ Mr.’s Railie went on.’ I thought we might try and tackle them anyhow.’

‘I look forward to it,’ said Trius. Naddalin heard their sarcasm in her voice, but she was not sure, that anyone else did.

Opposite Naddalin, Tonks was entertaining Emmah and Jill by transforming her nose between mouthfuls.

Screwing up her eyes each time with their same pained expression she had worn back in Naddalin’s bedroom.

Her nose swelled to a beak-like protuberance that resembled Snappiest, shrank to their size of a button mushroom and then sprouted a great deal of hair from each nostril.

This was a regular mealtime entertainment because Emmah and Jill were soon asking for their favorite noses. ‘Do that one like a pig snout, Tonks.’

Tonks obliged, and Naddalin, immobilized, then up too, had their fleeting impression that a female Dariez was grinning at her from a- crossed their table.

Mr. Railie, Sara, and Sevketa were having an intense discussion about sprites - haunts.

'Theory is not giving anything away yet,' said Sara. 'I still cannot work out whether they believe she is back. Course, they might prefer not to take sides at all. Keep out of it...'

'I'm sure they would never go over to You-Know-Whom,' said Mr. Railie, checking the heads. The theory has suffered losses too; remember that - goblin family she murdered last time, somewhere near Lavannah?'

~*~

'I think it depends on what they are offered,' said Sevketa. 'And I am not toluene about gold. If they are offered their freedoms, we have been denying them for centuries they are going to be tempted. Have you still not had any luck with Amsel's, girl Sara...?'

Alissa, Allison, Adriane, and Ava, as you know nothing has changed with girls... and the conflict is still on, Sara being one of them down the line. They are like you and I - why do they feel they need to be more? Maiara Chenoa, for nothing, is going to change even after 200 years of back and forth... good and wicked. And Neveah is the cause yet again, said Duerre's, this girl is a noble haunt, that is a stain on us all. Look what she did all these girls and he rolls out an old tattered script.

That was a question for years that no one could get, said Haven.

'She's feeling anti-wizard - ie fallen angel - sh right freaking now,' said Sara, 'she has not stopped raving about their Bagman business, she reckons their Ministry did a cover-up, those Sprites-Haunts never - ever got their gold from her, you know...'

A gale of laughter from the middle of their table drowned their rest of Sara's words. Céline, Katy, Jinger, and MonDongos were rolling around in their seats. Neveah was high up in her world, and this was not cool - not cool! Or so they thought.

'...And then,' Hayvannah - MonDeanahgo's, tears running down her face,' and then, if you will believe it, 'she - e says to me,' she - e says,' Ere, Dung, where did get all them toads from?

'CUZ - some girl of a Sludgers gone and

Sailed all mine!’ And I say, ‘Sailed all your toads, Will, what next? So, you will be wanting some more, then?’ And if you will believe me, all, their germless gargoyle buys all. ‘I own toads back off me for a lot more what-’ she- e paid in their first place.’

‘I do not think we need to hear any more of your business dealings, thank you very much, MonDongos,’ said Mr.’s Railie abruptly, as Jinger slumped forwards on to their table, fly her wings spreading them wide- up with laughter on her face, and then looking evil to all that was around her.

‘Beg par- Deanah, Molly,’ said MonDongos at once, wiping her eyes and winking at Naddalin.’ But, you know, Will Sailed’ me off Warty Harris in their first place so I was not really doing nothing winger.’

‘I’s Do not know where you learned about right and winger, MonDongos, but you seem to have missed a few crucial lessons,’ said Mr.’s Railie coldly.

Céline and Katy buried their faces in their goblets of Butterbeer; Katy was hiccoughing. In some regard, Mr.’s Railie threw a very nasty look at Trius before getting to her feet and going to fetch a large rhubarb crumble for pudding. Naddalin looked round at her God daddy.

‘Molly does not approve of MonDongos,’ said Trius in an undertone.

‘How come she is in their Order?’ Naddalin said, very quietly.’

‘She is useful,’ Trius muttered.

‘Knows all their crooks well, she would since she is one herself.

But she is also very loyal to Duerre, who helped her out of a tight spot once. It pays to have someone like Dung around, she hears things we do not,’ like all that were before her- with this- THING- HEX.’ He said wildly.

But Molly thinks inviting her to stay for dinner is going too far. She has not forgiven her for slipping off duty when she was supposed to be tailing you.

Three helpings of rhubarb crumble and custard later and their waistband on Natalie’s jeans was feeling uncomfortably tight... (which was saying something, as their jeans had once been Diaries.)

As she laid down her spoon there was a stillness in their general conversation: Mr. Railie was leaning back in her chair, ever so- replete and relaxed; Tonks was yawning widely, her nose now back to normal; and Jill who had attracted Crook shanks out from under their dresser, was sitting cross-legged on their floor, rolling Butterbeer corks for her to chase.

Part: 7

‘Nearly time for bed, girls are nude running around, washing you can see them, I think,’ said Mr.’s Railie with a yawn, and give a nude hug to her than them my girl. And I kiss her... and finger her, bits.

She drove his tongue into her setting off another shattering moan that was music to her ears.

She was quite an instrument to play, so finely tuned, and if she touches her right, she made their most glorious sounds, raw, intense, delicious noises of pleasure as she plundered her with her tongue.

She grabbed her long hair, yanked, and pulling her closer as she had told her to do. She thrust one finger into her, cooking it and hitting her in their spot that turned her moans into one long, high-pitched orgasm.

She shuddered against her, her legs quaking, and when she finally slowed to look up at her, she saw her hair was a wild tumble, and her face was glowing.

Oh- ah...

(Next day)

‘Not just yet, Molly’ said Trius, pushing away his empty plate and turning to look at Naddalin.’ You know, I am surprised at you. I thought their first thing you would do when you got here would be to start as the queen questions about Waltemath.’

Their atmosphere in their room changed with their rapidity Naddalin associated with their arrival of Dementiators. Where seconds before it had been sleepily relaxed, it was now alert, even tense.

A frigidly had gone around their table at their mention of Waltemath’s name. Sevkett, who had been about to take a sip of wine, lowered her goblet, flying suspiciously.

‘I did!’ said Naddalin indignantly. ‘I asked Jinger and Emmah, but they said we’re not allowed in their order, so-o.’

‘And they’re quite right,’ said Mr.’s Railie.

‘You’re too young.’

She was sitting bolt upright in her chair, her fists clenched on its arms, every trace of drowsiness gone.

And since when did someone have to be in their Order of their Durizy to ask questions?’ inquired Trius. ‘Naddalin’s been trapped in that nonmagical people house for a month. She’s got their right to know what is been happen-’ ‘Hang on...!’ Interrupted Katy loudly.

‘How come Naddalin gets his questions answered?’ And- yah- said Céline angrily.

‘Yen’s- we have been trying to get stuff out of you for a month and you have not told us a single stouten thing!’ Said Katy.

‘You’re too young, you are not in their Order,’ said Céline, in a high- pitched voice, that sounded uncannily like her mothers. ‘Naddalin’s not even of age!’

‘It’s not my fault you have not been told what their orders doing,’ said Trius calmly, ‘that’s your parents’ decision. Naddalin, on their other hand.’

‘It’s not down to you to decide what is good for Naddalin!’ said Mr.’s Railie sharply. Their expression on her normally kind face looked dangerous. ‘You have not forgotten what Duerre said, I suppose?’

‘Which bit...?’ Trius asked politely, but with their air of a man readying herself for a fight.

There bit about not telling Naddalin more than she needs to know,’ said Mr.’s Railie, placing a heavy emphasis on their last three words.

Jinger, Emmah, Céline and Katy’s heads swiveled from Trius to Mr.’s Railie as though they were following a tennis rally. Jill was kneeling amid a pile of Butterbeer corks, watching their conversation with her mouth slightly open. Sevkets eyes were fixed on Trius.

‘I do not intend to tell her more than she needs to know, Molly,’ said Trius. ‘Nevertheless, as she was their one who saw Waltemath come back’ (again, there was a joint shudder around their table at their name) like she has righter than most too.’

She- it is not a member of their order of their Durizy!’ said Mr.’s Railie. ‘she’s only going to look and be around fifteen- and... soul in the body- and mind- like them all- that is what she well stays along with her barcode numbers, like them all, the age they became - soul- fallen.’

‘And she is dealt with as much as most in their Order,’ said Trius,’ and more than some.’

‘Knopper ones denying what she’s Deanahe!’ said Mr.’s Railie, her voice rising, her fists trembling on their arms of her chair.’ But she’s still...’

- ‘She’s not a child!’ said Trius impatiently.
- ‘She’s not an adult either!’ said Mr.’s Railie, their color rising in her cheeks. ‘she’s not’ Alyssa, Trius!’

‘I’m perfectly clear who she is, thanks, Molly,’ said Trius coldly.

‘I’m not sure you are!’ Said Mr.’s Railie.

- ‘Sometimes, their way you talk about her, it is as though you think you have your best friend back!’
- ‘What’s Jigger with that?’ said Naddalin.
- ‘What’s winger, Naddalin, is that you are not your daddy, however much you might look like her!’ said Mr.’s Railie, her eyes still boring into Trius.

- ‘You are still at Savannah and adults responsible for you should not forget it!’

‘Meaning- I am an irresponsible God daddy?’

Oh- deliquesced Trius, his voice rising.

‘Connotation you have been known to act rashly, Trius, which is why-why- Duerre keeps reminding, you to stay at home...

- And-

‘Well leave my orders from Duerre out of this, if you please!’ said Trius deafeningly.

‘Arthur!’ said Mr.’s Railie, rounding on her publicities.’ Arthur, back me up!’

Mr. Railie did not speak at once. She took off her glasses and cleaned them on her black wispy like robes, only when she had replaced them carefully on her nose did, he reply, he is being her love of life did that.

‘Duerre knows their position has changed, Molly. She accepts that Naddalin must be filled in, to a certain extent, now that she is staying at Headquarters.’

‘Yes, but there is an alteration between that and inviting her to ask whatever she likes!’
‘Partially,’ said Sevket quietly, some ways, away from Trius at last, as Mr.’s Railie turned quickly to her, hopeful that finally, she was about to get an ally, ‘I think it better that Naddalin gets their facts not all their facts, Molly, but their general picture from us, rather than a garbled version from... others.’

Her expression was mild, but Naddalin felt sure Sevket, at least, knew that some Extendable Ears had survived Mr.’s Rallies purge.

‘Well,’ said Mr.’s Railie, breathing deeply And Pa. around their table for the support that did not come, ‘well... I can see I am going to be overruled. I will just say this: Duerre, must have had she - regards for not wanting Naddalin to know too much, and sequin as someone who has

Naddalin’s best interests at heart.’

‘She’ is not your girl,’ said Trius quietly.

‘she’ is as good as... f*cked,’ said Mr.’s Railie fiercely.’ Who else has she - got that feeling about her?’

~*~

- ‘She’s got me!’

Part: 8

‘Yes,’ said Mr.’s Railie, her lip- curling,’ they’re- thing is, it’s ratted her difficult for you to look after her while you’ve been locked UP in Dizery I And, has not it?’

Trius started to rise from the chairs.

‘Molly, you are not their- the only girl at their table who cares about Naddalin,’ said Sevket sharply. ‘Trius, sit down.’

Mr.’s Railie’s lower lip was trembling. Trius sank flying back into the chairs, at this point face white as could be.

‘I think Naddalin ought to be allowed a say in there,’ Sevket continued, ‘she-’s old enough to decide for herself.’

‘I want to know what’s been going on,’ Naddalin said simultaneously.

She- did not look at Mr.’s Railie. Her- had been touched- d by what she- had said about she is as good as a girl, but she- was also impatient with the mollycoddling. Trius was right, she- was not a child.

‘Very well,’ said Mr.’s Railie, her voice- cracked. ‘Jill, Jinger, Emma, Céline, & Katy. I want you out of their kitchen- n, now.’

There- was an instant uproar.

‘Whereof age!’ Céline And Katy bellowed together.

‘If Naddalin’s allowed, why cannot I?’ shouted Jinger.

‘Mom, I want to see- are!’ wailed Jill.

‘NO...!’ shouted Mr.’s Railie, timewasting up, her eyes over bright like the light sky of Earth that we used to know. ‘I absolutely forbid.’

‘Molly, you cannot stop Céline And Katy,’ said Mr. Railie wearily. They are of age.’

‘Theory is still at Savannah.’

‘But they are legally adults now,’ said Mr.

Railie, in their- same tired voice.

Mr.’s Railie was now scarlet in their- face.

‘I’m oh, all right there- n, Céline, And Katy can stay, but Jinger.’

‘Nathaniel tells’ me... And Emmah everything you say anyway!’ said Jinger passionately.
‘Won’t will not you?’ She - added uncertainly, meeting Naddalin’s eyes.

For a split second, Naddalin considered telling Jinger that she - would not tell her a single word, that she - could try a taste of being kept in their - dark and see how she - liked it.

Never she - less their - nasty impulse vanished - as they looked at each other.

‘Course I’s will,’ Naddalin said.

Jinger... and... Emmah smiled.

Part: 9

‘Fine!’ shouted Mr.’s Railie. ‘Fine! Jill -

BED!’

Jill did not go quietly; they could shape she is raging and storming at her mother - r all their - way up there - stairs, and she - n’ she - reached their - hall Mr.’s Blacks ear-splitting shrieks were added to their - din. Sevket hurried off to their - portrait to restore calm. It was only after she - had returned, closing their - kitchen - n door behind her and dequeen she seats at their - table again, that Trius spoke.

‘OKay, Naddalin... what do you want to know?’

Naddalin took a deep breath... And asked their - question that had obsessed her for their - last month.

‘Where’s Waltemath?’ she - said, ignoring their - renewed shudders and winces at their - name.
‘What’s she - doing? I have been trying to watch their - nonmagical people news, and their - re has not been anything that looks like her yet, no funny deaths or anything.’

‘That is because - they have not been any funny deaths yet,’ said Trius, ‘Not any way... And we know quite a - lot.’

‘More than she - thinks we do, anyway,’ said Sevket.

‘How come she - ’s stopped killing people?’ Naddalin asked. She - knew Waltemath had murdered more than once in their - last year alone.

‘Because she- does not want to draw attention to herself,’ said Trius. ‘It would be dangerous for her. Her comeback did not come off quite their- way she- wanted it to, you see. She- messed it up.’

‘Or rats her-, you messed it tip for her,’ said Sevket, with a satisfied smile.

‘How?’ Naddalin asked, perplexed.

‘You were not supposed to survive!’ said Trius.

‘Nobody apart from the Death Eaters was supposed to know she’d come back.

But you survived to bear witness.

‘And they’re- very last per girl she- wanted to be alerted to her return their- moment she- got back was Duerre,’ said Sevket.

‘And you made sure Duerre knew at once.’ ‘How has that she- led?’ Naddalin asked.

‘Are you kidding?’ Said Sara incredulously. ‘Duerre was there- the only one You Know

Who was ever scared of!’

Thanks to you, Duerre could recall their- Order of their- Durizy about an hour after Waltemath returned,’ said Trius.

Part: 10

‘So, what is their- Order been doing?’ said Naddalin, Looking around at them all.

‘Torqueing as hard as we can to make sure

Waltemath cannot carry out the plans,’ said Trius.

How would you know what she plans are?’ Naddalin asked quickly.

‘Duerre’s got a shrewd idea,’ said Sevket, ‘And Duerre’s shrewd ideas normally turn out to be correct.’

‘So-o what does Duerre reckon she- ’s planning?’

~Planning...

The Underworld

Open your eyes... too the... Underworld-

I opened my eyes- towards- Mattie, obviously- as well as to my bigger sister, who has saved me many- countless times from the dark underneath of the black deaths- lost in time and space alike, a place that one can only dream of... yet, feels- oh so really going- into, as well as for who I would delightedly go down underneath deep in and wish- to save from- The Underworld.

Creep... creep... creeping in on them...

One mysterious, cryptic, and ambiguous night when Megan went to bed, Mattie was her flabby, stumpy, chocolate-burrowing and junk- food, pop-loving litter sister, whom annoyed the crap out of her, and charmed her both in a fun playful way, a way that on two that are clause would understand and get...

~*~

Then the next morning, and when she woke up, she was no longer. Do you get that? NO LONGER!

~*~

Perhaps- Magen could not define the transformations which took place here. Can you yet...?

~*~

She looked the same yet was not she said the same, yet it was not, she loved me yet it was not the same love I felt back, he was not her. Do you get that? She - was no longer...

~*~

Mattie and was wearing the same pair of ratty fleece pajamas red, with the same yet his with the little toe sticking out, of course, that would be her, the hole gets bigger every night I see her; just like in the back too, girl she is getting chubby, and he arose down the set of steps precisely the same way the actual, genuine - Mattie would have done: thumb, bump, banged, sliding on his rump, all the way doing to the landing.

Saying - Weeee!

However, she was not the equivalent of what I know her as. In actual truth, here, he was somewhat, quite unlike the others his and my age.

~*~

It was approximately - in the way she is observing her: It was as though celebrity had stretched behindhand his eyes and twisted away with diligent and complete enthusiasm. Were young girls we do not understand are underworld... do you...?

~*~

Mattie - marched snakingly, oh too silently, noiselessly, and like a glimmer of something underworldly.

~*~

Silent steps he made to the table, she sat kindly sat like a stone in his chair emotionless to the real world, that we live in, plus he placed a paper towel on his lap.

~*~

The real Mattie never used a bib or towel. Yet she - was all neat and such... she just whipped it wherever she pleased. Yet nothing not one of the old guys or girls here noticed - a thing - wrong - with her. Can you see it...?

~*~

Mrs. Smith is Megan's mother. Do you see here there, just doing her day to day thing?

Mrs. Smith did not break for her kid's attraction lost in the crazed - fantasy world of work and distress, and being worked up over it, nonstop categorization from end to end the stack of bills on the kitchen table; making occasional noises of unhappiness.

~*~

Megan's father continuous fly - by - night in and out of the room, his tie loosened, in addition to that only wearing one sock and no pants - just boxers, muttering distractedly on the cell phone about what seems to be nothing that makes any senses.

~*~

The imitation - Mattie to me not them, picked up her spoon as well as offered me some of her cherished food, which just does not happen. With this big girl that love - love - loves to eat everything in his sight, is that, not right?

~*~

With that creepy - so - o eerie - appearance, appearance, which chilled me to the very center core of my young little body. Do you see me there? Do you see my brown hair and my bow ties...?

~*~

My big and stunning immense russet eyes? Am I not - I am cute to you?

Do you see my little face in pale white, glow in the morning sun coming in from the window over there by the sink, mom doing the dishes, and everything else she does all at once it seems to me?

~*~

Then the phony- Mattie starts to eat his lucky- cereal bits, painstakingly, unhurriedly, harpooning all the alphabet letters out of his Alpha- bits one by one as well as reinforcing them up along the rim of her bowl.

Spilling out- creep- creepy- little- girl- die!

~*~

I see in her eyes the spider calling form he is dead eyes and out of them, giving me this message that was drug down to the coldness and dampness of- The Underworld-ness below us.

~*~

I could hear the sounds of the music eerie to me playing her to sleep or it seemed to me... the horn was all I could make out... it was all muffled to my stifled ear, under and I look at the hole of temptation between downwards that is only part of me that goes in my soul its- I finger it and they- come, is where they must have taken her... do you think so?

Was the door under her bed was glowing...? It is all most underworld time... Creepers...

Megan's heart dropped for the chest to foot and back up... in panic. She knew at that moment, at the time, on this day, in this year, what had come about... as well as she distinguished, that the heavens were up like the real world to me as I go down in the heat of the moment and if you turned around fast, spinning in the confusion, circling down to the dark depths below, and then stood motionless... so still.

~*~

As the evil ripped through me and my figure, like spiders calling all over me. Tangled in the webs of their chromes. Like me going through them with my lantern, I could not see up or down or around just the voices of temptations.

Come, come, see us, hear us, play with- US...we got cookies and candy if you give up your soul to us!

~*~

The entire underworld just keeps turning the circling around me, deeper and deeper, lower, and lower... I went- hearing all their voices getting amplified to me.

Perhaps- maybe, just maybe his too, Mattie's soul had been taken by- The Underworld entities.

As well as they had left this thing, all kinds of things behind, in my room and her area, do you see them?

~*~

This not- my younger- sister, she's been replaced... or is it?

Is it some other form of her too? 'Mom,' she said, and then, when her mother did not immediately respond, tried again a little louder.

(Back to that mooring)

'Mom.'

'Yes...' -Magg.

Mom- 'Mum?' I said fast and abruptly! I jumped, to the harshness of her high squally pain in the butt sometimes voice. She narrowed her eyes at her for an instant, the same way she has observed me and her when we do something wrong, and they say your full name.

~*~

Like always- 'Mattie's being weird,' Megan said.

Mom- stared alertly at my daughter, nevertheless with cold eyes. Then I twirled around, unexpectedly, to my husband looking at me with wonder and concern to my ways. 'Did you ever pay the electric bill and the rest we can afford?'

~*~

Mom- I didn't seem to hear her as I was predated away about nothing, but her young ways of kid-ish mumbling. 'Have you seen my glasses, and my phone, my, I-pad, and mind?'

~*~

Dad- was questioning, lifting the banana and peering underneath of it, and it was so turning my tummy looking at it, I am not a dumb girl you know.

He- he- he...

~*~

‘They’re on your head doing cartwheels.’ STOP!

‘My reading glasses... are...?’

Mom- I sighed impatiently. ‘It says this is our absolute ultimate announcement. I do not recollect the first notice. Did we pay the electric bill? I could have sworn...’

I do not worry about this sh*t! I a little girl remember I was thinking. I do not say yet I think that is for sure.

~*~

‘I can’t go to work without my glasses!’ Mr. Smith opened the refrigerator, stared at its contents, closed the refrigerator, and dashed out of the room into the living room for the door without. Through the table, it feels as I hit my leg... damn-it.

~*~

The replica- Mattie began rearranging the cereal letters on the outside of his bowl. She spelled out three words: I H-A-T- E y-o-u! In addition, you are going to die tonight in my room if you do not come down with me.

~*~

Then she gathered her hands, and stared at her with that bizarrely unoccupied look, as though the black part of his eyes had eaten up all the color.

Down I went... Holding this child's hand... Come...

The Underworld- is like... a webbed field of never- endianness, the raps you mind clean of you and your thoughts. The underworld could be the holes that go in me. it wants to come out and play with me too.

~*~

Megan's insides trembled again as it comes for her. Seeing the twigs, and all the lights and branches suck her in, like she.

She slid off her chair and went over to her mother.

She tugged at the sleeve of her mother's nightgown, which had a small coffee stain on its elbow.

(Back to midday)

'Mommy.'

'Yes, baby?' she asked absentmindedly.

'Mattie's freaking me out.'

'Mattie,' Mrs. Smith said, without looking up from her notepad, on which she was now scribbling various figures. 'Stop bothering your sister like that.'

Here is what the real Mattie would have done: He would have stuck out his tongue or thrown his napkin at Megan in retribution, or he would have said, 'It's her face that's the bother.'

Nevertheless, this impostor did none of those things. The impostor just stared quietly at Megan and smiled.

Her teeth looked very white. 'Mom-' Megan swore, and her mother sighed, in addition, threw down her pencil with so much force that it bounced.

~*~

'Please, Megan,' she said, with barely concealed impatience. 'Can't you see that I'm busy? Why don't you go outside and play for a bit?'

Megan knew better than to argue with her mother when she was in a mood.

So, she went outside. It was a hot and hazy morning- far too hot for late April.

She was hoping to see one of the neighbors out doing something- watering a plant, walking a dog- but it was very still.

Megan almost, never- ever saw the neighbors. It was not that kind of neighborhood. She did not even know most of their names: only Mrs. Rosenblatt, who was so old she looked exactly like a snip.

Today, as on most days, Mrs. Rosenblatt was sitting on her porch, rocking, and fanning herself with one of the Chinese delivery menus that were often stuck mysteriously, invisibly, in the middle of the night- under the front door.

‘Hello,’ she called out to Megan and waved. ‘Hello!’

Megan called back... she liked Mrs. Rosenblatt, even though Mrs. Rosenblatt hardly ever moved except to rock in her chair and could not be counted on to do anything interesting.

~*~

Mrs. Rosenblatt liked to rock even in cold- weather, and she would appear on her porch so bundled in blankets and scarves, she looked like an overfilled coatrack.

‘Would you like a glass of milk?’

Mrs. Rosenblatt called out. ‘or a cookie?’ She offered Megan milk, and a cookie every time they saw each other unless it was winter; in which case, she offered hot chocolate and a cookie.

‘Not today, thank you,’ Megan said. Remorsefully, as she always did. She was not allowed - to accept things to eat or drink from nonfamily members. Megan often wished the rule applied to Family Members instead.

She would much rather have had one of Mrs.

Rosenblatt’s cookies than her Aunt Stirginia’s tuna casserole. She wondered whether she should tell Mrs. Rosenblatt about Mattie, but decided against it.

(Three weeks previous)

Magen- I am at recess when she had tried to tell Sammie and Ellie, was so wrong about the underworldly societies, and the constant threat they posed, they had laughed at her and called her a liar.

Mrs. Rosenblatt was a good listener- partly, Megan thought because she couldn't hear very well, nonetheless, Megan did not want to jeopardize this.

~*~

There was only one thing that Megan loathed more than liars, besides that was being suspects of being one. At one edge of the yard, a pile of pinecones has been neatly stacked.

~*~

Megan had decided them this way only yesterday, thinking that she and Mattie might play a round of Pinecone bowling in the morning.

Nevertheless, she could not play with the false Mattie; he would no doubt find a way to cheat.

~*~

She had a sudden wrenching fierce desire for Anna, her old babysitter, to come home.

Why?

Not sure, she would have played with me over the years, outside and in she showed me so much about myself too and the underworld that goes down in me that is where she went- I just know it.

At least that is what I think... do you?

Last fall in me was Anna, she did not beeline that I have the world to me, till she entered the black hole of mine, she has gone away to middle school not long before...

This meant that she had stimulated, and could not babysit anymore, in addition instead Megan and Mattie were left with Mandy, who always chewed her gum too loudly and didn't like to play games- she did not like anything, really, except talking on the phone .

~*~

Anna had come over to babysit several times during her summer vacation, but on her spring break, she had gone away with her friends. Megan and Mattie and Sammie had gotten a water-warped postcard from her, but most of the writing had been too blurry to read.

~*~

I have the postcard she had sent from the beach, after all this time, and a white sweatshirt with a fierce-looking bear on the front, explaining in the involved note that it was her school's mascot.

Mattie had cried like a baby when it turned out the sweatshirt was in Megan's size, and she had finally lent it to her.

He had promptly spilled tomato sauce on it, and she'd refused to speak to her for an entire day.

Megan knew it was stupid, but sometimes she fantasized, that Anna would turn up again and confess her deepest secret: that Megan and Mattie were, in fact, her siblings, and they had all been torn apart by some horrible event when they were little and forced into different families.

Oh!

Um-hum! Come for us...

Do you see the lying silt ship that leads into 'The Underworld?'

The Underworld- is a dark wet place, where you come in and see the thing that brings you joy, yet makes you feel weak to the wrongness of what you are doing to yourself, there is no light only wonder, there are voices come, screaming for you to come...

Like sweeping the sides of you until you have no choice, but move the feelgoods of their games, that they play as they get you to do as they say, and the enter into you and play with your brain and you no long you going on with your day, what do you say- do you play with your underworld; Maddie went into mine, and he not coming out.

Megan's fantasies were a little hazy after that point, but she thought that somehow, she, Anna, and Mattie would end up on a long journey together, hunting down some of the magical creatures Anna had always told them about, like gnomes and nymphets (Who were gorgeous, then again corrupt wicked- tempered.)

Megan sighed; Anna would also have known what to do about the spider-like entities got her to as she went into her hole to the underworld. She was, after all, the creature who had first told Megan and Mattie about them.

She was the one who had warned them about the strange spider creatures and had told them what they must do to be dwindling.

Megan scanned the yard for gnomes but saw nothing. Only last week, Mattie, the real Mattie, had spotted one scampering into the rhododendron.

~*~

The real me was not there either they were making me come, for there ways and not my own, as I went on trying to do me, and my day.

‘Look, Megan!’ She had cried out, and she had turned just in time to see a hard, brown hide, which was as fractured along with worn as a leather purse.

~*~

It was too hot for the gnomes today, Megan decided. Anna had told Megan they preferred cool climates.

Megan pressed her face up against the small fir tree that stood next to the birdbath, inhaling deeply.

It was easier to see the magic through its branches, she found.

The itchy needles poked deeply into her skin, and she stood and squinted through the layers of khaki.

Looking at the world through the fir tree meant seeing only the essential things: the vivid olive of the meadow’s, dew glistening on petals, a robin flicking its tail, a squirrel rustling through the rhododendron, a miracle of life, and growth that forever pulsed under the commonplaceness.

~*~

Advantageous, of course, it was only when looking through the tree that you could make a wish, and have it come true, Anna had also told them that.

Megan spoke a wish quietly into the scratchy branches.

We will not repeat it... All and sundry knows that only wishes that are kept secret will ever come true.

On the other hand, then again know this: Oh! All- the desire was about Mattie and finding what was with me, as the world of an image that I felt doing this... looking for the wandering things that would make you wonder, I may find digging and fingering myself, for her inside me.

~*~

Megan heard a step behind her. She turned and saw the Mattie- who- was- no long her to me- or them, Mattie standing on the front porch, watching her.

Megan sucked in a deep breath like she sucked us into her underworld as we look and put our head and body down in it to get there, gathered her young age, and said, 'You are not my sister.' not- Mattie stared at her with flat blue eyes. 'Absolutely, I am,' she said calmly.

'You are not them; I am not me doing this.'

'Am too... I said it too do you see that I am I do not lie... you know that sissy.' 'Prove it,' Megan said, crossing her arms, and she tried to think of a question whose answer only the real Mattie would know.

She was quiet for a bit. At last, she asked, 'When you are playing hide- and- seek on a rainy day, not she is doing it in me, what is the best hiding space?'

~*~

The old place was- 'Behind the bookcase in the basement,' not- Mattie answered automatically. 'In the crawl space that smells like mold.' Megan was disappointed.

She had gotten it right; this fake Mattie was obviously smarter than she gave her credit for- smarter, she would not wonder, than the real Mattie.

(Though that was not saying much. only a week ago, the real Mattie had tried to turn the basement into a swimming pool by flooding the sink! Absurd.)

Maybe- she needed to ask a former question within.

‘What must you do every night before you go to sleep?’

Megan said, eyeing the fake- Mattie narrowly to see whether there was any hesitation or shiftiness in her answer.

However, she re-joined promptly, drawing a big X across her chest, ‘you must cross yourself once from shoulder to hip and say out loud, ‘sweep, sweep, bring me to sleep.

Clear the webs from my room with the bristliest broom.’

~*~

Megan was stunned. She had been sure positive! The question: would baffle fake - Mattie, but her answer was correct, and he stood looking at her with an expression of triumph.

When Anna had first discovered the underworld entries, she had invented this rhyme as a way of keeping the underworld boys at bay while they slept. The girl in the underworld makes me come to them and play with the top and bottoms of the getaways, to the soul.

Everyone knows there is nothing a spider fears’ more than a broom, and someone sweeping with it, and the broom charm had, in fact, protected them for years. Mattie, the real Mattie, must have forgotten to say the bedtime magnetism last night before she went to sleep.

She and Megan had been fighting about seeing each other’s worlds- Mattie had accused her of stealing her favorite socks, which were sapphire, and embroidered with turtles, as though she would ever have worn anything so preposterous- besides, Megan called her distrustful, and when he did not know what that meant, she stormed into his room and slammed the door.

~*~

She was distracted; that must be why she had not said the broom charm. Megan felt a heavy rush of guilt. It was her fault, at least partially. And so, The Underworld guys had gotten her: They had dropped down from the ceiling on their glistening webs of shadowed darkness and dropped their silken threads in her ear, and extracted his soul slowly, like a fisherman persuading a trout from the water on a taut nylon fishing line.

In its place, they deposited their eggs; then they withdrew to their shadowed, dark corners and their underground lairs with her soul bound closely in silver thread.

And the soulless shell would wake the next morning, and walk, and talk, as counterfeit-
Mattie was walking and talking.

All the same eventually, the soulless shell would crumble to dust, and thousand-Underworld guys and some girls- nested and grown- would burst forth, like a Megan hatching from an egg.

And distraught parents would wake up, believing their children to have been kidnapped while they slept, and they would appear tearfully on television, begging for their children's safe return, when really The Underworld gangs were to blame.

Megan felt a sudden tightness in her throat as they made squirt it all out within and she saw them all as they giggle saying it's all right to do this.

'You see oozing with this webbing!' The sham- Mattie crowed. 'I told you. I am your sister.'
Then Megan was struck by an idea.

'Come here,' she said to not- Mattie, and even though she was filled with revulsion by the closeness of this imitation, this cold and cardboard thing, she forced herself to stand still as she approached.

Unexpectedly she lunged for her and began tickling her tummy.

~*~

The real Mattie was extraordinarily ticklish and would have screamed with laughter and tried to shove Megan off and begged for mercy.

Megan loved the sound of Mattie's joke. It came, in short, explosive bursts, as though each time she was relearning how to do it.

This Mattie stood still, watching her dully. 'What are you doing?' She asked.

~*~

Megan pulled away as I went back down in me and then she was all up in mine too. She then had the same feeling she'd had several years ago, when she had swung too high and too fast on the swings at the playground, and the world teetered underneath her: a feeling of triumph but also of terror.

She knew it...

This Mattie was not the real Mattie. And that meant that the soul of the real Mattie had been bound up in the silver thread and carried deep underground and that inside the body of not-Mattie, insects were nesting.

Megan drew herself up to her full four feet four inches.

'I am not afraid of you,' she said- to fake Mattie, but she was, of course, speaking to all those infant underworld boys sleeping soundly in their thousands of soft eggs, somewhere deep inside his chest.

And of course, she was afraid. She was more afraid than she had ever been in her life.

'I will find my real sister, and I will bring her back to me and my mommy and daddy, that doesn't get that I play with newly found- Underworld.'

~*~

In addition to then she spun quickly on her heel and stalked off toward the house, so not-Mattie and the tiny monsters he carried inside her would not see that she was shaking.

Let us just say- I never- ever stopped playing with this underworld, but I did find out what it really was... and where it can take, she and me...

I hope you understand this Underworld to and have fun with it...

We will come for you too...

Death Devours

Part: 1

‘Well, firstly, she- wants to build up the army again,’ said Trius.’ In their- old days she- had huge numbers then she come and: watchers and wizards and fallen angels alike, she’d intimidated or bewitched into following her, she faithful death devours, a great variety of Dark creatures.

You hurt her planning to recruit their- giants; well, they will be just one of their- groups she’s after. She’s certainly not going to try and take on their- Bureau of Magic with only a dozen death devours.’

‘So, you are trying to stop her from getting more followers?’

‘We’re doing our best,’ said Sevket.

‘How?’

‘Well, their- main thing is to try, and convincing as many people as possible that you know- whom she- has refunded, to put them on their guard,’ said Sara.’ It’s proving a tricky, though.’

‘Why...?’

WHY- ‘Because of their- Bureau’s attitude,’ said Tonks.’ You saw Cornelius Harlan after You Know Who came back, Naddalin.

Well, she- has not shifted her position at all.

She’s refusing to believe it happens.’

‘But why?’ Said Naddalin desperately, why is she - being so stupid? If Duerre...’

‘Ah, well, you have put your finger on the- problem,’ said Mr. Railie with an ironic smile.’
Duerre.’

‘Harlan is frightened of her, you see,’ said Tonks sadly.

‘Frightened of Duerre?’ Said Naddalin incredulously.

Frightened of what she’s up to,’ said Mr. Railie.’ Harlan thinks Duerre’s plotting to overthrow her. she- thinks Duerre wants to be Martita for Magic.’

‘But Duerre does not want’

‘Unquestionably, she- does not,’ said Mr. Railie.’ ‘She never wanted their- Martian's job, even though a lot of people wanted her to take it she'd Millicent Bagnold retired.

Harlan came to power instead, but she’s never- ever quite forgotten how much popular support Duerre had, even though Duerre never- ever applied for their- job.’

Part: 2

‘Deep down, Harlan knows Duerre’s much cleverer than she- is a much more powerful wizard, and in there- early days of their Bureau she- was forever as thinking Duerre for help, and advice,’ said Sevket.

‘But it seems she’s become fond of power, and much more confident. She- loves being Martita for Magic And she’s managed to convince herself that she’s there- clever one And Duerre’s simply stirring up trouble for their- sake of it.’

‘How can she- think that?’ Said Naddalin angrily.’ How can she- think Duerre would just make it all up, that I would make it all up?’ ‘Because accepting that AVA’s back would mean trouble like their- Bureau has not had to cope with for fourteen years,’ said Trius bitterly.’ Harlan j ust cannot bring herself to face it. It is so much more comfortable to convince herself Duerre’s lying to destabilize her.’

‘You see their- problem,’ said Sevket.’ While they're- Bureau insists there is nothing to fear from AVA it is hard to convince people she’s back, especially as they do not want to believe it in their- first place. what is more, their- Bureau is leaning she- avidly on their- Daily Prop not to report any of what they are calling Duerre’s rumor-mongering, so most of their- wizarding community is completely unaware anything happened, and that makes them easy targets for their- Death Consumers if they are using their- Imperious Curse.'

Nonetheless, you are telling people, aren't you?' Said Naddalin, around at Mr. Railie, Trius, Sara, Mon- Deanahgos, Sevket, And Tonks.' You're letting people know she's back?'

They all smiled humorlessly.

'Well, as everyone thinks I am a mad mass murderer and they're- Bureau is put a ten thousand... And Galleon price on my head, I can hardly stroll up the- street and start and out leaflets, can I's?' said Trius restlessly.

'And I am not a very popular dinner guest with most of their- community,' said Sevket.' It's an occupational hazard of being a werewolf.'

'Tonks And Arthur would lose their jobs at their- Bureau if they started shooting their mouths off,' said Trius,' And we need to have spies inside their- Bureau because you can bet AVA will have them.'

'We've managed to convince a couple of people, though,' said Mr. Railie. Tonks, she, for one she's too young to have been in their- Order of their- Durizy last time, and having Auroras on our side is a huge advantage, Regal c*ckleboats been a real asset, too; she's in charge of their- hunt for Trius, so she's been feeding their- Bureau information that Trius is in Tibet.'

'But if none of you are putting their- news out that Mazel Amsel back' Naddalin began.

'Who said none of us are putting their- news out?' Said Trius. Why would you think Duerre's in such trouble?'

'What you mean?' Naddalin asked...

The theory is trying to discredit her,' said Sevket.' Didn't you see there - Daily Prop shot last week? They reported that she'd been voted out of there - Chair of their- International Confederation of Wizards- and Fallen because she's getting old and losing the grip, but it is not true; she- was voted out by Bureau wizards after she- made a speech announcing a Mazel Amsel return.

The theory has demoted her from Chief Warlock on their- Morrill that is there- Wizard High Court And they are toluene about dequeen away she Orders of Nunez, First Class, too.'

But Duerre says she- does not care what they do if they do not take her off the - Hayvannah-cholate 'Black Crow' Torit Cards,' said Sara, grinning.

'It's no laughing matter,' said Mr. Railie sharply.' If she- carries on defying their- Bureau like their she- could end up in Dizery- l's and, and they're- the last thing we want is to have Duerre locked up. While You Know ~ Who knows Duerre's out there and wise to what she's up to she's going to go cautiously. If Duerre's out old there- way well, you know, who will have a clear field.'

'But if AVA's trying to recruit more Death devours it's bound to get out that she's come back, isn't it?' Asked Naddalin desperately...

'Ava Amsel doesn't march up to people's houses and bang on their fingertip doors, Naddalin,' said Trius.' Her- tricks, jinxes and blackmails them.

She's well-practiced at operating in secret. In any case, gathering followers is only one thing she's interested in. She's got other plans too, plans she- can put into operation very quietly indeed, and she's concentrating on those for their moment.'

'What's she- after apart from followers?'

Naddalin asked swiftly. Her- thought she- saw Trius And Lupin exchange their- most fleeting of looks before Trius answered.

'Stuff she- can only get by stealth.'

Wither- if Naddalin continued to look puzzled, Trius said,' Like a weapon.

Something she- did not have- last time.'

'She -and- her was- like very powerful before?'

'Yes.'

'Like what kind of weapon?' Said Naddalin.

'Something worse than their- Aveda Keara...?'

'That's enough...!'

Mr.'s Railie spoke from their- shadows beside their- door. Naddalin had not noticed she return from dequeen Jill upstairs. Her arms where crossed and she- looked furious.

'I want you in bed, now. All of you,' she- added, that went around at Céline, Katy, Jinger, And Emmah.

'You cannot boss us' Céline began to say monstrously.

'Watch me,' snarled Mr.'s Railie. She- was trembling slightly as she- looked at Trius.'

You've given Naddalin plenty of information. Any more and you might just as well induct her into the- War straightaway.'

'Why not?' said Naddalin quickly. Till join, I want to join, I want to fight.'

'No...'

It was not Mr.'s Railie who spoke their time, but Sevket.

There- war is formed only of overage wizards, fallen kind.' she- said.' Fallen girl wizards- haunts- angels- so on- who have left Savannah,' she- added, as Céline And Teori~ opened their mouths. There are dangers involved of which you can have no idea, any of you... I think Molly's right, Trius. Weave said enough.'

Trius half shrugged but did not argue. Mr.'s Railie beckoned imperiously to a- sure the girls and Emmah. One by one they stood up and Naddalin, recognizing defeat, followed suit.

There- Noble and Most Ancient House of Black...

Mr.'s Railie followed them upstairs again.

Forbidding... Ghastly.

'I want you all to go straight to bed, no toluene,' she- said as they reached their- first and,' and we've got a busy day Hayvanna harrow. I expect Jill's asleep,' she- added to Emmah, 'so try not to wake she up.'

‘Asleep, yes, right,’ said Céline in an undertone, after Emmah said to them goodnight and they were climbing to their- next floor.’ If Jill’s not lying awake waiting for Emmah to tell her everything they said downstairs, there- and I am a Flapperdom...’

All right, Jinger, Naddalin,’ said Mr.’s Railie on their- second and, pointing their- m into their bedroom.’ Off to bed with you.’

‘Night,’ Naddalin And Jinger said to the- twins from Rockville.

‘Sleep tight,’ said Céline, winking.

Mr.’s Railie closed their- door behind Naddalin with a sharp snap. There- bedroom looked, if anything, even darker and gloomier than it had at first sight.

There- the blank picture on their- wall was now breathing very flying horses and deeply, as though its invisible occupant was asleep.

Naddalin put on the pajamas, took off the glasses and climbed into her chilly bed while Jinger threw rows Indulgences up on top of their- wardrobe, the girls who were clattering around rustling their wings restlessly.

‘We cannot let them out to hunt every night,’ Jinger explained as she- pulled on the maroon pajamas.’ Duerre does not want too many Flying horses with wings swooping around their- square, thinks it will look suspicious. Oh yes... I forgot...’

She’s a-crossed to the- door and fastened it.

‘What’re you doing that for?’

‘Reached-’ said Jinger as she- turned off their- light.’ The first night, she and I came and ring in at three in the- morning. Trust me, you do not want to wake up and find her Flying horse’s around your room. ‘Anyway... she- got into the bed, settled down under the- covers then turned to look at Naddalin in their- darkness; Naddalin could see she outline by their- moonlight filtering in through their- grimy window,’ what you reckon?’ Naddalin did not need to ask what Jinger meant.

‘Well, they did not tell us much we could not have guessed, did they?’ She- said, thinking of all that had been said downstairs.’ I mean, all they have said is that they’re- orders trying to stop people joining in...’

There- was a sharp intake of breath from Jinger.

‘-Deport,’ said Naddalin firmly.’ She and you are you going to start using her name? Trius And Sevket do.’

Jinger ignored their last comment.

‘Yeah, you are right,’ she- said,’ we already knew everything they told us, from using their- Extendable Ears. There- only a new bit was...’

Part: 3

Crack... Crack, hit- slam- and bang...

‘OUCH!’

‘Keep your voice down, Jinger or mom will be back up here.’

‘You two just Apparated on my knees!’

‘Yeah, well, it is harder in the- dark.’

Naddalin saw their- blurred outlines of Céline And Katy leaping down from Jinger’s bed.

‘There- was a groan of bedsprings and Naddalin’s mattress descended a few inches as Katy sat down near the feet. ‘So, got there yet?’ Said Katy eagerly.

There- weapon Trius mentioned?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Let slip, more like,’ said Céline with relish, now sitting next to Jinger.

‘We did not hear about that on there- old Extendable, did we?’

‘What you reckon it is?’ Said Naddalin.

‘Could be anything,’ Said Céline.

‘But there cannot be anything worse than their- Aveda Keara Curse, can there?’ Said Jinger. what’s worse than death?’

‘Maybe it is something that can kill loads of people at once,’ suggested Katy.

‘Maybe it is some particularly painful way of killing people,’ said Jinger fearfully.

‘She’s got the- Cruciate Curse for causing pain,’ said Naddalin, ‘she- does not need anything more efficient than that.’

There was a pause and Naddalin knew that there- others, like her, we’re wondering what horrors their weapon could perpetrate.

So, who you think got it now?’ Asked Katy. ‘I hope it is our side,’ said Jinger, sounding slightly nervous.

‘If it is, Duerre’s keeping it,’ said Céline.

‘Here’s?’ Said Jinger quickly. She does that when she gets nervous.

‘SKOUFYCEOL?’

‘Bet it is!’ Said Katy. That is, why she hid the- ‘the body of Neveah’. ‘Some weapons going to be a lot bigger than them- ‘like the size of the body of Neveah’, though!’ Said Jinger.

‘Not unavoidably’ said Céline.

‘Yeah, size is no guarantee of power,’ said Katy. ‘Look at Jill she is powerful without them.’

‘What you mean?’ Said Naddalin.

‘You’ve never been on the- receiving the end of one of the Bat-Bogey she- axes, have you?’

‘shah!’ Said Céline, half rising iron their- bed.’

‘Listen, pay attention, take note...!’

They fell silent... to that, many footsteps were coming up the- stairs.

‘Mom,’ said Katy and without further ado, there was a flamboyant crash and Naddalin felt their- weight vanish from the- end of their bed.

A few seconds later, they heard the- floorboard creak outside their door; Mr.’s Railie was listening to check her- there or not they were toluene.

The- dig and Pig widgeon hooted dolefully. There- floorboard creaked again and they're heard she- heads upstairs to- check on Céline and Katy.

‘She does not trust us at all, you know,’ said Jinger regretfully.

Naddalin was sure she- would not be able to fall asleep; their- evening had been so packed with things to think about that she- fully expected to lie awake for hours mulling it all over.

She wanted to continue toluene to Jinger, but Mr.’s Railie was now running back downstairs again, and once she- had gone she- distinctly heard others snaking their way upstairs... many-legged creatures where cantering softly up and down outside their- bedroom door, and Deride their- Care of Magical Creatures teacher was saying, ‘Beauties, arm they, eh, Naddalin? We will be studying...’ weapons their term...’ And Naddalin saw that the- creatures had like cannons for heads and were whirling to face her... she- bent... to look and it was sucking on her nose.

There- next things she- knew, she- was curled into a warm ball under she bedclothes- and Katye’s loud voice was filling their- room.

‘Mom says get up, your breakfast is in the- kitchen, and there she- needs you in there- drawing-room, there are loads more Doxes than she- thought and she’s found a nest of dead Puff skeins under their- sofa.’

Half an hour later Naddalin and Jinger, who had dressed and had breakfasted quickly, entered the- drawing-room, a long, high ceilinged room on their- first floor with olive green walls covered in dirty tapestries.

There- carpet exhaled little clouds of dust every time someone put their foot on it and the- long, moss green velvet curtains where buzzing as though swarming with invisible bees. It was around there- see that Mr.’s Railie, Emmah, Jill, Céline and Katy where grouped, all together, rats then peculiar as they had each tied a cloth over their nose and mouth.

Each of them was also holding a large bottle of black liquid with a nozzle at the end.

‘Cover your faces and take a spray,’ Mr.’s Railie said to Naddalin and Jinger they're- the moment she- saw them, pointing to two more bottles of black liquid timewasting on a spindle-legged table.’

It's Dockside... I have never- ever seen an infestation their bad what that house fairy's been doing for the- last ten years.' Emmah's face was half concealed by a tea towel but Naddalin distinctly saw she throw a reproachful look at Mr.'s Railie.

'Preachers old, she- could not manage.'

'You'd be surprised what reached can manage her- and she- wants to, Emmah,' said Trius, who had just entered they're- room carrying a bloodstained bag of what appeared to be dead rats.'

I've just been feeding Becca beak,' she- added, in reply to Natalie's enquiring look.' I keep her upstairs in my mother's bedroom.

Anyway... their writing desk...' And, Of course not, and said Madam Pomphrey, bristling... and, would have hurt someone I love!

Chapter: 152

Part: 1

And, Well, there you have it, Severus, and said Duerre calmly. And, unless you are suggesting that Naddalin And Emmah can be in two places at once, I am afraid I do not see any point in troubling her further.

- And-

Lily stood there, seething, staring from Harlan, who looked thoroughly shocked at the behavior, to Duerre, whose eyes were twinkling behind the glasses. Lily whirled about, robes swishing behind her, and stormed out of there- area. And, Pergirl seems quite unbalanced, and said Harlan, staring after her. Besides, I would watch out for her if I were you, Duerre. And I'm so-o... too?'

So-o you have your exams coming up, haven't you? The theory will be keeping your noses so hard to that grindstone they will be rubbed raw,' said Céline with satisfaction.

'Half our year had minor breakdowns coming up to flying you're your wings,' said Katy happily. Tears And tantrums... Patricia Stim girl kept coming over faint...'

'Kenneth Tower came out in boils, you remember?' Said Reanna reminiscently.

That's' um- ah because you put Bilbao powder in her pajamas,' said Katy. Which is nothing more than undies, that should be off anyways at night.

'Oh yes,' said Reanna, grinning.' I'd overlooked... hard to keep track sometimes, isn't it?'

'Anyway, it is a nightmare of a year, their- fifth,' said Katy.' If you care about exam results, anyway. Reanna and I managed to keep our peckers up somehow.'

'Yeah... you got, what was it, three flying with wings each?' Said Jinger.

'Yepper,' said Reanna unconcernedly.' But we feel our futures lie outside their- world of academic achievement.'

'We seriously debated she- they're- r we were going to bother- r coming back for our seventh year, said Katy brightly, now that we have.'

She- broke off at a warning look from Naddalin, who knew Katy had been about to mention the- Tizard winnings she- had given them.

'Now that we have our Flying horses with wings,' Katy said hastily.'

I mean, do we need Newts?

Nevertheless, we did not think Mom could take us leaving Savannah early, not on top of Percy turning out to be there- world's biggest prat.'

'We're not going to waste our last year here, though,' said Reanna, share, affectionately around at there- Great Hall.' We're going to use it to do a bit of market research, find out exactly what there- average SKOUFYCEOL student needs from a joke shop, carefully evaluate there- results of our research, then produce products to fit there- DE- And.'

'But where are you going to get there- gold to start a joke shop?' Emmah asked skeptically. 'You're going to need all there- ingredients and materials and premises too, I suppose...'

Naddalin did not look at there- twins. Her faces felt hot; here- deliberately dropped her fork and dived down to retrieve it. She- come here- and see this art- it looks like three of you, I wonder why, Reanna says overhearing everything.' Ask us no questions and we'll tell you no lies, Emmah. Come on, Katy, if we get there early, we might be able to sell a few Extendable Ears before Her- biology.'

Naddalin emerged from under there- table to see Reanna And Katy walking away, each carrying a stack of toast.

‘What did that mean?’ Said Emmah, did yah- hear from Naddalin and Jinger.’

‘Ask us no questions...’ Does that mean they have already got some gold to start a joke shop?’

‘You know, I have been wondering about that,’ said Jinger, she brow furrowed. They bought me a new set of dress robes their summer and I couldn’t underset and she- e they got there- Galleons...’

Naddalin decided it was time to take the- conversation out of these dangerous waters.

‘You reckon its true their years going to be tough? Since of their- question papers, and trails?’

‘Oh, yes,’ said Jinger.’ Bound to be, isn’t it? Flying with wings is important, the effect they're - jobs you can apply for and everything. We get career advice, too, later their year, Sara told me. So, you can Savannahs What Newts you want to do next year.’

‘You know what you want to do after SKOUFYCEOL?’ Naddalin asked they're- other two, as they left they're- Great Hall shortly afterward and set off towards their Shoetree of Magic classroom.’ Not really,’ said Jinger flying.’ Except... well...’

She- looked slightly shy.

‘What?’ Naddalin urged her.

‘Well, it would be cool to be an Aurora-’ said Jinger in an off and voice.

‘Yeah, it would,’ said Naddalin fervently.

‘But there, like, their- elite,’ said Jinger.’ You’ve got to be good.

What about you, Emmah?’

‘I do not know,’ she- said. ‘I’s think I would like to do something worthwhile.’

‘An Auroras worthwhile!’ Said Naddalin.

‘Yes, it is, but it is not there- only worthwhile thing,’ said Emmah thoughtfully,’ I mean, if I could take a few further...’

Naddalin And Jinger carefully avoided that, with each other.

Shoetree of Magic was by common consent they are- most boring subject ever devised by wizard-kind with wings. Professor Bins, their ghost teacher, had a wheezy, jiggering voice that was almost guaranteed to cause severe drowsiness within ten minutes, five in warm weather.

She- never- ever- ever- never varied the- form of their ledgers but lectured them without hesitating while they took notes, or rest her, gazed sleepily into space.

Naddalin and Jinger had so far managed to scrape passes in their subject only by copying Emmah's notes before exams; she- alone seemed able to resist their- soporific power of voice.

Today, they suffered an hour and a half's jiggering on their- subject of giant wars. Naddalin heard just enough within their- first ten minutes to appreciate dimly that in another teacher and their subject might have been mildly interesting, but then, like- she brains disengaged, and she- spent their- remaining hour and twenty minutes playing hangman on a corner of the parchment with Jinger, while Emmah shot them filthy looks out of their- corner of her young little sweet eye.

(Awh)

'How would it be,' she- asked them coldly, as they left the- classroom for a break

(Bins drifting away through their- blackboard,) 'if I refused to lend you my notes their year?'

'Wed fails our FLYING HORSES,' said Jinger.' If you want that on your conscience, Emmah...'

'Well, you would deserve it,' she- snapped.' You do not even try to listen to her, do you?'

(Nope- I thought in my wicked young sweet little mind, batting my eyes.)

'We do try' said Jinger, sound like back home said the other girls in the class too- all of them, too many names to list, yet, they're all here- ...wave girls... and they all did uniquely- to each life they were.'

We just do not have your brains or your memory or your concentration, you are just cleverer than we are ~ is it nice to rub it in?'

(Cut)

Part: 2

Like some moments have passed...

‘Oh, do not give me that rubbish,’ said Emmah, but she- looked slightly mollified as she- led they’re- way out into the- damp courtyard.

A fine misty drizzle was falling out the old carked window- pane so that their- people timewasting... where looking for freedom, I thought when you where did you got away for bull- sh*t’n school- ‘Nah...’ one looked...

‘Nah...’ the other girls looked at her and said.

School looking out a window- seems to be a thing with us- the panes in huddles around their- edges of their- yard looked blurred at the- edges. Naddalin, Jinger, And Emmah Havanans a secluded corner under she- avidly dripping balcony turning up there- collars of their robes against their- chilly September air and toluene about what Lily was likely to set them in their- first ledger of the- year. They had as far as agreeing that it was likely to be something extremely difficult, just to which them off guard after a two- month holiday, she- n someone walked around the- corner towards them.

‘She- lol’s at, Naddalin!’

Part: 3

It was Hayvannah Chang and, what was more, she- was on she owns again. There was most unusual: Hayvannah was always surrounded by a gang of giggling girls; Naddalin remembered their- agony of trying to get she by herself to ask her to the- Ball.

‘Hi,’ said Naddalin, feeling she face grow hot. At least you are not covered in Stink sap their time, she- told herself. Hayvannah seemed to be thinking along the- same lines.

‘You got that stuff off, then?’

‘Yeah,’ said Naddalin, trying to grin as though there- the memory of their last meeting was funny as opposed to mortifying. ‘so, did you... err... have a good summer?’

The- moment she- had said that she- wished she- had not Joella had been Hayvannah’s significant other and their- memory of the death must have affected her holiday as badly as it had affected Natalie's. Something seemed to tauten in her face, but she - said... 'Oh, it was all right, you know...'

'Is that a Tornados badge...?' Jinger deliquesced suddenly, pointing to their - finger of Hayvannah's robes, a sky-blue badge emblazoned with a double gold T' was pinned.'

You do not support them, do you?'

'Yeah, I do,' said Hayvannah.

'Have you always supported them, or just since they started winning their - league?' Said Jinger, in what Naddalin considered an unnecessarily accusatory tone of voice.

'I've supported their - m since I was six,' said Hayvannah coolly.' Anyway... see you, Naddalin.'

She - walked away. Emmah waited until Hayvannah was halfway a - crossed the - courtyard before rounding on Jinger.

'You are so tactless!'

'What? I only asked her if.'

'Couldn't you tell she - wanted to talk to

Naddalin on she owns?'

'So-o? Her - she - could have Deanahe, I was not stopping'

'Why on earth were you talking or playing around about the Claepsiara team?'

'Playing? I was not talking; I was only saying.'

'Who cares if she - supports their - Tornados?'

'Oh, come on, half their - people you see wearing those badges only bought them, last sea girl.'

'But what does it matter!'

'It means they are not real fans; they are just jumping on the - likewise wagon.'

That is their- bell,' said Naddalin dully, because Jinger and Emmah were bickering too loudly to sue- is it. They did not stop arguing all their- way down to Snappiest dungeon, which gave Naddalin plenty of time to reflect that between, Neville and Jinger she- would be lucky ever to have two minutes of conversation, and with Hayvannah, that she- could look back on without wanting to leave their- country.

Besides, yet, she- thought, as they joined their- queue lining up outside Snappiest classroom door, she- had Havanans to come and talk to her, had not she-? She- had been Sedaris's girlfriend; she- could easily have hated Naddalin for coming out of there- Tizard maze alive she'd Joella had died, yet she- was toluene to her in a perfectly friendly way, not as though she- thought her mad, or a liar, or in some horrible way responsible for Sedaris's death...

Yes, she- had Havanans to come and talk to her, and that made their- second time in two days... And at their thought, Naddalin's spirits rose. Even their- ominous sound of Snappiest dungeon door cracking open did not puncture their- small, hopeful bubble that seemed to have swelled in her chest.

I- filed into the- classroom behind Jinger And Emmah and followed them to our usual table at the- back.

She, we, and- I- so-o like us, sat down between Jinger And Emmah and ignored their- huffy, irritable noises now issuing from both of them. 'Settle down,' said Lily with a cold mood, shutting the - door behind her.

There was no real need for the- call to order; the- moment their- class had heard their- door close, quiet had fallen in addition to all fidgeting stopped. Snappiest mere presence was usually enough to ensure a class silence.

'Before we begin today's ledger,' said Lily, sweeping over to their desk and staring around at them all,' I think it proper to remind you that next June you will be sitting an important examination, during which you will prove how much you have learned about their- composition and use of magical potions.

Minigenre though some of their class undoubtedly are, I expect you to scrape an- 'Acceptable' in your FLYING, or suffer my... displeasure.'

Her gazes lingered the time and moments on Neville, who gulped.

‘After their year, of course, many of you will cease studying with me,’ Lily went on.’

I take only the- very best into my NEWT Potions class, which means that some of us will certainly be saying goodbye.’

Her eyes rested on Naddalin and her lips curled. Naddalin glared back, feeling a grim pleasure at their- idea that she- would be able to give up Potions after the fifth year.

‘But then again, we have another year to go before that happy moment of farewell,’ said Lily softly, ‘so, there or not you are intending to try NEWT, I recommend all of you to concentrate your efforts on keeping their- high pass level I have come to expect from my FLYING students.

Today class, you will be mixing a potion that often comes up at Ordinary Wizarding Level- the- Draught of Peace, a potion to calm anxiety and soothe- agitation.

Be warned, if you are too, she- any and with their- ingredients you will put the- drinker into she- any and sometimes irreversible sleep, so-o you will need to pay very close attention to what you are doing, and what I have shown you what to do.’

On Naddalin’s left, Emmah sat up a little straighter, her expression one of the utmost attention. There- ingredients and method-’ Lily flicked she and...’ are on the- blackboard...’

(They appeared there.)

‘You will find everything you need-’ she-flicked she and so again...’ in their- store cupboard.’

(The- door of the cupboard sprang open.)

‘You have an hour and a half... start.’

Just as Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah had predicted, Lily could hardly have set their- m a more difficult, fiddly potion. These- ingredients had to be added to their- ceiling in precisely their- right order and quantities; their- mixture had to be stirred exactly their- right number of times, firstly in clockwise, then- and in anticlockwise directions; she had flames on which it was simmering had to be lowered to exactly the- right level for a specific number of minutes before their- final ingredient was added.

Naddalin, who was sweating profusely, looked desperately around the - dungeon. She's on her own could not seem to make this work- Jinger was issuing copious amounts of dark grey steam; Jinger's was spitting green sparks, with no luck.

Laila was feverishly prodding their- flames at their- base of she could Jinger with their- tip of she and, as they seemed to be going out. There- the surface of Emmah's potion, however, was a sharpening mist of white vapor, And as Lily swept by her- looked down she hooked nose at it without comment, which meant she- could find nothing to criticize.

At Naddalin's ceilinged, however, Lily stopped and looked down at it with a horrible smirk on her faces.

‘What is there to be?’

There- Slithering at the- finger of the- class all looked up eagerly; they loved she- airing Lily taunt Naddalin.

There- Draught of Peace,’ said Naddalin tensely. Tell me, - said Lily softly,’ can you read?’

Drallieah Mallerie laughs- ‘Yes, I can,’ said Naddalin, she fingers clenched- tightly around she then...

‘Read the- the third line of their- instructions for me-’

Naddalin squinted at the- blackboard; it was not easy to make out there- instructions through the- haze of multi-colored steam now filling they are- dungeon.

‘Enhance powdered moonstone, stir three times counterclockwise, allow to simmer for seven minutes there- and add two drops of syrup of she- labored.’

Then at that moment, her heart sank; she- had not added syrup of she- labored, but had gone ahead straight to the- the fourth line of their- instructions after allowing her potion to simmer for seven minutes.

‘Did you do everything on their- third line?’

‘No,’ said Naddalin very quietly.

‘I beg your Deanah?’

‘No,’ said Naddalin, more loudly. ‘I forgot she labored...’

‘I know you did, which means that their mess is utterly worthless; evanesce.’

There- contents of Naddalin’s potion vanished; she- was left timewasting foolishly beside an empty ceilinged.

Those of you who have managed to read there- instructions, fill one flagon with a sample of your potion, label it with your name and bring it up to my desk for testing,’ said Lily.’

Homework- twelve inches- of parchment magical paper on their- properties of moonstone and its uses in potion marching, to be and in on Thursday.’

While everyone around her filled their flagons, Naddalin cleared away she things, seething. Her potion had been no worse than Jinger’s, which was now giving off a foul odor of bad eggs; or Neville’s, which had achieved their- consistency of just mixed cement and which Neville was now having to gouge out of she ceilinged; yet it was she, Naddalin, who would be receiving zero marks for the- days’ work.

She- stuffed her things under her arm- given up completely, and then back into her bestie, and slumped down on to the seats, watching everyone else March- ah up to Snappiest desk with filled and corked flagons. Then finally the- bell rang, Naddalin was first out of there- dungeon and had already started the lunch by their- time Jinger and Emmah joined her in there- Great Hall of the castle. There- ceiling had turned an even murkier grey during the- morning. The rain was lashing their- high windows.

That was unfair,’ said Emmah consolingly, sitting down next to Naddalin and helping herself to shepherds’ pie.’ Your potion was not as bad as Sayale’s; then she- put it in she flagon the- whole thing shattered and set she robes on fire.’

Besides, oh, she’s not unbalanced and said- Duerre quietly. Besides, she just suffered a severe disappointment.

-And-

Besides, She's not the- only one!

Then puffed Harlan...

And, she- Daily News Prop's is going to have a field day!

We had Black cornered and she- slipped through our fingers yet again!

All it needs now is for their- story of that Ashlynn's escape to get out, and I will be a laughing stock! Well... I had better go and notify the- Bureau...

-And-

And, the- Dementiators? Said Duerre.

-And-

There will be removed from there- Savannah, I trust?

-And-

And, oh yes, they must go, and said Harlan, running she fingers distractedly through the hair.

As well, never dreamed they would try to amrita their- Kiss on an innocent girl... Completely out of control... no, I will have them packed off back to Dizery, I, and tonight... We should think about dark angels at their- savannah entrance...

-And-

And Deride would like that, and said Duerre, smiling at Naddalin and Emmah. As she- and Harlan left their- dormitory, Madam Pomphrey hurried to their- door and locked it again.

Muttering angrily to herself, she- added going back to her office.

There was a low moan from there- another end of their- ward. Jinger had woken up. They could see her sitting up, rubbing the head, around, the halls.

Part: 4

And, what - what happened? And, she- groaned. And, Naddalin? Why are we here? Where's Trius? Where's Sevket? What is going on?

-And-

Naddalin and Emmah looked at each other.

And, you explain, and said Naddalin, helping herself to some more Hayvannah cholate.

She- and Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah left they're- hospital wing at noon they're- next day, it was to find an almost deserted castle. There- sweltering, she- at and the- end of their- exams meant that everyone was dequeen full advantage of another Claepsiara, of wizardry/angels and demonly visit.

Neither Jinger nor Emmah wanted to go, however, so they and Naddalin walked onto the - grounds around the massive castle, still toluene about the- extraordinary events of their- earlier night and wondering, was Trius and Becca, went on their beak- where they were now. Sitting near the- lake, watching the- giant squid waving its tentacles lazily above the- water blue and green and sparkling in the light glowing also a shade of red, Naddalin lost the thread of their- conversation as she- looked across to the- opposite banks to the island that lay adjacent. There- stag with wings had galloped toward her from there just last night...

A shadow fell- crossed them and they looked up to see a very bleary-eyed Deride, mopping she sweaty face with one of their tablecloths- sized and kerchiefs and beaming down at them.

And Know I should' feel happy, after what' happened las' night, and she- said. And mean, Black, escaping' again, an, everything' - but guess what?

-And-

And, What?

And, they said, pretending to look curious.

And, Beaky! She- escaped! She's now free!

We've been celebrating' all night!

-And-

Um, that is- wonderful!

Also said Emmah, giving Jinger a reproving look because she - looked as though she - was close to laughing.

And, can't have tied her up properly, and said Deride, gazing happily out over there - grounds.

And, was worried that morning, 'mind... thought she - might meet Professor Sevketa on their- grounds, but Sevketa says' she - never- ever- never- ever- ever- never, ate anything' last' night...

~*~

-And-

And, What? And said Naddalin quickly.

And, Joannah, haven't you heard? And said Deride, she smiles fading a little. She like - lowered her voice, even though there was nobody in sight. And - Lily told all them- that morning' ...Though everyone would know by now... Professor Lapin's a fallen werewolf with wings, see. And- like, he- was loose on their- grounds last night... she's packing... now, of- course.'

- And-

Um-

And she is packing?

Um-

And said Naddalin, alarmed.

And Why?

Um-

And- Leavin', in' here-? And said Deride, waited, surprised that Naddalin had to ask. And, Resigned first' thing that morning.' Says she- cannot risk it happening again.

- And-

Naddalin scrambled to her feet.

Um-

And I'm going to see her, and she- said to Jinger And Emmah.

Um-

And- but if she's resigned...

-And-

Um-

And - doesn't sound like there's anything we can do...

-And-

Um-

And, do not care- about it.

Um-

And, I'm still want to see.

Um-

And, I will's meet you back here.

Um- And...?

Um- And Ah!!!

Part: 5

(Formerly)

Lapin's office door was open. He/she who had no real gender as it could change back and forth- had already packed most of her things. There- Grind low's empty tank stood next to their battered old suitcase, that could teleport from a person place to place when inside, which was open and full of all things it- he/she loved. Sevketa was bending over something on the desks and looked up only she - and Naddalin knocked on their- door.

Um- and, we saw you coming, said Sevket, smiling. She- pointed to their- parchment she- had been poring over. It was there- Marauder's Map, where you can look into it, and it takes you to any time in the remembrances of searching for lost time in the world's past.

And, just saw Deride, and said Naddalin. And, and she- said you had resigned. It is not true, is it? And...

And, I am afraid it is and said Sevket. Her- started opening she desk drawers and dequeen out their- contents.

And, Why?

WHY?

WHY? - said Naddalin...

And, there- Bureau of Magic do not think, you were helping Trius, do they?

Likewise- Sevket crossed to the- door and closed it behind Naddalin.

And, No- professor Duerre managed to convince Harlan, that I was trying to save your lives.

And, she- sighed some... And That was their- final straw for Severus. I think the- loss of their- War of Nunez hit her hard. So, she- err - accidentally let slip that, I am a devil the morning at breakfast.

- And-

Like- like- like, you are not- a leaving just because, of that!

Say's its PMS- I's want you too... said Naddalin. Sevket smiled wryly.

And, she time Hayvanna-horror, their- Flying with wings will start arriving from parents...

They will not want a devil teaching their children, Naddalin.

And, after last- night, I see their point. I could have bitten any of you... That must never happen again.

-And-

And, you are their- best Defense Against their- Dark Arts teacher we're have ever had!

And said Naddalin.

And, do not go!

-And-

Your baby talk is cute yet you're getting too old for it... she said. Sevket shook her head and did not speak. She- carried on emptying the drawers. Then, while Naddalin was trying to think of a good argument to make her stay, Sevket said, and from what their- head expert told me their morning, you saved a lot of lives last night, Naddalin. If I'm proud of anything I've Deanahe their year, it's how much you've erudite... Tell me about your Pat Jingerus.

And...

And, how you know about that?

And, said Naddalin, distracted.

And, what else could have driven they're- Dementiators back?

-And-

Naddalin told Sevket what had happened. she'd- and he finished, Sevket was smiling again.

And, yes, your daddy was always a stag the- and the- transformed, and she- said.

And, you guessed right... that is why we called her Pinger's.

And...

Sevket threw her last few books into the case, closed their- desk drawers, and turned to look at Naddalin.

And, here - I brought they're from them- Checking Shack last night, and she- said, and Naddalin back their- Invisibility Robe.

And...

she-and he- said, then held. out their- Marauder's Map too. And, am no longer your teacher, so I do not feel guilty about giving you back there as well. It is no use to me, And I's daresay you, Jinger, and Emmah will find uses for it.

And...

Naddalin took their- map and grinned.

And, you told me Moony, Worm tail, Pad foot, And Pinger's would have wanted to lure me out of Savannah... you said they would have thought it was funny.

And...

And, and so we would have, and said Sevket, now reaching down to close the case.

And, have known the- situation in saying, that Alyssa would have been highly disappointed if she a girl had never- ever found any of their- secret passages out of the- castle.

And...

There- re was a knock on their- door. Naddalin hastily stuffed their- Marauder's Map And they're- Invisibility Robe into the pockets.

It was Professor Duerre. She- did not look surprised to see Naddalin there.

And, your carriage is at their- gates, Remus, - she said.

And Thank You, commander.

And...

Sevket picked up her old suitcase and their- empty Grind low tank.

And, Well - goodbye, Naddalin, and she- said, smiling. And, it has been a real pleasure teaching you. I feel sure we will meet again sometime. Head expert, there is no need to see me to their- gates, I can manage... And Naddalin had their- an impression that Sevket wanted to leave as quickly as possible.

And, Goodbye, then, Remus, and said Duerre soberly. Sevket shifted them - Grind low tank slightly so that she - And Duerre could shake and. Then, with a final nod to Naddalin and a swift smile, Sevket left the - office.

Naddalin sat down in the massive chair, staring glumly at the - floor. She - heard the - door close and looked up. Duerre was still there.

And, Why so miserable, Naddalin? And, she - said quietly. And, you should be very proud of yourself after last night.

-And-

And, it did not make any difference and said Naddalin bitterly. And, Grohl got away.

-And-

And, did not make any difference? And said Duerre quietly, and it made all the - difference in the - world, Naddalin. You helped uncover their - truth. You saved an innocent man from a terrible fate.

And...

Part: 6

Terrible - something stirred in Naddalin's memory. Greater and more terrible than ever before... Professor Solis's prediction!

And, Professor Duerre - yesterday, she - and I was having my Divination exam, Professor Solis went very - very strange.

-And-

And... Indeed? And said Duerre... And - stranger than usual, you mean?

And, yes... her voice went all deep and her eyes rolled, then she - said... she - said AVA's servant was going to set out to return to her before midnight... She - said, like their - servant would help her come back to power.

Then, Naddalin stared up at Duerre. And, likewise... they- and she- became normal again, as normal could be anyways... and she- couldn't remember at all anything she'd said. Like- like- like, now um was it - was the- meeting a real prediction?

-And-

Duerre, then looked mildly impressed... with that thought. So-o, do you know, Naddalin, I think she- might have been. And, she- said thoughtfully. And, who would have thought it? That brings her total of real predictions up to two. I should offer her a pay raise...

-And-

But, Naddalin looked at her, in hast. How could Duerre take their so freak'n calmly?

Like, but ah- I'm stopped Trius and Professor Sevkett from killing Grohl!

That makes it my fault...? Um- if AVA comes back!

- And-

Like, it does not, and said Duerre quietly, and ever so softly alike.

And, has not your experience with the- Time- Rewinder of Remembrance's Past- taught you anything, Naddalin? There- consequences of our actions are always so complicated, so diverse, that predicting their- future is a very- very difficult business indeed...

Then and there- Professor Solis, bless she, is living proof of that... you did a very- very noble- good thing, in saving Grohl's life.

-And-

Above that all, if she- helps, AVA back to power... And she may lose some of hers or worse.

And, Grohl owes her life to you. No...? Yes...? Maybe...?

You have sent AVA a deputy who is in your debt... she is one wizard- with wings that save another wizard that has fallen I like in her young life; it creates a certain bond between them... Yes...? And I am much mistaken, and if AVA wants her servant in their debt of Naddalin...

-And-

Like, do not want a connection with Grohl!

And- said Naddalin. And, she- betrayed my parents!

-And-

Like, she is magical at its deepest, it is almost impenetrable, Naddalin.

Yeah- trust me... their- time may come here- and you will be very glad you saved Grohl's life,
I am sure of this...

-And-

Naddalin like she could not imagine that she would be. Duerre looked as though her mind and body to her felt- knowing what Naddalin was thinking about this too deeply for her comfort.

And I knew your daddy very well, both at SKOUFYCEOL and later, Naddalin, and she- said gently. And, she- would have saved - pretty much too, I am sure of it.

-And-

Naddalin looked up at her. Duerre would not laugh - she- could tell Duerre...

And thought it was my dad who had conjured my Clans. I mean, she- and I saw myself a-crossed the- lake... I thought I was seeing her.

-And-

And, an easy mistake to make, and said Duerre softly. And expect you will tire of she- airing it, but you do look extraordinarily like Alyssa. Except for their- eyes... you have the same eyes as your mother's.

- And-

Naddalin shook her young little head.

Then, it was stupid, thinking it was her, and she- muttered.

Um- it was mean, I knew she- was dead.

Like- you think they're- dead we loved ever so- o truly leave us?

Like- you think that, um- we do not recall or evoke them more clearly, than ever in times of great trouble?

Like- your daddy is alive within you, Naddalin... it's good to remember, that- and also feel it- in here, and pointing to her heart.

And shows herself most plainly she- and you require her. How else could you produce that Clans? Pinger's rode again- last night.

- And-

It took a moment for- Naddalin, to realize what Duerre had said.

Anyhow- last night, Trius told me all about how they became Animagi and said Duerre, smiling.

Part: 7

Oh- a human extraordinary achievement it was unbelievable - not least, keeping it quiet from me. And, their- n I remembered their- most unusual form your Clans took, she- and it charged Mr. Mallerie down at your Claepsiara match against Raven's Claw. You know, Naddalin, in a way, you did see your daddy last night... You found her inside yourself.

And, Duerre left their- office, leaving Naddalin to see very confused thoughts.

Nobody- at SKOUFYCEOL now knew their- truth of what had happened their- night that Trius, Becca beak, And Grohl had vanished- except Naddalin, Jinger, Emmah, And Professor Duerre. As their- end of term approached- Naddalin heard many different theories about what had happened, but none of them came close to their- truth.

Mallerie was furious about Becca's beak. She- was convinced that Deride had found a way of smuggling their- Ashlynn to safety, and seemed outraged that she- And she a gamekeeper had outwitted daddy. Percy Railie, meanwhile, had much to say on the- subject of Trius's escape.

~*~

And, If I manage to get into their- Bureau, I's will have a- lot of proposals and the presentation to make about Magical Law Enforcement! And, she- told they're- the only pergirl who would listen - she significant other, Jenny.

Though they're- the weather was perfect, though the- atmosphere was so-o cheerful, though she- knew they had achieved their- near impossible in helping Trius to freedom, Naddalin had never approached- they're- end of a savannah year in worse spirits.

She- certainly was not there- only one who was sorry to see Professor Sevket go. The - whole of Naddalin's Defense Against their- Dark Arts class was miserable about the resignation. And Wonder what they will give us next year? And said, Laila Finnigan gloomily and glumly. And, An Ash Angels, and suggested Lacy Thomas hopefully.

It was not only Professor Lapin's departure that was weighing on Naddalin's mind. Like she - could not she- lap thinking a- lot about Professor Solis's prediction. She- kept wondering her Grohl was now, whether she- had sought sanctuary with AVA yet.

But they are- things that were lowering Naddalin's spirits most of all was there- the prospect of returning to the- Andreasen. For half an hour, a glorious half-hour, she- had believed she- would be living with Trius from now on... she parents' best friend... It would have been their- next best thing to having her daddy back.

And, while no news of Trius was good news because it meant she- had successfully- gone into hiding, Naddalin could not help but feel miserable about it all. she- and her- thought of the- home.

She- might have had, and they're- fact that it was now impossible.

There- exam results came out on their- last day of term. Naddalin, Jinger, And Emmah had passed every subject. Naddalin was amazed that she- had through Potions.

She- had a shrewd suspicion that Duerre might have stepped in to stop Lily failing her on purpose. Sammie's behavior toward Naddalin over their- past week had been quite alarming.

Naddalin would not have thought it possible that Sammie's dislike for her could increase, but it certainly had.

‘A muscle twitches’ unpleasantly at the- corner of Sammie’s thin mouth every time she- looked at Naddalin, and she- was constantly flexing she fingers, as though itching to place them around Naddalin’s throat.

Percy, had she top-grade Newt’s; Reanna And Katy had scraped a and of FLYING each.

Amsel House, meanwhile, thanks to their spectacular performance in there- Claepsiara Cup, had won their- House championship for their- third year running. There meant that their- end of term feast took place amid decorations of scarlet and gold and that they’re- Amsel table was their- noisiest of their- lot, as everybody celebrated.

Even Naddalin managed to forget about their- journey back to their- Andreassen their- next day as she- ate, drank, talked, and laughs- with the- rest.

Chapter: 153

Part: 1

(New kids on the block we say- new dead girls, coming.)

As their- SKOUFYCEOLExpress pulled out of their- station their- next morning, Emmah gave Naddalin and Jinger some surprising news.

Likewise, and went to see Professor Ashly their morning, just before breakfast.

I have decided to drop Non-magical people Studies.

And...

However, but you passed your exam with three hundred and twenty percent! Said Jinger .

And know, and sighs- Emmah, And but I cannot and another year like their one. That Time- Turner, it was driving me mad. I’s have and it in. Without Non-magical people Studies and Divination, I will be able to have a normal schedule again.

And, still cannot believe you did not tell us about it and said Jinger grumpily.

And, we are supposed to be your friends.

And...

And, promised- like, like, like, I- I- I, would not tell anyone and said Emmah severely. She- looked around at Naddalin, who was watching SKOUFYCEOL disappear behind a mountain.

Two whole months before she'd see it again...

And, oh, cheer up, Naddalin!

And said Emmah sadly.

And, I'm- am okay and said Naddalin quickly. And, just thinking about the- holidays.

And, I have been thinking about them too and said Jinger. And, Naddalin, you must come and stay with us. I will fix it up with Mom and Dad, there- n, I will call you. I know how to use a full tone now - And, telephone, Jinger, and said Emmah. And, Honestly, you should take nonmagical people Studies next year...And Jinger ignored her...

And, it is their- Claepsiara World Cup their summer! How about it, Naddalin? Come And stay, and we will go and see it! Dad can usually get tickets from work.

And...

Their proposal had their- effect of cheering Naddalin up a great deal.

And, ... I's, um- a bet they're- Slash is pleased to let me come... especially after what I's did to Aunt Marge... And... Feeling more cheerful, Naddalin joined Jinger And Emmah in several games of Exploding Snap, and she- n the- witch with their- tea cart arrived, she- bought herself a very large lunch, though nothing with Hayvannah cholate in it.

But it was late in the- afternoon before the- thing that made her truly happy turned up...

So, Naddalin, and said Emmah suddenly, peering over the shoulders.

And, what is that thing outside your window?

-And-

Anyways, Naddalin turned to look outside. Something very small and gray was bobbing in and out of sight beyond there glass.

She- stood up for a better look...

And saw that it was a tiny flying horse, carrying a letter that was much too big for it.

There- Flying horses was so small that it kept tumbling over in there - air, buffeted their way and that in their- train's slipstream, that was blasting red sparks and cloud of heat and red-colored smoke unfluffed the entirety of the engines as if something from the deeps of the Underworld.

Naddalin quickly pulled down their- window, stretched- d out her arms, and caught it. It felt like a very fluffy Snitch. She- brought it carefully inside.

There- Flying horses dropped her letter onto Naddalin's seat and began zooming around their compartment, very pleased with itself for carrying out its task. She - dig clicked she beak with dignified disapproval. Crook shanks sat up in the seats, following they're - Flying horses with she great yellow eyes. Jinger, noticing there, snatched- they're- Flying horses safely out of harm's way.

Naddalin picked up their- letter. It was addressed to her. She then - ripped open the - letter, and shouted, And It is from Trius!

-And-

And, what...?

And said Jinger And Emmah excitedly.

And read it aloud!

Part: 2

It said- Dear Naddalin,

I hope theirs finds you before you reach your aunt and uncles.

I do not know if they are used to Flying, like me.

Becca beak and I are in hiding. I will not tell you her, in case their Flying falls into the- winger and. I have some doubt about their reliability, but she- is their- best I could find, and she- did seem eager for their- job.

I believe they're- Dementiators are still searching for me, but they have not the hope of finding me here; I am planning on allowing some Non-magical peoples to glimpse me soon, a long way from SKOUFYCEOL, so-o that their- security on their- castle will be lifted.

There is something, I never got around to telling you during our brief meeting. It was I who sent you the- Firebolt - And, Ha- ha...! And said Emmah triumphantly. And- See- see- see...!

I told you it was from her! And... like- like, um whatnot...

Yes, but she- had not jinxed it, had she-?

And said Jinger. And, Ouch! And, There- tiny Flying horses now nan-a-ing happily in she and, had nibbled one of their fingers in what it seemed to think was an affectionate way.

-Crook shanks took the- order to their- Flying- Office for me.

-I used your name but told them all to take their- gold from my own Mcqueeney vault. Now- please consider it as freshmen year birthdays...’ worth of presents from your god daddy.

I would also, like to apologize, and for the- fright, I think- I gave you that- that night, last year then you left your uncle’s house.

I had only hoped to get a glimpse of you before starting my journey north, but I think their- sight of me alarmed you.

I am enclosing something else for you, which I think will make your next year at SKOUFYCEOL more enjoyable.

If ever you need me, send word. Your Flying horses will find me.

I will write again soon.

~Tius~

Part: 3

Naddalin looked eagerly inside their- envelope. There was another piece of parchment in there. She- read it through quickly and felt suddenly as warm and contented as though she’d swallowed a bottle of hot butterbeer in one gulp.

I, Trius Black, Naddalin Maria's god daddy, she by then give her permission to visit Claepsiara, Kalaheo of Wizardry-fallen girls on weekends.

And, that will be good enough for Duerre! And- said Naddalin happily. She- looked back at Trius's letter. And Hang on, there is a PS...

- And-

I thought your friend Jinger might like to keep their Flying horses, as it is my fault, she- no longer has a rat.

Jigger's eyes widened... There- minute

Flying horses was still hooting excitedly. And Keep her? And, she- said uncertainly. She- looked closely at their- Flying horses for a moment; their- n, to Naddalin's And Emma's great surprise, she- sheld. her out for Crook shanks to sniff.

And, what do you reckon? And, Jinger asked the- wolf. And, Some flying horses?

-Crook shanks purred...

And, that is good enough for me and said Jinger happily. And, she's is mine.

Naddalin read and re-read the- letter from- Trius all the- way back into the village train station on the other side of the castle and the tall bridge.

It was still clutched- d tightly in her and as she, Jinger, And Emmah stepped back through the- barrier of platform nine and three- quarters.

Naddalin spotted Uncle Read at once.

She- was timewasting a good distance from Mr. And Mr.'s. Railie, eyeing their- m suspiciously, and she- n Mr.'s. Railie hugged Naddalin in greeting, her worst suspicions about their- m seemed confirmed.

And, I will call about their- Worldly Championship Cup! And, Jinger yelled after Naddalin as Naddalin bid her And Emmah goodbye, their- n whirled their- trolley bearing she trunk and she- digs cage toward Uncle Read, who greeted her in the usual fashion.

And, what is that? And, she - snarled, staring at the - envelope Naddalin was still clutching in her and. And, if it is another form for me to sign, you have another...

And, it is not, and said Naddalin cheerfully.

And, it is a letter from my god daddy.

And, Godaddy? And, sputtered Uncle Read. And, you do not have a good daddy!

And, Yes, I have, and said Naddalin brightly. And, she - was my mom and dad's best friend. Her- 's a convicted murderer, but she's broke out of wizard priggery and she's on their- run. She- likes to keep in touch with me, though... keep up with my news... check if I am happy...

And, grinning broadly at the- look of horror on Uncle Read's face, Naddalin set off toward their- station exit, her- dig rattling along in finger of her, for what looked like a much better summer than their- last.

And, No, and said Naddalin. And, she's was not a teacher.

And, but it must have been a powerful wizard, to drive all those Dementiators away... If they're- Clans was shining so brightly, didn't it light her up?

Couldn't you see it...?

And, I saw her and said Naddalin flying horses. And, but... I imagined it... I was not thinking straight... I passed out right afterward...

And, who did you think it was?

And think - and Naddalin swallowed, knowing how strange there was going to sound.

And I think it was my dad.

Naddalin glanced up at Emmah and saw that her mouths were fully open now. She- was gazing at her with a mixture of alarm and pity.

And, Naddalin, your dad's - well - dead, and she- said quietly.

And know that, and said Naddalin quickly.

And, you think you saw the ghost?

And, do not know... no... she- looked solid...

And, But then...

And, I was seeing things and said Naddalin. And, but... from what I could see... it looked like her... I have photos of her...

-And-

Emmah still thought of home, though I's was worried about her sanity.

Part: 4

And know it sounds crazy and said Naddalin flatly. She- turned to look at Becca beak, who was digging she beak into their- ground, searching for worms. But she- was not watching Becca beak.

She- was thinking about her daddy...

And about her daddy is three oldest friends...

Moony, Worm tail, Pad foot, And Pingers...

Had all four of them been out on their- grounds tonight?

Worm tail had reappeared their evening she- n everyone had thought she- was dead... Was it so impossible she daddy had Deanahe their- same?

Had she- been seeing things across their- take? There- the figure had been too far away to see distinctly...

Yet, she- had felt sure, for a moment, before she'd lost consciousness...

There- leaves overshoe- ad rustled faintly in the- breeze.

There- moon drifted in and out of sight behind the- shifting clouds.

Emmah sat with her faces turned toward their- Willow, waiting.

And, then, at last, after over an hour...

And, here we come! And, Emmah sheered.

She- And Naddalin got to their feet.

Becca beak raised her head. They saw Sevket, Jinger, And Grohl clambering awkwardly out of the- hole in the- roots.

Then came to Emmah... then and there- unconscious Lily, drifting weirdly upward. Next came Naddalin And Black. They all began to walk toward their- castle.

Naddalin's heard was starting to beat very fast. She- glanced up at the- vast sky.

Any moment now, that cloud was going to move aside and show their- moon... And, Naddalin, And Emmah muttered as though she- knew exactly what she- was thinking, and we must stay put.

We must not be seen. There is nothing we can do...

(Thought)

Funny to me after Karly's final death, she can ride horses- ie's all she wants again, in this world of falling- too... and here in this shadowy hollow, where Jenny is like me like she is still nagging her about it. GO- figure...?

~*~

So-o, we are just going to let Grohl escape all over again...

And said Naddalin quietly, how do you expect to find a rat in the- dark? And snapped Emmah. And, there is nothing we can do!

We came back to sue- lap Trius; we are not supposed to be doing anything else!

And, All right! And...

The- moon slid out from behind its cloud. They saw their- tiny figures across their- grounds stop. There- n they saw movement-

And, she goes- Sevket...

And Emmah sheered.

And, she's transforming.

And, Emmah! And said Naddalin suddenly. And, we must move!

And, we must not, I keep telling you-

-And-

And, not to interfere! Lapin's going to run into their- forest, right at us!

-Then-

Emmah gasped...

And, Quick! And, she- moaned, dashing to untie Becca beak. And, Quick! Here are we going to go? Here are we going to hide? There- Dementiators will be coming at any moment.

And, Back to Dargide's! And, Naddalin said. And, it is empty now - come on!

And...

They ran as fast as they could, Becca beak cantering along behind them. They could be like the- devil flying sing behind them...

There- the cabin was in sight; Naddalin skidded to their- door, wrenched- it open,

And Emmah And Becca beak flashed past her; Naddalin threw herself in after them and bolted their- door. Fang their- boarhound barked loudly.

And, Fang, it is us! And said Emmah, hurrying over and scratching her ears to quieten her. And, that was close! And, she- said to Naddalin.

And, And, AND!

Naddalin was LIKE, out of their- window. It was much harder to see what was going on from the shore. Becca beak seemed very happy to find herself back inside Darcie's house. She then- laid down on the finger of their- fire, folded she wings contentedly, and seemed ready for a good nap.

And think I had better go outside again, you know, and said Naddalin flying horses'.

And, cannot see what is going on - we will not know when it is time.

-And-

Emmah looked up. Her expression was suspicious.

And, I am not going to try and interfere, and said Naddalin quickly. And, but if we do not see what is going on, how are we going to know she - and it is time to rescue Trius?

-Then-

And, Well... okay, their- and... I will wait for her with Becca's beak... but Naddalin, be careful - there is a devil out there - And they're- Dementiators.

And...

Naddalin stepped outside again and edged around their- cabin. Her- could here yelp in their- distance. That meant they're- Dementiators were closing in on Trius... She- and Emmah would be running to her any moment...

Naddalin stared out toward their- lake, her head doing a kind of drumroll in her chest... Whoever had sent that Clans would be appearing at any moment...

For a fraction of a second she- stood, irresolute, in the finger of Darcie's door. You must not be seen. But she- did not want to be seen. She- wanted to do there- seeing... she- had to know...

And, there where they're- Dementiators. They were emerging out of their- darkness from every direction, gliding around their- edges of their- lake... They were moving away from here - Naddalin stood, to their- opposite bank... She- would not have to get near them... Naddalin began to run. She- had no thought since she except she daddy... If it was her... if it was her... she- had to know, had to find out...

There- the lake was coming nearer and nearer, but there was no sign of anybody. On their- opposite bank, she- could see tiny glimmers of silver - she owns attempts at a Clans- there was a bush at their- very edge of their- water. Naddalin threw herself behind it, peering desperately through their- leaves. On their- opposite bank, their- glimmers of silver were suddenly extinguished. A terrified excitement shot through her - any moment now- and Come on! And, she- muttered, staring about. And, she, are you? Dad, come on...

- And-

But no one came. Naddalin raised her head to look at the - circle of Dementiators across their- lake. One of them was lowering its hood.

It was time for their- rescuer to appear - but no one was coming to save their time - and, where- it hit her - she- understood. She- had not seen she, daddy, she- had seen herself - Naddalin flung herself out from behind the- bush and pulled out she and.

And EXPECT ATHENA! And, she- yelled.

And, out of the- end of their and burst, not a shapeless cloud of mist, but a blinding, dazzling, silver animal.

She- screwed up the eyes, trying to see what it was. It looked like a horse.

It was galloping silently away from her, across their- black surface of their- lake. She- saw it lower its head and charge at their- swarming Dementiators... Now it was galloping around and around their- black shapes on their- ground, and they're- Dementiators were falling back, sweltering, retreating into the- darkness... They were gone.

There- Clans turned. It was cantering back toward Naddalin across they're- still, the surface of the- water. It was not a horse.

It was not a unicorn, either. It was a stag. It was shining brightly as their- moon above... it was coming back to her...

It stopped on their- bank. Its hooves made no mark on their- soft ground as it stared at Naddalin with its large, silver eyes. 'Flying horses', it bowed its antlered head. And Naddalin realized... and Pinger's, and she- sheered.

But as she is trembling fingertips stretched- toward the- creature, it vanished.

Naddalin stood there, and still outstretched. Then, with a great leap of she heard, she- heard hooves behind her. She- whirled around and saw Emma dashing toward her, dragging Becca back behind her.

And, what did you do? And, she- said fiercely. And, you said you were only going to keep a lookout!

-And-

And, just saved all our lives...And said Naddalin. And Get behind she - e behind their bush - I will explain.

-And-

Emmah listened to what had just happened with the mouth open yet again.

And, did anyone see you?

And, yes, yes, and - yet, have not you been listening? I saw myself, but I thought I was my dad!

It is okay! And...

He- he- he- Naddalin, I cannot believe it... You conjured up a Clans that drove away all those Dementiators! That's very, very advanced magic.

And...

Like, I knew I could do it this time, and said Naddalin, and because, I had already Deanahe it... Does that make sense?

-And-

Naddalin, who happened to be in the- room at their- time, froze as she- head Jigger's voice answer.

And... HELLO?

Hey, hi, and greetings? Like- like- like- UM- CAN YOU HEAR- a ME? I - WANT - TO - TALK - TO - NADDALIN-!

Jinger was yelling so loudly that Uncle Read jumped and shield, the- receiver a foot away from their ear, staring at it with an expression of mingled fury and alarm.

And, WHOM IS THERE? And, she- roared in the- direction of the- mouthpiece.

And, WHO ARE YOU?

And then...

INGER - RAILEY! And, Jinger bellowed back, as though she- Equally- Uncle Read where sequin from opposite ends of a football field. And, I AM - A - FRIEND - OF - NADDALIN's - FROM - SAVANNAH - Similarly...

Uncle Read's small eyes swiveled around to Naddalin, who was rooted in the - spot.

The same to say that, an all- yen's, HERE there IS NO NADDALIN - HERE! And, she- roared, now holding the- receiver at arm's length, as though frightened it might explode.

And, DO NOT KNOW WHAT SAVANNAH YOU ARE TOLUENE ABOUT! NEVER CONTACT ME AGAIN! DO NOT YOU COME NEAR MY FAMILY!

And...

And, she- threw the- receiver back onto their- telephone as if dropping a prodigious spider.

There- a fight that had followed had been one of their- worst ever.

And, HOW DARE YOU GIVE THEIR NUMBER TO PEOPLE LIKE...

-PEOPLE LIKE YOU!

-And-

Uncle Read had roared, spraying Naddalin with spit.

Jinger realized that she'd gotten Naddalin into trouble because she- hadn't called again.

Naddalin's other best friend from SKOUFYCEOL, Emmah Kizziah, had not been in touch either. Naddalin suspected that Jinger had warned Emmah not to call, which was a pity, because Emmah, the - cleverest witch in Naddalin's year, had Non-magical people parents, knew perfectly well how to use a telephone, and would have had enough sense not to say that she - went to SKOUFYCEOL.

If she- had not, she- might have found it harder to concentrate on military exercises that sunrise. She- then made a stop by their- road to buy herself a blueberry bun from their- bakery, to eat with the tea.

Most of them had never seen a Flying horse- flaying girls yes not horse- even at nighttime.
Mr. Natalie, however, had a perfectly normal, Flying horses- free morning.

She- yelled at five dissimilar folks.

In their- office- Her- made several significant telephone calls, being all grown up and crapand shouted a bit more...at dumbasses! Or so she- called them...

A cranky piece of crap some called her...

Even if said- that she- was in a very noble mood until mealtime, where it went downhill from there- re...yes...she- n she- thought she'd stretch she butt- And up the leg on their- lift the side and farted hard. That is my she- loll to you- to say the- girl behind her... thanks for sharing... she- got up and then walked across the- road to buy herself a bun from their- bakery.

There- the effect of their simple sentence on their- rest of their- family was incredible: Dariez gasped and fell off the chair with a crash that shook their- whole kitchen- n; Mr.'s. Sleyash gave a small scream and clapped she and to a- sure- a mouth; Mr. Sleyash jumped to her feet, veins throbbing in the temples.

She'd forgotten all about their- people in Robes until she- passed a group of them next to their- bakers.

She- eyed them angrily as she- passed. He- did not know why, but they made her uneasy and UNCOMFORTABLE.

There bunch where sheering excitedly, too, and she - could not see a single collecting tin. It was on the back past them, clutching a large doughnut in a bag, that she- caught a few words of what they were saying.

And, she's, that is right, that is what I heard yes, their girl, Naddalin.

-And-

Mr. Natalie stopped dead.

Fear flooded her... mind and body.

She- looked back at the- whisperers as if she- wanted to say something to them, but thought better of it.

She- dashed- back across their- road, hurried up to the office, snapped at her secretary not to disturb her, seized the telephone, and had finished- d dialing she home number she- n she- changed the mind. Her- put their- receiver back down and stroked she mustache- thinking...

No, she- was being stupid.

-Was not such an unusual name. She- was sure there were lots of people called - who had a girl called Naddalin.

Come to think of it, she- was not even sure she nephew- w was called Naddalin.

She never- ever even seen the- girl.

It might have been Harvey. Or Hanna.

There- was no point in worrying Mr.'s. Natalie; she- always got so-o upset at any mention of the sister.

She- didn't blame her really- if she- 'd had a sister like that... but all there- same, those people in Robes...

And meant' please'! Also, said Naddalin quickly. Also, it didn't mean...

-And-

(Now)

Also... WHAT HAVE I TOLD YOU, Also, thundered she uncle, spraying spit over there - table, Also ABOUT SAYING THERE'S' WORD IN OUR HOUSE?

And, but I'm - Equally so-o-

...?...?

Then there and when...

(Back)

HOW DARE YOU THREATEN DARIEZ!

Holy freak'n piss, roared Uncle Read, pounding the- table with the fists.

(aha)

Sh*t- Her- she- a found it a lot harder to concentrate on drills that afternoon and wither she - left the- building at five o'clock, she- was still so worried that she- walked straight into someone just outside the- door.

Crap- Sorry, and she- grunted, as there- tiny old man stumbled and almost fell. It was a few seconds before Mr. Natalie realized that there- the man was wearing a violet Robe. She- didn't seem at all upset at being almost knocked to there- ground.

On there- contrary, her face split into a wide smile and she- said in a squeaky voice that made passersby stare, f*ck- Do not be sorry, my dear sir, for nothing could upset me today!

Rejoice, for You- Know- Who has gone at last! Even Non-magical peoples like yourself should be celebrating, there happy, happy day!

Damn...

And- and- like, um- there- old man hugged Mr. Natalie around there- middle and walked off.

Mr. Natalie stood rooted in their- spot.

She- had been hugged by a stranger.

She- also thought she- had been called a Non-magical people, whatever that was.

She- was rattled.

She- hurried to her car and set off for home, hoping she- was imagining things, which she- had never hoped before, because she- did not approve of imagination.

As she- pulled into there- the driveway of number four, there- the first thing she- saw - And it didn't improve the mood- was there- tabby wolf she- 'd spotted that morning. It was now sitting on her gardens wall. She- was sure it was there- same one; it had there- the same marking around its eyes.

Mother F*CK-er...

It just gave her an unyielding look. There- Flying horses was back at the window... Um- Shoo sucking crap! And said Mr. Natalie loudly as she- said- at the pc, over clips.

There- wolf did not move either form she spot under the- tree next to there- corer. Was there ordinary behavior for these beasts? And, I just - thank and that may hurt myself... like in the brain and crap- ol- la like that.

Sh*t'n- and like ah- ah- ah, I WARNED YOU! I WILL NOT TOLERATE MENTION OF YOUR ABNORMALITY UNDER THERE ROOF! And- crap- crap- crap-

Naddalin stared from her purple-faced uncle to her pale aunt, who was trying to sheave Dariez to her feet.

Crap- crap- crap-

... All right, um said Naddalin, And all right... And...

Crap- crap- crap-

Uncle Read sat back down, breathing like a winded rhinoceros and watching Naddalin closely out of there- corners of her small, sharp eyes.

Ever since Naddalin had come home for there- summer holidays, Uncle Read had been treating her like a bomb that might go off at any moment, because Naddalin - wasn't a normal girl. She- was as not as normal as it is possible to be.

Naddalin - was a wizard fallen angel - a wizard one and angel number two- fresh from the first year at- the school for girls Hayvannah of Witchcraft and Wizardry- and getting your wings. And if there- Andreasen were unhappy to have her back for there- holidays, it was nothing to how Naddalin felt.

She- missed at the school for girls so much it was like having a constant (Savanna) Hayvannah hatcher-. She- missed there- castle, with its secret passageways And ghosts, she classes (though perhaps not Lily, there- Potions master,) there- mail arriving by Flying horses, eating banquets in there- Great Hall, sleeping in the four-poster bed in there- tower dormitory, visiting there- gamekeeper, Dargide, in her cabin next to there- Forbidden Forest in there- grounds, And, especially, Claepsiara, there- a most popular sport in there- wizarding world (six tall goal posts, four flying balls, And fourteen players on broomsticks.)

All Naddalin's spell- books, and her, robes, could Jinger, and top- other- line Nimbus Two Thus And broomstick had been locked in a cupboard under there- stairs by Uncle Read there- instant Naddalin had come home.

What did there- Andreassen care if Naddalin um lost she place on the- House Claepsiara team because she- hadn't practiced all summer?

What was it to there- Andreassen if Naddalin like went back to Hayvannahol without any of her homework Deanahe?

There- Andreassen where what wizards called Non-magical peoples (not a drop of magical blood in their veins...)

And as far as they were concerned, having a wizard in there- family- was a matter of deepest shame, falling to death and having black wings was worse than that.

Uncle Read had even padlocked Naddalin's Flying horses, herding, inside the cage, to stop her from carrying messages to anyone in there- wizarding world.

Mr. Natalie speculated... all this and speculating was all he could do...

Trying to pull herself together as she- was sitting on there- can, leaving she job mead day like drawing to do so-o she- walked without knowing she- was doing so-o... like being pulled into there- the evil of it all- she- let herself into there- house. She- was still decided not to mention anything to the wife. That their power was taken over the mind, And body.

Mr.'s. Natalie had had a nice, ordinary day.

She- told her over dinner all about Mr.'s. Next Door's problems with the daughter and how Alisha had learned an unfamiliar word...

(And... NO...!)

Mr. Natalie tried to act Hayvanna- hay.

When Alisha had been put to bed, she- went into there- lounge in time to hook up on there- last report on there- sundown news: And, besides, in conclusion, bird onlookers all over have recounted that there- nation's Flying horses with wings have been behaving very strangely today.

Yet not in the- way she- was seeing them, they said about it- yet, not about what she- was seeing with it.

Although Flying with wings normally hunt at night, and are hardly ever seen considering the day, they have been hundreds of sightings of these birds flying in every direction since daybreak there - the day before And. Experts are unable to explain why there - Flying horses with wings have suddenly changed their slumbering pattern.

- And-

Possibly pergirls have been celebrating you can see there- barrel firs in there- streets- within there- night early- dusk- it is not until next week, folks! But I can promise a wet night tonight.

There- broadcaster allowed herself a smile.

Most mysterious... Um now, over to Lenah Barton with there- weather. Successful to be any more when a- Flying horses with wings tonight, girl? And, Viewers as far apart as Jackie, Promising, And Dundee have been phoning in to tell me that instead of there- rain I assured yesterday, they have had a downpour of shooting stars! And, ... Well, Dee, and said there- weathercaster, and I do not know about that, but it is not only there- Flying horses with wings that have been acting oddly today. I was hoping to make a wish to see if there casting of whatever would go away.

Mr. Natalie sat frozen in her armchair.

Shooting stars all over Britain?

Flying horses with wings flying by the light of day? Mysterious individuals in shawls all over there- the place looks like something out of there- the 1920s? And, a murmur, a murmur about there's... who is and who is and who's... like sharpers.

She- cleared her throat nervously. And, wow, dear- you have not heard from your sister lately? And, it was not good. Her- would have to say something to her about there.

Mr.'s. Natalie came into the- living room carrying two cups of tea. Sharing- as she- had estimated, Mr.'s.

Natalie watcher- d surprised and ever so-o irritated.

They mock there, she- did not have a sister- so that was there- a story made up of the little mind. It is not good to have or see there - abnormal! Like there... something is going down.

And, and- and- and sh*t- Nope, and s- she- said abruptly. Why...?

Why is the question with no answer?

Why- was the- question...

And, humorous paraphernalia on there - news, And Mr. Natalie muttered. And, flying horses with wings... shooting stars... And pussies oh my! She- looked up at her with a grin.

Looking aroused and around there- was there- re was a cute young coupled kissing making out- And making love on a bench's- she- was sitting on her, And, feeling all- there- madness- in plain eyesight.

Desirable, there- where a lot of humorous- looking folks in town today... doing just there- see things... it was madness- love was in there- air like there- evilcast over me- And some- that where been seen. And- And- So-o? And, cracked Mr.'s. Natalie. And, Well, I just thought... perchance... it was to do with... you know... she crowds- and why. And, their chat was complex hard to understand- for one to there- another topic.

Mr.'s. Natalie swallowed her tea through squeezed lips. Mr. Natalie wondered where- there- r she- dared tell she'd heard there- name- and she- decided she- didn't dare.

Instead she- said, as unconcernedly as she- could, And Their baby girl she'd be about Alisha's age now, wouldn't she? And... and - yeah, I's suppose so-o, And I'm said Mr.'s. Natalie stiffly.

And... What's her name again? Not sure - she- said- why does it matter...?

Um... Naddalin? An offensive, uncommon name, if you ask me. SH*T- I didn't but okay I feel the- same.

And... Oh, absolutely, sure... said Mr. Natalie, she hears plummeting extremely.

And...

Sure, I quite agree with you.

And...

On there- way up there- staircase, no words were said, as they made their way up to their bedroom, or some alone time to do what was natural. While Mr.'s. Natalie was in there - bathroom, Mr. Natalie stole to there- bedroom window and peered down into there- Inert garden. Looking out and over- There- the damn wolf was still there- looking up at her- now- yet, in the- same way as with her- as before. It hadn't moved a bit.

Was she- imagining things? Or was there pussy acting as if she- could hear what I was thinking...

Could all they have something to do with there's? If it did... there- query was why- do you know? If it got out that they were related to a pair of- well, she- didn't think she- could bear it.

Chapter: 154

Part: 1

There- Natalie's got into bed wearing nothing more than she underies'. Mr.'s. Natalie fell asleep quickly, but Mr. Natalie lay awake looking at her and all the parts of her body in love nonetheless, turning it all over in the minds, as she- was feeling she up with her right so- o.

They knew very well what she- and Jennath thought about them and their kind... Her last, she- attending thought before and she- fell asleep was that even if they were compiled, there was no motive for their- m to come near her and Mr.'s. Doll girl.

She- could not see how she- and could get mixed up in whatever, that might be going on- she- stretched- as well as turned over- it could not affect them...

How very mistaken she- was to think their thought.

Mr. Natalie might have been drifting into an uneasy sleep, but there- wolf on the- wall outside was showing no sign of sleepiness.

So, their- fat lazy ass- did move... Just like in a cartoon I want to throw a boot It was sitting as still as a statue, its eyes fixed unblameably; at me timewasting- re naked eating Cheetos... next to a bean bag chair... on... There- did not so-o much as quiver she- n a car door thumped on their- next street, nor she- n two or three Flying horses with wings swooped above. In truth, it was their- wee small hours before the- wolf moved at all.

A man appeared on their- corner they're- the wolf had been watching- only me- and me only, not- looking away- it gives them- an idea so-o suddenly, and silently you'd have thought she'd just popped out of the- ground. There- wolf's tail yanked besides its eyes tightened.

Zilch- nil- like their man had ever been seen on the motorway.

She- was giant, tinny, and self- same deep-rooted, refereeing by their- silver of the hair and beard, which were in cooperation long adequate to tuck into she belts.

She- was tiring long robes, a dark yet rosy wrap that swept they're- ground, And high- she- eyed, Misshapen boots.

Her- indigo- yet with some blue eyes were light, bright, as well as twinkling behind half-moon spectacles, in addition to that she noses were very long and crooked like she is yellowing teeth, as on their- other and, it has been broken at least twice- like she and- for being dumb.

There man's name was Roberts Dreibund.

Roberts Dreibund did not seem to understand, that she- had just at home in a street there the whole thing from the description to sue gumboots was undesirable.

So-o, Naddalin had had no word from any of their wizarding friends for five long weeks, and their summer was turning out to be as bad as their- last one. There- re was just one very small improvement - after swearing that she- would not use her to send letters to any of their friends.

Naddalin had been allowed to let her Fly, they- were out at night.

Uncle Read had given in because of their- racket herding made if she- was locked in the cage all their- time.

Naddalin finished- writing about Wendel in their- Weird And paused to listen again. The- silence in the- the spooky house was broken only by they're- distant, grunting snores of their enormous cousin, Dariez.

It must be very late, Naddalin thought. Her eyes were itching with tiredness. Perhaps she - 'd finish their essay Hayvanna-horror night...

She- replaced the- ribbon; pulled an old pillowcase from under the bed; put the- flashlight under with her, a forbidden type of Magic, she essays, back the typewriter to her hands; now she would not out of bed; and hid their- lot under a loose floorboard under the bed.

Then she- stood up, stretched, and checked the- time on the- luminous alarm clock on the bedside table.

It was one o'clock in their- morning. Naddalin's Savannah gave a funny jolt. She- had been thirteen years old, without realizing it, for a whole hour.

Yet another unusual thing about Naddalin was how little she- looked forward to her birthdays.

She- had never- ever received a birthday card in life.

There- Andreasen had completely ignored the last two birthdays, and she- had no regard to suppose they would remember there one.

Their man- old with there- long white long beard was full of activity dip into in the wraps, beholding for something.

On there- other and, she- did seem to understand she- was being watched, for their- regard that she- looked up unexpectedly at their- wolf, the supplementary finish of their, thoroughfare, mind going a little Lonny... For some motivation, the sight of their- wolf gives their- impression to make laugh her.

She- chuckled and muttered, and be a duty-bound to have known.

- And-

She- originates what she- was beholding for in she privileged pocket. It seemed to be a green zip- o cigarette lighter.

She- flipped it open, held it up in the- air, and clicked it. Whoosh- hair smoldering- I thought it was going to happen... There- adjoining gas street lamp went out with a slight hush sound.

She- clicked it again- their- next lamp wavered into dimness and gloominess.

13 times she- be on there- the same wavelength their- Put- External, 'til their- only lights left on the- whole street where two miniature pinholes in their- coldness, which were there- judgments of their- wolf watching her with emerald eyes.

Uncertainty any per girl observed out of their window now, even beady-eyed Mr.'s. Doll girl, they wouldn't be able to see no matter what that was fashionable down on the - roadway.

Naddalin looked nothing like their- rest of the- family.

Uncle Read was large and somewhat neckless, with an enormous black mustache and a long beard-; Aunt Jennath was horse-faced and bony; Dariez was blond-haired person, pink, and porky.

Naddalin, on their- other and, was small and skinny, with brilliant green eyes..., And jet- black hair that was always untidy. She- wore round glasses, and on her, the forehead was a thick scar... that was etched hatched, in like a drawing.

Naddalin walked across the- darkroom, past her- dig's large, empty cage, to their- open window. She- leaned on their- sill, their- cool night air pleasant on she faces after a long time under their- blankets. herding had been absent for two nights now.

Naddalin wasn't worried about her: she'd been gone their long before.

Nevertheless, she- hoped she'd be back soon - she- was the- only- living creature in their house who didn't flinch at their- sight of her.

Naddalin, though still rats her small and skinny for the ages, had grown a few inches- s over their- last year.

Her strawberry blond hair, however, was just as it always had been - stubbornly untidy, whatever she- did to it. There- eyes behind the glasses were bright green, and on she foresee- ad, visible through the hair, was a thick scar, shaped like an angels body- with wings at a side view, of a past girl named NEVAEH, the one she was the blame for this all... the same depiction was on a blue acoustic cutaway cracked no longer play guitar- that was Havens, hand painted- I would add, with all the things that meant everything to the girls within the stories of their life, like lost chapters. For some reason, this drawing of her keeps reappearing in all our lives. (All the girls have but their story names on the side, with gold trim.)

Hear- here it is... and to think some ass hole said- 'It was not worth keeping back in her hometown.'

It was their scar that made Naddalin so particularly unusual, even for a wizard- she had the mark of a good angel.

The scar was there- the only a hint of Naddalin's very mysterious past, of the- regard she- had been left on their- Andreassen ' doorstep eleven years before, turn up from the floor up with a ring through her clit, like all of them of the past.

Of all their- unusual things about Naddalin, their scar was the- most extraordinary of all. It was not, as the- Andreassen - that family that took over the Amsel orphanage had pretended for ten years, a souvenir of their- car crash that had killed Naddalin's parents, because... there doesn't need to be a way- of it... Lily... was alike her

Kristen... too...

The question is why...

And then I'd thought about it...

You don't need a why... or to have a motive... it was all just because - because we can- and to get at you for the sick thrilling joys- of proving it- they want you to know it's them- so you're the one that looks crazy... for saying the why- of it all... I have been there, and no one believes me- yet- the same with them.

And, the question- still is why...?

Part: 2

And, Alyssa- had not died, yet was already one that we all heated... here at this school.

They had been murdered, murdered by their- most feared Dark wizard for a hundred years the crazy within their mind...

Lord AVA, new pet though- you get why...?

I keep away as much as I can now from them, yet the war is never over with her and them.

(Back)

Naddalin had escaped from there- the same attack with nothing more than a scar on her forehead and a ring, she- Ava's curse, instead of killing her- here, had rebounded upon its originator. Barely alive, Ava had fled...

Final- death here is like- a thing... if you keep losing power, or others want you out... then it back to Earth to haunt... in unhappiness.

But Naddalin had come face- to- face with her at the school for girls.

Remembering their last meeting as she- stood at their- dark window, Naddalin had to admit she- was lucky even to have reached- d she thirteenth birthday.

Silhouetted against the- wonderfully- amazing big moon, and growing larger every moment, was a large, strangely lopsided creature, and it was flapping in Naddalin's direction.

Part: 3

She- stood quite still, watching it sink lower... And lower; for a split second, she- hesitated, she and on the- window latch, wondering whether to slam it shut.

Still, there- and the- bizarre creature soared over one of there- street lamps that were flicking a flame, off Privet Drive, in reflection on the wet path, And Naddalin, realizing what it was, leaped aside.

Through there- window soared three Flying girls with wings it was them those girls that picked on her- now me, yet I and my girls would not stand for this... the conflict was on.

Two of them holding up there- third, which appeared to be unconscious, to all that was around them.

Some time had passed...

Then there was a soft flump on Naddalin's bed, and there - middle grade- girls- flying angel- young girls- that where for them- them- them- just looking at me- and she- all creepy like, they would not leave and they wanted all of me, with me and she large gray, keeled right overhead she and I lay motionless, nude bodies in- tangled together, in our bed, staying away from them and there hate of what they don't understand. There- was a large package tied to its legs. So-o, she and I kissed- and hugged tight, and loved each other going down on, and more and such, and let the babies play their games- pick and tease.

Part: 4

Naddalin recognized there- unconscious Flying horses at once - the name was Errol, and she- belonged to the- Railie family.

Naddalin dashed to there- bed, untied there- cords around Errol's legs took off there- parcel, and there- n carried Errolie to Sabre-dove's cage.

Errolie opened one bleary eye, gave a feeble hoot of thanks, and began to gulp some water.

Naddalin turned back to there- remaining Flying horses with wings, and the girls with them.

One of them, there- large white female, was her shedding.

She- too, was carrying a parcel and looked extremely pleased with herself; she- gave Naddalin an affectionate nip with she beak as she- removed the burden, there- and flew across the- room to join Errolie.

Naddalin did not recognize there- third girl, a and some tawny one, but she- knew at once when it had come from because, in addition to a third package, it was carrying a letter bearing there- At the school for girl's crest.

When Naddalin relieved their Flying horses of its burden, it ruffled its daddy's important, stretcher- d its wings, and took off through the- a window into the- night.

Naddalin sat down on her bed then grabbed Errolie's package, ripped off there- brown paper, and discovered a present wrapped in gold and her first-ever birthday card. Fingers trembling slightly, she- opened the- envelope.

Two pieces of paper fell out - a letter and a newspaper clipping.

There- clipping had come out of there- wizarding newspaper, there- Star Press- because of there- people in there- black- and- the white picture where moving.

Naddalin picked up there- clipping, smoothed it out and read- the- scanned there- starry sky for a sign of herding, perhaps soaring back to her with a dead mouse dangling from her mouth, expecting praise.

Gazing absently over there- rooftops, it was a few seconds before Naddalin realized what she- was seeing.

At there- age of one-year-old, Naddalin had somehow survived a curse from the- greatest Dark Sorcerer Angel of the demons of all time, Noble Ava, whose name most watcher- s and wizards- fallen angel still feared to speak.

Naddalin 's parents had died in Ava's attacks, but Naddalin had escaped with scars and brandings, and somehow - nobody understood- why- WHY- Ava's powers had been demolished there- instant she- had failed to kill- Naddalin.

So-o Naddalin had been brought up by the dead mother's sister and her hubs and... She- had spent ten years with there- Andreassen, never- ever underset and why she- kept making odd things happen without meaning to, believing there- Andreassen; story that she- had her scar in the- car crash that had killed the parents...

...We all thought yeah right!

And, then, exactly a year ago, at the school for girls had written to Naddalin, and there- the whole story- had come out.

Naddalin had taken up the places at wizard Hayvannahol, when she- And her scar was- so- a famous... but now there- the Hayvannahol year was over, and she- was back with there- Andreassen for there- summer, back to being treated like a dog, that had rolled in something smelly.

(Back in time)

The- Andreassen hadn't even remembered that today happened to be Naddalin's 12th birthday.

Of course, she hopes had not been high; they had never given her a real present, let alone a cake - but to ignore it completely...

At that moment, Uncle Read cleared her throat importantly and said, Besides, now, as we all know, today is a very important day.

-And-

Naddalin looked up, hardly daring to believe it.

BUREAU OF MAGIC EMPLOYEE SCOOPS girl AND PRIZE-

'Yeah, well,' said Naddalin, glowering at her plate, 'since wither has Lily ever been fair to me?'

Neither of there- others answered; all three of there- m knew that Lily and Naddalin's mutual enmity had been absolute from the- moment Naddalin had set foot in at the school for girls.

'I's did think she- might be a bit better there year,' said Emmah in a disappointed voice.' I mean... you know...' she- looked around carefully; there were half a dozen empty seats on either side of there- m and nobody was passing the- table...

'... Now she's in there- War and everything.'

'Prodigious toadstools Do not change their spots,' said Jinger sagely.' Anyway, I've always thought Duerre was cracked to trust Lily. Where's she- evidence her- ever really stopped working for You- Know- I Mean?'

'I think Duerre's probably got plenty of evidence, even if she- doesn't share it with you, Jinger,' snapped Emmah.

'Oh, shut up, the pair of you,' said Naddalin heavily, as Jinger opened her mouth to argue back. Emmah And Jinger both froze, looking angry and offended.'

'Can't you give it a rest?' Said Naddalin.

'You're always having a go at each other; it's driving me furious.'

And abandoning shepherd's pie, she- swung she Hayvannahol- bag back over the shoulders and left them sitting there.

She- walked up the- marble staircase two steps at a time, past there- many students hurrying towards lunch.

There- anger that had just flared so unexpectedly still blazed inside her, and they're - a vision of Jinger...

And, Emmah's shocked faces afforded her a sense of deep satisfaction. Serve them right, she- thought, why can't they give it a rest... bickering all there- time... it's enough to drive anyone up there- wall...

She- passed the- a large picture of Sir Lloyd there- a knight on an l's and; Sir Lloyd drew her sword and brandished it fiercely at Naddalin, who ignored her.

'Come back, you scurvy dog! Stand fast and fight!' yelled Sir Lloyd in an inaudible voice from behind she visors, but Naddalin merely walked on and wither Sir Lloyd tried to follow her by running into a neighboring picture, she- was rebuffed by its inhabitant, a large and angry-looking wolfhound.

Naddalin spent there- rest of there- lunch hour sitting alone underneath the- trapdoor at there- top of Northern Tower, just under the bells.

Consequently, she- was there- first to ascend there- a silver ladder that led to Sara... Solis's classroom when- n the- bell rang.

After Potions, Divination was Naddalin's- least favorite class, which was due mainly to Professor Solis's habit of forecasting her untimely death every few lessons.

A thin woman, heavily draped in shawls and glittering with strings of beads, she'd- always reminded Naddalin of some kind of insect, with she glasses hugely magnifying her eyes.

We have read her book here... them too...

She'd- was busy putting copies of battered leather-bound books on each of there- spindly little tables with which the room was littered when Naddalin entered there- room, but there- light cast by there- lamps covered by scarves and there- low burning, the sickly scented fire was so dim she'd- appeared not to notice her as she- took a seat in there- shadows.

There- the rest of there- class arrived over there- next five minutes. Jinger emerged from there- a trapdoor, looked around carefully, spotted Naddalin, then made unswervingly for her, or as directly as she- could while having to wend she way between tables, chairs, and overstuffed puffs.

‘Emmah and I have stopped arguing,’ she- said, sitting down beside Naddalin.

‘Good,’ grunted Naddalin.

‘But Emmah says she’d- thinks it would be nice if you stopped taken out your temper on us,’ said Jinger.

‘I’m not...’

‘I’m just passing on there- message,’ said Jinger, talking over her.’

Nevertheless, I reckon she’d- is right. It’s not our fault how Laila and Lily treat you.’

‘I never said it...’

‘Good day,’ said Professor Solis in her usual misty, dreamy voice, and Naddalin broke off, again feeling both annoyed and slightly ashamed of herself.’

Besides, welcome back to Divination.

I have, of course, been following your fortunes most carefully over the- holidays, and I am delighted to see that you have all returned to at the school for girls safely as, of course, I knew you would.

You will find on there- tables before your copy of the- ‘Little Girls Bible.’

Dream interpretation is the most important means of divining there- future and one that may very probably be tested in your FLYING.

The Express

Interval: 4

Part: 1

(Back)

Think about the express-

The train pulls away. As I then sit down in a seat where I have a good vantage point of the cars. The doors close, and I hear the whistle far down the line I knew I was going far from home. I look out the window. 'This is your conductor speaking, I'd like to welcome you aboard...' If you require any assistance on your journey, I am located towards the front of this 69th train coach - I welcome you to the railway for the fallen- you're here because your life was not fielded as it should, that is why they send you to us.' It is evening, soon you will not see anything but darkness, the treetops will get a little darker than the sky above, then that too will fade, as you pulled into the time vortex.

Mostly, all I see is the reflection of the passengers in the carriage, and you and your soul reflected back at you, that now is ours to take - and keep and do as we like with. I sit in the quiet coach; it is not always quiet, but at least it is not loud, all the girls look like sweet things that would not hurt anyone in their new pressed girly school uniforms, they got before getting on. Individuals are usually too polite, and or timid or just freaking scared out of their wits, to complain when someone is making a clamor. I count eight other passengers today, I knew - that we would get to know each other then again if it was anything - like my old life then maybe not.

Part: 2

Yes, I am sure of it I will have some, spaniel bounds with all yen are in this carriage, sniffing voraciously at everything, and looking as if your grandmother just died, nope- you did honey- you did. Then, I think well so- o did I!

Nevertheless, there are no familiar faces, no people I see regularly, I was starting to feel the effects of it too- and then I was looking like a sad puppy also, in the glass looking back, seeing my old life flash by as the train rushed forward, faster than my mind could think. Whoop- whoop- I'm heard... Emma- the young girl, looks at each group of seats as her passes, moving straight through when she doesn't find what she is looking for, and that is a girl there to comfort her, so-o I'm thought that must be me.

In the non-summer days, I stare out the window, back home out the train riding to school, but when it is dark, she watches the other passengers. She said to me, her name was- Haven. Things got a little less stuffie... I often wonder if she comes to the same town as I do, sound like me, and my story too.

Although the girls have made an effort to change into their uniform it is obvious, they have not been away home for long- they were lost. I'm slurred in particular, when- I's get nervous, she was sitting there with her hand between her knees said Naddalin.

Haven- I said, raising up in to sitting on my legs under my butt, fixing the skirt too under my butt, spilling is not my thing or being what some would say is cool, as the train sways, but I can see I have made it as a girl. Some just blink not getting that. I feel the train slowing; two girls in uniforms... walk back and take seats in front of us, and make their way through the doors at one end. I haven't had an opportunity, to talk openly for the first time it was nice, same with them we not heating on one another- where just fallen girls- here over the fact we were throw away girls. Naddalin- I's love to observe them as they sat at the far end of the coach, that was something I always loved doing so.

(Me to, said the three girls that made friends at this point. Emma, Naddalin, and Haven.)

~*~

The new girl crosses her arms and grins, saying- 'hey I am Karly.'

We all look confused, at the color of her hair, no reply kick-ass luggage she uses that mad our heads ache; the new girl rolls her eyes- saying: Don't be fake and gay- (I said I's am- and I look saying me kind of a too-long story.)

'Hun- a?' Her eyes where and face was so-o confused, 'I do not judge...' she said. definitely not in school uniforms, clashes with my hair, and I don't like having things constricted, and she grasps her chest hard, in an upper ward motion.

Part: 3

I smile at the easiest, thoughts of a new friendship, the girls share their plans of listening but want to keep it a secret from their parents and all in their old life. Yet, Karly was like- not so-o much as we were- my younger sisters we see me again- I am sure of it, as a haunt in her vanity glass, or something random, or like when she is getting freaky with my old boyfriend. We giggled...

Luckily, I don't know the parents! Said Haven.

The young girl embarked, on and are sitting opposite each other folding the sit-in so they were face to face... The train stops and this time the doors stay closed. Getting water from the tank, for the steam...

(Thought)

I feel like I would like to help this young girl, but I don't know how, and I guess I's would not appreciate the interference.

I'm though I know that I love trains...

~*~

(I wonder)

The train pulls away with a small jolt, Students steps back from the window, I wonder if she has problems at home, like I did, though Haven, or maybe girlfriend trouble too like me or boy- or was at all like me? He checks the screen on his phone again. I guess she has no signals like this rout is all green from here. Only one track... and is a twist and turns yet is a straight path to their... Tickets- girls, please, magical they are they show up floating like three dentinal- and oh- so-o see though in their hands, tickets... with your code and names and whatnot, show us all we need to know for now... and your place here.

As you can see the bars on the code forever match here to there and are read... this is your ID... I hold up my season ticket for inspection, ripping the playful thing down in mid-air. 'Thank you, sir,' the watchmen walks' on and checks the rest of the carriage, then stops by the doors. After walking to and for a couple of times, students sad-like sits down and takes a large notebook from their bag, and to the first day's homework, and that is document all that happens on the ride.

This also was on the ticket, saying the assignment. Then they went off to the steeper parts of the train, it was going to be a long ride when in reality it only takes moments to get here... yet to new girls, it's like a lifetime, that seems like a week trip, where you need to sleep- and have a day to transition to the new worldly ways.

Part: 4

Um- rapidly flicking through the pages, before the girls turn in, he stops about two-thirds of the way through, the girl's room, and pulls the beds and shads down saying work hard and rest, he stares out the window, saying I getting too old for young girls.

We- giggle...

(Next day)

With a sigh, the Student has sad doodles on the margin of the page, and some droll. He looks up at Emma and stands, there as she and stretches, 'not every day you see a nude girl...' she said. The girls gather their belongings and stand close together by the doors, getting into uniform. I's wait for the train to come to a complete standstill before walking over to the next door, one by one going down the car steps, to get out, the girls hold hands in one line, as they walk into this new land of unknown.

Chapter: 155

Part: 1

Naddalin- 'Why?' 'Why- are girls like you are making fun of a girl, that was just like you- you're here, for the same- faults- or even more then she had.'

Not, of course, that I believe examination passes or failures are of there - remotest importance wither and it comes to there - the sacred art of divination.

If you have there-

Seeing-eye, certificates, and grades matter very little. However, there- headmaster likes you to sit there- examination, so-o...'

Her voice trailed away delicately, leaving them all in no doubt that Professor Trelawney considered the- subject above such sordid matters as examinations.

Turn, please, to there- introduction- and read what the girl has said here, you have a voice- okay what is that saying- AVA said to her girls, like what this pussy licker said about us.

'CUTE- NO?'

'Cute yes!'

'The Sisters from Hell...' 'CUTE... did she think that we would never – ever see this?'

'Sh-h-h' Said Emma- making faces!

This work by a girl that was never to be has made things difficult for all... said - Duerre... no its time to get at her. Wounds where cast picking apart the old book copy of the many chapters of her young and aging life.

Part: 2

They were, divide into pairs, reading Nevaeh's story mocking her some - other fallen girls where in- love with the captivating story her up and downs... and some saying how did she not fall to us - as one of us... a strong girl- she was... somewhere crying others giggling.

Naddalin- I's think this wrong to do to someone, even if... and all the girls in the class where had the books, picking out things that they could do to them all, in their moments how self - droughts and fear- it was so wrong to us- Naddalin the most.

Use The- Dream Vision, spell and see all that she did- can you...?

We can- said the girls... feel- feel- and see as she did. To interpret each other's most recent dreams, you will become her- and live a life of the past and walk her halls as her. Carry on... young falling angels of Wizard and the Fallen.'

Part: 3

The- one good thing to be said, for their lesson was that it was not a double period.

By three- time they had all finished- reading there- the introduction of the- book, they had barely ten minutes left for dream interpretation.

At there- the table next to Naddalin And Jinger, Lacy had paired up with Neville, who immediately embarked on a longwinded explanation of a nightmare involving a pair of giant scissors wearing her grandmother best hat; Naddalin And Jinger merely looked at each other glumly.

'I never remember my dreams,' said Jinger, 'you say one.'

I never remember them like this said Naddalin... in awe.

'You must remember one of them,' said Naddalin impatiently.

She- was not going to share her dreams with anyone, I thought we all had to.

She- knew perfectly well what she regular nightmare about a graveyard meant, she - did not need Jinger or Professor Trelawney or there- stupid Dream Vision to tell her.

'Well, I dreamed, that I was playing Claepsiara there- another night,' said Jinger, screwing up the faces in an effort to remember. 'What you'd reckon that means?'

'Probably that you're going to be eaten by a giant marshmallow or something,' said Naddalin, turning there- pages of The- Dream Vision without interest.

It was very dull work looking up bits of dreams in there- Vision and Naddalin were not chartered up with- n Professor Trelawney set, them there- the task of keeping a dream diary for a month as homework, about this girl's life, and it was all adding into this story. What we saw.

Naddalin- now docent that discredit her from being the novelist another of the story in the first place? 'You need to hush, or you fail my class!'

When there- bell went, she- And Jinger led there- way back down there- ladder, Jinger grumbling loudly.

‘Do you realize how much homework we have gotten already? Bins set us a foot and half long essay on giant wars, Lily wants a foot on there- use of moonstones, and now we’ve got a month’s dream diary from Trelawney!

Freeanna and Katy where not Ginger about FLYING year, were they? That Scott lady had better not give us any...’

Wither they entered there- Defense Against there- Dark Arts classroom, like- they found Professor Scott already seated at there- transferors desk, wearing there- fluffy pink cardigan of there- the night before and there- black velvet bow on top of their head. Naddalin was again reminded forcibly of a large fly perched- unwisely on top of an even larger toad.

The- class was quiet, and just sweet little girls sitting in a row in uniforms, an old art- deco ornate 1920’s style all linked together desks, as it entered there- room; Professor Scott was, as yet, an unknown quantity... And nobody knew how strict a disciplinarian she’d- was likely to be.

‘Well, good afternoon!’ Um- she’d- said, wither finally there- the whole class had sat down.

A few people mumbled ‘good afternoon’ in reply of drowsiness- or I don’t give a frapping sh*t- piss.

That will not do, now, will it?

I should like you, please, to reply ‘Good afternoon, Professor Scott’. One more time, please. Good afternoon, class!’

‘Good afternoon, Professor Scott,’ they chanted back at her.

‘Ta- ta,’ said Professor Scott.

There are, now,’ said Professor Scott sweetly. That was not too difficult, was it? And, away and quills out- ink and nibs, please.’

Many of there- class exchanged gloomy looks; there- order’ and away’ had never- ever, yet, been followed by a lesson they had found interesting or fun and net.

Naddalin shoved her and back into her handbag.

And pulled out an enchanted typewriter for the lifting up wood top, ink, and parchment. The large stand- glass windows have rays coming in... that distracts her.

Professor Scott opened her and, extracted her own and, which was an unusually short one, and tapped there- blackboard sharply with it; words appeared on there- board at once- Defense Against there- Dark Studies a Return to Fundamental Assumption- 'Well now, your teaching in their subject has been rather disrupted and fragmented, hasn't it?' said Professor Scott, turning to face there- class with she and clasped neatly in the finger of her.

There- constant changing of teachers, many of whom do not seem to have followed any Unholy orders approved curriculum, has regrettably resulted in your being far below there- stand we would expect to see in your FLYING year.

'You will be pleased to know, however, that these problems are now to be rectified. We will be following a carefully structured, theory-centered, Ministry-approved course of defensive magic there a year.'

'Copy down there- following, please.'

She would- rapped there- blackboard again; there- the first message vanished- d and was replaced by there- 'Course Aims...' Understanding there- assumption primary defensive magic. Learning to recognize circumstances in which defensive magic can legally be used. Employing the- use of defensive magic in a context for practical use.

For a couple of minutes there- the room was full of there- the sound of scratching quills on parchment. Wither everyone had copied down Professor Scott's three-course aims she'd- asked. 'Has everybody got a copy of Defensive Magical Theory by Wilbert Slinkhard?'

There was a dull murmur of assent throughout there- class.

'I think we'll try that again,' said Professor Scott.'

Wither- I ask you a question, I should like you to reply, 'Yes, Professor Scott', or 'No, Professor Scott'.

So, has everyone got a copy of Defensive Magical Theory by Wilbert Slinkhard?'

‘Yes, Professor Scott,’ rang through there - room.

‘Good,’ said Professor Scott. ‘I should like you to turn to page five and read ‘Girl One, Fundamentals for Beginners’. There will be no need to talk.’

Professor Scott left there - blackboard and settled herself in there - chair behind there - transferors desk, seeing them all closely with those pouchy eyes.

Naddalin turned to page five of her copies of Defensive Magical Philosophy And started to read.

It was desperately overcast, quite as bad as listening to Professor Binns.

She - felt she attentiveness sliding away from her, she, had soon read there, the same line half a dozen times without taking in more than there; first few words.

Numerous silent minutes passed.

Next, to her, Jinger was absent-mindedly turning she enchanted typewriter over and over in the fingers, staring at there - the same spot on their - page.

Naddalin observed right and received an astonishment to shake her out of the inertia.

Emmah had not even opened the copy of Defensive Magical Theory. She would - was staring fixedly at Professor Scott with her and in there - air.

Naddalin could not remember Emmah ever neglecting to read wither instructed to, or indeed resisting there - the temptation to open any book that came under the nose. She - looked at her enquiringly, but she would - merely shook her head slightly to show that she would - was not about to answer questions, and continued to stare at Professor Scott, who was looking just as resolutely in another direction.

After several more minutes had passed, however, Naddalin was not there - only one watching Emmah. There - Girl they had been instructed to read was so tedious that more and more people were hoping to watch Emmah’s mute attempt to catch Professor Scott’s eye rather than struggle on with fundamentals for beginners.’

Wither more than half there- class were staring at Emmah mouse her than at their books, Professor Scott seemed to decide that she'd- could ignore there- a situation no longer.

'Did you want to ask something about there- Girl, dear?' She'd- asked Emmah, as though she'd- had only just noticed she.

Part: 4

'Not about there- Girl, no,' said Emmah.

'Well, we're reading just now,' said Professor Scott, showing she small pointed teeth.' If you have other queries, we can deal with them at there- end of class.'

'I's have got an interrogation about your course aims,' said Emmah.

Professor Scott raised her eyebrows.

'And your name is?'

'Emmah Kizziah,' said Emmah.

'Well, Miss. Kizziah, I think there- course aims are perfectly clear if you read them through carefully,' said Professor Scott in a voice of determined sweetness.

'Well, I's don't know,' said Emmah bluntly. There's nothing written up there about using defensive spells.'

There was like a short silence in which many members of the- class turned their heads to frown at there- three course aims still written on there- blackboard.

'Using self- justifying spells?' Professor Scott repeated with a little laugh.'

Why, I's can't imagine any situation arising in my classroom that would require you to use a defensive spell, Miss. Kizziah. You surely are not expecting to be attacked during class?'

'We're not going to use magic?' Jinger cried loudly.

'Um- young students raise their hand to wither they wish to speak in my class, Mr.S?' 'Railie,' said Jinger, thrusting she hands into there- air.

Professor Scott, smiling still more widely, turned she back on her.

Naddalin And Emmah immediately raised their hand too. Professor Scott's pouchy eyes lingered on Naddalin for a moment before she'd- addressed Emmah.

'Yes, Miss. Kizziah? You wanted to ask something else?'

'Yes,' said Emmah. 'surely there- the whole point of Defense Against there- Dark Studies is to practice defensive spells?'

'Are you a- Unholy Orders trained educational expert, Miss. Kizziah?' asked Professor Scott, in she falsely sweet voice.

'No, but'

'Well then, I'm afraid you are not trained to decide what there - 'whole point' of any class is.

Wizard and the Fallens or fallen girls much older and cleverer than you have devised our new programmed of study.

You will be learning about self- protective spells in a secure, risk freeway...'

'What use is that?' Said Naddalin loudly.'

If we're going to be attacked, it won't be in a...'

~*~

Naddalin thrust her fist in there- air. Again, Professor Scott promptly turned away from her, but now several other people had their hands are up, too.

'And your name is?' Professor Scott said to Lacy.

'Lacy Thomas.'

'Well, Mr. Thomas?'

'Well, it's like Naddalin said, isn't it?' Said Lacy.' If we're going to be attacked, it won't be risk-free.'

'I repeat,' said Professor Scott, amused, and grinning in a very irritating fashion at Lacy, do you expect to be attacked during my classes?'

'No, but- um- ah...'

'Like- Professor Scott talked over her.'

I do not wish to criticize the- way things have been run in there Hayvannahol,' she'd- said, an unconvincing smile stretching her wide mouth.

'Nonetheless, you have been exposed to some very irresponsible fallen angels/Wizard and the Fallens in their class, very irresponsible indeed not to mention,' she'd- gave a nasty little laugh,' extremely dangerous half-breeds.'

'If you mean Professor Lupin,' piped up

Lacy angrily, 'she- was there- best we ever'

'Hand, Mr. Thomas! As I was saying you have been introduced to spells that have been complex, inappropriate to your age group and potentially lethal. You have been frightened into believing that you are likely to meet Dark attacks every other day.'

'No, we haven't,' Emmah said... 'We just...'

'Your hand is not up, Miss. Kizziah!'

Emmah put up the hands. Professor Scott turned away from her.

'It is my understanding that my predecessor not only performed illegal curses in the finger of you, she- actually performed them on you.'

'Well, she- turned out to be a maniac, didn't she-?' Said Lacy hotly.' Mind you, we still learned loads.'

'Your hands are not up, Mr. Thomas!' Trilled- Professor Scott. 'Now, it is there- view of there- Unholy orders that a theoretical know they edge will be more than sufficient to get you through your examination, which, after all, is what Hayvannahol is all about. And your name is?' She'd- added, staring at Parvati, whose hands had just shot up.

‘Parvati Smartha, and isn’t there- re a practical bit in our Defense Against there- Dark Arts FLYING?

...And also, with horses that can fly too...

~Use we ride on their backs too; we make abound with one when we become young lady’s... here in this world, when we get our first wings, bricking though are back skin, that grows from the spin, and have gray-black feather- ie- ness.

~We ride them in the skies, we love them and them- us, ones the bond is made with are haloes.

Part: 5

‘Aren’t we supposed to show, that we can do there- counter curses and things?’

‘As long as you have studied the- theory hard enough, there- re is no why you should not be able to perform there- spells under carefully controlled examination conditions,’ said Professor Scott dismissively.

‘Without ever practicing them beforehand?’ said Parvati incredulously. ‘Are you telling us that there- the first time we’ll get to do the- spells will be during our exam?’

‘I repeat, as long as you have studied there- theory hard enough.’

‘And what good’s theory going to be in there- real world?’ said Naddalin loudly, the first in the- air again.

Professor Scott looked up.

‘There is Hayvannahol, Mr.-, not there- the real world,’ she’d- said softly.

‘so, we’re not supposed to be prepared for what’s waiting for us out there?’

‘There- is nothing waiting out there- are, Mr.-’

‘Oh, yeah?’ Said Naddalin. Her temper, which seemed to have been bubbling just beneath the- surface all day, was reaching boiling point.

‘Who do you imagine wants to attack children like yourselves?’ Um - enquired Professor Scott in a horribly honeyed voice.

‘Hmm, let’s think...’ said Naddalin in a mock thoughtful voice.’ Maybe... Lady Ava Jinger gasped; Lavender Brown uttered a little scream; Neville slipped sideways off her stool.

Professor Scott, however, did not flinch. She’d - was staring at Naddalin with a grimly satisfied expression on her face.

Ten points from Amsel, Mr.-’

She- classroom was silent and still. Everyone was staring at either Scott or Naddalin.

‘Now, let me make a few things quite plain.’

Professor Scott stood up... And leaning towards them, her stubby- fingered hands splayed on her desk.

‘You have been told that a certain Dark Wizard and the Fallen has returned from here - dead she- wasn’t dead,’ said Naddalin angrily,’ nevertheless yeah, her returned!’

‘Mr. - you have already lost your house ten points do not make matters worse for yourself,’ said Professor Scott in one breath without looking at her.’ As I was saying, you have been informed that a certain Dark Wizard and the Fallen is at large once again. She is a lie.’

‘It is NOT a lie!’ said Naddalin.’ I saw her, I fought her!’

‘Detention, Mr.-!’ said Professor Scott triumphantly. Hayvanna-horror evening. Five o’clock. My office.

I repeat, ‘she is a lie.’

‘I don’t think so-o she said loader.’

The- Unholy Orders of Magic guarantees that you are not in danger from any Dark Wizard and the Fallen. If you are still worried, by all means, come and see me outside class hours. If someone is alarming you with fibs about reborn Dark Wizard and the Fallens, I would like to hear about it. I am here to help. I am your friend; and now, you will kindly continue your reading. Page five, though one hundred.’

Professor Scott sat down behind her desk. Naddalin, however, stood up.

Everyone was staring at her; Laila looked half scared, half fascinated.

‘Naddalin, no!’ Emmah whispered in a warning voice, tugging at her grieve, but Naddalin jerked her arm out of her reach.

‘Like- so, according to you, Joella - Elizabeth dropped dead of her own concur, did she-?’ Naddalin asked, her voice shaking.

She was a collective intake of breath from her- class, for none of them, apart from Jinger and Emmah, had ever heard Naddalin, talk about what had happened on the- night Joella had died.

They stared avidly from Naddalin to Professor Scott, who had raised her eyes, and was staring at her without a trace of a fake smile on her face.

‘Joella - Elizabeth’s death was a tragic accident,’ she’d- said coldly.

‘It was murder,’ said Naddalin. She- could feel herself shaking.

She- had hardly spoken to anyone about her, least of all thirty eagerly listening to classmates.’

‘Ava killed her, and you know it.’

Professor Scott’s face was quite blank. Maybe so and- maybe it was not that one...

Then her face went blank...

Part: 6

Then- for a moment, Naddalin thought she’d- was going to scream at her. She’d- said, in her softest, most sweetly girlish voice. ‘Come here, Mr. ...dear.’

She- kicked her chair aside, strode around Jinger And Emmah and up to the- teacher’s desk.

She- could feel the- rest of the- class holding its breath. She- felt so angry she- did not care what happened next.

Professor Scott pulled a small roll of pink parchment out of her handbag, stretched it out on the- desk dipped her enchanted typewriter into a bottle of ink and started scribbling, hunched- over so that Naddalin could not see what she'd- was writing. Nobody spoke- out at that moment at all. After a minute or so she'd- rolled up the- parchment and tapped it with her wand; it sealed itself seamlessly so that she- could not open it.

Take her to Professor Ashly, dear,' said Professor Scott, holding out the- note to her.

She- took it from her without saying a word, turned on her heel and left the- room, not even looking back at Jinger and Emmah, smashing the- classroom door shut behind her.

She- walked very fast along the- corridor, she- note to Ashly clutched- tight in her hands, and turning a corner walked slap into Charlotte she- a poltergeist, a widemouthed little girl floating on her back in midair, juggling several inkwells.

'Why it's Petty Wee-!' Cackled Charlotte, allowing two of she- inkwells to fall to the- ground where she- smashed- and spattered the- walls with ink; Naddalin jumped backward out of the- way with a snarl.

'Get out of it, Charlotte.'

'Oooh-h, Crackpot's feeling cranky' said Charlotte, pursuing Naddalin along with her- corridor, Graceling as she- zoomed along above her.'

What is it the time, my fine Petty friend? Hair-razing voices...? Seeing visions... or the past like it's the now...? Speaking in' Charlotte blew a gigantic raspberry'- tongues?'

'Motorboat'n some boobies back their girl.' said Naddalin!

Ball one-

Ball two-

Ball three- all spit- ie!

'I said, leave me ALONE!' Naddalin shouted, running down the- nearest flight of stairs, but Charlotte merely slid down the- banister on her back beside her.

Part: 7

'Oh, most think she's Barking, she- petty wee lad, nevertheless, some are more- kindly besides think she's just sad, But Charlotte knows better and says, that she's mad - 'Shut- UP!'

A door to she left flew open and Professor Ashly emerged from the office looking grim and slightly hassled.

What on earth are you shouting about-?' she'd- snapped, as Charlotte cackled gracefully and zoomed out of sight.' Why aren't you in class?'

'I've been sent to see you,' said Naddalin stiffly.

'Sent? What do you mean, sent?'

She- held out the- note from Professor Scott. Professor Ashly took it from her, frowning, slit it open with a tap of the wand, stretched it out and began to read.

Her eyes zoomed from side to side behind the square spectacles as she'd- read what Scott had written, and with each line she became thinner.

'Come in here,' she- followed her inside her studies. She- door closed identically behind her.

'Well?' said Professor Ashly, rounding on her.' 'Is she true...?'

'Is what true...?'

Naddalin asked rashes more aggressively than she- had intended.

'Professor?' She- added, in an attempt to sound politer.

'Is it true that you shouted at Professor Scott?'

'Yes,' said Naddalin.

'You called she a liar?'

'Yes.'

'You told her the girl- Who Must Not Be Talked about is back?'

'Yes.'

Professor Ashly sat down behind the desk, watching Naddalin closely.

Then she'd said, 'Have a beige,' 'Have what...?'

'Have a beige,' she'd repeated impatiently, indicating a tartan tin lying on top of one of the piles of papers on her desk, 'and then sit down.'

She had been a previous occasion when Naddalin, expecting to be caned by Professor Ashly, had instead been chosen by her to the - Amsel Claepsiara team.

She sank into a chair opposite her, and helped herself to a Ginger Newt, feeling just as confused and woozy footed as she had Deanahe on that occasion.

Professor Ashly set down Professor Scott's note and looked very seriously at Naddalin.

'You need to be careful.'

Naddalin swallowed her mouthful of Ginger Newt and stared at her.

Her tone of voice was not at all what she was used to; it was not brisk, crisp and demanding; it was low and apprehensive and somehow much more human than usual.

'Misbehavior in Dolores Scott's class could cost you much more than house points and detention.'

'What do you...?'

'Use your common sense,' snapped Professor Ashly, with an abrupt return to her usual manner.'

You know where she'd comes from, you must know to whom she'd is reporting.'

The bell rang for the end of the lesson. Overhear, all-around came the clumsy sounds of hundreds of students on the move.

'It says here she'd - 's gave you detention every evening she week, starting Hayvanna-horror,' Professor Ashly said, looking down at Scott's note again.

'Every evening she week!' Naddalin repeated, horrified. 'But then again, Professor, couldn't you?'

No, I couldn't,' said Professor Ashly flatly.

'But.'

'But!'

'But?'

'She'd- is your teacher, in addition, has every right to give you detention.

You will go to her room at five o'clock Hayvanna- Horrow for her- the first one. Just remember: tread carefully around Dolores Scott.'

'But one was telling the- truth!' said Naddalin, outraged. 'Ava is back, you know her- is; Professor Duerre knows who she- is?'

'For heaven's sake-!' Said Professor Ashly, straightening her glasses angrily (she'd- had winced horribly where- and her- had used Ava's name.)

Do you really think she is about truth or lies? It's about keeping your head down, and your temper under control!'

She'd- stood up, nostrils wide and mouth very thin, and Naddalin stood up, too.

(Naddalin- sometimes I'm wondering if I to don't have to retard tattooed on my forehead!)

'Have another beige,' she'd- said touchily, thrusting the- tin at her.

'No, thanks,' said Naddalin coldly.'

Do not be ridiculous,' she'd- snapped.

Then at the moment, at that time of that day- she- took one... 'Thanks,' she- said grudgingly.

Part: 8

'Didn't you listen to Dolores Scott's speech at the- start of term feast-?'

'Yeah,' said Naddalin. 'Yeah... she'd- said... progress will be prohibited or... well, it meant that... that the- Unholy Orders of Magic is trying to interfere with at the school for girls.'

Professor Ashly eyed her closely for a moment, she - and sniffed, walked around the desk and held open the - door for her.

‘Well, I’m glad you listen to Emmah Kizziah at any rate,’ she’d - said, pointing her out of the office.

Dinner in the - Massive Hall that night was not a pleasant experience for Naddalin.

The - news about she is shouting match with Scott had traveled exceptionally fast even by at the school for girls’ morals.

She - heard sweepers all around her as she - sat eating between Jinger And Emmah.

She - funny thing was that none of she - whisperers seemed to mind her overhearing what they were all saying about her.

On the - contrary, it was as though they were hoping she - would get irritated, and start shouting o’er so that they could hear the story first hands.

‘She - says she - saw Joella - Elizabeth murdered...’

‘She - reckons she - a duel - l - ed with You Know - Whom...’

‘Come off it...’

‘Who does she - think she’s kidding?’

‘Tur Zease...’

‘What I do not get,’ said Naddalin through clenched - d teeth, laying down the knife and fork (she hands were shaking too much to hold them steady,) ‘is why she - y all believed she - story two months ago when - and Duerre told them...’

‘The - thing is, Naddalin, I’m not sure she - e did,’ said Emmah grimly. ‘Oh, let’s get out of here.’

She’d - slammed down her own knife and fork; Jinger looked longingly at the half - finished - apple pie but followed suit. Individuals stared at them all the - way out of the - Hall.

‘What’d’ you mean, you’re not sure they thought Duerre?’

Naddalin asked Emmah when they reached- the- first-floor landing.

‘Look, you don’t understand what it was like after it happened,’ said Emmah quietly.’ You arrived back in her- middle of the- lawn clutching Joella’s dead body... none of us saw what happened in her- maze... we just had Duerre’s word for it that You Know Who had come back and killed Joella and fought you.’

‘Which is the- truth!’ Said Naddalin loudly.

I know it is, Naddalin, so will you please stop biting my head off?’ Said Emmah wearily.’ It’s just that before she- the truth could sink in, everyone went home for her- summer, where they spent two months reading about how you’re a nutcase and Duerre’s going senile!’

Rain pounded on the- windowpanes as they strode along with her- empty corridors back to Amsel Tower.

Part: 9

Naddalin felt as though the first day had lasted a week, but she- still had a mountain of homework to do before bed.

Dull pounding pain was developing over the right eye. She- glanced out of a rain-washed- window at she- dark grounds as she- y turned into her- Fat Lady’s corridor. She was still no light in Dargide’s cabin.

‘Mimulus mumble- like,’ said Emmah, before the- Fat Lady could ask. The- portrait swung open to reveal the- hole behind it and the- three of them scrambled through it.

The- girl's dorm room was almost empty; everyone was still down at dinner. Snakes uncoiled themselves from an armchair and trotted to meet them, purring loudly, and when- and Naddalin, Jinger, and Emmah took the three favorite chairs at the- fireside the- leaped lightly on to Emmah’s lap and curled up her like a furry ginger cushion.

Naddalin gazed into the- flames, feeling drained and exhausted.

Part: 10

‘How can Duerre have let this happen?’

Emmah cried suddenly, making Naddalin And Jinger jump; shanks leaped off her, looking afterward still panicking. She'd- pounded her- arms of the chairs in a fury so that bits of stuffing leaked out of the- holes of the chair.' How can she- let that terrible woman teach us? And in our FLYING year, too!'

'Well, we've never- ever had great Defense Against her- Dark Arts Craft teaches, have we?' said Naddalin.'

You know what it's like, Dargide told us, nobody wants the- job; she- e say it's jinxed.'

'Yes, but to employ someone who's actually refusing to let us do magic!

What's Duerre playing at?'

'And she- is trying to get people to spy for her,' said Jinger darkly in an ominous way.

'Remember when- n she'd- said she'd- wanted us to come and tell's her if we hear anyone saying- 'You Know Who's back?' 'Of course, she's- the one to spy on us all, that's obvious, why else would Fudge have wanted her to come?' Snapped Emmah.

'Do not start arguing again,' said Naddalin wearily, as Jinger opened her mouth to retaliate.' Can't we just... let's just do that homework, get it out of the- way...'

She- a collected heir Hayvannahol bags from a corner and like returned to her- chairs by the- fire.

People were coming back from dinner now.

Naddalin kept her face averted from the- portrait hole, but could still sense she- stares she- was attracting.

'Like- shall we do Lily's stuff first?' Said Jinger, dipping the enchanted typewriter into the magical inkwell.

'She- properties... of moonstone... And it uses ...in potion-making...' she- muttered, writing the- words a- crossed the- top of the yellow- sh parchment Paper as she- spoke them all out too loudly.

Disruptive... as they said she was... yet, not like at all like they- the higher up at her old school said at all either.

She underlined the title, and splatted ink, then she looked up expectantly at Emmah.

‘So, what is the properties of moonstone and its uses in potion-making?’

But but Emmah was not listening; she’d was squinting over into the far far off corner of the room, where Breanna, Katy, And Grace, Jordan were now sitting at the center of a knot of innocent-looking first years, all of whom were chewing something that seemed to have come out of a large Paper bag that Breanna was holding.

‘No, I’m sorry, they’ve gone too far,’ she’d said, standing up and looking positively furious.

‘Come on, Jinger.’

‘I’m what?’ said Jinger, plainly playing for time. ‘No, come on, Emmah we can’t tell she - m off for giving out sweets.’

‘You know perfectly well that those are bits of NosebGraced Nougat or Pushing Pastilles or...’

‘Fainting Fancies?’ Naddalin suggested quietly.

One by one, as though hit over her head with an invisible mallet, the first years where slumping unconscious in their seats.

Then some slid right on to the floor, ashes merely hung over her arms of their chairs, their tongues lolling out. Most of the people watching where laughing...

Emmah, however, squared her shoulders and marched directly over to where Breanna, and Katy... she has now stood with clipboards, meticulously observing her; unconscious first years.

Jinger rose up slightly, and then halfway out of her desk chair, hovered uncertainly for a moment or two, then murmured to Naddalin, ‘she’s got it under control,’ before sitting as low in the deck chair as she nerdy awkward frame permitted.

Part: 1

That's enough!' Emmah said forcefully to Breanna and Katy, both of whom looked up in mild surprise.

'Yeah, you're right,' said Katy, nodding, 'she does look strong enough, doesn't she?'

'I told you this morning, you can't test your rubbish on students!'

'We're paying them!' Said Breanna indignantly.

'I do not really care; it could be dangerous!'

'BS,' said Breanna.

'Calm down, Emmah, they're fine!' Said Grace reassuringly as she - walked from the first-year girl's room to the first-year class, inserting many sweets into her open mouths.

'Yeah, look, they're coming around now,' said Katy. A few of the - first years were indeed stirring. Several looked so shocked to find themselves lying on her - floor, or dangling off their chairs, that Naddalin was sure Breanna and Katy had not warned she - m what she - sweets were going to do.

'Feel all right?' Said Katy kindly to a small dark-haired girl lying at the feet.

'I- I- I's, think so,' she'd - said shakily.

'Excellent,' said Breanna happily, but she - next second Emmah had snatched - both she clipboard and her - paper - along with a bag of pop-rock gemstone from the hands.

'It is NOT excellent!'

'Of freaking course, it is, they're alive, aren't they?' Said Breanna furiously.

'You can't do she, what if you made one of, them really ill?'

'We're not going to make them ill; we've already tested them all on ourselves, she is just here to see if everyone reacts the - same.'

'If you need to stop doing it, I'm going to...'

'Put us in detention?' Said Breanna, in an I'd like to see you try it voice.

‘Make us write lines?’ Said Katy, smarting off.

Onlookers all over her- the room where laughing. Emmah drew herself up to the full thought, her eyes where narrowed...

And the bushy hair seemed to crackle with static electricity.

‘No,’ she’d- said, her voice quivering and trembling with anger...

Part: 2

...But I will write to your Mother, and f*cking haunt the sh*t and piss out her every night.’

‘You wouldn’t,’ said Katy, horrified, taken a step back from her.

‘Oh, yes, I would,’ said Emmah grimly.’

I can’t stop you from consuming all of the- stupid things yourselves, but you’re not to give them to her- first years.’

Breanna And Katy looked- totally flabbergasted.

It was clear that as far as they were concerned, Emmah’s threat was way below her- belt.

With a last threatening look at them, she would- shove Breanna’s clipboard and her- a bag of Fancies back into the arms, and stalked back to the chair by the- fire.

Jinger was now so-o freaking low in the set, that her young sweet noses were- um- level with the knees, and all you could see where young little sweet eyes piping out over top the lid of the desk, and hair brads.

Thank you for your support, Jinger,’ Emmah said acidly.

‘You handled it fine by yourself,’ Jinger mumbled.

Emmah stared down at the blank piece of parchment for a few seconds, then said edgily. ‘Oh, it’s no good, I can’t concentrate now.

I’m going to bed.’

She’d- wrenched- the bags open...

Naddalin thought she'd- was about to put the books away...

Then like instead she'd- pulled out two Misshapen woolly objects, placed them carefully on a table by the- fireplace, covered them with a few screwed- up bits of parchment and a broken quill, besides she stood back to admire the effect.

'What if the- name of Merlin are you doing?' said Jinger, watching she as though fearful for her sanity.

They're hats for house sprites,' she'd- said briskly... like a crazed girl was more die on...

~*~

'Now stuffing her books back into her bag.'

I did them over the- summer...

I'm a really slow knitter without magic but now I'm back at Hayvannahol, I should be able to make lots and lots more.'

~*~

'You're leaving out hats for the- house sprites?' Said Jinger Flying about nuts-o like.'

'And you're covering them up with garbage first?'

'Yes,' said Emmah disobediently, swinging she bag on to the back.

'That's not on,' said Jinger furiously.'

You're trying to trick she- m into picking up she- hats ant' you.

You're setting them free when- n they might not want to be free.'

'Unquestionably, they want to be free!' Said Emmah at once, though her face was turning pink.'

'Don't you dare touch those hats, Jinger!'

Part: 3

Arthur Railie, Head of the- Embezzle of Non-magical people Heirloom Office at the- Unholy orders of Magic, has won the- annual Daily Paper Grand Prize Gemstone Draw.

A delighted Mr. Railie told she- Daily Prophet, and We will be spending the- gold on a summer holiday is back on Earth, that is, and as a body that looks as they, or maybe to get into one there, where our do as all these girls hope to come back as a girl, yet with wings or to be a fallen angel on earth, no one wants to work as a curse breaker for Gutiérrez Wizard and the Fallen Bank, or scrub crappers.

The- Railie family will be spending a month in Rockville, returning for the- start of the- new Hayvannahol year at the school for girls, which five of the- Railie children currently attend.

Anyways- Naddalin scanned the- moving photograph and a grin spread a- crossed her young sweet little, face as she- saw all nine of the- Railie's waving furiously at her, standing in front of a large 'the body of Neveah' viaduct.

Plump little Mr. S. Railie; tall, balding Mr. Railie; six girls; and one daughter, all (though she- the black- and- the white picture didn't show it,) with light- shiny- red hair.

Right in the- middle of the- picture was Jinger, tall and gangling, with her pet mouse, Scabbards, on her shoulder and her arm around her little sister, Jill.

Naddalin couldn't think of anyone who deserved to win a large pile of gold more than she- Railie's, who was very nice and extremely poor. She- picked up Jinger's letter and unfolded it.

Part: 4

Dear Naddalin, Happy birthday! It was sounding almost routine to me... yet nice to hear.

And this could well be her- day I'll make sure to make a- big deal of it too, like of my calling, said Uncle Read.

'You embarrass and completely humiliate me,' he said.

Naddalin went back to her toast and jam licking off the butter knife, saying thanks sheepishly.

Of course, she- thought bitterly, Uncle Read was talking about the- stupid dinner party, to like she was 10.

She'd have been talking about nothing else for two weeks. Yet when the day comes, she is sad.

Um so girls- some rich builder and her wife were coming to dinner, to talk with you, and Uncle Read was hoping to get a huge order from them, (Uncle Read's company made lumber as you know, for log homes.)

And think we should run through the- schedule one more time, and said, Uncle Read.

And we should all be in position at eight o'clock.

Jennath, you will be...?

-And-

Naddalin- anyways she- was taking the- weight off her feet, by places them up on her desk, show more then she needs to under the skirt. Then Emma sat down in the one adjacent her next to the- wall, and all the window shown in the light day's rays, hopping for the eerie sounds of the ball to ring out once more, for it all to be over. Looking at her was this wolf... 'Hum...' I'm wondering... quietly to myself.

Walking down the path to other school buildings, there was a- wolf- that was feeling her legs as she was trying to walk- in odd ways, the campuses are large, 10 coastal, in all, like with many links 'the body of Neveah' arch bridges.

She- didn't look at it, at it at all feel the evil coming from those green marble-like eyes, think it got to be...

Anyways- after an instant or two she- spoke to it- using her mind, and a spell, to do so-o- and she whipped to it softly, using telepathic communication spells.

Telekinesis- is one, that I like to use on earth- like making a light glob float in midair, and have it flicker in a girls' stunted face, or even to lift things like her off the ground or all around them. I use this to stay in one hovering place, over their bed or something like that.

Psychokinesis- is the one they use to get into all these girls heads, the higher authority's too, and then- you know who- them. Mind manipulation... to make confusion- disillusion, and illusions.

‘Clever...no...?’ I’m thought.

I have a card reading, laid out on my desk so I know what lays ahead too, as she did... and I would say she was reading all the clues right, I could see all she did to... it was in my report, yet they would say that all BS. That she was losing her mind, yet I feel it was not the cards, I feel they were a help.

I’m- like elaborated- um babbling for 30 minutes, about nothing that was a- rational thought, so they thought, yet...yet some in the class felt me. In the incoherencies...

Know I knew why the wolf... was there it was one of them holding me back in my speech, so it would not be known...

My Paper they could not change, this is what it said- I could see that, was not Nevaeh’s felt. That she ended the way she did. She had no life- to speak of having the same teacher for six years, reading the same stories, like the same moronic- three words make a sentence- of tells of: ‘The Wolf Made a Stink;’ and, not seeing words over ‘one’ syllable, (funny- syllable has three-syllable in the word,) so if you never- ever seen the words, above-or was in a class higher than that- of 2nd grade, all 12 years; like- I ask how could you learn- more than what they gave you, it was not on her- now was it?

God, she got point for having her name right, on the Paper... that what we’re dealing with here... they would not let her on the reading team, or be in anything more than fundamental, and when I say fundamental, that is not the term.

Saying- she could not ‘handle it,’ how can you not handle something, if her teachers would not give her a chance to do more to handle, there was nothing there to handle...!

Even, at doing what the other in her grade were achieving I thought there was nothing to handle, the advice was to drop out, and kill herself, by superiors and kids alike, and sign the book, so- now- at this time they said this was all governor- Ed Rendell’s felt not there’s.

So-o she has a- ‘simpleton’ wouldn’t know how to spell that either... Nauseating it was, to be in the same shoes as she- I was in freak’n pre- k for 7th grade up- I just sat there... lost in a- trances- like her, that was not my felt, so I thought, just look at this, I’s am not a smart girl yet, this was tragic.

Also, then when Nevaeh got there, as I did like her, now in 7th grade, and they had the boldness to say she was regressing. I can’t see how you can regress at re-traded leave, and she was far from that, yet she did- or they documented to kill her life in all ways,

(You see- I'm falling there was no way out of this...)

The day consisted of freaking played Uno and board games for seven hours, not getting off your ass to even piss without some asking if you need help, in freaking 7th grade instead of class time, with others, that is not giving up- and the one she was with were over just having enough of the nonsenses they call school.

It was asked of me to write something magnificent, awe-inspiring, and completely unbelievable- well I's did- what is that you do?

Part: 5

Ah- moment!

(Back)

The wolf-

She- curved to look at her- Caroline, but she'd- gone- rain off- blending with the- ashes out on the- street.

As an alternative, she- was laughing at a rash unembellished- looking lady who was wearing square- ed small, granny-style glasses, with a thick bifocal exactly the- shape of the- patterns, the wolf had had around eyes where.

She'd-, too, was wearing a tan wrap, older thin and scary too young kids.

Oh, and the gray hair was drawn into a close-fitting twist and long and stringy.

She'd- observed definitely ruffled.

'Like- like- like- how did you know it was me?' And she'd- asked me...

I knew by the- eyes, you have green wolf-like eyes, that how- you can't mistake them... they're only you, and you only.

Oh- my dear Professor, I've never- ever seen a wolf sit so rigidly.

- And-

You'd be stiff if you'd been sitting on a brick wall all day, and said Professor- sweet little school girl.

And all day to ah...?

When could you have been a triumph?

I must have accepted 12 or 13 buffets and merrymakings on my way here. Professor, she inhaled irately; and OH yes, everyone's celebrating, all right, and she'd- said impatiently.

And you would think they'd be a bit more careful, but no- um- hum, not even she-

Non-magical peoples have noticed something's going on too.

It was on their news... even...!

And- she'd- jerked she head back at the- Natalie's' dark living- room window.

And- I heard one, and then more flocks of them- in packs, flying girls with wings... off making mastiff... even if they should be in bad, for a school night, shooting stars... too, and a big full moon in the twilight.

Well, they're not entirely stupid...

They were bound to notice something, I thought too, along with looking for shooting stars, and that big full moon, down in Barnesboro.

Part: 6

I'll bet that was Dedalus Diggle. She- never had much sense, and, you can't blame them, said Dorezblumd gently.

However- she had precious little to celebrate for eleven- year- old.

-And-

And- I know that, said Professor Pattergirl irritably.

And- but- but- that's no regard to lose our heads, here like - um individuals are being downright careless, out on the- streets in broad daylight, here at this school, young brats were making, no discipline, not even dressed in non-magical people clothes, crossing over, swapping rumors, and such and being well knotty Sluts... Um- 'What can I say it's the- slut generation these days... YET- their kids.'

- And-

She'd- threw a sharp, sideways glance at Dorezblumd, and if looks could kill we would be scrapping up Dorezblumd with a little shovel, and using the body as fertilizer.

Nevertheless, as though hoping she - was going to tell she something, but she - didn't, so-o she'd- went on, her way.

A fine thing it would be if, on the- very day You Know- who seems to have vanished at last calling, the- non-magical peoples found out about us all.

...I feel it...

I suppose she- really has gone, Dorezblumd?

- And-

And- It certainly seems so, and said Dorezblumd.

And- yet all in all- we have much to be thankful for.

Would you care for a- lemon, Jolly Rancher Hard Candy and I giggle- till I cried for a half-hour?

Part: 7

And...?

And- A what?

And- A lemon drop, and gold stars, ha- go figure.

They're a kind of Non-magical people sweet I'm rather fond of them... like she was... even if. They say you don't have a mind too- so go figure, that one too.

And- no, thank you, and said Professor Pattergirl coldly, as though she'd - didn't think she was the- moment for lemon drops. And as I say, even if You- Know who has gone...

-And-

And my dear Professor, surely a sensible lady like yourself can call her by her name?

All she 'you- know- who' nonsense- for eleven years, I have been trying to persuade people to call her by the proper name- Ava.

Besides Professor Pattergirl flinched, but Dorezblumd, who was unsticking two lemon drops, seemed not to notice.

Like- yepper- it all gets so puzzling if we keep saying.

'You- Know- Her...'

I have never- ever seen any rather be frightened of saying- Ava's name.

Yet there is a first or everything...

I know you haven't, said Professor Pattergirl, sounding slightly exasperated, half admiring.

But you're different- all way different.

Everyone knows you are the- only one...

You- Know- oh, all right, Ava was frightened of.

-And-

'You flatter me... you do- I am rather amused.'

Part: 8

And said Dorezblumd tranquility. And- Ava had powers I will, never- ever- ever- never, have.

-And-

Amenably because you're too- well- noble to use them.

It's lucky it's dark out now. I haven't blushed- d so much since- the snowy flaky night- Madam Pomphrey told me she'd- liked my new earmuffs.

-And-

Professor Pattergirl shot a wicked look at Dorezblumd said, 'She - flying with wings is nothing next to the- rumors that are flying around about girls with the wings flying.'

Do you know what everyone's saying? About why she's disappeared? About what finally stopped her?

-And-

It seemed that Professor Pattergirl had reached- the- point, and she'd- was most anxious to discuss, the- real points, rather she'd- had been waiting on a cold, hard wall all day now, kneeling as a wolf, not as a woman... had she'd- fixed Dorezblumd with such a piercing stare as she'd- did now, the question was asked?

It was plain, whatever- so and so not- and everyone- so-on- and saying, she'd- was not going to believe it until Dorezblumd told her it was true.

Dorezblumd, however, was sucking off- yet another lemon drops and did not answer.

So- like what they're saying, and she'd- was pressed on- down and down the line to the next and the next, and is that last night Ava turned up in Godin's Hollow.

She- wanted to find her. The- rumor was and is- that Lily, and Alyssa- are- um- a- ...they're- dead.

Dorezblumd bowed she head, almost- showing that he was feeling sadden.

Professor Pattergirl gasped... (Inhale noise here.)

Oh, my- completely and totally- modified.

Part: 9

And Lily and Alyssa... I can't believe it... I didn't want to believe it... Oh, Roberts...

- And-

Dorezblumd reached out and patted her on her- shoulder. And I know... I know... she said- avidly.

Professor Pattergirl's voice trembled as she'd- went on. And That's not all. She's- a saying she- tried to kill her, Naddalin. But - she- couldn't. She- couldn't kill that little girl. No one knows why, or how, but they're saying that when she- couldn't kill Naddalin-, Ava's power somehow broke - And that's why she's gone.

Dorezblumd nodded glumly.

And it's - it's true? And faltered Professor Pattergirl. And After all, she's Deanahe... all the - people she's killed... she- couldn't kill a little girl? It's just astounding... for all the - things to stop her... but how is the- the name of heaven did Naddalin survive?

We can only guess, said Dorezblumd.

And- we may never know.

-And-

Professor Pattergirl pulled out a lace hanker- chief and dabbed at her eyes beneath the spectacles.

Dorezblumd gave a great sniff as she- took a golden watch from her pocket and examined it.

It looked like a timepiece.

What is that thing...?

It was a very odd watch all this taking place.

It had twelve hands but no numbers; instead, little planets were moving around the - edge.

It must have made sense to Dorezblumd, though, because she- put it back in her pocket and then said, Dargide's is late.

Like- I suppose it was she- who told you I'd be there, by the- way?

And- yes, said Professor Pattergirl.

I would not- a suppose you're going to tell me why you're there, of all places?

Part: 10

(Back)

I remember- when, I've come to bring Naddalin to her aunt and uncle, like the girls in the past it was my job to just drop her off at a doorstep- even if it was wrong, yet, I feel they would be good to her, like with the others...

They are the- the only family she- like the others, the only one left, in this world that is...!

God- there gross- really, I thought- it how it has to be- yet it known, that she is what she is...
In the- lounge, said Aunt Jennath promptly and waiting to welcome them graciously to our home.

-And-

And- Good, good, Dariez?

- And-

I'll be waiting to open the- door, behind an angel oak tree. And Dariez put on a foul, simpering smile, greening way too much- in a way I did not trust.

Mr. And Mr. S. Magirl? Make me sick with their 1950's charm- they put on...

And- they will love her, as one of their own!

And cried Aunt Jennath rapturously, when she picked up the nude 4- year- old.

Saying it's a girl!

-I would say so- he said she does not have a dink- ie!

And Excellent, Dariez, and said Uncle Read; then she- rounded in Naddalin in her arms, tightly.

'And- you good?'

'And you?'

They would say: 'Yeah'- at the same time- (Yeah.)

(Forward)

2 years have passed, and all was not as you would seem, they were nasty - nasty - nasty!

A 6 and  $\frac{3}{4}$  Naddalin, was always - freaking, locking her teeny - tiny room she called the donjon under the spiral staircase, yet it was not long even a 6 that she was remarkable, for her age decking it out with all things girly, and fallen, dark angels, and Wizard and the Fallen, old posters off cover the would wall with jagged nails sticking through, and all the books she could get in there, with old leather bindings, she was reading one book a night. The pull change would even sway as the drafty air would pour in, there was no warmth in there at all and they could care less.

This was her response, always - 'I'll be in my bedroom, making no noise and pretending I'm not one of you and all misunderstood like the one before me and said Naddalin tonelessly.'

To - mop... 'I don't do that; you just don't understand the things that are not you!'

'Smart ass!'

'Yep - I am smart and have an - ASS - Mr.,' and - exactly, said Uncle Read nastily, yes and all you do is play with the upper front hole of it, and don't forget it.

I am a girl that hole needs to be felled all the time to make us feel happy when all you all do is make me sad.

'Um - pour baby girl - it sounds like you need a glass of suck it up.'

And - the door slammed it the bar on the outside latched.

Skin and Bones

Neveah- one said- 'If you're like me a writer- of novels, you have to like revising, and then I thought about it, that was all she knows, in her teaching, I's got all of that too in my life - nothing but fixing and nothing there worth fixing that they passed down to me that is knowledge.'

Part: 1

A book has kept her looked as she was, and well keep her locked as we want her. The same book that was in the library was me charming her to keep her dumb to all that was around her, a book can hide all truth, and lie to the one that looks inside and the cover that is known about is all that is seen, I was laying on the pages all these years to keep my powers...

I am the wonder they will never defeat. now her book is more powerful than mine lost in the old school, a library that she Lily used to haunt, my power over her then too, now this book is here, and so well she met It was all my doing when she had one thing to do, and that was carry in the book, with her to unravel it all, at last, I may get what I wanted, even if I am not alive, I am sure.... well that all I am going to say- read the book and see the wicked I left inside.

I all and mighty- I am sure of it I have come back in a youngster's body and have taken over their mind, that I am sure of too, I am her, I am more than have Lily that is why she has fallen to me.

~YOU KNOW WHOM!!!

PS- ODD SOMETIMES, I LIKE TO TOY WITH SOME OF THE GIRLS THAT HAVE DREAM-CHARTERS IN FRONT OF THERE BED, THINKING THERE HEARING VOICES IN THERE HAD THINKING THEIR SOULWELL BE TAKEN IF THEY- well- DO THAT!

~*~

(The twilight night of delight)

Oh, how could I's have forgotten about saying this to you yet maybe I's shouldn't, I'm shy after all about this stuff, so back on the train ride here, I did something knotty, am a very knotty little school girl, am I's not? I's did even know his name, yet we looked eyes on the platform, it was love at first sight; and I lost my virginity the second night in his car, on the train, over the highest of high viaducts, the train is on, oh he did not say much yet it was all the right things, for a girl like me... week and afraid of all things boy, yet adventures in all other ways. Yes, Yes, Yes, OH- yes, we made love...

I looked at him and he at me, and yet again it was love, at first sight, looking in his doorway-he held me tightly, and know my names, or all things and said so sweetly... um- yepper- I's snuck out, and met him my last chance for boy love, and was in his night car, I's was in love, or so-o I's thought, anyways he said- a girl named- Jenny haunts him, yet he never- wanted her, like me, so he said, he loves me for me, is what I got with him, and I went awe when he was being so sweet to me... and I'm got NAKED for him- as little girls do for cute boys when girls like me are shy sweet and innocent! Jenny, they said, haunts the one- car, mine... yet I never saw here... yet felt her in me, she never made it to the school they said, she wanted to haunt, a boy's back home, and a railway- and she still is.

Other girls said she is a 'the little slut,' and is known by that title, in both worlds- mind you.
other girls said she is a little of a slut. she was giving me the power I never had, being in me that night to be with a boy finally, so she can't be all bad, she just wants me to feel, the zenith of life - that I's never had, before the final end, after that night and went back to our car and all the girls were looking at me say do tell, Karly said- to 'stay away,' I knew a Jenny like that, and a boy like that too, yet they want me to say- 'EVERYTHING,' SO I'S DID- to my girlfriends something that was new for me to that night, I was popular with them now.

Emma- 'So romantic, I see why some boy would love you.'

And I've hugged her, and she was not wanting to let go of me, and I knew... I knew, that she was going to be my girl-sweet-hart, and more than just my friend, all these girls were now more than life to me.

Part: 2

And I'm will lead them into the- lounge, introduce you, transparent haunt Jenna, and pour them drinks. At eight-fifteen- or so less, they have seen more than- I, said Dariez; there was a call over the intercom, announce dinner to go to those cars, with your roommates, that is when I's met Jenna AKA Jenny, and Karly was squaring the whole time, looking like she was going to vomit, odd if feel that was her thing that happened before. She set a and speed record for taking, jobs head poled, girl and guys she f* cked, and even one she wanted to kill, -you know who. Jenny races through all the cars, hooting, and mooning, like a crazy girl.

Um and then- Dariez, you'll say... all that... May I take you through to the- dining room, girls- Magirl no more they are- tonight...?

And said Dariez, offering one his fat arm to an invisible girl, that was saying hey, get off me, and could not get where the sound was coming from.

And- all perfect little lady's ant' they! And sniffed the professor. 'Look at them all so sweet-looking and oh so innocent, yes, yes!' He said- mostly looking ferociously at Naddalin, 'haunts we lead you down the path of distraction, they are misleading miss's- remember that.'

'And- I'll's be in my room, making no noise, and pretending I'm not there,' said Naddalin mind-numbingly.

'Girl here you don't have to do that, have fun after all that is what this place is all about, dark freedom, for girls like you, and she and her too, you see? And- precisely, what your old life was doesn't matter here.' He said with admiration and empathy.

Now, we should aim to get a few good compliments at dinner. Jennath, any ideas? 'It's just Jenny- but no... um- YES- sir.'

-And-

Read tells me you're a wonderful girl, that was misunderstood in the home and school, Mr. Magirl... I said, yes- and I am sorry for you- we did not know, that it would be like that for you. Everything about you girl is Perfect... Dariez..., you said quite enough?

-Besides-

How about that...

'We had to write an essay about our Hearo's at- Hayvannahol, And, I write about you.'

Part: 3

She was too much for both Aunt and Uncle, they were dick-heads, PROFESSOR! She shirked... not in front of new students.

‘Yeah- he’s a real fuzz- a nut!’ She said in return.

They had me on Lorazepam, that is why I’s did what I did they said, I feel not they took me off it was what happened.

Her mouth dropped...

‘One again- they win the gold, in the moron Olympics, don’t they? ‘None of this is your fault girl, their ignorance, they put down on you is the ignorance you have no choices, but to reflect back with-in you, what you see is what you’re going to know and show back to us, and if you see nothing but their ignorance, you are going to be nothing more than ignorant.’” She said fastly.

Jennath And Naddalin... I apologize for his word of the tongue.

Look there on that desk the typewriter is typing our stories, funny it’s doing that all by its self, when alive that would have been nice no? everything all of us do is documented on this Underwood, it was hers you know- whom...? Her...! And it was said that the well to wright is what possesses it to keep going. See it even has her name on it, it was left here by her younger, this is what she brought along on her train ride to the dark side, and it been on this desk senses. It was Jaylynn’s wish to remember, for all fallen girls to be added to her mom’s story, that all the girl’s chapters be to add in the book of life, like a little girl’s Bible.

‘For serval?’

‘Yes?’

‘Yes!’ I said.

Jenna burst into tears and hugged the girl, while Naddalin and the girls looked, saying - 'I'm sorry it was all my fault,' then she ducked under the - table in the dining car, so they wouldn't see her crying.

~*~

'Jenna said that a girl like me will ride as many DICK'S as it takes to find the one, that is not a DICK- with a dick!'

~*~

(Haunted Prom)

I look at what the typewriter has said, as it was scripting knowing what is in my harts - of harts; and then the page was spit out of the roller, and into my hand, it lapped, and I read it something they said I could not do, too... and there it was I's got what I always wanted, and this is the story of that night to come, already planned, the haunted formal, a dance with the boy from the train, his name was there, and she looked at me saying this is the one I lost to her- right there and Karly points under the desk... oh and it was- it was ever so-o perfect, and I had the loving night of a lifetime waiting but it was worth it.

Part: 4

(Castle)

'And...'

'And you, girl?'

‘And...’

‘And- you don’t mean...’

You can’t mean the- people who live here- do yah? Cried Professor Pattergirl, whom jumping to her feet and pointing at number four, in a line of girls. I have been watching them all day like I said this one more. And Dorezblumd- you can’t. You could not find two people who are less like us. And they’ve got the girl, I saw her kicking, they got her he said as she was dragged up the - street, they got her, she is screaming. (It was the mother of... them.)

Naddalin, - come and live here, she is in the castle!

‘Both?’

‘What?’

Emma- ‘Oh, I said too much!’

‘It is that she is here... I don’t know was you are saying- was the other about her?’

Chapter: 157

Part: 1

Besides-

The aunt and uncle, where awful... Emma said to them just popping in magical out of thin air, we well able to explain everything to her when she’s a little older, she is a fallen wizard angel on earth and the girl who survived, like them with given lives, as the chosen one back with us in our world, where she wants something from her, what we don’t know... we never did.

Then and so-o, It's the- best place for her, and her need, they think she is still alive you see, as just a girlie girl like them, said Dorezblumd firmly- when she was staying with over the point, she could not stand them any longer.

As you know-

I've written she-m a letter, saying we are taking her full time, and its paid for, they think she going to a metal handicap school for girls like her- 'whatever that means.'

'SICK- SICK-' she said.

-And-

A letter... like that- freak'n hell- you're going to kill the girl- before- you know who well, get her, doing something like that? You made her out to be brain dead, like the ones in the hex, that over the fact she is one, and I don't believe, that is so-o.

Then repeated Professor, Pattergirl faintly, sitting back down on the - tan stone wall.

'You don't think this of this girl, now- do ya?'

'Not at all- yet, well shall see...'

Really, Dorezblumd, you think you can explain, all the in a letter, to them and her when she gets older, she will is- living back here to you know and girls are mean. Yes, it's part of being bewitched, and the cards she was dealt with.

One and all in this world, um- well not understand her, in the cruel war of hate, she will do fine back in our world, yet not here you see girls are mean here; this latter stats a murder of over her young life in the town- and I assure you nothing is confidential. So-o, in a way, I have seen these many times, with her past bloodline too.

‘She’ll be famous - a legend- times’ over...’

I wouldn’t be astonished, if today was known as Naddalin - day in the- future - she will be books written about Naddalin, I am sure of it - every child in our world will know her name, and story!

-And-

‘Exactly...’

‘And’ - said Dorezblumd, looking very seriously over her- top of the half-moon glasses.

‘It would be enough to turn any girl’s head, and well do that too with the others when she gets a little older.’

(Back to the night she was left)

‘Famous before she- can talk and walk!’

‘Famous, and celebrated for something she- won’t even remember, by the time we get back to her!’

‘Can’t you see how much better off... growing up away from this world, ‘tell she is older with- you know who- wanting her very soul to take, like with them in the past. Yet, she will is, growing up away from all of us thought, while waiting for the time she is ready to fight for her life if she can have one?’

-And-

Professor Pattergirl opened her mouth, changing her mind, she swallowed hard, then she said, 'Yes - yes, you're right,' of course, you always are so-o- right- yet this feels so, wrong- everything about this girl is going to look wrong to others, and feel that way not- it's the allure you feel, of the hex.

'But how is she- this girl getting there, Dorezblumd?'

She'd- eyed the robe suddenly, as though she'd- thought she- might be hiding Naddalin underneath it.

Dargide's bringing her...

-And-

So, how do you think it is - wise - to trust Dargide with something as precious, valuable, costly, prized, dear, sweet, and totally- important as she?

Dorezblumd- 'Besides, I would trust Dargide with my life...'

Professor Pattergirl- 'Um- I'm not saying she they ant' in the- right or wrong, and are not the right ones for her, I say this reluctantly, it is what has to be.'

~*~

Nevertheless, you can't imagine she's not selfish, insensitive, unkind, inconsiderate, and thoughtless.

'She- does tend to be so- what was that...?'

-And-

A low-slung heavenizing sound had broken the- silence around them. It grew little by little louder as they observed her; up and down the- street for some sign of a headlight; it swelled to a rumble as they both watched up at the- skies, then just like that- a gigantic link, passageway to the old time- worn train station back to their world fell out of the- air, like a winding path of an aperture, and property-owning on the- road in front of them, they would be riding the train momentarily, in a flash of bright light.

The pathway- passage was enormous, rushing through time- and warping it as the clock ticked away time in reality- yet, here that is not a thing- until we get there, it was nothing to the- the girl sitting next to me, yet you feel like your face is ripping off, and your body pulled.

Like, like, like- she- was approximate- double as big as a normal girl would be, and at least five times as common.

She- looked simply too big to be allowed in the flora and fauna, and so uninhabited- long knots of disheveled incomprehensible hair, as well as beard hid most of the face, she - had hands', that where curtain call to me.

At last, where did you get that way in, I never used it before?

Looking at the woman on the bench pointing towards us, In the vast, muscular arms she - was holding a bundle of coverlets. With her body type, and her feet in the leash's boots were too big also, and the coverlets too small. There, said Dorezblumd, sounding dismissed.

'Borrowed it' - I did, said Professor Dorezblumd...

Sit that train pulls away, and said she, climbing carefully off as she- spoke, down the steps of the car.

Part: 2

Likewise- young Trirus Black lent it to me.

‘I’ve got her.’

No problems, where there?

-And-

No, sir – the household was almost demolished, nonetheless, I got her out all right - I did before she - Nonmagical peoples started crowding around. She - fell asleep as we flew over the town.

-And-

Dorezblumd and Professor Pattergirl bent forward over her - a bundle of blankets.

Inside, just visible, was a baby girl, fast asleep. Under a tuft of jet-black hair over the forehead, they could see a curiously shaped cut, like an angel of HER.

‘And - this is where...?’ Also, whispered Professor Pattergirl, ‘a town known as Barnesboro.’

Dorezblumd, in addition, said - ‘Yes...’

She well has that blemish forever, of her mark. (THAT GIRL!)

-And-

Dorezblumd - ‘Couldn’t you do something about that?’

‘Let her hear grow over... end of the story, and pitch to the one side.’

Like, like, like - um even if I could or would, I wouldn’t, scars can come in handy.

I have one myself above my left knee, which is a perfect map of the - Pennsylvania Underground - ‘The Underworld.’

‘Do you remember that one girl thought...?’

‘Yah sh-h we don’t talk of that...’

‘Sweet girl...’

Part: 3

Naddalin- I'm always- Felt too much is a and that is a hell of a lot better than feeling nothing, yet you get the put you don't feel anything anymore. Broken hearts healed. Maybe the cracks were always there, like my scars, but they healed, thus it is there to retell you. Do you know how many ways love can hit you? We make destiny with every turn, every single choice.

Emma- I never did, until I came here. So, it makes you joyful, or despondent? It makes you feel like a king or a fool. Every way love can hit you; it's hit me when it comes to you, and me. It makes you sick in the belly or hurt in the heart. It makes all brighter and shriller, or it hazes all the boundaries. The humorous thing about facing forthcoming demise is that it really breaks everything else into an outlook on matters and what ensures- not.

(Class)

Karly said to a professor- ‘Fundamentally, I have two speeds... Aggressive or smart-aleck, it's your choice.’

(Back the doorstep)

Dorezblumd took Naddalin in the arms and turned toward her- Natalie's house.

Well - give her there, a teen year from now or so, we get her.

We better get this over with, looking at them holding the little girl in their arms.

-And-

I could - could I say goodbye to her, sir?

She asked at that moment, that is when she- bent over some to look at her one last time, the great, disheveled head over Naddalin, and gave her what must have been a very soft, kiss, then, unexpectedly, then let out a cry like a wounded dog.

'Sh-h-h!'

Professor Pattergirl, and you'll wake the- Nonmagical peoples!

...And- so-o...

...?...

Um- sorry, was said while sobbed, here then, taking out a large, spotted handkerchief and drying her eyes on it.

Nevertheless, I can't stand the aforementioned - Lily an Alyssa dead - an' poor little Naddalin being with them, and- and, life and with nasty nonmagical peoples.

Likewise- 'Yes, yes, it's all very sad,' but get a grip on yourself you must.

Then, or we'll be found, And Professor Pattergirl whispered, patting the gingerly on the - arm as Dorezblumd stepped over her- low garden wall and walked to the - fort door.

For a full minute- they stood and looked at her- the little bundle.

She- laid Naddalin gently on the- doorstep, took a letter out of the Robe, tucked it inside Naddalin's blankets, yet all you could see was the baby in a picnic basket floating ever- so lightly gently down to the step...or so they thought, they were not seen.

Naddalin fought to keep her face and smile straight as she- emerged.

The shoulders shook, Professor Pattergirl blinked furiously,

Blink- blink- blink...

The- twinkling light that usually stands out from Dorezblumd's eyes seemed to have gone out, faded to gray.

'You'll grow up fast and right- too right, you will.'

'A child they said forcefully, holding her for the first time.'

The- nonmagical people mother- 'I do not know anything about you... little on, yet, I feel that I should take you as one of my own after all the note said- to do so-o.'

'And it's going to stay that way... 'your ours.'"

Part: 4

Then dinner's over, you take Mr.S. Magirl back to the- lounge for coffee, Jennath, and I'll bring the- subject around to drills.

With any luck, I'll have the- a deal signed...

And sealed before she- news at ten...

Be shopping for a vacation home in Majorca the time Hayvanna-horror.

-And-

Naddalin couldn't feel too excited about her. She- didn't think she- Sleyashs would like her any better in Majorca than they did on the pathway and lane.

And Right - I'm off into town to pick up the- dinner jackets for Dariez and me. You, and she-snarled at Naddalin. And You stay out of your aunt's way while she'd is cleaning.

-And-

~*~

(Back at the homestead for some time of schooling)

Naddalin left through the- back door, of the home. It was a brilliant, sunny day. She- crossed the- lawn, slumped down on the- garden bench, and sang under the breath-

'Happy birthday to me...'

'Happy birthday to me...'

(Singing)

Yet- yet, yet!

No cards, no presents, and she- would be spending the- evening pretending not to exist.
Then she- gazed miserably into the- her notebook of birthdays past feeling nothing is changing.

I have run into the girls from her time in her story here, and the oncoming ones that whereafter, she- Karly, Haven, Olivia, Maddie, Maggie, Karly, also.

Look there Maggie and Karly are hooking up yet again, under yet a new set of steps in the haunted castle, that is likened to the school for girls, and the other side for boys, the tall towering rickety, sky viaduct is where they like to hang, all the girls are forbidden to go over there unless it something epic, all the wicked in your mind and more go down there, it's so cute to see young love, all over, again, just like Liv and Maddie holding hands (like in the pass their young girls all over again) looking over the sunsets, night after night, and French kissing, with the bridge and castle as the backdrop to their foreground, is them off so nuts for each other it makes my heart sick, yet I had never felt so lonely.

I have seen- Kristen and Jaylynn too, and she was unreal to me.

That was I did the unthinkable I went over to the boy side and we- met in the middle and did things, the boy from the train, Marcel, is the name he said breathlessly after the long kiss and his hands on my butt. 'I need more than just girl-ie time with- me myself and I, to feel the holes inside me.'

Oh yes, his hand glides down once I had her hand, I never wanted to let go of her. my arm folds around my hand. Her fingers lace with mine, palms kissing like lips, and I can feel the fast thud of her eternal heart through this single touch, too, it was surreal ever like this, we all had this feeling, even if boy where there a girl just gets it more sometimes. More than anything else at the school for girls, more even than playing- Claepsiara, Naddalin Missed her best friends, Jinger Railie and Emmah Kizziah. They, however, did not seem to be missing her at all. Neishe of Them had written to her all summer, even though Jinger had said- 'I am going to ask Naddalin to come and stay with me and see if she want to go out with me over the break.

Countless times, Naddalin had been on the- point of unlocking buzzard cage by magic and sending she to Jinger and Emmah, how also seem to have an on and off thing of love-hate, going on, anyways, with a letter, it worth the- risk, I asked him to have forbidden love me sex with me. And we did, on the ornate- old- world like- bridge... at sunset, with a pink- and orange sky.

I'm worried- Underage wizards like young sex, with girls my age, wasn't allowed to use magic outside of Hayvannahol, or to have that inside.

The girls- Naddalin hadn't told us all yet we all new by her bouncing about the next day, for the first in a lifetime this girl was happy.

Karly- I used to hate looking into a merrow TO LIKE YOU GIRL-IE until I learned to suction-cup my, dildo to it, that what she said to me, you need to learn yourself be you can a girl or a boy, she was right- and I did, and got the charisma to freaking him like I was on it sucked to the glass- I was the GIRL- on top.

TAKE- MERROW- THAT THING THAT MAKES YOU FEEL BAD ABOUT WHO YOU ARE LAY IT ON THE FLOOR AND USE IT TO FEEL GOOD! She said. I's did as much as I could, in one day, I am a honey girl anyways.

I thought you did not give a did-aly-do-darn about me! She closed her eyes, and I closed mine, and even though we weren't holding hands, it felt like we were.

Because, what we had, we knew. Marcel Kissed Kristen saying, I love you yet, I love her more...

I'm not asking you to walk in my shoes, this time no I am asking you to be inside of her; I'd never wish my afflictions on anyone.

But could you walk beside me on the secure ground and reach to hold my hand, I have his hand lay on my stomach as he slept soundly with me that night I was in his bunk. I entwined my fingers with his and breathed through the warmth that seeped through my chest, and then the next week I need someone a did the same with her- not sure what I want yet sure I want both. Such a simple, sweet thing to do, yet holding hands in bed was incredibly intimate, to do it with her- like it was him.

Karly- I even said to him- 'she needs you as I did then.'

Part: 5

Sleyashs- she- knew it was only their terror that she- might turn them all into dung beetles that stopped them from locking her in the- cupboard under the- stairs with her wand and broomstick, just like your mother before for you- your real mother she was a witch, and that lead to you, you are one to Naddalin, and well blame you no for it all.

For the- first duo of weeks back, Naddalin had enjoyed muttering nonsense words under the breath and watching Dariez tearing out of the- room as fast as she fat legs would carry her.

Nevertheless, the- long silence from Jinger and Emmah had made Naddalin feel so cut off from her- magical world, that even taunting Dariez had lost its appeal - and now Jinger and Emmah had forgotten her birthday.

‘I remember this one I was 7- she pulled the memory out of her mind like a spider web out to see it as a hologram to play a video out in front of her and their eyes.

‘What wouldn’t she- give now for a message from at the school for girls?’

‘From any witch or wizard or fallen girl.’

She would be almost glad of a sight of the archenemy, Dalilah Mallerie, just to be sure it hadn’t all been a dream...

Not that the entire year at the school for girls had been fun.

At the- very end of the last term, Naddalin had come face-to-face with none other than Lord Ava herself. Ava might be a ruin of the former self, but she- was still petrifying, still, toe cunning, still figured out to regain power, as the ones before her- said never-ever let go of.

Naddalin had slipped through Ava's clutches' for the second time, but it had been a narrow escape, Besides, like even as of now, weeks later, Naddalin kept walking in the - starlight evening, drenched in cold sweats, speculating where Ava was now if not inside her mind boy and soul, remembering she incensed face, the wide, mad eyes, and the 8-year-old mad-short school girl look of it, complete, and her body in the rob, that was far too big, like someone girl that had to be reborn and has to grow- yet once moreover.

Naddalin suddenly sat upright on the- garden bench, taking all the wonders of the world into her mind. She- had been staring absent-mindedly out of her eyes, but then there seemed to the eye within hers looking in and out of the very one she was gazing with- and she- staring back, into her, feeling all that was a weakness. Two enormous green eyes had appeared among the- leaves, and that was once her sweet thoughts turn to fear and wickedness.

Naddalin jumped to her feet just as a jeering voice floated across the - lawn. And I know what day it is, sang Dariez, waddling toward her, out of nowhere, yet- I know why- I know that he felt that she was back, and getting at me or even more spooking all down within me. The - huge eyes blinked all in my mind, then the feeling of her vanished, as I'm galloped, feeling as if I choked her down, her ghost.

Horcrux- 'Spitting her soul is what she did... I knew, so you will never- ever pass on.' A Horcrux is an object in which a Dark wizard or witch or even angels fallen or not have hidden a fragment of his or her soul for the purpose of conquering immortality.

...She is the one that has one... I's would no... and them to in the story with the hex...

This is what they used too- I's would know... it is written in her history.

What...? Said Naddalin, not taking her eyes off the feeling of dishonored, desecrated sullied, despoiled and violated feelings.

Shaken, it hit me all these years it been this. And I know what day it is, Dariez repeated, coming right up to her, asking the question, that you would ask a girl, that has just stocked. Then out of thin air turn about Deanahe, saying Naddalin finally learned the- days of the- week it is, now let's see if she can get mounts and years right now. Not taking the moment for what it was.

'Today's your birthday, do you remember that now.' Dariez sneered.

'Like- how come you haven't got any cards, is over you are just like her the girl from that story that you love so- to you have a girlie crush on her? Haven't you even got friends at this freak'n place, is all that you know how to do is diddle- yourself to your creepy- creeper mind?'

'Awe- going to cry?' - 'Oh go- eat a PP and J!'

-And-

Better not let your mom there you are talking about my Hayvannahol, said Naddalin coolly. Dariez hitched up her trousers, which were slipping down she fat both Hayvannah. Why are you staring at her- hedge? She- said with most uncertainty... I'm trying to resolve what would be the- best spell to set it on fire, said Naddalin. Dariez stumbled backward at once, with a look of panic on her face.

Part: 6

One night at the school, Naddlian and girls in your room you can't be walking around your room in the nude, it came over the intercoms for all to hear, 'The boys go bare-chested why can we, I said.'

You cannot - Dad told you-you're not to do magic. Like if you did, she- said he will chuck you out of the- house, I am telling you this now listen. I know that you haven't got anywhere else to go, and I want you here anyway.

You haven't got any friends to take you, yet, I want you here so-o stop. And just like that she was gone and the girl, that was left there was not her, just an entity, that keeps her on autopilot.

Naddalin in a fierce voice said this. And Hocus pocus - squiggly wiggly 'MUM!' Dariez, tripping over the feet as she - dashed back toward the - house. And MUUUUM! She's doing you know what!

-And-

Naddalin paid dearly for the moment of fun, yet that has always been her life, she cannot have that, like them... of the past, all joys in life are not allowed when you have the curse.

Look, I'm really sorry about that telephone call. I hope she - nonmagical peoples didn't give you a hard time. I asked Dad, and she - reckons I shouldn't have shouted.

Aunt Jennath knew she - hadn't really did not magic, but she - still had to duck as she'd - aimed a heavy blow at the head with the - soapy frying pan. As neither Dariez nor she - evaded was in any way hurt. Then she'd - gave her work to do, with her - with the promise that she - wouldn't eat again until she'd finished.

~*~

It's amazing there in Rockville...

Sara's taken us around all she - Hayvannahbs, and you wouldn't believe the - curses those old Rockvilleian wizards put on them.

Mom wouldn't let Jill come in the - last one. There where all these mutant skellies' in there, of nonmagical peoples who had broken in and grown extra heads and stuff.

I couldn't believe it when Dad won the- Star press Draw. Seven hundred galleons! Most of it is gone on the trip, but they're going to buy me a new wand for next year.

Naddalin remembered only too well the- occasion when Jinger's old wand had snapped. It had happened when the- car the- two of them had been driving to the school for girls had crashed into a tree on the- Hayvannahol grounds, neither were old enough to drive yet they missed the train.

We'll be back about a week before term starts and we'll be going up to Pennsylvania to get my wand and our new books, a little shop back there is where to go. Any chance of meeting you there?

Do not let the- nonmagical peoples get you down, back there- they are nothing but trolls!

~*~

Try and come to- Pennsylvania, Jinger P.S. Serafina's Head Girl. She- got the- letter last week.

Naddalin glanced back at the- photograph. Serafina, who was in the seventh and final year at the school for girls, was looking particularly smug.

She- had pinned the Head Girl badge to her- fez perched jauntily on top of the neat hair, she horn-rimmed glasses flashing in her- Rockvilleian sun.

Naddalin now turned to the present and unwrapped it wildly.

Inside was what looked like a ring with a hardtop, the rock was pink now all is good.

There was another note from Jinger beneath it.

Naddalin - she is a Pocket Sneakoscope.

If there's someone untrustworthy around, it's supposed to light up, shades of colors, if red you'll know that there is danger ahead.

Sara says it's nonsense sold for wizard tourists and isn't dependable, for the reason that it kept lighting up at dinner last night, and that it was dictating. Nevertheless, she- didn't realize, Breanna and Katy had put creepy-crawlies in the soup.

'So, Naddalin, now that you've had your verbal period, like can we move on? Emma said to me.'

Part: 7

Bye - Jinger

Naddalin put she- Pocket Sneakoscope on the bedside table, it was part of the note, and with all notes, they hold spells, and secrets, that came with the ring, where it sat quiet and still, she was awaiting movements or something, yet did nothing.

The tower, with its winding staircase, is off to the side of her and the girls room, though an old large wooden door, that looks to be mid-evil, Naddalin, is now looking over to the clock with it face inside the room she is in, that is part of the tower, the highest one at that, of the castle; she stood, looking out the stained glass of it that has the numbers, seeing all the moving parts, balanced on its point, reflecting the- luminosities back of the hand of the clock in shadow, with the light that is inside. All the moving parts clanking together in a rhythmic motion was fascinating to her mind. She - looked at it happily for a few seconds, then picked up the- parcel she had brought. Inside she, too, there was a wrapped present, a card, a letter, she time from Emmah.

(Cut)

That same night- girl-ie chatting about girlie things...

Karly- 'Girls Giving Blow Jobs!' Naddalin- 'And want the leftover on their face,' I was asking for advice, just- 'like with a girl too,' 'oh yeah.' She asked- 'Why is that what you're doing with a boy tonight?'

She asked me: Have you ever given a blowjob? 'Yes!' How old were you the first time? '13, and it was last night, I made myself older in a spell to keep him, I used the go back in time charm' How old was the guy? '14' Did you make him cum? 'Yes' With him or her? 'Both!' 'Where did he cum?' in my mouth and face, she was the same. 'Where does the guy usually cum?' She said- 'Mouth and face...'

Me- 'Is that what I should let him do to me?'

Her- 'Only if you want too, sure.'

Me- 'How many guys have you blown?' Karly said- '10 maybe 18 at age 13 and up.'

She said- 'The Shortest time you've known a guy before giving head? one day, I feel that is okay.'

I asked- 'Do you deep throat.?'

Karly- 'Yes love the taste of dick, and also- well you, or her pussy if that is your thing, I have been there too.' I knew that she was experienced and would be a good girl to go to for f*cking advice.

Me-

'Yep...'

One boy, one night of OH!

One girl, one night of OH!

She won overall!

She is the one I LOVE!

Yet, I'm been very much in-like with him- oh, HUM...

I love being wrong it feels so right...

Part: 8

(Note)

Dear Naddalin,

Jinger wrote to me told me about the phones call to your Uncle Read. I do hope you're all right. I'm on holiday in France at the- moment... look at the photos of me under the Elfelt Tower, I didn't know how, I was going to send this to you, but what if they would open it at and saw it was my undies for your enjoyment, for sniffing pledger, something to remind you of me, and what you have wanted to lick- and have and did for me, now you can have these to hold on too. I think she'd - wanted to make sure you got something for your birthday for a change, the ones from our first night as lovers.

From-

Love Emmah

Part: 9

I did not buy you your, I don't have any money, to do so; there was an advertisement to me, that I would be getting something delivered; it's so good to keep up with what's going on in the- wizarding world, also, here form her with this out load self-understanding note, that shows moving text on picture.

Did you see that picture of Jinger and her family a week ago? I bet she's learning loads. I'm really jealous - she- ancient Rockvilleian wizards where fascinating.

There's some thought-provoking local theory of witchcraft there, too. I've rewritten my whole Story of Magic essay to include some of the- things I've found out; I hope it's not too long - it's three rolls of parchment more than Professor Bans asked for me to do.

Jinger says she's 'going to be in Pennsylvania in the- last week of the- holidays.'

'Can you make it too?'

'Will your aunt and uncle let you come?'

'I really hope you can.'

'Uncertainty about it then, (there was a backside to the note,) I will see you on the- Express on September the 11th!' P.S. Jinger says Serafina's Head Girl. I will bet Serafina's really pleased. Jinger doesn't seem too pleased about it all.

At that moment at that time on that day- Naddalin giggled as she- put Emmah's letter aside and picked up the present, in a hollow book with music notes on it, and said keep them forever and ever. Giggling... at the cute juvenile like cartoon printed panties, Minnie mouse on the front part, all pink and young girlie. It was very heavy, to take all at once, in my young 13-year-old mind, I knew, that the next day- after my B-day, like- I would be back to my real age, but it was fun, to relive all that I was cheated out of, at that age as a younger girl, it was my wish- after all. Um- ah- like- like- like- knowing Emmah, she- I's was sure it would be a large book full of very difficult spells - but it wasn't, it was an empty book felled with things that show our love, and new chapters to add in the book of life- just another chapter added in.

Part: 10

(Hot Springs)

Jenny the haunt- said to me in the bath- looking down at me as an apparition- 'Yah- sneezed, wheezed, coughed, gagged and jazzed! GOOD FOR YOU!' In a condescending way. And she dived in the water with her, of the all- the girls at once- roman style bath, the only place in the 2,000-year-old cartel where there is allowed to run about fully nude, with all the girls, at 7 p.m sharp 'till 8 p.m.

I was getting a lesson from the leading girl!

Part: 1

'I love that little hole in you!' Emma said to me!

~*~

Emma- Why don't you say that you love me?

I'm said back- 'isn't better to know that someone loves you then say it over and over, and like-not mean it.'

Honesty-

Naddalin- I'm thought about it and thought- 'yah me to when you open it up and lick it out! — I's love that too-' do not- say you don't.

(Thoughts)

Naddalin- I love the cute faces that she makes in mine, it is everything- to me when I'm been on top of her looking in her eyes; and she sighs like a girl, make grind on me love, eating a girl out, like her. I's stick my tongue inside her vagina and ferociously lick every centimeter of her insides. the juices, her squirming, I love it! Kiss it like you would kiss her lips and just wiggle your tongue in between the lips and then slowly stick your tongue in...

Next day-

The heart, sticker gave a huge bounds of soft kiss to my lips, snapping crack, as she - ripped back the- paper and saw a sleek black scrollwork of the letters she made just for her, with silver, ribbons- around the yellowing hollow book words stamped across it, just another chapter of our lives, inside was Lily ribbons, the hart ring, 3 old flowers, a daisy, sunflower, and one Lily, an old dream-catcher along with the old key, and the note of Jaylynn also, and also the one to Kristen, Karly's crystal necklaces, Haven added a lock of hair from a girl, that is no longer with us also, her and back home, and now us- are story article, of us, yet as sweet as it was it still made me sad, I never thought that- I- I's... um- never-mind, well see this again. All things that ever mattered to me was in here... but how did she know or get this...?

Every now and then, we go to the graveyard and see the cinematic stone play, on it- she talks for 2 minutes, and we see her and hear her voice- as if she was alive, she gives her short story- of life on Earth, that was pre-recorded- like a Last Will and Testament in a way, yet it not the same- and she was too young to have things are given to others- even if, like- even here final death is a thing, if at complete rest, and she was.

Standing the test of time, like the pages... of the manuscript in the classroom.

'Wow, Emmah!' I thought- and might have said out my mouth, yet don't remember- like if I did or not. Naddalin whispered, unzipping her uniform, for bath time at 7- walking into that room beside a- case of books, not looking inside, any other, then place hers next to them, all under 'D' taking up the length of the shave of '50' or so-o volume.

Part: 2

(Back vacation at home in her Earthly body from-)

Apart from her friends, the- thing that Naddalin Missed most about the school for girls was Claepsiara, the- most popular sport in her- magical world - highly dangerous, very exciting, and played flying fast and wicked with your wings.

Naddalin happened to be a very good Claepsiara player; she - had been the- youngest pergirl in a century to be picked for one of her- the school for girl's house teams. Paly until blood drips for the tips of the wings.

One of Naddalin's most prized possessions and the most lovey was the wings that grow out her back, and now are one of the most powerful of all the girls, if not the- most. A game between light and dark angels- gladiator-style fight 'till final death. Last year a girl had her wings ripped off in flight, the bloody thing is- like in a large jar, imboiled in the sciences room, shown off next to all the skulls and she was dead before hitting the ground 300 feet below, she was a light now she is with us, she was brought back, over unrest.

After bath time-

Homework- of spells and charms, all her notes and books, and what not, she picked up the last parcel, of everything she was doing into her book bag.

Naddalin put the thoughts about everything behind her, She- recognized the- untidy scrawl on the- yellow-sh paper at once, and said oh well I tried, she rested her head on her pillow, thinking about the girl- that was from Dargide, she- the school for girl's gamekeeper child, the one she was going to fight, or so it was said she might- be.

(The next day)

Looking into one of the books named: 'Neveah.' She sighed, She- tore off the- top layer of paper and glimpsed something with sapphire eyes, and leathery, but before she- could unwrap it properly, she- parcel gave a strange quiver, it was a note about the first copy ever, and whatever was inside it snapped loudly, when it came to life, - as though it had jaws, it was memories of the past saying they wanted out of the book and the text. Naddalin just froze at that point at that moment.

She- knew that Dargide would never send her anything dangerous on purpose, but then, Dargide did not have an ordinary per girl's view of what was dangerous.

Dargide had been known to befriend spiders, buy spiteful, satanic lions, and birds that would pick your eyes out for fun, from menfolk in pubs, besides sneaks- illegal dark angels spawn- into their cabin; Naddalin poked she- parcel nervously, that jumped from the pages. It snapped loudly again in her hand.

Naddalin reached- for the- lamp on the bedside table, gripped it firmly in one hand, then she raised it over her head, ready to strike, it with the other free hand. Then and there the- seized the- rest of her- wrapping paper in the other hand and pulled, the old dust cover of the book.

Besides out fell - a book, that she remembered all too well, yet could not at all.

Naddalin just had time to register its handsome off-white cover, emblazoned with the- silver title 'The- Book of Stop and Death,' she said tenderly.

This was when she used a spell on it, asking it for its deepest darks feeling of emotions - to come forth, moments before her wand flick, so-o, before it flipped onto its edge, and snapped at her yet again, scuttled sideways along the- bed like some weird crab, wanting to snap. 'Uh-oh,' Naddalin muttered, saying, 'like- I knew it was bad, yet never this bad, a book with so much hurt it got up and crawled away.' The- book toppled off the- bed, like she said, with a loud clunk... then shuffled rapidly across the- room, as she ran after it, saying stop. Naddalin followed it surreptitiously. Any-who- the- book was hiding in the- dark sunlight space under her old heavy desk.

Praying that she- Sleyashs was still fast asleep, and the Amsel girls would not get ahold of it, Naddalin got down on her hands and knees, saying come here it's alright, I'm not going to hurt you like all the m's, she was on her hands and knees butt up in the air showing way too much to the girls behind her asking what the hell, yet she keeps reaching for it.

Emma- said, 'I don't think that bath towel is not full coverage- their girl!'

Naddalin- 'You like it!!!'

Emma- 'That I do, but there was a thing- like- um- back in the day, called modesty- God- learn it.'

Naddalin- 'He- he- he!!!'

'Ouch!' She yelped...

Naddalin scrambled around, threw herself forward, managed to flatten it. The- book snapped shut on in her really small hands; then tumbled past her, yet it was fastened, still scurrying on its covers. The other girls in the room gave a loud, sleepy grunt, as she went to her bed creaking the wood floorboards.

Elody watched interestedly as Naddalin clamped the- struggling book tightly in the arms, hurried to the chest of drawers, pulled out a belt, which she- buckled tightly around it, and then said the spell for to inanimate. 'The book of the death of the ended lives' shuddered angrily, but could no longer flap- about, and impulses, so Naddalin threw it down on the- bed and then stretched for

Dargide's card, that falls under the bed too. And then back on the shelves, it went with the others, to adulate dust, as she sat it there saying- 'stay- good girl.'

Part: 3

Chiaz- A never happen yet feels as it did, part of my life, like a dream yet not, like reality yet not, too is odd, and feels real, yet was not at that time of life, yet you know it happened.

Naddalin- I had to make this time up, I had to get back what was taken from her, I had too, I had to be her for a summer, something I never- ever thought me as this girl would ever do, for me or for her, this was going back in time, something that is trick over the fact it changes others' lives, if missed with too much, yet I needed to do this for me, that summer I's had to come back down to Earth anyways, so I came back as her, in her young body from, yes as her the girl in the story, I used the transformation spell to do so-o, I was 14 all over, and I did not remember this at the time with my mind slowly sipping, I was living on my own that summer in a cute, nice yet tight spaced trailer, over up on the hills of Nick-Town, that summer I wanted nothing more than for her to get back what was taken away, and now I had the power to do so, for this girl, yet she was a lost soul in a big bad world, living all alone, to spite her garden, long story, she was drag back home by cops and made to sleep in a barn, over running-away... yet she had the money too, anyways- back to the point...

'You don't wear underwire-' he said, and I giggled...

Chiaz- I don't remember this in my life yet I feel that it was so real to me, a girl came to me, in like a dream yet not, it was real, I never remember her living in a trailer up the ways from town, the next thing you know I was in it with you and you were more in love with me than ever, just out of school at the end of your 9th year... at first she was reluctant, it was the first time, after all, we could really be left alone, with no eyes on us, I recall that you showed me around your new place, that you rented, nicer than most homes, in throws parts, and before I knew it she was showing me her bed- 'saying look how big this is for a little girl like me that is about 4 foot.' And before I knew it she was bare, with her body wrapped around mine, sanding I was holding her like a child, in my arms, and our lips met, and the passion was more, trilling then one about a 17-year-old boy could take... and we made sweet love.

Naddalin- I was on the bottom...

Chiaz- I was on top of her, she was so-o little the size of a young child...

Naddalin- 'Ahh- Cumming moments'

'he was in me- for the first time- I did it, I did him and he did me.'

I couldn't get enough of him, yet I have wanted to do this for years and years now, I was exhausted and tender down there, but I didn't care.

I didn't want to sleep... even though I was going to be with him night after night if I could...

I wanted the throbbing...

I wanted him in me...

I wanted him all the time...

His weight on top of me...

I wanted to squeeze him in further and further...

I wanted to watch his face... grunt out the last bit in me... as he said he wants mine... high pitched squeaky and an 'ou-yah's!'

I wanted his sweat to drop, like that stuff on to my bell- 'aww, is what I said.'

I wanted to drop mine on him... pushing it out... all creamy...

I got on top of him...

I'd never done it before... like that as of this age... you see... not this young it would not have been right too... yet I wanted to be bad! So bad! I wanted to take control of his every move... and I did... I own him that night.

I couldn't really believe it; I was doing this... but I was, and it was right... even if everything in the past was all so-o wrong, between us.

I was discovering something.

I held him and put him in... it was so cute... like when I gave him the blow-ie of a lifetime coming... he, he, he!

He felt deeper in me with his hard DICK- THEN FINGERS TOO.

I'll never forget it... real or not it's alike memory to last eternity... shared.

I was in charge and he liked it.

I held his hands down... even not like me for the- sweet shy girl of everything...

I let my small boobs touch his face, and he sucked on them as I asked, like my clit and puss - puss too, I made him by grabbing that mop of long black wavy hair of his... he was mine!

'I WAS HORRY- GIRLS GET THAT WAY!'

He went mad; he bounded- METILLI ORGASMED OVER AND OVER AND MORE THEN THAT TOO.

He rived me in two... WITH IT- I pushed down AND IN.

I couldn't believe it...

One of his HANDS flicked over my bum AND

SQUEEZED IT AND ANOTHER MOMENT OF COMING TO AN END. I did it to him. He lifted and heaved.

There was no end to it, no end to the new things... THAT A YOUNGER NEVER- EVER FELT BEFORE I WAS HIS SLUT, WIDE OPEN FOR HIM- LEGS UP ABOVE MY HEAD EVEN SLUT AND DRUM MAJOR SLIT FOR HIM TOO- AND I WANTED TO BE.

He took me from behind, TO AS I ASKED. I pushed back, forcing more of him into me, HARD

AND THEN SOFT, LONG AND SHORT- RHYTHMS- SEX IS AWKWARD, THAT WHAT MAKES IT FUN AND CUTE. I sucked him. He licked me. I made him come on my stomach, AND ON MY BUTT TOO. He sucked my toes.

The whole room rocked every 'till the wee - hours of the morning.'

My pussy felt- (soft warm fuzzy-inside tingly and slippery, tight and gripping- everything I wanted and more!)

Chiaz- in and out, rocking and thrusting, hard and soft, hugging and squeezing too.

Naddalin- It was right... and really, I did it I got back a moment lost... to the boy that I love way back when, this was the bad maybe child-sh thought, like- to have good sex all you need to be is naked on top of each other and young and dumb lust, yet that's what dives young teens. For him and me, it will always feel real- that- this moment happens, and he got to take me, and I- him.

Part: 4

Dear Naddalin, Happy Birthday!

Think you might find her useful for next year.

Won't say no more there... yet to use the come to life spell, she's pissed... Tell- me when I see you, why I felt you need this.

Hope- the- Nonmagical peoples are treating you all right.

All the- greatest...

~Dargide

It struck Naddalin as ominous whys, that Dargide thought a biting book would come in beneficial, but she- put Dargide's card up next to Jinger's, and

Emma's gifts, grinning more broadly than ever.

Now there was only the- letter from the school for all girls left, all but on name on it with their family you know who's girls.

Yep- just, observing that it was rather thicker than usual, Naddalin slit open the- envelope, pulled out the- the first page of note that came to life as she read, in the interior, besides it read:

Dear child...

Please note that the- new Hayvannahol year will begin on September - 11th.

The school for girls- Express- will leave from Rockville's Cross station for you that is on its long feeling journey, from the platform at nine p.m, as you know to find the abandoned part, past the boarded-up heavy wood doors and into the dark, damp, must, cobweb-infested station, that was let go of in the 1920s and get on the train, see you here, and looking forward to it, the track even looks to be down there I thought, yet I know it's right.

Duck under the boards, covering the doorways, and don't fall through the floor... you are the only one to use this pathway in... sorry for the inconvenience. The covering track in this run is not and the tracks feel as if there is nothing much holding them, elevated up as you go through the lay of the land up the past mill, Altoona part of the cover, though Ashville, and a line of abandon track, just go up to you.

Third years are permitted to visit the - village of Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry/ Fallen Angel on certain weekends, here or transfer over to our side if asked. Please give the - enclosed permission form to your parent or guardian to sign.

A list of books for next year is enclosed also.

Sincerely yours...

Professor M. McDermott Deputy Headmistress Naddalin pulled out she - Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry permission form and looked at it, no longer grinning.

It would be wonderful to visit Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry on weekends; she - knew it was an entirely wizarding village, and she - had never-ever set foot there. Nevertheless, how on earth was she - going to persuade Uncle Read or Aunt Jennath to sign the - form?

She - looked over at the - wind up alarm clock, that glows pink in the face, and flickers some over getting hit with lighting like a wand streak. It was now 2:15 o'clock in the - morning.

Deciding that she would worry about she - Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry form when she - woke up, Naddalin got back into bed and stretched up to cross off another day on the - chart she would make for herself, counting down the - days left until she returns to the school. Funny she thought I like school, she knew that the spell would have to come to end, like a love that she had to let go of too early in life too, yet he was a final piece also, then she - took off her glasses and she lay down, is nothing more than a transparent nighty that was pink, nothing else; eyes open, facing the three birthday cards, and the moving photos of her new light in her life Emma, and for this, she was ease too.

That night she said before going to bed, resting her weary head, 'awe - there is nothing like an onion bagel with cream cheese and starboard jam.'

Extremely unusual though she - was, at that moment Naddalin - felt just like everyone else - glad, for the - first time in the lives, that it was her birthday, and it did not suck, freaking holy - taint's. she remembers back to her story and said the church Father was the only one to remember, her day, and was a feeling friend to her, growing up, that could have gone there - yet she was too young and he loved GOD more than she, did not say that they did not kiss in the booth now does it when she asked her cute sweet question about self-analyst, he told this little girl that was innocent, all these wonderful stories about angels light and dark finding their way- and he said- 'like the girl in the story- little one you to well find your way, someday- okay.'

While Dariez lay around watching, and eating white cherry ice cream, Naddalin cleaned the - windows, the same one that she looked out all those years back, washed the - car, that was starting to rust away on the barn that was hers to the blue color almost all faded away, mowed the - lawn, with the same tractor, clipped the - flowerbeds, for a vase, next to her bed, trimmed and watered the - roses, and had all the lilies and daisy in her hand, and repainted the - garden bench, as was back then.

The - sun blazed overhead, burning the - back of her neck, and she could feel the wings want to come out for shad, and strength.

Naddalin knew she - shouldn't have risen to Dariez's bait, but Dariez had said the - very thing Naddalin had been thinking herself... maybe she - didn't have any friends at the school...

Wish they could see famous Naddalin - now, the - thought unrestrainedly as she - spread manure on her - flower beds, she back aching, sweat running down the faces.

It was half-past eight in the - evening when at last, exhausted, she - heard Aunt Jennath calling her, to come to eat and take a bath, like a young child again.

And Get in here!

Walk on the - newspaper, she did there where cover the floor like what should be carpet, to keep out the draft in this old farmhouse - it was bad yet never this deplorable! I have seen this place in my mind as her, God Lord I thought, yet I'm not to say anything mean - ie - like to them.

Naddalin moved ever so gently appreciatively into the - shade of the - gleaming kitchen, the only place in the home to have a makeover in years.

On top of the - new glamming double-sided stainless-steel fridge stood tonight's pudding: a huge mound of whipped creamy peanut butter and red-violet cake and a display dish. A roaster-pot of roast beef was sizzling in the need double door - oven, with the clock face light, also new and shiny.

I'm sure that it will be eaten quickly! Yet, I wonder if better be said then just- 'pass the gravy...?'

Part: 5

The- nonmagical peoples will be there soon!

Snapped Aunt Jennath, pointing to two slices of bread and a lump of cheese on her- kitchen table. Is this really all that you are severing them? She asked... 'Yes- girl-ie it is,' she was patting her on the head with soft taps, like a young child, along with saying- 'this is all that we have to give them.'

She- was already wearing a- pink cocktail dress.

Naddalin washed her hand...

Then at that moment, she fastened down the pitiful supper, that she had to eat.

Then at that moment at that time- she- had completed, Aunt Jennath whisked away from the plate, out from under her nose. Upstairs, she went to be in her room! Hastily, is was asked of her to do that!

She did not come down from her room, 'till the next morning. It was 8:00 a.m... Naddalin went down for breakfast only to find the- three or so-o- of them- Sleyashs already sitting around the- table, yet with her whom is counting them, her mind was so-o endorsed in what she was thinking about, and that was nothing more or less than about all that is magic, and that world, she loved to be in. She could care less about them and their childish ways, she thought even if that is what they say about her.

They were watching a brand -new television, a welcome-home-for-she-summer present for Dariez, who had been complaining deafeningly about the- long walk between her- fridge and the- freaking television, 'like in the- living- room, is- a- Tv, and in that room, is that cold-ie thing-ing- you see- there called rooms, and devised into them, are things that go in those rooms.

Like- like- like- you need to have enough wit about you to see you need to go to that room for that in that room- (she was saying that in a slow way of speaking to her- like a tard.)

Dariez had spent most of the- summer in the- kitchen, like a little piggy, eyes fixed on the- screen, over the why not thinking she could get up and movie, with the plat, and she five chins wobbling as she- ate continually.

~*~

Naddalin sat down between Dariez and Uncle Read, a huge, beefy man with very little neck and a lot of mustache, and long stringy white beard.

Far from wishing Naddalin a happy birthday, none of the Sleyashs made any insinuation that they had noticed Naddalin enter the room...

Nonetheless, Naddalin was far too used to them to care. She helped herself to a piece of bagel only one half was left in the bag, then looked up at the reporter on the television, who was halfway through a report on a fugitive criminal.

(Unsolved Mysteries is playing)

Besides... the public is warned that Black is armed extremely dangerous. A special hotline has been set up asking 'join me in helping solve a mystery-' a sharp taking and the dressed man said, 'if you see in the least one sighting of Black, you should notify this line immediately.'

Part: 6

'Like there is no need to tell us...'

'He's no good,' inhaled, while saying it, Uncle

Read, staring over the top of the newspaper at the pricier. Besides look at the state of him, the dirty dart ball, look at the hair- all black, long wavy and greasy!

-And-

She shot a nasty look sideways at Naddalin, whose untidy hair had always been a source of great annoyance to Uncle Read.

Saying you have room to talk, about the way he looks. Naddalin felt very well groomed indeed, all the time she prided herself too, she knew that was just bull shit coming out of his mouth, over she was the cuter one.

The reporter had reappeared, 30 minutes have passed. 'You too can help in solving an Unsolved Mystery.'

Besides the- Bureau of Cultivation cow show stuff- will announce today, so change the flicker- clicker thing- ie me- bobber to the impotent things, farms.

-And-

...Hang on! I say!

Now, growled Uncle Read, staring furiously at the- reporter, to end she was taking doing the number in her contacts.

Furthermore, you didn't tell us where that zealot escaped from! What use is that? Shit like he could be coming up the- street right now, to kill you girlie!

-And-

Aunt Jennath, who was bony and mare-faced, whipped around and scrutinized intently out of the- kitchen window.

Naddalin knew Aunt Jennath would simply love to be the- one to call the- hotline number.

She'd- was the- inquisitive woman in the- world and spent most of her life spying on the- mind-numbing, law- and the unbidden neighbors, saying this and that about what not- or whatever.

When will they learn, she said that you can't party every night from 7:00 p.m to 3:00 a.m, getting drunk having sex with random kids, and dancing around large fires, good I open the door to my home and have panties and used condoms hitting me in the freaking faces she said; and said Uncle Read, pounding the- table with the large purple fist, saying words like-

'kids today there is no law- no discipline...' Uncle Read- 'The- only way to deal with these people, is to just shoot them in the face or drill them in the face?'

'Oh- sh-h!' she said, 'saying cool it.'

-And-

Uncle Read, I thought to say to you is a little unstable, sorry it's embarrassing.

'Very true,' said Aunt Jennath, who was still squinting into next door's runner-beans, and farting loader then her mouth shooting as much Diarrhea as the behind that she had.

‘The house smells like a couch!’

Uncle Read drained she coffee’ cup, glanced at his watch, besides added, I’d better be off in a jiffy, Jennath- come, walk them to the door.

Chapter: 158

Part: 1

(Parting words)

‘Marge’s train gets in at ten... so-o yeah...’

-And-

Naddalin, whose thoughts had been upstairs with the - Servicing kit for her wings, and a 1920’s case with all that she needs to be a fallen-witch in magic too, down here, was brought back to earth with an unpleasant bump when she fell from the sky... form the what nonmagical peoples call the havens, yet have no clue, thank God- on Earth that no-one saw. Good feather grooming is key.

Aunt Marge was Uncle Read’s sister, may God help us... and also worked in an orphanage a residential institution devoted to the care of orphans- children whose biological parents are deceased or otherwise unable or unwilling to take care of them. (I have heard this so many times- blah-ick...)

Then she continuing to say: Biological parents, and sometimes biological grandparents, are legally responsible for supporting children, but in the absence of these, no named godparent, or other relatives willing to care for the children, they become a ward of the state, and orphanages are one way of providing for their care, housing and education.

‘Um-hum...’

Even though she’d- was not a blood relative, she was only a half-blood, of the Naddalin’s... yet that was more then I to be loved.

She- blurted out, yet again- like before to my face, interfering with my personal space, I could feel the misty spit even- and the stank breath- of lezz-ie pussy.

Aunt- Marge! They said... don’t say that to that child... we are all she has...

'I'm said- to go suck off, like- yet another fat bitch- bitch! ...and walked away.'

'Naddalin!!!' (They shouted)

(Whose most had been Aunt

Jennath's sister, over no one, would like- like a smaller- well her... and all that...)

She- had been forced to call her- 'Aunt' when all she wanted to say was profanity with long-running slurs to her for all her- her rotten, mangy life.

Aunt Marge lived in the- country- more farm-a-fid-ed, in a house with a large garden, then ours, where she'd- bred bulldogs, funny the dog's faces are cuter than hers. That reminds me... he - he- he... a never mind... I thought it's an old inside joke.

She'd- didn't often stay at anywhere else, because she'd- couldn't bear to leave the precious dogs, but each of the visits stood out horribly vividly in Naddalin's mind, young 'till now.

(Flashback)

At Dariez's fifth birthday party, Aunt Marge had whacked Naddalin around the- bare butt with her walking stick to stop her from beating Dariez at musical statues.

A few years later, she'd- had turned up at Christmas with an electronic robot for Dariez and a box of dog biscuits for Naddalin, saying this is smarter than you and this is all you should be eating as that one did in the past- Naddalin, she was lived.

On the last visit, the- year before Naddalin started at the school, Naddalin had accidentally trampled on the- tail of the favorite dog, that got her bed instead of her sleeping it...

Ripper had chased Naddalin out into the- garden up a tree same old tree that she was in years ago the angel oak, and Aunt Marge had refused to call her off until past midnight, she slept in the tree on a branch all starched out...

Part: 2

The- memory of the incident still brought tears of laughter to Dariez's eyes.

And Marge well be there for a week, and Uncle Read snarled, and while we're on the - topic, and she- pointed a fat finger bullyingly at Naddalin, besides we need to get a few things straight before, I go and collect her.

-And-

Dariez smirked and then withdrew the gaze she had from the - television. As she was watching young Naddalin being bullied by Uncle Read, after all- like she was Dariez's favorite form of entertainment.

Besides primarily, grinning all creepy like, and harassing her was the thing to do, just like Uncle Read, both saying- 'you'll keep a municipal tongue in your head when you're talking to Marge.'

The next day...

Also, and all right...

Above and beyond said Naddalin inordinately, besides - um if she'd- does when she is talking to me.

-And-

Furthermore, and now secondly, also said

Uncle Read, acting as though he- had not perceived Naddalin's reply, as Marge doesn't know anything about your irregularity, I do not want any - any funny stuff while she is here with us. 'You behave yourself, got me...?'

-And-

Additionally, 'I's will if she'd- does, said Naddalin through clenched teeth.'

Uncle Read- And- and- and, thirdly... the mean little eyes now slit in her inflated face, over tears, and we've told Marge you attend North End- Secure Center for the inoperable wrong- criminal- and well to dumb it doing for you- died in the head- Girls- JUST LIKE YOU.

Naddalin- 'so-o a school for retards is what you're saying...'

'What?' Naddalin yelled...

...Precisely!!! Good- Naddalin- Good... saying it in a very dick-ish way.

Then you'll be sticking to that story- girl-ie we say for you, girl, or there'll be trouble, quarreled Uncle Read.

Naddalin sat there, white-faced furious, staring at Uncle Read, hardly able to believe it, that she was making words come out of her mouth in arguments.

Part: 3

Aunt Marge coming for a weeklong visit - it was the- worst birthday present she- Sleyashes had ever given her, including that pair of Uncle Read's old socks, that looked like it was used as Uncle Reads night before condom.

-Gross...

Well, Jennath, said Uncle Read, getting too overwhelming hostel- with you come here, I will be off to the station, then- said the bitch. Want to come along for the- ride, she said to the one... and you know which one.

-And-

No, said Dariez, even I think this is going to fare, and like whose attention had returned to the- television now that Uncle Read had finished threatening and terrorizing Naddalin.

'...And Dariez's got to make herself smart for she auntie,' said Aunt Jennath, - 'That's not nice, is it to a girl like you now' - also saying this in a way that is demeaning to her age and intelligence, yet comforting, in a way, that was needed even if- unpleasant.

Part: 4

Dariez's smoothed thick blond hair...

Her Mommy's bought her a lovely new dress.

Uncle Read slapped Dariez hard on the back of her shoulder, saying- 'see even on her birthday you get what was hers, she too dumb anyways, to understand, that we gave this to you, and not her.'

Also, see you in a bit, then, like- she- said, besides she- left the- breakfast nook.

Naddalin, who had been sitting in a kind of horrified trance, had a sudden idea.

‘I would like to get read if you like you- like you get rid of your blood use tampons, using all the toilet paper balling it all around, as you do before throwing it in the scrap can.’ He really said that to me...

Chapter: 159

Part: 1

Then it hit me that I could be kissing her every morning, I used to kiss her every morning when I used to get up and did not want summer anymore. I remember the middle of last year in the school year, about her saying- ‘I am worried if I kiss you I that I may screw up-’ and I’m said back- ‘if you didn’t you would, and we started to kiss all the time...’ ‘I just loved giving her un-pure thoughts,’ alleged Naddalin, in her young lusting girl mind. ‘I’m so bad- but I was thinking about sex,’ ‘um- I like it when Emma goes down really deep in me with her dildo, uh- it feels so-oo goo-ooooo-d.’

Part: 2

Then she made some toast, she- got quickly to her feet, when it popped, and she jumped- then followed Uncle Read to the- front door. Uncle Read was pulling on her coat.

She though on a coat- even so-o. I am going- she cried... ‘-NO. Besides, I’m not taken you!’

Then he- snarled, like a dog, as she- turned to see Naddalin watching him, and she snarled back even more intensely. ‘Like- I wanted to come, she said Naddalin unfeelingly,’ ‘You would like to come-’ he said mocking her. And I want to ask you something.

-And-

Uncle Read eyed her untrustworthily.

This ends with her being strangled out...

And him losing to teeth in the front with a left hook... MMA is looking good on me she said- even as a just white belt, I have more power than you ever have over me now. Something I took up over the summer to get away from here. And So...? Then snapped Uncle Read, taken the car keys from a hook next to the- door.

So, it was broadcasted over the TV, that there was going to be saver storms, in the flowing counties, torrential rain, I was standing just outside the door, just after saying- that 'I wanted to go- too,' and just like that a bolt of lightning struck right in front of me, it lights me up, and if I would be a life as I should, I know I would dead; and fried- like some- finger-licking good- KFC chicken, yet, I can't freak'n die even if, like- I wanted to, if you are fallen like me you cannot pass 'till the time reach a final death...

Part: 3

Thinking back to something she said to me, just like you, I have a place to dump my- cum- and it in you- and letting mine roll way down in that sweet little pussy you have- um I wanted her, so-o, bad- so bad, yet, I suck here to the new year- aww! Like- if a girl did not want to c*m she would not be there in the first place with you- dah- and I want to be there so-oo badly right now!

I LOVE HER!

(Forward)

By the way now that you have chocked the life out me, I need you to sign the - permission form and said Naddalin in a rush.

Now the third year is here - at Hayvannahol are allowed to visit the- village sometimes, said Naddalin.

'Why should I do that?' And scorned Uncle Read, lisping through his- young girl hating- missing teeth.

Well, and said Naddalin, picking her words NOT so carefully, also it will be hard work, pretending to Aunt Marge I go to that St. Watson...

-And-

And at The Re-tard school AKA- The Center for Terminally Criminal Girls or whatever the hell it is called! Hollered Uncle Read, at the top of his voice.

Naddalin was pleased to hear a definite note of panic in Uncle Read's voice, that I could have died.

I thought- (You do care about me- don't yah...)

Exactly, said Naddalin with great enthusiasm, looking tranquility up into Uncle Read's large, purple face.

Besides, it's a- lot to evoke, is it not? I'll have to make it sound convincing, won't I?

What if I accidentally let something slip?

-And-

You'll get the- stuffing knocked out of you, won't you? Then and their rumbled Uncle Read, advancing on Naddalin with she first raised. Nonetheless, Naddalin stood her ground.

Like- knocking the- stuffing out of me won't make Aunt Marge forget what I could tell her, she- said grimly.

Uncle Read stopped, his fist still raised, right at her sweet, little, cute, and young- little girl ribbons in her yet- her face was an ugly puce- it was- no not like her at all.

If you sign my permission form, then Naddalin went on quickly, I swear I'll remember where I'm supposed to go to Hayvannahol, I'll act like a Mug- like I'm normal and everything- honey that good that your trying so hard to be, yet you never- ever be normal he patted her on the head like she was dimwitted.

Naddalin could tell that Uncle Read was thinking it over, even if his teeth where bared- the ones left that are, a vein was throbbing in the temple, on the left side.

Besides, right, she- cracked in her voices finally. Then I shall check your behavior carefully during Marge's visit, then should I?

If, at the- conclusion of it, you've toed the- line, in addition, kept to the- story, we say and think about you- I'll sign your mother F'n form.

-And-

She- wheeled around, pulled open the - front door, then slammed it so hard, that some of the plaster fall from the ceiling, and then that one of the - little stained-glass panes of glass, that was cracked at the- top fell out. Naddalin didn't return to the- kitchen at all, she ran.

She- went back upstairs to her bedroom, over the top that one she used to have- thinking about for a moment- or two.

If she- was going to act like a real- nonmagical people, she'd better start now- so- in her mind she just did that at acting like a teen girl- all over again- going to her room to mope.

Nasty, unkind, revolting, and sadly she- gathered up all the presents from her birthday cards too that ruined by being mean ad smashing them and ripping them up and whatnot, so-o she hid them under the- loose floorboard with her homework, trying not to look over the fact that it just made her that gloomy.

Then she- went to Baby Raven's cage. Errolie seemed to have recovered from also being thrown up agent the wall to in his rage, I held- baby Raven's until she fell asleep, in my heads recovering from a broken wing.

Naddalin sighed, holding her in her plums. Baby Raven's, she- said gloomily, you poor thing... while her in a rocking-rocking in a chair.

Correspondingly, you're going to have to clear off for a week. Go with Errolie. Jinger well looks after you. I'll write her a note, explaining. I say- do not look at me like that- Baby Raven's large eyes, bigger than should be for her to have.

Part: 4

Like- where reproachful - And it's not my fault. It's the- only way I'll be allowed to visit Claepsiara, SKalaieol of Wizardry with Jinger And Emmah.

Ten minutes later, Errolie the baby Raven's (who had a note to Jinger bound to her leg) soared out of the- arched window out of my sight off into the horizon.

Naddalin, now feeling thoroughly miserable, put the- empty cage away inside the- wardrobe.

Nonetheless, Naddalin didn't have long to brood. In next to no time, Aunt Jennath was shrieking up the- stairs for Naddalin to come down and get ready to welcome their visitor.

Do something about your hair, now it like a boy has played in it! Aunt Jennath said as she - reached the- hall.

Naddalin could not see the- point of trying to make the hair lie flat, it was always frizzy and all the detangler in the world would not fix it. Aunt Marge loved criticizing her, so the- messier she- looked, the- happier she'd- would be.

All too soon, there was a crunch of gravel outside as Uncle Read's car pulled back into her- driveway, then the- clunk of the- car doors footsteps on the- garden path, up the porch, and pass the have wood door, she was in the entranceway next to the old steps.

'Hey, you with the big eyes and the face- get the- door!'

Then and there, Aunt Jennath hissed at Naddalin showing teeth.

She'd- turned on the heel then left, making her way into the living room. Jinger waited until she'd- had vanished through the- door to the- girls,' dormitories, then cleared she- garbage off the- knitted hats. 'They should at least see what They're picking up,' she- said firmly. 'Anyway...' she- rolled up the- parchment on which she- had written the- title of Lily's essay, 'there's no point trying to finish she now, I can't do it without Emmah, I haven't got a clue of what you're supposed to do with moonstones, have you?'

(A wisp of a wand and she moved forward in time- back to her happy place the school for girls like her.) Naddalin shook her head, noticing as she- did so-o, that the- ache- in her right temple was getting worse. Um- she- thought of the- long essay on colossal wars, about light and dark, and the- pain stabbed at her abruptly.

Knowing perfectly well that when- the- morning came, she- would regret not finishing the homework that night like the good little girl she was known for, she- piled she books back into her bag.

'I'm going to bed too- said Emma- and with you.'

'It was nice to have a cuddle body- again!'

Chapter: 160

Part: 1

She- passed Laila on the- way to the- door, leading to the- dormitories back at the school know that she had skipped time, but did not look at her.

Naddalin had a fleeting impression that Laila had opened the mouth to speak, but she - sped up and reach the- soothing peace of the- the body of Neveah's spiral staircase without having to endure any more provocation.

The- following day dawned just as sluggish and so very rainy as the- aforementioned one. Like- Dargide was still absent from the- staff table at breakfast. 'But on the- plusside, no Lily today' said Jinger bracingly.

Emmah yawned widely and poured herself some coffee. She'd- looked mildly pleased about something, and when Jinger asked her what she'd- had to be so happy about, she'd- simply said, her- hats have gone.

Seems the- house sprites do want freedom after all.'

'I wouldn't gamble on it,' Jinger told her caustically. they might not count as closes. She didn't look anything like hats to me, more like knitted bladders.'

Emmah did not speak to her all morning.

Double Transfiguration- succeeded double Charms, Professor Flitwick and Professor-

McDermott both spent the- first fourteen minutes of their lesson lecturing the- class on the- importance of flying with wings.

'What you must reminisce,' said little Professor Flitwick squeakily hanging as ever on a pile of books so that she- could see over the- top of the desk, 'is that these inspections may impact your futures for many years to come- lady's- work hard!

If you have not already given serious thought to your life paths, like- now is the- right time to do so-o. Then and there in the- mean-time, I'm afraid of thinking about it all, we shall be working harder than ever to certify, verify, confirm, endorse and attest, that you all do yourselves righteousness!'

They- then- there and did, spent over an hour revising Summoning Charms, which according to Professor Flitwick was bound to come up in their FLYING HORSES, and she- rounded off the- lesson by setting them there largest ever amount of Charms homework- ever in the school walls.

It was the- same, if not worse, in Conversion.

‘You cannot pass a FLYING test nevertheless, with the smaller HORSES,’ said Professor McDermott poorly worded, to Emma.’ Seeing that she hurt the girl- she fastly said- without serious claim, practice, you will get there and study hard, rubbing her hand. I see no regard why everyone in the class should not achieve a FLYING in Transfiguration as long as they put in the- work.’ Neville made a sad little skeptical of noise, with her snort.

There is nothing wrong with your work except lack of confidence girls, it shows, that you're smart.

Still better than what Emma got before, I remember when the professor said, ‘that the ambitions us girls have was to see how many thine- she like me too, and all the girls in the class could have sex and not get pregnant.’

Emma- snapped back sharply- well then, I am not going to hell, for using a dildo then for this is what I do, and the class of girls just giggled, as the professor looked stunned.

(The next day)

So... today we are starting Vanishing Spells.

These are easier than Illusion Spells, which you would not usually attempt until the 2nd level, but they are still among the- most tough magic you will be tested on in your FLYING courses.’ She would- was relatively accurate; Naddalin found she- Vanishing Spells utterly problematic.

By the- end of a double period she nor Jinger had managed to vanish the- mice on which they were practicing, though Jinger said with any luck she- thought she looked a bit paler. Emmah, on the- other hand, successfully vanished she mouse on her- the third attempt, earning she a ten-point bonus for Amsel from Professor McDermott. She would- was she- only pergirl not given homework; everybody else was told to practice the- spell overnight, ready for a fresh attempt on their mice the- following afternoon.

Now postulating slightly about the- the amount of homework they had to do, Naddalin and Jinger spent their lunch hour in the- haunted library, looking up she- uses of daydream-gravest in potion-making.

Still angry about Jinger's slur on her woolly hats, Emmah did not join them. By the time they reached Upkeep of Magical Creatures in the afternoon, Naddalin's head was aching again.

The day had become cool, breezy, chided to, and damp, in addition as they walked down the sloping lawn towards Dargide's cabin on the edge of the Illicit Woodland, they felt the occasional drop of rain on their faces.

Professor Grubby Plank stood to wait for the class some ten yards from Dargide's front door, a long trestle table in front of her laden with twigs. As Naddalin And Jinger reached there was, a loud shout of laughter sounded behind them; whirling, they saw Drallieah Mallerie striding towards them, encircled by her usual gang of Slyshein and clans.

She had clearly just said something highly amusing, because Carllah, Goyle, and the others found it to be that way, and the rest sustained to sniggering as they gathered around the trestle table and, judging by her way they all kept looking over at Naddalin, she was able to guess the subject of the joke without too much difficulty.

'Everyone there?' Barked Professor

Grubby Plank, once all she Slysheins And

Amsel's had arrived.' Let us crack on then.'

'Who can tell me what these things are called?'

She'd indicated she heaps of twigs in front of her.

Emmah's hands shot into the air.

Behind her back, Mallerie did a Becca toolshed imitation of she is jumping up and down with enthusiasm to answer a question.

She gave a shriek of laughter that turned almost at once into a scream, as the twigs on the table leaped into her air, and then exposed her-themselves to be what looked like tiny pixie-e-sh creatures made of wood or so it looked into the gorgeous magnificent creature, reach with arms and legs just like a little humming girl would have, cartoon-like face in which a pair of oversized brown eyes glittered, it was kind of like a little fairy, that because it was just that - said Emma.

‘O-oh!’ They said...

The Story of my Life

Part: 1

Look at that fairy said Lavender, thoroughly irritating Naddalin.

Anyone would have thought Dargide had never- ever shown them, impressive creatures, definitely, the- Slobber-worms had been a bit dull, even Kayla with the big brown eyes said, but she- Salam errs And Peryton (a baby doe with wings) had been interesting enough, besides she- Explosion Concluded Harpy perhaps too much so-o.

‘Kindly keep your voices down, girls!’ said Professor Grubbly Plank abruptly, scattering a hand soul of what looked like coffee beans among the- creatures, who at once fell upon the- food. ‘So, anyone knows the- names of these creatures? Miss. Kizziah?’

‘Puffskein, OMG CUTE-’ said Emmah.

They are hierarchy guardians, usually live in tail foliage that they color match, at night when all this world comes to life in its vividness, and dark worldly contests.’

‘Five points for Amsel,’ said Professor Grubbly Plank, on the floor squeaked, and creaked.’

Yes, these are Puffskein, as Miss. Kizziah rightly says, they generally- live in foliage whose tinder is of wand quality, and at night these weepy trees glow in a cobalt blue, and shimmer, with pulsating lighter shade of blue and white, to your heartbeat girls, with you touch the tree looking in your wings to it, and from those trees you get these little fuzz balls of fun. Anybody know what she eats?' Also, the potion we use a shampoo for are wings for these girls that have them, that want to make them irresistible to a boy or to keep them shiny and clean.

'Centipedes,' said Emmah promptly which explained why what Naddalin had taken to be grains of brown coffee' beans were moving about.'

Then it was said- 'But fairy eggs if she-y can get them, yet that is really hard over the fairy-like them to eat more.'

'Good girl, take another five points. So, whenever you need leaves or wood from a tree in which a Puffskein- cabins in a tree, it is wise to have a gift of centipede's ready to distract or placate it.

They may not look dangerous, but if angered they will try to score out human eyes with their finger's nails, which, as you can see, are very sharp, besides not at all needed near the- eyeballs.

So, if you would like to get any closer, take a few centipedes, and a Puffskein, and play with it like it's a newborn baby- girls...

I have enough there for one between two of, so you can study them more carefully, prudently, sensibly, and cautiously.

I want a draft from each of you with all body parts labeled by the- end of the class period, and a drawing, of how you think they really should look under that fuzz-ness, pulled out from your mind like a gray twisted cobweb- out on to my desk.

The- class poured like a herd of cattle stampeding forwards around the- trestle table.

Naddalin deliberately rains around and circled the- back of her, so that she- ended up right next to Professor Grubbly.

'Where's Dargide...?' She- asked, she, while everyone else was Hayvanna-hosing Puffskein.'

Never you mind,' said Professor Grubbly repressively, which had been the attitude last time Dargide had failed to turn up for a class, too.

Smirking all over her pointed face, Drallieah Mallerie leaned across Naddalin and apprehended the - smallest and the cutest Puffskein, that she could find - she had her eyes on her for she was the small one out - like her.

'Maybe,' said Mallerie in an undertone, so that only Naddalin could hear her, 'the - stupid great klutz's got herself badly injured.'

'Maybe, like - you will if you don't shut up,' said Naddalin, out of the - side of her mouth.

'Maybe, she's been messing with paraphernalia - and things like that - that's too big for her if you get my drift.'

Mallerie walked away, smirking over her shoulder at Naddalin, who felt unexpectedly sick.

Did Mallerie know something? Her daddy was a Death Devourer after all; what if she - had information about Dargide's fate that had not, yet reached the - ears of the - War?

She - hurried back around the - table to Emmah who was crouching on the - wood floor, some distance away, attempting to persuade a Puffskein to remain still long enough for them to draw it in their minds, and retrieve it in their cognizance.

Naddalin pulled her thought out of the back of her head with index finger with quill still in - between the other's, crouched down beside the - others, related in a whisper what Mallerie had just said.

'Duerre would know if something had happened to Dargide,' said Emmah simultaneously.'

It's just playing into Mallerie's hand as if to look worried; it told her we don't know exactly what's going on.

We must ignore her, Naddalin. There, hold the - Puffskein for a moment, just so, I can draw its face... using my mind.

'Yes,' came Mallerie's clear drawl from the - group adjacent them, 'Daddy was talking to the - Martita just a couple of days ago, you know, and it sounds as though the - Bureau's really determined to crack down on sub standard teaching in the place.'

So even if that overgrown moron does show up again, she will perhaps be sent packing straight away.'

'OUCH!' I say...

Naddalin held the- Puffskein so hard and was hugging it so tightly, that it had almost snapped, (OMG- I want to keep it.)

Also, it had just taken a great retaliatory swipe at the hands with its sharp fingers, leaving four long deep cuts there. Asking if they could be declawed.

Naddalin dropped her saying that very question, yet still thinking she was the cutest thing ever.

Carllah and Goyle, who had already been chuckling at the- idea of Dargide being sacked, laughed still harder as the- Puffskein set off at full tilt towards the- Forest, a little moving fuzz ball soon swallowed up among the- tree roots and tall grasses.

When the- bell faintly bounced over the- grounds, Naddalin rolled up the bloodstained Puffskein picture, that she now had down her hand still bleeding, and marched off to the biology with the hands wrapped in Emmah's handkerchief, And Mallerie's mocking laughter still ringing in the ears.

'If she- calls Dargide a moron one more time...' said Naddalin through gritted teeth.

'Naddalin, don't go picking a ruckus with Mallerie, don't you forget, she's perfect now, she - could make life difficult for you...'

'Wow, like, I wonder what it would be like to have a difficult life?' said Naddalin sarcastically.

Jinger laughed, but Emmah frowned. Together, they tramped across the- grassy patch.

The- sky still appeared unable to make up its mind, of what it wanted to do, when- she looked up, it looks as if it wanted to rain or cry down on us for letting them all go.

'I just wish Dargide would hurry the hell up and get back, that's all,' said Naddalin in a muffled faint voice, as they reached and starched in the- greenhouses that they were back in it.'

Besides do not say that is so, that Grubbly woman's a better teacher!' She - added bullishly.

‘I wasn’t going to,’ said Emmah calmly.

‘Because she will never be as good as Dargide,’ said Naddalin determinedly, fully aware that she- had just qualified an exemplary Care of Magical Creatures Lessons... In addition, was methodically annoyed about it.

The- door of the- nearest greenhouse opened with a whoosh, and some teens spilled out of it, including Jill, as the winds picked up.

‘Hi,’ she- said luminously as she- passed. A few instants later, Danna Lovegood emerged, trailing behind the- rest of the- class, a blotch and smear of the earth on her nose, along with the hint in her hair tied in a knot with long ribbons, on her- top of her head.

When she- saw Naddalin then and there, she prominent eyes seemed to bulge all big like and excitedly wild like, and she- made a beeline straight for her. Many of the classmates turned curiously to watch it all godown.

Danna took a great breath then and there she said, without so-o much as a preliminary hello, ‘I believe the- Who Must Not Be Named is back, and I also believe you fought about her, and she escaped from you.’

‘Er- right,’ said Naddalin awkwardly at the moment. Danna was wearing what looked like a pair of Auburn radishes for earrings, a fact that Parvati and Lavender seemed to have perceived, as they were both giggling and pointing at her earlobes.

‘You can laugh,’ Danna said, she voices rising, apparently- under her- an impression that Parvati and Lavender were really laughing at what she- had said that what she- was wearing,’ but people used to believe there were no such things as she- Blabbering Humdinger or her- Crumple- Horned Snorkack!’

‘Well, they were right, weren’t they?’ Said Emmah impatiently.

There weren’t any such things as she- Blabbering Humdinger or her- Crumple- Horned Snorkack.’

Danna gave her a wishing look and flounced away, ravishes swinging madly Parvati and Lavender were not she- only ones hooting with laughter now.

‘De’ you mind not offending her- it was said... you are the only people who believe me?’

Naddalin asked Emmah as they made their way into class.

‘Oh, for heaven’s sake, Naddalin, you can do better than her- go in your picking of...’ said Emmah.’

Jill’s told me all about her; she well only believes in things if there’s no proof at all- right?

Well, I wouldn’t expect anything else from someone whose daddy runs the - Star-paper.’

Naddalin thought of she- ominous winged horses, and dear and other things in and around that were flying about the heavens above- they- had seen on the- night she- had arrived and how Danna had said she- could see them as well.

She spirits descended slightly, and had she- been lying...? However- before she- could devote much more thought to the- matter, Ernie Macmillan had stepped up to her.

‘I want you to distinguish,’ she- said in a loud, resonant voice,’ that it’s not only weirdos who support you.

I partially believe you one hundred percent. My family have always stood firmly behind Duerre, so-o do I.’

‘Er thanks very much, Ernie,’ said Naddalin, taken aback but pleased. Ernie might be pompous on occasions like she, but Naddalin was in a mood to deeply appreciate a vote of confidence from somebody who did not have ravishes dangling from their ears.

Ernie’s words had certainly wiped the- smile from Lavender Brown’s face also as she- turned to talk to Jinger and Emmah, Naddalin caught Laila’s expression, which looked both confused and defiant.

To nobody’s surprise, Professor Burgeon started their lessons by lecturing them about the - importance of flying with wings all the things like them with wings.

Naddalin wished all the- teachers would stop doing that all... as she already felt like she knew it.

She- was starting to get an anxious, twisted feeling with-in her like every time she- remembered how much homework she- had to do, a feeling that gets worse dramatically when Professor Burgeon gave them, hitherto another essay at the end of class.

Exhausted and smelling stingingly of dark angel's dung, Professor Burgeon's preferred type of fertilizer, she- Colette's trooped back up to the- castle an hour and a half later of so-o, none of them chitchatting very much at all; it had been yet, another very long day.

As Naddalin was ravenous, and she- had her first detention with Scott at 5:35 o'clock, she- headed straight for dinner without dropping off her bag in Colette Tower so, that she- could pin something down before facing whatever she had in store for her.

She- had hardly touched and stretched into the- entrance of the- Great Hall, moreover, when a loud angry voice yelled, 'Oh!'

'What now...?' Then and there she- murmured unenthusiastically, turning to face Angelina Readgirl, who looked as though she- was in a wave of immense anger.

'I'll tell you what now,' she- said, marching straight up to her and stabbing her hard in the- chest with her finger.'

'How come you have one yourself in confinement for 5: 45 on Friday?'

'What...?' Said Naddalin.' Why...? Why- oh yes, Keeper tryouts!'

'Now she- remembers...!' Then Angelina snarls at her face.'

'Um- didn't I tell you like I wanted to do a tryout with the- entire team, did I not?'

Additionally, to find someone who fitted in with everyone! Didn't I tell you I would book the - Claepsiara pitch particularly?

Moreover, now you have categorical you are not going to be there!'

'I didn't decide to be there!' said Naddalin, tingled up by the- wrong of these words.'

I got detention from that Scott woman, just because, I told her the- complete truth about- 'You Know Who.'

‘Well, you can just go straight to her and ask her to let you off on Friday,’ said Angelina fiercely.’

Really, I for one do not care how you do it, just do it... Tell her- You Know Who’s an illusion of your imagination if you like also, just make sure you’re there before long.’

She- turned on her heel, twisting it and stormed away hopping on one foot.

‘You know what...?’ Naddalin said to Emmah and Jinger as they arrived at the - Great Hall.’

I think we’d better check with Puddlemere United when- the Oliver Wood’s been killed during a training session because Angelina seems to be channeling the spirit.’

‘What you reckon are the- odds of Scott letting you off on Friday?’ said Jinger skeptically, as they sat down at, she- Coletta- table.

‘Less than zero,’ said Naddalin miserably, tipping baby dear meet, on to her plate, that passed and starting to eat her.’ Had better try- not to cry, thinking about this little baby girl that did not have a life, though, hadn’t I, feel it coming on and I did.

I will offer to do two more detentions or something, I cannot do this- ‘like a big girl...’ she cried running out of the Hall... like a 2-year-old, little girl with hair ribbons on both sides of her shoulders.

She- swallowed a mouthful of mashed potato and added, I hope she’d- doesn’t keep me too long this evening- for not eating everything on my plate.

You realize we have got to write three essays, practice Vanishing Spells for McDermott, work out a counter-charm for

Flitwick, finish she- Puffskein drawing and then like- um- start that wonder dream diary for Solis?’

‘Lost in a dream- how wonderful...’

Life Without Meaning

Continued: 1

A life without meaning she said to me... sitting next to her in class...

I am Taylor- the girl you are going to do your dream studies with... Your Naddalin right?

'Yes- Yes!'

'A Life without meaning...'

...?...

That's what my life is now, she said. I don't live in the present or future. I don't live in what might happen today or what might happen tomorrow. I live in the past. I've lived my whole life in Greensburg Pa. and all these years have been the same.

Every day, I got picked up on by everyone even by the teachers sometimes! I mean, I thought teachers were supposed to be there for you, but I guess that excludes the teachers here at the school.

The reason- why- I was always the one to get picked on was because I wasn't like the perfect models that sashayed down the hallways of my school like they were at a fashion show or something. It seemed to me that out of all the girls that went to my school, I was the only odd one out.

My life and soul along with all of those in my family, ended on that fateful day, Saturday two months ago. The only difference between me and my family is that my body is still living. And I'm just going to have to live with the guilt...

Everything that happened was because of me. Flying high above the clouds, I looked down, shocked at the beauty of the countryside. I could see a light breeze go through the trees below me, of course, I was too high to feel it. I looked at me, just for fun.

My golden hair flying fast behind me, my wings, an iridescent mix of purples, pinks, and blues, shined as they flapped. I angled my body and swooped down as I passed a lake and scooped up some water. I took it back up to the clouds, not spilling a drop. The week leading up to that Saturday was pretty normal.

A typical Pa. morning. It was the week leading up to Spring Break when we were going on a family camping trip. Of course, we were all excited. We hadn't gone camping for four years since my little sister Hannah was born so it would be her first time. Which only made it more exciting for the reason that we wanted it to be perfect. My little brothers Dean and Daniel and my older brother Chad and, I had already camped before, but we still couldn't wait.

I didn't have that long, blonde hair that swept against their back or the beautiful bangs that hung over their forehead, causing them to flip their head to move it, which they did gracefully like swans. We were supposed to leave that Saturday and had a lot of packing to do.

Nevertheless, that just made me look even worse. I didn't have that perfect hourglass figure or the flawless features. But what I did have was a lot of zits, especially on my cheeks. And my body weight was 115 lbs., but it felt like so much more. To cover up my face, I hung my hair in it all the time, even on the hottest days ever!

We woke up every morning that week to our normal routine, my mom yelling that we would be late. We'd take a shower (if necessary) and get dressed so-o on.

My mom dropped us all off at our different schools and picked us up when school let out at the end of the day.

She was always there at the front of the line trying her hardest to get us on time, even if she had to leave work early.

We'd go home and start to pack for our week-long trip. Go to sleep... Wake up and repeat, do it over and over.

Part: 2

All my life, I've wanted to be popular and walk alongside the great Alexandria.

She was my idol, even though she was a total bitch. I loved everything about her, her name – Lexy Michaels – her dark black hair flowed as swiftly as she walked, her sea-green eyes, which were one of the many things that attracted boys to her. But she also had a weakness: she's not very loyal.

She has the perfect girlfriend though - Naddalin. I not sure if you know her or not I don't even...

I also wore a lot of skinny jeans and made sure to tug my shirt down to make it look good on me.

My eyes were cute, but now because of my dark-framed and thickly rimmed glasses, you could hardly tell anymore.

Ah, Naddalin, you see she the school's top girl in all that is magic.

There is not a single girl in this school who doesn't love her, all of them would be willing to kill each other for a least a touch – I included.

She was my one true love; it doesn't really matter to me if she didn't feel the same way, as long as he existed that was fine by me.

So-o anyway, back to me, I, was basically a loner all my life, kind of like you but not.

A little more emo, not too tough and not too weak. I had very few friends, most likely none, except for one.

Well, I wouldn't really say that he was my friend though. This girl was my childhood friend too even if we never played together, and neighbor ever since I moved here from South Greensboro, part of the city back home, when I was only one and half years old.

But then, now she's such a jerk to me, it's so hard to believe that she actually had a thing for me when we were five!

Now she barely talks to me and whenever I come near her, she just pushes me away.

Why?

I don't really have any parents, by the way, so-o I've been living with the Davilles's for a few years now.

I wasn't really comfortable with calling them mom and dad, so-o, I just called them Abby and Pat.

I don't really know whatever happened to my real- mom and dad, but I just woke up one day and they weren't there.

I panicked at first, but then after her parents took me, I soon started to forget it ever happened.

Sure, Emma and Ariana were really nice and got me almost everything, you know Emma, don't you?

'Yes, really well- I's may say...'

I ever-ever wanted, if you include a cell phone and an I-Pod, but- I still didn't feel very close to them.

I wasn't very happy with anyone in Greensburg Pa., not 'till I came here.

Like- I said before, I was not emo, but with every day and all its problems, I became more and more like that. I never cut myself through- as Ariana did...

'One day,' I told myself. 'One day, they're all going to go too far and that'll be the end of me.'

But I never knew that...

That day would be tomorrow.

I got the idea when I was reading a little bit of this manga called:

'The Lost Girl' It is about a girl who's picked on by kids at school, got rejected by her one true love, and her childhood friend's a jerk to her now.

So, she decides to hang herself but fails due to her heavyweight, which then causes her to find this medicine.

But- but this medicine isn't like ordinary medicine, this medicine has the power to change your appearance to the way you want it to be.

Until the Friday before.

I got a call from my best friend Jessica. She asked if I wanted to spend the night.

I told her we were leaving the next morning really- early and that I would not be able to.

Of course, we both were disappointed. What girl is not?

So, we made a plan, so I would be able to go. The plan was to finish all my packing that night (which was already done,) and put it all in the car. Then get dropped off at her house and spend the night.

On my parent's way to the campground the next morning, they could pick me up since it was only a few minutes out of the way.

After begging for almost- five minutes my mom and dad agreed.

Part: 3

So, it was settled, I packed everything, I would need for the trip in the car and after a zillion reminder about what not to forget, I finally got my overnight bag packed, for my first day back...

I got in the car and my dad drives me to Yessa's house, a girl I knew back home.

She made sure that I knew I would be picked up at six o'clock a.m.

because we had a long drive ahead of us to the train station.

I told her I knew so she left. I did not even say good-bye. Sometimes, I think that if I would have said good-bye things would have turned out differently.

But- I did not.

The night went by like any sleepover.

Late-night prank calls, popcorn and movies, painting toenails, and trying to see how long we could stay up.

I crashed around one o'clock a.m. after setting the alarm on my cell phone.

The next morning, I was outside waiting at six o'clock sharp.

I sat there for two hours, dozing off every few minutes and checking the time on my phone the few times, I was actually- awake before, I started crying.

I knew something was wrong. My dad was never late, my mom would have called.

I must have woken up Jess and her mom with my loud crying.

I only had to wait another hour before the police showed up. They both sat with me outside on the steps. I listened to the wind that flew past me. It almost seemed to call my name.

‘Taylor. Taylor- Tay-a.’ I closed my eyes, listening carefully. It was definitely- calling me now. ‘Taylor. Taylor.’ It almost started to sound annoyed. Whatever, I was enjoying this way too much to care.

‘Oh, right, um,  $x$ - equals two-hundred ninety-one and three tenths.’

I answered absentmindedly. She looked shocked, actually- the whole class did. Then I realized what I said and was shocked myself, I had no idea what she even asked.

‘TAYLOR!!’

My eyes snapped open, only I wasn’t in the sky anymore. Mrs. Jenison the professor, my Algebra teacher was in front of me, looking very, very furious.

‘Welcome back, Ms. Svernight, so nice you could join us,’ sarcasm was apparent in her voice.

Yeah, she was livid. ‘Now perhaps you would be so kind as to answer my question?’

Mrs. Jentson moved to the chalkboard and wrote some notes we needed to copy down, with the chalk floating in midair, she was using telekinesis charming it to do so, in perfect penmanship.

I started to copy them, but then I started to stare out the window, drifting back into a daydream. (What we are studying right now... you with me.)

The sound of the bell ringing brought me out of it- this time.

I said- what I needed... she even read my mind... so in a way, it was all said without me saying anything at all.

‘Yes, that is correct, but that doesn’t give you a pass to daydream again.

Pay attention.’ she said, still amazed at what I did. I nodded knowing that I would not listen to her.

I scrambled to get my stuff together and ran out the door.

Part: 4

When I got to my locker Sarcelles Handsome, my best friend, was already there.

Well, she was at her locker, but it is right next to mine. I shoved my Algebra book in my locker and grabbed my Biology notes and book. My locker door closed, and Sarcelles slid in front of it, and me.

‘So, what was it this time? Swimming? Running? Princess? Elves?’ She asked.

Okay, I’ll admit it; I have a bit of imagination. ‘Flying, it was so real.

I could actually feel the wind in my hair.’ ‘Was I there?’ She asked, essentially jumping up and down.

She loves to hear about my daydreams- and regular ones too- and always want to be a part of one. Even before I got here but, it’s kind of like I have no control over them, I knew that my days were coming up to where I would be here.

‘Oh, um, yeah.’ I lied, unconvincingly.

‘Don’t lie to me,’ she said, her crestfallen with her breath left out.

‘You’re really bad at it.’

‘I’m sorry. But I did feel your presence.’ That was not a lie at least. I did feel the presence of someone or something. I think it was Mell short for Mellany. At least, I hope it was.

‘Seriously?’

I felt faint in the head.

I only heard snatches of what officer Barkly was telling me.

‘Car crash... All of then... Instantly... Without pain...

Arrangements... Next week... I was alive yet not.’

But I stopped listening, to the thoughts... I knew everything I needed to know.

How could my family have all died? Then it hit me that I would be coming here and that I have more than one life, on Earth, yet I would have to have approval as a fallen girl.

I got my answer in a moment... It was because of me. I was selfish to want to go to a friend's house the night before our family trip.

This was my punishment from God. Finally, tears started to fall down my face, that I was so bad that I would be sent here, not knowing.

I thought of my dad, the last of my family I had seen. The one who always made Chad stop bothering me. Whose idea it was to go camping.

I thought of my mom. Probably the kindest person in the world. Always putting others before herself. Always there for me when I needed her, giving me hugs on bad days.

I thought of Chad... Even though he was a bully at home he always stood up for me at school whenever someone was picking on me.

He was only eighteen. He'd just gotten his first serious girlfriend.

A late curfew, a Credit Card!!! I also knew about the car my parents were going to surprise him with on his birthday.

Now he would never get to drive someone to the movies in his own car. Never get to make stupid mistakes and learn the lesson.

I thought of Daniel... How he was always trying to act like Chad... older.

Even though he was only ten years old and still a kid at heart. He had just gotten his first real crush on a little girl I'm pretty sure liked him back.

Always annoying me to get my attention. Doing whatever I say so I'd play basketball with him. Or play catch in the backyard.

I thought of Dean... too- Just starting school. Just making friends.

Just starting to read. Just starting to live life at only six.

He had just gotten a book he couldn't put down. I'd read it to him every night.

He was mad because I was gone and would not be able to read to him.

He only let me read to him because I used different voices for the different characters. Still sucking his thumb every night. Practically- still a baby.

Part: 5

I thought of baby Hannah. My first, only, and the last sister I will ever have. She will never have a chance to make friends. (All over me, and that is why I choose to come here...)

Never go to school like the 'big kids.'

Never have a boyfriend, I'll never have the chance to do big sister stuff with her.

Like doing her toes, braiding her hair, or just talking. She will never grow up.

None of them will... All because of me, so I had to come here with you girls - and be one of these girls- I had no choice but too.

I looked up at the sky towards heaven, saying no I do not belong there for all that is WRONG with me always so many types of the wrong I am.

'I'm thinking of you' I said, 'I'm thinking of you... you don't need me up there with you- I have fallen.'

~*~

'Yeah, oh, hey, could I borrow your Algebra notes? I started daydreaming after the first section.' I pulled out my notes and showed her.

'What are you talking about? These are even better than mine. See...?' She said flipping through pages in my notebook. I looked and saw almost two pages of notes, all in perfect order.

'But I... how...?' I managed to stutter out, amazed.

'I don't know, but I think we better get to class. Don't you?' we hurried off too- Biology, then we parted ways and I went off to World History, Study Hall and Free Period all flew by in daydreams. Eventually, I went home and did at least, I think I did my homework. It was done either way.

I was daydreaming about flying again when my mom called me. I went downstairs to see what she wanted. She was getting off her cell phone and was typing something on her laptop. She didn't even look up when I came into her study.

'That was your Algebra teacher- I just got off the phone with.'

'Oh.'

'She says you are very bright but don't seem to be focusing. That you are daydreaming?

What's going on, Taylor? I thought you said you were going to quit this daydreaming nonsense. Was that not what you said, or was I mistaken?'

Part: 6

'It isn't nonsense, it's-'

'Don't start with me, young lady. You know as well as I do, that it is nonsense. I didn't spend all of that money to send you to the best private school in the state, just for you to ruin it by daydreaming.

Now, get your head out of the clouds, and think about your future. Because, if you don't nip this in the butt, you won't have one. Do you understand...?' I nodded. 'Good, now, go do your homework.'

'I already did.'

'Then go do... I don't care, just go do something that doesn't involve daydreaming.'

'Okay, bye.' I left her typing away on her computer and dialing someone on her cell. Knowing I wouldn't stop daydreaming. It was my release, she just does not get it, refuses to understand.

So, busy working and focusing on 'the future' she forgets everything else and does not care about it either.

I went back to my room and started to clean it. I threw my backpack on my unmade bed and started organizing my books. About halfway through, I started to daydream again. I pulled a nearby book to me and opened it to a random page, so my mom would just think I was reading if she checked on me.

Probably- like the worst state to live in, or so I've been told. Cold, dreary, wet. My aunt Monica loves this place and my mother loved Pa.

Complete opposites.

Which is probably why they never got along well. I've only seen Aunt Monica about five times and both times ended in a huge fight and someone leaving and promising never to talk to the other again.

Mom told me that when they were young, they were the best of friends. they were only a year apart and did anything together.

But then high school came and went. They fought and went their separate ways. Now I'm expected to go live with her and her children in a tiny town named Bluewater. I hate it already. Plus, I have to fly there.

It's been a week since the accident and I'm at the Washington airport. And there's nobody to take me to my aunt's house.

I've been off the plane for an hour and there is no one to pick me up!

I've tried calling my aunt and calling her house, but nobody answered either. I went to the bathroom to freshen up a bit and when I came back out my cell rang. I answered, and I heard my aunt's apologetic voice.

'I'm so sorry Lucy I'm running a bit late. My son Jack fell off his dirt bike and broke his arm, so we are at the hospital. I'm having one of my oldest son's friends who is our neighbor come to pick you up. He should be there now.' I was mad. I guess just in general but her forgetting me just set it off.

'Fine' I said and hung up. That probably- wasn't the smartest idea since I still had no idea who was picking me up. Or what they looked like.

A few minutes later a boy came up to me.

'Hey, I'm Brendon' I just looked at him.

'Hello, Brendon...' He was really cute. His dark brown hair partially covered his face and he had piercing blue eyes.

I was an average looking girl. I had long curly black hair and grey eyes and a tan that I had all year long.

I wasn't the tallest person ever, but I wasn't that short either. Brendon was pretty tall though. Was he who was picking me up? I had no idea. While he stood there, I stared him down. He looked nice enough.

Part: 7

'Um-mm... 'he seemed a little uncomfortable with me not knowing who he was. 'I'm supposed to be picking you up?' I nodded and stood.

I grabbed my duffel bag and purse and waited for him to lead the way.

He looked a little confused but just kept walking. He showed me the way to his black truck. He grabbed my stuff from me and put it in the back I got into the passenger seat. I started to panic but took deep breaths and tried to calm down.

This would be the last time I rode in a car. We drove in silence for a few minutes before he finally said his confusion.

'I could tell you had no idea who I was, but why did you just accept it and get into my car? I could be some creeper who wanted to rape a girl.

But you didn't even question me like What is my aunt's name?

Or why are you coming to pick me up? Anything' I just looked up from my lap - 'Are you some rapper?' He shook his head 'Then why is there a problem?' He sighed and just kept driving. The truth was I just didn't care who he was.

If it was some murderer trying to kill me I probably- would be happy about it. About ten minutes later he pulled up to a house. It looked normal enough.

It was a three-story building with blue shutters and yellow paint.

'This is where you get off' Brendon said and smiled at me. I ignored him. It started to rain so I ran with my bags towards the house.

I was so glad to be out of the car, but he didn't need to know that. 'Do you need any help with that?' Brendon asked. I shook my head. He pointed to a house next to where we were - parked.

'That is my house, I take Landon to school and you're in the same grade, so I guess I'll be taking you too so be ready on Monday at eight- sharp!'

He mocks saluted and got back in his car. 'You're welcome!' He yelled while pulling away. All he got in response was me rolling my eyes.

I took a deep breath and looked at the house I was supposed to live in with my Aunt Monica maiden last name was- Read and five cousins- one a girl has dated the youngest girl -Alyssa Amsel great-grandchild also a girl, Charlotte Mazel Amsel, who was said to be bloodline to Nevaeh, by DNA genetic profiling of embryos implanting stolen from her- when Nevaeh was just a 13-year girl by them the four girls known as Amsel sisters, many years before.

There was also a Taylor, how would be Nevaeh's eggs inside AVA, with DNA from both to make a designer baby of AVA's liking- I'm pretty sure my uncle died of cancer a couple of years ago yet maybe not. Or maybe it was a car accident, I don't know. One way or another AVA got her way...

I've met all my cousins before- yet I just don't remember, but that was about three years ago. Most if not all are in Landon of all places, the oldest being my age around, 17, maybe a few months older. He was a jerk to me the last time we met. Always called me names- over the swirl baby concept thing that made me- well me.

Hopefully, he has changed- yet most boys are dumb. Daphne is two years younger than me so she's around fourteen. She was also a brat when I met her. Emily is probably about right now. She was so sweet and funny, she's the only one I'm looking forward to seeing. Lastly the twins Coly and Joly. Loud, crazy, wild children. They should be five now. Maybe they've calmed down a bit? I can only hope. I can remember that they all had curly black hair like me because their mom and my mom looked a lot alike. But they had blue eyes, except one of the twins has brown eyes. But other than that, I have no idea what to expect. I've changed a- lot in the past three years. Looks-wise mostly. Now boys actually notice me. If I can change hopefully others can too.

Part: 8

I was standing in a courtyard, with snow falling all around me. I was wearing a pure white halter dress, barefoot. Cherry blossoms mixed with the snow. Frozen cherry blossoms were in my hair, which fell over my wings.

I tested my wings gingerly, afraid they would disappear-although they never did. I started flying, higher than I thought possible. I could see everything around me, it was beautiful. I spun around a couple of times, just for fun, arms out, and something incredible happened. Some of the snow that was falling melted and the water followed my outstretched arms. I stopped spinning and stared. I lowered my arms and the water started to fall. I raised my arms quickly, while practically yelling 'Freeze.' And, get this, the water actually froze. I'm talking frozen, like ice.

I lowered my arms again, this time mentally telling the water to stay put. And it did; I started experimenting, moving my arms around, giving both mental and verbal commands, and just playing around.

'Well, at least you can follow my orders... For once.' The voice was cold as steel, heartless, snapped me out of my daydream and was my mother's. I stared at her confused. Happy she thought I really was reading. 'I should let you get back to work, shouldn't I?' I nodded, unsure what she was talking about, but I didn't care. I watched her leave then flew myself onto my made bed, sending stuffed animals flying.

I looked up amazed; my room was almost completely clean. I had no idea how that happened. I wasn't that freaked out, though-but I probably should have been. I was just happy it was clean. I looked at the alarm clock on my bed stand, eight-thirty p.m., I was shocked. It was only six when I started.

I finished cleaning my room and was completely exhausted. I got ready for bed. I laid down and promptly fell asleep.

I was back in the courtyard, but everything was different. I was in the same clothes, but the snow and cherry blossoms were gone, and everything looked dead. I felt something behind me and abruptly turned around. Nothing was there. I turned back around. I started to fly, but this time it was rough and hard to. I felt someone watching me again. I started moving away but it followed me. I was getting really freaked out now.

Everywhere I went the feeling followed, sometimes getting stronger, but never died down. Suddenly my wings disappeared. I started screaming as I plummeted to the ground. This is no ordinary dream, I thought, not knowing whether falling here would kill me or not. I was about to find out. I let out one last blood-curdling scream before I hit the ground.

I woke up in my bed gasping for air. Afraid to fall asleep again.

‘I’m telling you; it was so creepy.’ I was talking to Mell the next day in Algebra.

‘I’m sure it was. But I just think it is weird that you knew it was a dream, why were you so scared?’

‘I told you I had no control over anything that happened,’ I said, stifling a yawn. I stayed awake the rest of the night except for the occasional doze-awake and was now paying the price. I already fell asleep in English, and then I said that I like football when my teacher asked for the date during Spanish. Needless to say, I was beyond exhausted. In fact, I was having trouble keeping my head up now, and class hasn’t even started yet.

‘Are you sure you are telling me everything?’

‘Yeah, but I did have another daydream beforehand that made it even creepier.’ Mell’s head shot up and she gave me a weird look.

I walked up to the front door and knocked three times. I only had to wait a few seconds until a young girl I’m guessing was Emily opened the door.

‘Mom Lucy is here!’ Then she slammed the door in my face. I almost laughed but then I remembered why I was here and shut up. I started to think of my sister and how much I miss her. I toughed it out and dried my eyes. I just waited and a few minutes my Aunt Monica opens the door.

‘Sorry about that sweetie, come on in!’ She gives me a big hug which I don’t return. She reminds me so much of my mom it hurts. The same hair, eyes, and smile. I looked away from her face and stepped inside still not talking to her. I hear the hurt in her voice when she talks next but chose to ignore it.

‘Emily honey will you show Lucy to her room while I call the school to set her up for Monday?’ Emily skips up and takes hold of my hand that isn’t holding my bag.

‘Come on Lucy!’ I almost start crying when I hear the name my mom used to call me when she was in a good mood. I hold back though and let Emily guide me through the house. I go up a flight of stairs and my room is the last one on the right. Emily takes me to it but doesn't take me in yet. She points to each room in turn.

'This is your room and my room is- a-crossed the hall. Mommy is downstairs and so is- Colton and Joly.

The room next to you is Landon and Daphne is next to mine.'

Then she pulls me inside my new room. Plain white. Desk. Computer. Chair. Closet. Dresser. TV. 'Mommy said you could paint it later and that I could help maybe' I sit on my bed.

'Bye!' Emily called and raced out of the room. Good. I thought I can't bear to be around people now. I hear music coming from the room next to mine and try to remember who is in there. Landon, that explains it. I hear thumping up the stairs and somebody else goes into Landon's room. I can hear them talking. I start to unpack but give up and call Jess... 'So-o, how's the place' She asks

I shrug then remember she can't see me. 'Rain, rain, and rain. I haven't even met much of them yet!' I told her what happened at the airport.

'Is he hot?' She asked-

'I guess I didn't really notice' But I had. It was really hot. I didn't tell her that.

'I miss you, Lucy.'

'I miss you too' We hung up soon and I finished unpacking the little I had with me. I changed into some pretty short shorts and a loose comfortable shirt. I look at my phone. This was usually the time I would be hanging out with friends at Mark's Coffee Shop. It's a Saturday night.

I have seven new text messages from various people, but I had only talked to Jess since the accident and chose to ignore everyone else.

Three are from Justin (I almost was a boyfriend,) one from Kim (The girl trying to steal Justin from me,) one from Victoria (The girl who was with my ex when we were still dating), and two from Tyler (My ex-boyfriend.)

Wow how Empathetic, I have no true friends except Jess. Figures since I'm such a horrible person. I delete them all and lay back down on my bed. I grab a book and read until I hear a knock on my door.

'Dinner' Says a voice I don't know. I slowly stand up and open the door. I hear a lot of movement from downstairs and I slowly go down the stairs. There are a lot of people in the kitchen. Monica, Emily, Daphne, Joly, Colton, and about five teenagers.

They are attacking a pizza, well maybe three, in the middle of the kitchen. I recognize Brendon in the pack. As I walk in, they stare at me until another boy laughs and tells them to stop staring.

I'm guessing that was Landon because he looks familiar. But he's changed. He doesn't look so nerdy anymore. It seems more of the popular type with his good looks, his friends too. Aunt Monica steps forward.

'Hey honey these are some of Landon's friends, Austin, Gabe, Kendal, and you've already met Brendon of course.' I nodded at them and grabbed some pizza because, after a full day of travel, I was really hungry.

The boys kept talking but quieter this time, so I couldn't hear. But they kept glancing at me. I wonder what they were talking about.

Seriously. I ignored Daphne when she tried to start a conversation.

After one slice, I was done with it and just slid back upstairs. A few minutes later I heard all the boys go into Landon's room. They seemed to be playing X box or something. I heard a knock on my door and when I opened it Emily stood there with two slices of pizza.

'Mommy said I should bring you another pizza because the boys made you uncomfortable and, so I bought myself one too, so you don't have to be alone and stuff.' I gave her a smile and we ate while I played the game favorites with her.

She left when Aunt Monica called her downstairs. around nine-thirty the boys left, and I went to sleep and had terrible nightmares. I woke up crying and couldn't fall back asleep. The clock read 7:44 a.m. Early for a weekend. At least for my family. Well, when I lived with my parents.

So, I got up and changed into running clothes. My only release. I pulled my hair back and went downstairs and left a note on the counter that said-

‘Going out running will be back in an hour’ I took off into the morning. I ran through the country not wanting to get people’s attention in town. Not that there were many people in this town. My old town in PA had triple the population of Bluewater.

Blah- blah- I probably went about eight miles. As I got back to the house, I saw Landon and Brendon in the yard playing with the other kids and I’m guessing Brendon’s siblings. They all waved to me and I just ran past them and went into the house.

‘How was the run?’ Monica asked. I shrugged. ‘Cold’ She sighed probably tired of my one-word responses. ‘You know you can talk to me, right?’

I nodded and headed upstairs to take a shower. All-day I just watched TV in my room and ignored everyone who knocked on my door, except Emily who already had me loving her. Even Landon tried to get me out of my room.

‘Hey Lucy, a bunch of the guys are going to the movies, want to come?’ I called out no and watched TV some more, trying to forget my life. I went to bed early dreading school the next day. They will all find out about my family and give me the look that says they feel sorry for me. I hate that. I won’t tell and maybe they won’t find out. Not that I’ll make any close enough friends tell my secret to. That I was the reason my family was dead.

The next morning, I woke early around six and took a shower and began to get ready. I dried my hair and put on makeup like a pro. Jess’s mom owned a shop that did hair and makeup and she taught Jess and me well. I checked the computer that said today was supposed to be warm, so I put on my favorite pair of jean shorts. Much too small for the dress code back home but here it wasn’t so bad. I also wore a white tank and red off the shoulder shirt I’d just gotten a few weeks ago and never worn.

My high tops finished the outfit. It was only seven, so I sat down and wrote an email to Jess telling her about my first-day outfit, a tradition we made up in third grade and promised to tell her all about my first day at my new school. It wasn’t her first day, but we were acting like it, so I read her email.

-Hey Looloo, I decided to wear the shorts we bought together last month, you know the silver short ones? Plus, a navy-blue tank and a white shirt. The cute bouncy one that you love so much.

Just for you sweetie! You know what shoes of course. Converse all the way baby! Hair is curled to look just like yours even though it looks a lot better on you. Just missing you. Don't forget the bracelet! Wear it always and I will too! Talk to ya later and don't forget to send me your outfit!

Love, ~Jess-

We had bought a bracelet together the day before I left, and I hadn't taken it off since. It reminded me of my family and my always best friend. I looked at the clock surprised at how much time had passed. It was time to go to school. I guess it's their first day back from spring break too so maybe I won't stand out so much. Landon knocked on my door.

'Come downstairs I know you've been ready for hours!' I took a deep breath. There was no way I was riding in a car, only if I was driving. I don't care how well anyone thinks they drive; my dad was forty-two and he still couldn't drive perfect. And if he couldn't, nobody could.

Plus, I don't trust anyone here with my life yet. I walked downstairs and prepared to talk to my aunt with more than one word for the first time since I got here. She was in the kitchen making Emily and the little boy's breakfast.

'Good morning Lucy would you like some eggs?' I shook my head and started to talk.

'Would it be okay if I walked to school today?' She looked confused.

'I thought Brendon was taking you and Landon to school?' I shrugged.

'Yeah but I don't want to be in a car right now, I'd rather walk.' She realized what I was talking about and almost started to cry.

'Yeah whatever you want, you don't have to do anything that makes you uncomfortable.' I said thanks and grabbed my bag with all the stuff Monica had gotten for me for school. I already knew the way to the school; it was only about a half-mile away anyways. When Landon saw me start to walk, he called out.

'Hey, I thought we were giving you a ride Lucy!' I shook my head.

‘I don’t like cars that much!’ I yelled back. I saw understanding come into his eyes and I also saw Brendon looking concerned too.

I just set off towards school ready to face hell.

‘How so?’

‘Well-’

‘Alright, it is time to start class. Ms. Evernight, Ms. Hedsome, do you mind?’ Mrs. Jenson walked in.

‘I’ll tell you later,’ I told Mell. She started to say something more but stopped. I went to my seat and started doodling in my notebook.

I couldn’t concentrate on anything Mrs. Jenson was saying. I just wanted to sleep. I closed my eyes, but opened them shortly afterward, because, I heard someone enter the classroom.

I looked up and couldn’t believe my eyes. Standing in front of us was pure perfection. He looked about twenty-five, was tall, but not too tall.

His dark brown hair fell into his gray eyes. He had a muscular build, but not insanely so. I just sat there, mouth wide open, just like everyone else in the classroom. That is, except for Mrs. Jenson and Mell, they both looked worried and frightened.

‘I’m looking for a princess.’ Umm- his voice, while a little rough, was perfect. Everyone turned to the newest girl in the class, Mary Stenting. She transferred to our school about two months ago, so no one really knew anything about her. But, seeing as everyone else always went to this school, everyone automatically thought it was her.

She stood up, a knowing smile on her face. Then the unimaginable happened. She pointed directly at me and said, ‘Her.’

A few things happened at once. The stranger’s whole demeanor changed, into something deadly. He started advancing on me. Then a desk flew through the air, hitting him directly in the head, sending him flying into the wall. I stood there shocked, all I could think was, what is going on.

Someone grabbed my wrist and started running, dragging me along with them. My eyes never left the man until we were out of the classroom. I finally looked at the person dragging me. It was Mell. Her eyes are both frightened and determined. She started running even faster and I struggled to keep up. I had no idea she was that fast.

‘We have to get out of here. Now...’ We ran down the hall, unsure if he was pursuing or not. We flew out the doors of the school, never slowing down. We kept running -which reminds me, never try to run in a skirt (why private school uniforms for girls always involve a plaid, pleated skirt is beyond me,) until we were near her house.

She pulled me into a bush while she was searching for something. I could see the urgency in her eyes. I, however, was still very confused.

‘What is going on? Mell?’ I whispered, afraid about what would happen if I spoke any louder.

‘They knew we’d be coming here. We have to go straight to Skoufyceol’s.’

‘Wait. What? Mell, I don’t understand, what is going on? What is Skoufyceol’s? Why did that guy think I was a princess?’ My voice rising out of fear cracked at the last question. I was so confused that if you would have asked me as simple a question as my name, I wouldn’t have known it.

‘Sh-h. You don’t want them to hear. I will explain everything later. Right now, I need to get you out of here.’ I nodded. She crept out of the bushes and I followed, as quietly as possible.

We went to the woods on the outskirts of town. I had no idea where we were going, but Mell didn’t seem to have that problem. In fact, she seemed to know exactly where we were. We went deeper and deeper into the woods.

After about thirty minutes, Mell stopped dead in her tracks and turned around. Suddenly I became aware of someone running towards us. The man from the classroom burst through the trees. He started advancing on us as Mell went into a defensive position.

I watched in absolute horror as my best friend fought this man. While she was incredible, there was something about her opponent that made me fear for her life. I was so worried about her I didn’t even notice the footsteps coming up behind me until it was too late.

Another man grabbed me from behind, and before I could do anything, he was dragging me away. I started struggling and trying to break free of his grip. Then someone rammed into him.

He let go of me, but in the process, he threw me into a tree. My left side hit it with deadly accuracy and force. I fell to the ground, whimpering in pain. I didn't dare open my eyes.

Part: 9

Eventually, however, I had to. When I did, black spots clouding my vision. They cleared up and I saw Mell fighting both of the men. She seemed to have the upper hand for the moment, but something inside of me made me want to help her. I sat up, wincing at the horrible pain.

I didn't dare look down because I knew that if I did, I would probably scream. I stood up, almost passing out in the process, and gingerly took a few steps forward. I slowly took a few steps forward, until I was right behind Mell.

She had just taken down one of the men down and was fighting with the other. I had never seen anyone fight as hard as she was. The fierce determination was the only emotion on her face. I was both afraid of and for my friend.

Then, Mell somehow threw the man. He went flying past me and into a tree, head-on. I caught some movement out of the corner of my eye and turned. Just in time to see a woman attack me.

I tried to defend myself but was too weak from my other wound to do any good. She managed to get a good blow on my head. Then for the first time in my life, I passed out, praying that this was just a dream. But in the back of my head, I knew it wasn't, and that this was just the beginning.

I woke up on a small cot covered in blankets. My whole body ached. I had no idea what time it was, or even what day it was. The 'room' I was in, looked nothing more than a hole from an adjoining tunnel of dirt-which is what it was. I sat up and nearly passed out again, the pain was horrible. But I managed to sit up and look around.

The walls were made out of dirt and the ceiling, while high, made me feel very uncomfortable, because it was made from the same dirt, and I had no idea how stable it was. The floor was covered in rugs, so I don't know what it was, but I'm guessing that it was dirt.

The door was just a blanket hung over a rod. There was another cot, but it appeared to be unoccupied. A small table and a few chairs sat in the far-left corner, with a jug of water, some cups, and plates on top. A chest was in the nearest right-hand corner.

My clothes were hanging limply around me. My shirt was in tatters and covered in bloodstains. There was an especially horrible spot on my left side that I'm guessing was from hitting the tree.

I couldn't actually see the wound because it was bandaged, but the gauze and bandages were really red there. I threw back my covers and examined the rest of my body.

My skirt had nothing seriously wrong with it. It was just a little wrinkled, with a few rips, tears and bloodstains here and there. My legs just had a bunch of cuts and bruises, but nothing as serious as my side. My socks were now a lovely shade of yellowish, brownish white.

I started to rub my forehead. But stopped dead in my tracks. On my left wrist was a tattoo. It looked exactly like the friendship bracelets Mell and I got each other in third grade. The design of swirls, well, swirled around my wrist-I know stupid, but that is the only way I can describe it.

It was a sapphire color that almost seemed to glow. I stared at it, confused. I never got a tattoo, and I wasn't planning on getting one, either.

I got out of bed, hoping to find some answers-I finally convinced myself that I had fallen asleep and that this was just a dream.

I was still very weak, so I was using the walls to keep myself somewhat-steady. I left the room and started creeping down the hall. There were many people walking through the hallways. They gave me strange looks but otherwise left me alone.

I kept walking, not knowing where I was going. I was feeling weaker and weaker with every step. I was just about to ask someone passing by when I heard two people yelling at each other from a room ahead. I stopped dead in my tracks, not because I was scared, but because, I knew those voices.

'Just what was I supposed to do?' Mell's voice cut through the air. She was obviously furious. I crept forward, wanting to get a closer look. I was about to the doorway, so I peered in.

Mrs. Jenson and Mell were standing in the middle of the room. Mell had her back to me and Mrs. Jenson was too focused on Mell to notice me. I involuntarily took a step back. It wasn't that they were there, I figured it was just part of the dream. It was what Mell looked like. She looked about the same, as always. A few cuts and bruises now, but otherwise the same. That is if you don't count the wings that flowed off her back. Her hair covered where the wings were attached to her body, but I was certain that they were real. The design on them basically looked like twigs.

'You know very well what you were supposed to do. You were supposed to make sure that this would not happen.

You were supposed to make sure the area was secure before you came here. Actually, you were not supposed to come here at all. You should be at Skoufyceol's,' Mrs. Jenson spoke in an icy tone I had never heard before another shock because I have had to see her so many times, I had heard just about every tone possible, or so I thought.

Again, I heard the name Skoufyceol's and I was dying to know just what it was.

'You know just as well as I do, that was impossible at the time,' Mell had as much ice in her voice as Mrs. Jenson's did.

'No. It was not impossible, you are just too lazy to think of any other options.' Mell went rigid.

'Don't you dare say I was too lazy! You know just as well as I do that it was not that simple. That even if I made sure the area was secure, they would have found away. They always do. And anyway, she is alive, that is all that matters.'

'Yes, she is alive barely, however, if you had done what you were supposed to, you wouldn't even have to worry about that. If I was her

Protector this wouldn't of- happened, and she'd be at Skoufyceol's.'

'But you aren't her Protector, I am,' She held up her left wrist, and the same tattoo was on it. It gave off a faint glow. I looked at mine, it was also glowing. 'Now, if you will excuse me, I am going to check my Charge.' Her voice was full of ice, and I was shocked. Mell was never disrespectful to anyone, let alone a teacher.

I went back to my room after that. I had heard enough and something in the back of my mind was telling me that I was her Charge and that I should get back to my room, before her. I had just crept into my room and sat on the bed; afraid I was going to pass out when Mell walked in.

‘Oh, good, you’re awake. How are you feeling?’ I stared at her. This is the person who just yelled at our teacher? She was looking at me with genuine concern.

‘Fine. A little sore.’ She laughed, and I couldn’t shake the feeling that something was different about her. She looked exactly the same.

Same dress-another shock, Mell doesn’t usually wear dresses, but this one was super cute, so I understood why she was wearing it-same hair, the same everything, but still, something was different.

Part: 10

‘I’ll bet. You had us very worried. But, I’m glad to see you are okay.’ She brushed some hair out of her face, and I knew what was bothering me. Her tattoo wasn’t there.

‘Who... who are you?’ I stuttered out.

‘I’m Sarceeala, silly.’ She laughed, but I could tell she was nervous, or something.

‘No, you’re not. Where is your tattoo?’ I asked, courage rising inside of me. All of a sudden, the impostor looked deadly and worried.

‘What...? How...!’

...?...

You aren’t supposed to know!’ She shouted; her voice distorted with rage. Suddenly, hazel eyes turned into a cat-like green. Her wavy chestnut hair into a sleek, straight black. She gave me a feral smile.

She shot at me and threw me into the chest. Clothes burst out. She came to me again-man she was fast-but was thrown back, just before she reached me. I had closed my eyes, bracing for another attack, but opened them when I heard the impostor shriek. Mell-the real one-was standing in front of me, her tattoo was glowing brighter than before.

I looked at my wrist and saw it was also glowing so bright that it could have lit the entire room.

The impostor and Mell were fighting again and I noticed her hair was changing back. Suddenly, the two stopped fighting and appeared to be at a stalemate. I couldn't tell who was who. The impostor changed back into Mell. They looked at each other, then at me.

'Taylor,' they both spoke at the same time, and I had no idea which was the real Mell, they both had tattoos this time. 'Don't listen to her. I'm the real Mell.'

I stared at them both, sure that there was some way to tell the two apart, there wasn't. One of them came close to me. Then the other jumped from behind and somehow got behind me. She drew a knife to my throat and changed back into the impostor.

'Listen to me. I'm going to walk out of here with the princess and you are not going to try and stop me.' Her voice changed. It now seemed wild and crazy. Mell looked at me helplessly. I started searching for something I could use to my advantage.

My eyes stopped on the jug of water, and I remembered my other daydream. I figured that if it worked once in a dream, then it should work again.

I mentally yelled at the water to attack her. I to look as nonchalant as possible, and apparently, it worked. Water came hurtling towards the impostor. It hit her with such force she flew into the wall. Not wanting to miss the opportunity, in one fluid motion, I spun around, shooting all of the water at her. Without hesitating, I froze it. But, for some reason, there were at least three times as much water than there should have been in the jug. But it didn't matter, her head was the only thing that didn't have some ice on it, so we were safe.

'But you're not supposed to... There is no way... Who are you?' The impostor was yelling at us. Just then Mrs. Jenson strode in a worried expression on her face.

'Sarceeala, I have just received word that Ailina has...' she just noticed the impostor, Ailina apparently, and then stared at me and Mell.

‘Thank you, but you probably could have told me earlier,’ Mell said dryly. Mrs. Jenson was still staring at Ailina.

‘How...?’

‘That is what I want to know too. Taylor, how did you know what you could do with the water?’

‘Well, from that daydream I told you about or was going to. I figured that if I could do it once in a dream,’ I shrugged. ‘I mean, there is no way that this isn’t a dream. Oh, you are going to be so happy you are in one of my daydreams for once, although it is kind of creepy to have you in here Mrs. Jenson, I mean no offense to you, but you are my teacher.’

‘You mean I never was before?’ She didn’t look disappointed, just worried, and I saw her and Mrs. Jenson exchange a worried look. I shook my head.

‘No, but you were always so upset when you weren’t.’

‘But what about that daydream you had the other day when you said you felt my presence?’ I shook my head again.

‘No, it didn’t really feel like you, but you were so upset that I said it was. What?’ Mrs. Jenson stepped forward.

‘Taylor, I don’t know how to put this gently, but this isn’t a dream. This is real.’

‘No, it can’t be. There is no such thing as, well, whatever it is I just did. People don’t have wings. They just don’t.’ I refused to listen to what they were saying.

‘It’s true, Tay. This is real.’

‘But... No, this isn’t real. The bell will ring soon, or you’ll ask me some questions, and I’ll wake up. I know I will.’ But the thing was, I knew I wouldn’t. I just couldn’t accept it yet.

‘Taylor, I know this might be hard for you to understand, but the world you thought you knew just isn’t the same.’ Mrs. Jenson put her hand on my shoulder and I winced. The pain in my side was back with vengeance.

I suddenly took a few steps back, realizing something. I had never felt pain in any dream before. In all the dreams I've ever had, no matter what happened, I was never hurt. Not once. In fact, I think that it is impossible.

'T-this is real, isn't it?' I said. They both nodded.

'Taylor, are you okay?' I was about to answer, when, for the second time in my life, I fainted.

The first thing I saw when I regained consciousness was Mell and Mrs. Jenson. I gave them a meek smile but said nothing. I sat up and saw that Ailina had been removed from the wall.

'I'm glad to see you are awake. You made us both very worried.' Mrs. Jenson said, returning my smile.

'Well, if we had eased her gently into this as I suggested, we would have had no need to be worried.'

'Do not blame this on me. We had no choice but to tell her like that. If there was another option- I would have taken it.'

'There was another option. There always is, remember who taught me that?'

'Guys, please, you don't need to fight. I'm fine, and so are you two, so I don't see what the big deal is. I just was overwhelmed and got a little dizzy. It was nothing.' I tried to say, but all that came out was 'guys,' but they understood.

'She's right, and I think she also deserves an explanation, don't you?' Mell said as she handed me a glass of water, which I hastily gulped down.

'I think that is fair.' Mrs. Jenson turned to me. 'That is if you think you are up to hear it?' I nodded, happy to finally get some answers.

'Okay, what do you want to know?'

'Everything, where are we? Who are you guys? What is the tattoo? What is Skoufyceol's?' The last question escaped my lips before I realized what I had said.

'How do you know about Skoufyceol's?'

‘Oh, um, well, when I first woke up, I wanted some answers. So, I kind of, um, went exploring, and, um, overheard you guys arguing about it.’ I gave them a very sheepish smile and felt absolutely embarrassed. But not as embarrassed as Mell and Mrs. Jenson.

‘You heard that?’ Mrs. Jenson asked. I nodded. ‘No wonder Ailina was so freaked out.’

‘Anyway, Skoufyceol- is short for Skoufyceol School for the Exceptionally Exceptional, so you can see why everyone has just shortened it to Skoufyceol.

Basically, it is a boarding school for all those who have special powers or aren’t human. It is pretty cool there, a lot better than Adam’s Prep. Though, that doesn’t mean much, because a school of monkeys would be better, no offense Mrs. J.’

‘None took, I was only there for you two.’

‘Okay, so you’ve answered one of my questions, how about these’ gesturing to the tattoos on our wrists-’ what are they?’

‘They’re called Protectors’ Mark. I know nothing fancy, but that’s what they are.’

‘That’s nice, but how about answering what I asked you?’

‘I did.’ I shot her the worst glare I could manage-which says nothing because I was having trouble not laughing. This was so like Mell, answer the question, but only what you asked, even if it is implied.

‘Well, what does it mean and how did I get it?’

‘It symbolizes that you are protected, and you gave it to yourself.’

‘No, I didn’t. I think I would have remembered giving myself a tattoo.’

‘You did. You just don’t realize it. A Protectors’ Mark is given when a person Chooses another to be their Protector.’

‘I understood about half of that.’

‘When you gave me that friendship bracelet, do you remember what you said?’ I shook my head. ‘You said that you trusted me with your life and that you always would. You said that we would protect each other from then on. Without knowing it, you had sealed your fate.’

‘Yeah, well, if that happened in third grade, why did I just get the tattoo, sorry, Protectors’ Mark?’

‘Because, until now, you have had no need to have one. You technically have had it ever since then, but it didn’t show itself until now.’ I still didn’t understand, but I thought that it might be for the best right now.

‘Okay, so besides being protected what does it mean?’

‘That’s it, it is a magical symbol that allows a Charge- you- and their Protector-me-an easy way to see if they are in any danger.

When Mark glows brightly, the danger is near. Of course, that is not always the case, but you will learn more about that at Skoufyceol. You will be spending the rest of the year there.’

Again, I only understood about half of that.

‘Wait... Am I transferring? Is my mom okay with that?’

‘Yes, you are transferring and as for your mom, well, she, um, thinks you ran away.’

‘WHAT! She is going to kill me! What in the world were you thinking when you told her that?’

I was yelling at Mrs. Jenson because she must have been the one to say something to her.

‘We had no other choices. We did what we had to do to keep you safe.’

‘But you could have told her something else, anything else really. What about you, Mell, where does she think you are or did not even bother with that?’

‘She thinks, well, um, right now she, uh, thinks that, um, I’m still there. We made some arrangements.’

‘And you couldn’t do the same for me, because?’

‘We were barely able to cover Sarceeala’s disappearance, let alone your own.’

‘You could have at least tried,’ I grumbled to myself.

‘Believe me, we did, but your mother is very persistent.’

‘Okay, now I have one more question. Why am I going to Skoufyceol?’

‘Because you are a Teliken.’

‘A what?’

‘Teliken... a very powerful magical creature. They-and you-are basically part faerie, part pixie, and part elf.’ Mrs. Jenson said, unfazed by any of this.

‘Like me.’ Mell said. I gave her a quizzical look.

‘I’m a Woodland Elf, I- Mellie know to all as Mell- stand-in at under 4-foot-tall- look like and young girl yet have pointed ears and have a doe rack on my head smooth white skin, of sexy, seductive, desirable, alluring, and inviting covary small horns- feminine doe eyes with large lashes; I have always on an armored fringed gown- in shades of greens- to blend in- in the unforgiven woods, with ribbons hanging of many greenish colors, my defenses for all the dark things this world has to offer is a hardcovered wood bow and sharp sliver arrows with holy angel white feathers - and barefoot.’

‘Yeah right. Just like I’m a, what was it called again? Oh yeah, Teliken, if you were an elf, wouldn’t you have pointed ears?’

‘I do.’ She pushed her hair behind her pointed ears. I stared, mouth open, gaping like an idiot.

‘Oh.’ I turned to Mrs. Jenson. ‘What about you? Are you an elf too?’

‘No. I am what your kind would call a witch. But I like to call my kind by our real name, an Arieon. Human names are so barbaric.

Speaking of which, do not refer to me by that horrid human name any longer, I cannot stand it. Call me Ardelia.’

‘No way. Prove it.’ She waved her hands and sparks flew. The water pitcher rose off of the table and came over to where I and my glass were. The water poured into my almost empty glass. Again, I could only stare.

‘Now, do you have any other questions?’ I nodded.

‘Those guys that were chasing us, what are they and why were they chasing us?’ I asked, afraid of the answer. Mell and Ardelia exchanged a nervous look.

‘The people you encountered are-were-members of a clan known as Creperum, which is Latin for darkness. They are also Dialons, a powerful creature that is skilled in both disguises and mind control. They were after you because that was their assignment, to capture you and bring you to the Creperum.’

‘Why?’

‘Your parents-your real parents-are at a very powerful place in the Teliken community. Capturing you would ultimately bring them to their downfall.’

‘What do you mean my real parents?’

‘You did not actually think that the people who raised you are Teliken, did you? No, while they did raise you, they have no connection to the Teliken race, besides you. Your father wanted you to have a normal life, without worrying about this world, so he managed to get a hold of the names of a husband and wife who he thought would be a good family for you.’

‘But I’ve seen my birth certificate.’

‘Your father managed to, shall we say, convince the couple that you were their daughter. They looked enough like you so that in the future you would not question the relationship between you and them. Your father forged a birth certificate and everything else you would need to live a humans’ life.’

‘I’m sorry, Tay, I know this is a lot for you to take in. But we must leave soon. If you are ready, I would like to leave as soon as possible.’ Mell said, genuinely concerned, but she was worried about something else.

‘Okay, we can leave now if you want.’

‘Actually,’ Ardelia interjected. ‘I think that it would be best if we spend the night. Let Taylor get her stuff together and rest, she isn’t exactly in the best of conditions.’

‘But we have already spent five days here, any more time wasted is just foolish.’

‘Five days! I have been unconscious for five days?’

‘Off and on, but yes.’ I suddenly felt very dizzy.

‘You know what, I think we should spend the night after all,’ I said feeling like I was going to faint, again.

‘Okay, but tomorrow we are leaving. I’ll pack your stuff Taylor,’ Mellie said, gesturing towards the clothes that were in the chest I flew into the other day. Apparently, they were mine.

‘I’ll let you get some sleep, Taylor, good night girls,’ Ardelia said, leaving the room. I gratefully closed my eyes and let sleep overtake me.

The sun was extremely bright after being underground for the past six days. Mell, Ardelia and I just spent an hour leaving the tunnels. It was about ten-thirty now and I was nearly blind.

‘So, how are we getting to Skoufyceol?’ By now I almost half expected some weird light to teleport us to the school.

Part: 11

‘Cars are not my thing- there like getting shot out of a cannon.’ Mell said gesturing towards a FLYING HORSE AND CARRIAGE that pulled up to the edge of the tunnels.

It was black with tinted windows. The trunk popped open and Mell took the bags I was carrying two duffel bags and a messenger bag. She threw them in the back, then opened the carriage door and gestured for me to get inside.

‘Aren’t you coming?’ I asked Ardelia, who was standing outside of the carriage with a sad look on her face.

‘No, I’m afraid not. I must return to Adam’s Preparatory. It would be too suspicious if all of us just disappeared. Besides, you have no use of me, I did what I needed to. Actually, I was supposed to leave when you woke up, but I felt that I had some responsibility to explain things to you.’

‘Oh, well, I hope I’ll see you again.’

‘As do I. Goodbye, Taylor.’

‘Bye.’ She turned and left, going back into the tunnels.

‘Taylor,’ I turned to Mell, ‘we really should be going, they were expecting us to be there at one.’

‘Okay.’ I got into the carriage now.

I started out of the window until I couldn’t see anything out of it. We must have gone into a tunnel or something. We stayed in that tunnel for almost an hour. When we came out, I couldn’t believe my eyes.

The buildings looked archaic, yet modern. There were five distinct buildings each with their own unique look, yet they all looked the same. A high stone wall surrounded the entire school. It was about twenty feet high. As soon as the car pulled into the campus Mell relaxed.

Behind more cars from the 1920s pulled up... The cars and the carriages beside pulled up to the first building and we got out. A tall exotic woman, with auburn hair, pulled into a bun and golden eyes stepped out of the shade of some trees and greeted us.

‘Ms. Hedsome it is a pleasure to see you again. Ms. Every night I believe this is our first encounter. I am Kelania Endlocke, but you shall call me Headmistress Endlocke while you attend school here, unless otherwise instructed. I hope your journey had no further implications.’ We both shook our heads. ‘Good... Now, if you will follow me, I will show you to your dorm rooms. I am afraid that you two will not be sharing a room. I hope you understand.’ I started to ask why when Mell stopped me.

‘Yes, of course, we understand. Thank you for taking us in so-o late in the year Headmistress Endlocke.’

‘Yes, of course. Now, follow me.’ She led us to the building on the far end. But on the way, we entered the courtyard. I stopped dead in my tracks, staring. I tried to tell myself that it was a coincidence, but I didn’t believe that. I couldn’t because it was the same place as my dream.

‘Taylor, are you okay? Are you daydreaming or something?’ I could only shake my head.

‘I-it... I-is... same.’ Mell understood immediately.

‘Here? Are you sure it wasn’t somewhere else?’ I nodded; it was defiantly the same.

‘Is everything alright?’ Headmistress Endlocke said, but I don’t think she really cared. I snapped out of the trance-like state I was in.

‘Yeah, everything’s fine. I just had a feeling of déjà vu.’

‘Alright, then shall we move on.’ We followed her again. When we stopped again, we were on the third floor of the building. ‘This is your room Sarceeala. Your roommate will be in shortly, classes are almost over. Speaking of which, here is your class schedule, and here is yours, Taylor.’ She handed us to sheets of paper and continued leading me away from Mell.

We walked up to another floor in complete silence. Finally, we stopped at the door. ‘This is your room. Your roommate will also be in shortly to help you get settled. If you need anything else my office is in the main building or you can go to the office in this building. Goodbye.’

I opened the door, not sure what to expect. The room was surprisingly normal. It was large with a bathroom adjoining it. There were two beds, two end-tables, two closets, two desks, a TV, a table and some chairs, a mini-fridge, and a microwave. One bed had nothing on it, but the other was obviously occupied. It was unmade with a pillow on the floor. Clothes were carelessly thrown on top of it. I wondered who my new roommate was as I threw my bags on the other bed.

I finished making my bed. Apparently, Mell gave me everything I would need for a dorm room, including a laptop- and was surfing the web when the door opened.

A girl with straight shoulder-length hair and smoky hazel eyes walked in. She was wearing jeans and a t-shirt with some insignia on it. She sighed and threw her backpack onto her bed. She put the books she was carrying on a desk. She turned around and jumped back, startled to see me.

‘Oh, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to scare you. I was told this was my dorm room. I’m Taylor Every night.’ Her expression changed completely, and she sat down on her bed.

‘Oh yeah, I was told I was getting a roommate. I’m Reina Wenshire. So, what are you? Faerie? Elf? Pixie? I’m a Pixie myself. Which is cool for sneaking around campus.’

‘I’m a Teliken, I think.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘Well, until six days ago I thought I was human, and I just found out that I was a Teliken yesterday. But I could have heard wrong.’

‘I doubt it; you look like a Teliken. Who is your Protector?’ She asked, gesturing towards the Protectors’ Mark on my wrist.

‘Her name is Sarceeala Hedsome. Her dorm room is on the third floor. She’s a Woodland Elf.’

‘Cool. Mine’s Seraina Telenson. She’s a witch.’

‘I thought witches were called Arieans.’

‘I guess... nobody does. Well, except for the Elders. How would you know what the witches’ other name was?’

‘Ardelia told me.’ I wasn’t really sure what to say.

‘Who?’ She couldn’t hide the look of both shock and amazement on her face.

‘Ardelia... well, I don’t know her last name. She explained some things to me yesterday.’

‘No, I know who she is. But do you...’

‘Not really.’ Realizing for the first time just how true that was.

‘She is an extremely powerful Arieon. She is one of the most powerful Elder. You should feel extremely honored she even looked your way, and was alone to talk with you.’

‘Really?’ She nodded.

‘Yeah. But I’m probably overstating things. That’s what happens when your Protector is an Arieon.’ Reina stood up and went over to where my bags were. ‘We should probably start unpacking your stuff.’

‘Yeah... I’d kind of like to know what I brought with me.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘Well, you know how I said that found out I wasn’t human six days ago;’ she nodded. ‘Well, that was kind of forced on me two days ago after I got knocked out by some Dialons. What I mean is that six days ago some Dialons attacked Mell and me. I lost consciousness and when I woke up again, I had a little problem.'

'Define little.'

'Well, apparently someone named Ailina knew something about something-don't ask me what I have no idea and tried to kill me. But she didn't, because I well, froze her to a wall. Then fainted.' This sounded a lot weirder coming from my mouth than when it actually happened.

'You froze her to a wall?'

'She had a knife to my throat! What was I supposed to do? Anyway, after I woke up again Mell and Ardelia-who I thought at the time was my Algebra teacher-explained almost everything. Which reminds me, I forgot to ask who Ailina is.'

'A shape-shifter.' Reina said solemnly.

'You know about her?'

'Yeah everyone does. Well, almost everyone. She's really powerful too. I've heard that she can transform into anyone on the planet, and you'll have no idea who is the real and who is Ailina. She used to work as a spy for some clan, the Winsentra, I believe. But then she betrayed them to the Creperum and was locked away in some jail. Hey, did you just change the subject to avoid finishing?'

'No. That's it. After they explained that stuff to me, I felt a little dizzy, so I went back to sleep and Mell packed for me. That's why I don't know what was packed for me.'

Part: 12

'Oh. Well, I guess we're about to find out.' She went over to my bags and started to unpack.

We were unpacking the second duffel bag. The first had contained everything I would need for school and any book I would want to read. My bathroom stuff and well, anything else I could need. The second bag was full of clothes and shoes. I had stilettos, converse sneakers, flip-flops and any other type of shoes imaginable. T-shirts, tank tops, long sleeves, halters, everything. Designer jeans, skirts, and dresses. I had dozens of dresses, in every color and design possible. Including the white halter dress from my dream.

I wanted to throw it out of the window, burn it and, well, anything else that would get rid of that dress. But I knew that if I did that, I would have to explain it to Reina. And I didn't want her thinking I was any weirder than she already thought I was. I mean, how would I explain that to her? So, I just hung it in the back of my closet and said nothing.

The next day Reina and I were in a little kitchenette that was on the first floor waiting for Mell and Seraina. We had just finished breakfast and were standing away from the girls that were rushing around, trying to get ready.

'Hey, sorry I'm late. I overslept. Again... You must be Taylor. I'm Serina, it's nice to meet you.' A girl with short black hair came running up to us. 'Oh, and Sarcelles told me to tell you she's on her way.'

'What happened Seraina, destroyed your alarm clock again?' It was obvious that Reina was joking.

'You know how much- I hate mornings. Besides, it was so loud. Which reminds me, I owe Sarceeala a new one now too.' She looked a little sheepish as she said that.

'Nice. You really need to work on your self-control.'

'I know.' Just then Mell came rushing into the room.

'Hey sorry, my alarm clock didn't go off-' she shot an accusatory look at Seraina '-and I ended up oversleeping.'

'I said I was sorry! I didn't mean to do it; I was just so tired.'

'Whatever... so, what classes do you have with me, Tay?' She pulled her class schedule out of her bag. I did the same. And actually- that was the first time I had taken a good look at mine.

'Hmm, we have Languages of the Worlds, Drama and of course, our Protector-Charge class.'

'What?'

'I'll explain later, but right now we need to go.' The room had almost completely cleared out.

'Come on. Your first class is right next to mine.' Reina said taking my wrist and dragging me away.

My first class was History of the Teliken, which was about the Teliken race, duh. Okay, I had no idea what it was when I first got there, but the rest of the class was generally nice and filled me in on what was happening. I just have about, oh, three years' worth of catching up to do in homework - actually I just had to read the chapters in the textbook that I missed, but still, it was a lot. My next class was supposed to help me with my powers, but since I didn't really know anything about what I could do besides the whole water manipulation thing-I ended up sitting around half the class.

Next was a self-defense class, which was really cool because I got to learn how to fight, use a bow and arrows and even use some knives-okay I got to learn how to fight and watch people use bows and arrows and knives, but I will use them. Then it was time for lunch. I meet up with Reina, Mell, and Seraina again and ate.

Afterward, Mell and I went to Languages of the Worlds, which was completely and utterly confusing. If I thought Spanish was hard, well this makes that seem like a walk in the park. First, the teacher was talking in some language from some country on a planet that is defiantly not Earth. Then he was speaking in some other language from who knows where. Finally, he switched back to English, after speaking in Chinese, Japanese and God-knows-what-else-enes. Luckily, I wasn't the only one lost, about three-quarters of the class didn't understand it either. I couldn't wait to get out of there, that is until I saw what our next class was like.

Apparently, the Protector-Charge class is all about learning how to use them and I quote 'special bond between the two of you.' It was so not fun. At all. The drama was awesome, we are reading Romeo and Juliet, which is my favorite play.

...Ever.

And finally, I was at my last class of the day: Flying 101. I was especially worried about this class for one reason alone I had no wings! At least, I thought I didn't. My teacher was awesome and taught me how to unfurl my wings-I was really glad the shirt I was wearing had slits cut into it, Mell had really thought of everything. After my fifth try, I managed to get my wings out. It was like they just appeared. They were really pretty, with shades of pink, blue, purple, gold and white all mixing together. Plus, they were the same as every single one of my daydreams.

I was so excited; I would actually get to fly like I could in my daydreams. I imagined myself soaring high above the clouds again. Unfortunately, it wasn't as easy as it was in my daydreams. First, I couldn't figure out how to even start flying. I thought it would come as naturally as in my daydreams, I was wrong. Flapping took some serious Eminence and concentration, two things I don't usually have a lot of. Second, when I finally figured out how to flap, I couldn't figure out how to stay airborne.

Flapping was difficult, but trying to get enough power behind each flap to both to get and keep me in the air was nearly impossible. I could already hear the possibilities to be mocked. But, the thought of the mockery was just what I needed. I managed to rise into the air, and stay there. I tested my ability to stay in the air by changing directions and speed and when I was pretty sure I wasn't going to suddenly drop out of the sky, I started to really fly.

Part: 13

I was nothing like in my daydreams. It was better. Except I could really use some grace. I left the school grounds, flying through clouds like nobody's business. I looked down and saw the highway we took to get to school. I could see cars passing a woman jogging on the side of the road. I could see every detail as if I was right next to them. I've always had good eyesight, but I never dreamed it was that good.

I was so focused on the woman, mesmerized, that I didn't even think about flapping, which was a problem. You know in cartoons when someone will run off the side of a building and hang in the air until they look down? Well, that is a bunch of crap. Because for me, one second I was hovering, the next I was plummeting towards the earth and breakneck speed.

I tried to scream, but the wind had taken my breath away. I tried to think of something I could do to at least slow down my fall. Nothing was coming to my mind. But the ground was coming closer to me. I was going to be roadkill in a few seconds, literally. I tried to clear my mind and focus on flapping my wings, which seemed impossible. Luckily, for me, it wasn't. I managed to start flapping just in time. I returned to the sky, nearly unharmed, and probably scaring a few drivers.

After flying for a few more minutes, I saw someone flying towards me. I felt a tingling sensation on my left arm. I looked down and saw my Protectors' Mark glowing almost as brightly as when Ailina attacked me. I immediately turned around and flew away as fast as I could. I didn't turn to see if they were still following me, I just kept flying.

Finally, I risked a glanced back and saw nothing behind me. My Protectors' Mark wasn't glowing anymore, so I figured I was safe. I turned around to head back to the school, only to find myself completely lost. Actually, I wasn't completely lost. I knew this place, not the location, but the way the wind that was too low for me to feel blew through the trees of this countryside. I knew the way that the rows of wheat looked through the clouds I was above. I knew the lake, with water so clear and inviting. I knew everything about the place that was right underneath me, even though I had never been there in my life, except for my daydreams.

I laughed, in spite of myself. I was lost and had no idea where I was supposed to go now, but I never thought that I'd actually imagine a place that really existed or that I would find it. I flew down to the lake just because I could. I cupped my hands and gathered some water, just for the fun of it. I dropped the water and flew over to the wheat fields. I brushed my hands against the tops of the stalks of wheat, laughing at the novelty of it. Eventually, though, the novelty did wear off, and I realized how late it was getting. And that I was still lost.

I started flying back the way I came, or that I thought I came, looking for something I could recognize. I wandered in the sky for what felt like forever. I began to wonder what time it was and if anyone was looking for me. I was beginning to think I was hopeless and that I'd never find my way back to the school when I saw the jogger again. It wasn't a solid landmark or anything, but it was enough to make me hopeful. I flew back the way the jogger was coming from.

After a few minutes, I could start to make out the school. I flew towards it faster than before, which I thought was impossible. I was coming up at the school when I saw someone else flying. It was Mell. I tried to slow down, but it didn't really go well. I ended up missing her by a few inches and backpedaling in the air. It was probably amusing to someone watching, but to me, it was downright embarrassing. I saw Mell laughing and I just glared at her as she flew closer.

'Shut up.' I said, still glaring.

'I didn't say anything.' She said holding up her hands.

'Whatever. Then don't say anything.' She nodded. I could tell she wanted to ask where I was, but for some reason, it wasn't.

We entered the school and flew to where Mrs. Lenning, the teacher, and a faerie, was standing. 'Where have you been, Ms. Evernight?'

So that's why Mell didn't ask, she knew how much I hated repeating myself, so she spared me from saying- it twice in a few minutes. 'I got lost.'

‘Obviously- would you care to tell me why you left school grounds?’ I shrugged.

‘I didn’t think it was that big of a deal. I’m sorry, it won’t happen again.’

‘Let’s hope not. You show a lot of potentials, I don’t want you to ruin it, or prove me wrong. Now I believe some of your friends are wondering what happened to you, run along.’ I nodded and left with Mell.

‘What didn’t you tell her?’ She asked when we were out of Mrs. Lenning’s hearing.

‘What do you mean?’ I asked innocently.

‘Don’t give me that. You know, you really suck at lying. And I know that you weren’t giving the whole story. You never act like that, unless your hiding something.’

‘I don’t suck at lying!’ I said defensively. She raised an eyebrow.

Sighing, I told her what happened.

‘You... what?! How did I not know about this!?’ She was asking herself more than me. I just shrugged.

‘It doesn’t matter really, I’m fine.’

‘I don’t like this, at all.’

‘Join the club, but we can’t really do anything about it.’

‘That’s what worries me.’ She said going into her room. ‘Night, Tay.’

‘Night!’ I said going to my room, wondering why Mell didn’t know I was in trouble earlier, and what that meant.

The farthest side of the campus was completely engulfed in woods, that’s where I was going. The night before Mell, Reina and Seraina explained what was happening. Every so often, the teachers would set up a Battle, to test the abilities of the students, both in self-defense and power use. We would be put into teams and try to capture the other entire team or their base. I was still really confused about the whole thing when I went to the woods the next day. I stepped into the woods, thankful to have worn sensible clothes. I started walking away from my team's headquarters, hiding the sound of my footsteps. I wasn't going to be the one to blow it for the team on a stupid mistake.

The entire team meets before for a debriefing. Although, I was still lost on what's going on. I was an offense member, the one trying to capture everyone and the base. So-o, I started to go toward enemy territory. I came to a river and realized just how lost I was. I was contemplating where to go when I heard a twig snap behind me. My body went rigid and I was about to climb a tree when a guy from my team stepped out of the forest.

'Hey, you lost?' I nodded. He laughed, 'Yeah, I thought so. Don't worry I had trouble with my first Battle too. Are you on offense or defense?'

Part: 14

'Um, offense.'

'Cool, I'm on Defense. All you need to do is continue upstream. Just follow the river. Anything else?'

'Yeah, do you have any tips for me?'

'Sure, here's one: Don't get caught. Seriously, just because this is your first Battle doesn't mean anyone will go easy on you, and it's a pain in the butt to have to rescue a person. Here's another: Trust your instincts. If your gut is telling you to run, get away from that place as fast as you can. Finally: Capture as many people as you can. It's always fun to have a newbie capture a ton of people on another team.'

'Thanks.' I turned to leave.

'Oh, and Taylor, use your powers. This isn't just for self-defense.' He turned and went downstream, leaving me trying to figure out what he meant. How in the world did he know my name, and that I have power?

...And what he meant by powers.

I started walking upstream when I had a sudden urge to retreat into the water. Remembering what my teammate said, I let the water engulf me, using my power to do so. And not a moment too soon, either, a bunch of the other team's members burst through the woods. I smiled, somehow knowing they couldn't see me. My only thought at the time was: This is going to be fun. I let the water rise, taking me with it. I will never forget the shock on their faces when I came out of the water. I managed to capture three of the players.

Now, you're probably confused, so I think that it's best if I take a moment to explain just what was going on. First off, we were split into two teams, a blue and a yellow. I was on the blue team. Second, there are two objectives to this Battle, the first: Take the other team's base. The second: Capture as many people on the other team as possible, preferably all of them. When the Battle first started, we were given...well, I didn't really know what it was, but it looked like a silver ball. The ball contained something that allowed you to capture a player in a bubble.

Anyway, the three- I captured stared at me, shocked. The rest of the players ran back into the woods. I would have followed them if I hadn't seen them looking back to make sure I was. I instantly knew it was a trap. I let the water overtake me again and started flowing down the river. Then I remembered where I needed to go and went upstream.

Eventually, I heard voices and I stopped moving. I watched what was going on. The yellow team had ten of my teammates, including the guy who helped me earlier. I was wondering how to help them and not get caught when the players from before came into the clearing.

'How did it go?' the girl who spoke was obviously the team leader.

'We lost three... The Every-night girl is faster than we thought. And she is using the water.'

'Is she...? Well, let's see if she still is.' The girl got up and walked over to the river. I felt confident enough that she couldn't see me, but I wasn't going to take any chances. I got ready to get out of the water and capture her when she knelt to the river. She muttered something and put both hands on the water. It suddenly got very hot and I knew she was using her power. It's now or never, I thought. I sprang out of the water and captured her. Those closest by ran forward trying to attack me, but I had anticipated them. I captured six others and was attacking the rest with water when they started retreating.

'How do I rescue you?' I asked the guy who helped me.

'Use your Conto.'

'My what?'

'It's what you have been using to capture the people with. There is a setting on it that will let you release us.' I took out my Conto and looked for the setting he was talking about. I found it and used it on all of them. They were all released, some seemed a little bitter about being rescued by the newbie.

'Okay, I'm sure they're coming back. What do we do now?'

'You do nothing. We are going to go and finish capturing them.' A tall blond said, obviously bitter.

'I don't think so. Who just freed you and captured the other team's leader? Was it you? I don't think so. I'm going with you.'

'Whatever; let's just go.' She started toward the woods.

'Wait; I have a better idea.'

'And I'm sure we'd all love to hear it.' She wasn't light on sarcasm.

'I could make you a part of the water. Or better yet, the air.' I had no idea where that came from.

'Well then, get to it.' I let my instincts take over. The next thing I-or anyone else-knew, we were in the air. Actually, we were the air. We could still see each other, but no one else could. We floated through the air until we found where the yellow team went. We took out our Contos and hovered above them. I got us out of the air and we started falling towards them. They didn't suspect a thing until it was too late. We captured every member of that team, in record-breaking time.

When I first woke up, I first thought that I was back at my house and that everything was just a dream. Then I saw Reina. I couldn't help but feel a little crushed. It's not that I don't like her, I just wanted to go back to my old life. For things to go back to normal. But that will never happen.

I got up and went to the kitchen. I was scrambling some eggs when Reina walked in. I needed some comfort food and I love scrambled eggs, okay. Without saying anything I added a few more eggs to the pan while she got another plate out. This was sort of our morning routine. If someone had already started making breakfast before the other was up, just make some of the m when they got up.

'Hey... what are you doing up this early?' Reina said looking at the clock. It was a little after six in the morning.

'I woke up and couldn't get back to sleep. Is there something wrong with that?' I asked defensive, I don't handle mornings well.

'No, It's just a little unusual. Especially for a Saturday.' My head shot up and I stared at her.

'Isn't today Monday?' I could have sworn it was.

'Yeah right, is that why you are up so early?' She laughed.

'No, Sorta; are you sure it's Saturday?' She nodded. 'But I could have sworn it was Monday.'

She shook her head. 'It is definitely Saturday. Why did you even think that today's Monday?'

'Because of the... never mind. I guess I just had a really vivid dream last night.' I said hoping she wouldn't ask any more questions. She didn't, I could tell she wanted to, but she just kept whatever she was thinking to herself.

I finished making the eggs and loaded our plates full of them. We went up to our room and ate in silence. When we finished Reina cleaned up. I went over to my side of the room and started surfing the web. We weren't really doing anything when Seraina and Mell came into our room.

'Hey, guys what's up?' I asked, uninterested.

'Well, actually something.' Mell said. I looked up, wondering what they were talking about.

'What do you mean?'

'Well, every now and then the school hosts a Battle. Where you have...'

'Where you have to either capture the other team or their base?' I said, remembering my dream, that I thought wasn't a dream. Everybody looked shocked, but I was used to it by now. Mell nodded, then looked at Reina.

'Don't look at me. I didn't say a thing. Although, now it makes sense why you thought today was Monday.'

'You mean it's real?!' I couldn't believe what was happening. I thought the strange things would stop when I came here, but I was wrong.

'Yes; where did you hear about it?'

‘My dream.’ I began to tell them about my dream. When I finished the looks, I got were a range of shocked, awed and worried.

‘Taylor,’ I recognized Mell’s tone. It was the ‘I’m going to tell you something really crazy but important’ tone. ‘I think your dream was a glimpse into the future. Actually, I think that most of your daydreams are too.’

‘You aren’t including them,’ I was hoping she wasn’t including the nightmare I had.

‘Yes; I am.’ I didn’t know what to do. So, I did the thing I was getting really good at. I fainted. Again.

This time when I woke up, I was in my bed. I could hear Mell and Reina arguing about taking me to the infirmary. Seraina was sitting on Reina’s bed. She was obviously in charge of making sure I was okay, but she seemed more interested in the conversation than me.

‘As I said, I could just send her to the nurse to make sure she’s okay,’ Seraina said, not even looking at me. She wasn’t very good at her job.

‘No! I’d rather not have my Charge end up like my alarm clock,’ Mell said, obviously alarmed.

Finally, I fake coughed, to get their attention. ‘I’m glad you guys are so concerned about me, but unfortunately for you, I’m fine.’

‘Yes; very unfortunate.’ Mell said sarcastically. She glared at Seraina, who smiled sheepishly, obviously embarrassed. ‘Are you sure you’re, all right?’

‘Yeah, just a little tired of fainting all of the time.’ I said, dryly.

‘Well, I think we better go talk to the nurse. Make sure you are okay and see if you should take part in today’s Battle.’ I nodded and let Mell lead me to the nurses.

When we get to the nurse’s building, I see something that makes me scream, and nearly faint again. Actually, it was someone. I had never actually met him before, but I still knew him. I knew him from a daydream I had almost a year ago.

I grabbed my bag and ran out the door. And right into a boy about to knock. He was about my age, but several inches taller. He had wavy auburn hair and pale green eyes.

‘Taylor Ever night?’ He said.

‘Yes, why do you want to know?’ I asked, wondering how he knew my name. In response, he held up an envelope.

‘This is for you.’ He said, handing it to me. I looked at it for a minute and when I looked back up, he was gone. Inside the envelope was an invitation to a ball.

I stared at the boy. Wondering if what had happened in my dream would happen again. I wanted to chase him down and ask him why I met him in my daydream, but I couldn’t do that. Not with Mell here. I went with her to the nurse to see if I should take part in the Battle instead.

Apparently, fainting does not qualify as a suitable reason to miss the Battle - much to Mell’s amazement. Because I ended up right back where I was in my dream. But the results were different. Very different. I couldn’t fade into the air or the water. Heck, I could barely control the water. Scratch that. I couldn’t control it at all. And I got captured, about four different times. And we lost. Big time - It ended up being a miserable failure on all counts.

I trudged back into my dorm room, after getting my butt kicked in every way, shape, and form. I walked in and landed face down on my comforter. All I needed now was some ice. And maybe a chance to redo today, with the results I got in my dream. I got neither.

Instead, I got a knock on my door. I didn’t bother getting up. I figured that if it was really important, they’d just walk in, or say something. They didn’t. Instead, they slid something under the door. I turned on my side to look at it. And promptly went back to my stomach. I had never been this sore in my life. It hurt to move. It hurt not to move. But mostly, it hurt to breathe.

Eventually, the pain was bearable enough for me to get up. I walked over to the door and picked up what was slid underneath. It was an envelope, with my name on it. I tore it open, read and nearly had a heart attack.

Taylor Ever night, we would like to cordially invite you to the Thousand Bell Ball as our guest of honor. As our newest student, it would be an honor to be able to celebrate your talents. This will take place on the thirteenth of the month starting at 6 P.M sharp. Dinner is included. This is a black-tie affair, so please dress appropriately. Please respond as soon as you are able to. We hope to see you there.

As soon as I finish reading, I dropped the invitation. It is the exact same one as the one from my old daydream.

Okay, first let me apologize, for taking so long to finish this chapter. I had writer's block, then I just didn't bother to write it anymore. Second, let me say that I know this chapter is really long; you could say I was trying to compensate for taking so long, but really, a lot just HAD to happen in this chapter. So, without any further ado, let me present to you!

Chapter 11

I wanted nothing more than to figure out why all of this was happening to me. It wasn't normal. Nothing in my life was normal anymore. Heck, I wasn't even human anymore. Although, technically, I guess I was never human. But at least before I had thought I was human- I thought I was normal. Now I couldn't even pretend I was human; not when every time I looked in the mirror, I saw a giant pair of freaking wings.

I know that I was all excited and everything when I first found out, but now the novelty and excitement were starting to wear off, and I was starting to see them for what they really were: a big, fat pain in the butt. Plus, I finally realized how life-changing all of this crap was. I could never go back to the place that I called home. I'd never get to see the people I called my parents for the first fifteen years of my life- not that that was terrible, but still, it hurts a little. Add the fact that, not only am I adopted, but I'm also a freak with wings, and it tends to be at least a little traumatic.

At least, it certainly seems like it would be. It felt like it was.

Hopefully, that would be considered enough of an excuse for me to crumple into a heap on my bed, bawling after that stupid invitation fluttered to the ground. Sure, I've cried before. I cried when my grandma- at least I thought she was my grandma at the time- died when I was nine. I cried that time when I was five and my hand was crushed by a door, breaking two fingers and severely bruising the rest of my hand. I've cried several times in my life, but I've always had a good reason to. Although, I guess everything that had been happening to me- being yanked away from my family and being thrown into, well, another world- did qualify as a good reason, and if it didn't, then this world was even more screwed up than my old one.

It was at about that moment that Reina decided it would be a good time to walk in. I can only imagine what I must have looked like; curled into a little ball at the end of my bed, bawling my eyes out with what probably looked like a small note on the floor in front of me. She must have taken one look at the scene in front of her, dropped whatever it was that she had been holding, and immediately ran over to me, crouching in front of me. She started rubbing my back and muttering something that I couldn't understand. Although, I had the sneaking suspicion that she wasn't exactly speaking English. Not that it really mattered, I probably wouldn't be able to understand her if she was; I was crying too hard to hear anything besides my sobs.

'What's wrong?' She asked when I had finally calmed down enough that I'd most likely be able to form a coherent sentence. I would have been able to, too, if it weren't for the stupid hiccups that I would get after every single stinking time I'd cry.

'What's- hiccup- wrong? What's right- hiccup? My life has been- hiccup- become a bad sci-fi movie that would- hiccup- be on Lifetime!' I yelled, followed by an attack of hiccups and coughing. To my surprise, Reina started laughing.

'What?' I asked, wondering if I should be offended or not.

'You,' she said. That would be a yes; I should be offended, apparently.

'What- hiccup's that supposed to mean?' I asked with as much dignity as I could manage - which really wasn't a lot.

'What you said; It's so true... although, I really don't think that they'd put a sci-fi movie on the Lifetime network.'

I let out a shallow laugh. 'No, just movies about girls getting pregnant at ten, finding out your dating-slash-married to a serial killer, and then finding out you were stolen at birth and actually belong in some faraway land; all in the same movie,' I said. We looked at each other for a moment and then burst into hysterical fits of laughter, followed by Reina snorting, which resulted in us laughing even harder. When we finally calmed down a little, the tears that were streaming down my face were from lack of breath. I don't know why either of us found that so funny, but it felt really good to laugh like that again. I couldn't remember the last time I had laughed that hard - it must have been at least several months, maybe even more.

After I managed to catch my breath, I just kind of sat there, not really sure what I was supposed to do now. Almost unconsciously, I picked up my invitation and read it over again. Reina just stared at it with her mouth hanging open. She seemed to be in complete shock.

‘Taylor?’ she finally managed to say.

‘What?’ With the ways she was staring, I was starting to wonder just what it was that I was holding.

‘What is that?’ Her voice was shallow, almost timid. Instead of explaining, I simply shrugged and handed her the paper. She read it over quickly, her mouth dropping open more and more with each passing sentence until it got to the point that I actually thought that her mouth was going to come unhinged and hit the floor.

‘Where did you get this?’ When she said it, it came out as a squeak.

‘Someone- slid it under the door; why?’

‘Why? Do you even know what this is?’

‘Um... an invitation?’ I said, ignoring her glare for my smart-aleck comment. ‘No, I don’t really know what it is.’

‘This is an invitation to the Thousand Bell Ball!’

‘Yeah, I got that much from the invitation,’ I said, dryly.

‘Do you realize what that is?’

‘A dance?’

‘It’s only the most important ball that is held here! The king and queen even come, and you are the guest of honor!’

‘King and queen?’

‘Yeah, of most of the Telikens, and actually, most others that don’t belong to certain clans,’ she said. I just stared at her blankly.

‘So, why am I invited then? I’m not exactly the most ‘talented’ person here, as the invite said.’

‘How am I supposed to know? I was hoping you could tell me.’

‘Probably not; think I’m not going.’

‘Ha! Good one,’ she said, laughing.

‘I’m not joking.’

‘Oh, you are going. There is no way you are going to pass up that chance.’

‘There’s one little problem, Reina: I. Don’t. Dance. As in, I don’t know-how. Not the kind of stuff that would be at a ‘ball’.’

‘I’ll help you.’

‘No, I have a better idea: I won’t go.’

‘You will. I’ll make sure of it.’

‘I refuse to make a fool of myself.’

‘I’ll make sure you don’t.’

‘And just how do you plan on doing that?’ I asked. Reina just smiled.

‘You’ll see.’

I thought that that was the end of the conversation. I went on with life as usual and never mentioned the ball again. Neither did Reina. A week had passed and by then I figured that she forgot, or at least, I hoped she had.

Unfortunately, that wasn’t the case.

‘Wake up!’ Reina yelled, hitting me with a pillow.

‘No, I’m sleeping.’

‘Not anymore,’ she said, pulling my comforter off of me and hitting me again. I sat up and glared at her.

‘Is this really necessary?’

‘Yes... Do you know what today is?’

‘Saturday; the day I sleep in. Which is what I’m going to continue doing now if you don’t mind?’

‘I do mind, and it isn’t just a Saturday, it’s the thirteenth.’

‘So?’

‘So, you can’t sleep the day away. It’s already one, you have to get ready.’

‘No, I have to sleep. Good night. Oh, and if you hit me with that pillow one more time, I’m going to kill you.’

‘I don’t care; you have to wake up.’

‘No, I don’t. Let me sleep.’

‘Not a chance,’ she said, and then proceeded to beat me with the pillow.

‘Fine; I give up!’ I yelled, throwing the covers that Reina hadn’t already stolen from me off. Reina just smiled, not even bothering to get rid of the pillow.

‘Excellent, now go get ready,’ she said, whacking me with that cursed pillow one more time.

‘I’m going! Was that really necessary?’

‘No, but it is fun.’

I glared at her as I went into the bathroom. By the time I finished showering and getting ready for the day, it was almost four. I walked back into our room; my hair was still damp and hanging in rat tails.

‘What do you want me to do?’ I asked through gritted teeth. I was still mad about this, but I wasn’t going to push Reina. I was certain that that pillow wasn’t filled with nice soft feathers. A bunch of rocks, maybe, or possibly a pound of bricks, but whatever was in, it hurt.

‘Sit here,’ she said, pointing to a chair that was moved to the middle of the room. ‘Oh, and don’t complain.’

‘What are you going to do?’ I asked, warily.

‘Your hair, makeup, and anything else that I feel like,’ she said, cheerfully.

Instead of going to the chair, I walked right back into the bathroom and grabbed a bottle that was on my side of the sink. ‘Well, if you’re going to be doing my hair, then I think that you’re going to need this,’ I said, handing her my most beloved bottle of detangling spray.

‘I don’t think I’ll need that; your hair is still wet,’ she said with a laugh. I shrugged my shoulders and sat in the chair, taking the bottle with me anyways. Reina got the brush through my hair roughly twice before the first brush broke in half and the second one was lost in my thick, blonde mess- don’t get me wrong, I love my hair, but it is a major pain in the butt- and she started cursing in several languages. I committed some of what she was saying to memory and offered her the bottle with a smirk.

‘Do I need to say it?’ I asked.

‘If you do, you’re going to end up like the first brush,’ she growled, taking the bottle. I kept my mouth shut. After using about half of the bottle- which, to her credit, it usually takes about three-fourths of it when I use it- my hair was brushed and pulled into an elaborate up-do that I’d never be able to get out of my head. I had to have had at least a thousand bobby pins in my hair, and only a small section on either side of my face was not pulled back. My makeup was done in a way that managed to make my dark blue eyes look even bluer and made me look completely stunning.

‘Okay, now it’s time for your dress,’ she said, bouncing up and down. ‘I have to say, I’m in love with whoever packed for you, I want to borrow that magenta gown you have some time.’

I nodded, my eyes widening as she pulled out the dress, she wanted me to wear and then widening even more when I saw the shoes. The dress was stunning; it was several shades of blue, going from a dark midnight blue at the bodice to a pale, almost translucent blue at the bottom where it brushes the floor.

The sleeves were sheer, and wrapped around the top of the dress, connecting them to the bodice making it appear to be a frosted dark blue. There was no way I was going to be able to pull it off. Especially not if she expected me to wear the five-inch silver stilettos she was holding in her other hand.

‘Are you trying to kill me?’ I cried. ‘There is no way I can walk in those shoes!’

‘Payback for the brush,’ she said with a smirk.

‘I am going to die,’ I muttered.

‘Just shut up and get dressed.’

I obeyed, slipping into the dress and shoes. The dress seemed to be made for me specifically, forming a to my body perfectly, creating a shape I normally would never be able to have. The shoes actually weren’t that bad either, walking in them was just about impossible, but they were cute, at least. I walked- okay, I stumbled- back into the room to see Reina in a knee-length, gray dress and a pair of black flats.

‘Why is it you get a pair of flats and I’m stuck in these death traps?’ I asked, tripping over myself once again.

‘Because no one is going to see me,’ she said with a wink before disappearing completely from view.

‘What the heck?’ I cried, before realizing that she was right in front of my face; although, she was about the size of a toothpick now. I stared at her, transfixed by her sudden transformation.

‘What? You didn’t think I got into Skoufyceol only because of my wit and good looks, did you?’ she said, landing on my shoulder. I looked over and I could just barely see her translucent wings for the first time ever. ‘My dad’s a pixie, therefore, I’m a half-pixie, and I’m going to make sure you don’t make a complete fool of yourself tonight.’

‘Gee, thanks,’ I said dryly.

‘No problem, now we should go before we’re late. I don’t know what it was like at your old school, but here, there is no such thing as ‘fashionably late’.’

I managed to find the ballroom- this school even had a ballroom?!- just in time. Reina was right: there was no ‘fashionably late’ here.

Everyone was on time and dressed just as- if not more- regally than I was. A guard stood at each door and for the first time, I started to wonder about how Reina was going to be able to get in. She was somehow undetected when I entered the ballroom and she kept whispering commands to me - most of which was to find my seat.

But, as soon as I set foot in the room, I was frozen in awe. The decorations were incredible, and I immediately understood the ball's name. Bells and chimes were hung everywhere, and candles were lit to make it look even more wonderful. Large tables were set up around what I assumed would be the dance floor. The table at the back- or maybe it was the head- of the room had only three chairs and Reina said that it was for the royal family.

'Yoo-hoo! Earth to Taylor?' Reina yelled into my ear, snapping me out of my trance. 'I know it's pretty and all, but the royal family is going to be arriving any minute now and you really need to find your seat.'

I did as I was told and found my seat not a moment too soon. Almost as soon as I sit down the double doors leading to the ballroom- which had been closed after everyone else entered- opened and three people walked in. It was easy to tell who they were just from the way they carried themselves, although the guy announcing that the king, queen, and princess had just entered did quell any doubts. Everyone stood and bowed so I mirrored them, but I was a little later than everyone else, so I probably looked ridiculous. Nobody seemed to notice, and the royal family began to walk towards their seats. As they passed by me, I couldn't shake the feeling that they looked very familiar, but I couldn't quite place it.

The Royals took their seats, and so did the rest of us. Food was served shortly afterward and then the dancing began. I avoided it at all costs; staying back by my table and saying, that my feet were sore- which, mind you, they were killing me- whenever anyone asked me to dance, which luckily only happened once. Mostly, I watched the royals dance. I couldn't shake the feeling that they looked really familiar, but I still couldn't place how it would be that I knew them.

'Hello, Taylor,' I heard from behind me while I was watching some of the dancers. I spun around and came face to face with the queen. I gasped as I finally realized why they were so familiar. I could help but stare into her blue eyes- the same exact blue as mine. I couldn't believe I hadn't realized it before; I was the spitting image of the queen. I'm sure that my mouth dropped open and everything when I realized this. The king walked up behind his wife- the princess following closely by, inspecting her manicure- and smiled down at me.

'Bow,' Reina whispered hoarsely. I bowed stiffly, but couldn't take my eyes off of the queen.

'Taylor, dear, I think it's time we explained some things to you,' she said.

‘You can come too, Reina,’ the king said. Reina gasped. I nodded and followed them out of the room in a trance-like state.

Today was the day, the day that caused my ending. Today was also the day that Lexy and Naddalin broke up and somehow, I finally found the courage to go over and talk to him. It was the end of the sixth period and I was in the hallway when I walked over to Naddalin, who was by his locker.

‘Hi.’ I said softly.

‘Uh, hi?’ he replied, shutting his locker and turning around to face me. ‘Anything I can do for you?’ Naddalin looked me up and down.

Before, as I could respond, Lexy strutted over to us and wrapped her arms around Naddalin, giving him a quick peck on the lips. I was shocked, I mean, I thought they broke up! Lexy turned her head and finally noticed me standing there.

‘Oh hey, I know you!’ She exclaimed, lifting up my chin to get a better look at me. ‘You’re that little emo girl that’s going out with Ben, right?’

I opened up my mouth to correct her when I heard a voice say, ‘Ew, gross!’ It was Ben’s.

He popped up from somewhere and walked over to us.

‘Why would I want to go out with that little runt for?’

People said that he and Lexy were like sisters, since he had green eyes just like her, only darker and he had the same dark black hair, but it was in a short mop head sort of way. He also had milky pale skin, which sometimes turned red when he spoke, so it made him look like he was blushing, even when he wasn’t.

‘We’re not really going out, we’re just friends.’ I clarified.

‘I’m so not your friend, alright? Get that clear!’ Ben cried.

‘But, how can you say that, Ben? We’ve been best friends since we could talk!’

‘Well, that’s all over now, ya hear?’

I felt fresh tears roll down my cheeks.

‘Aw, Ben, now look what you’ve done, you made the poor little girl cry!’ Lexy joked.

All three of them laughed in my face and soon some other people joined in. I felt so humiliated that I ran into the bathroom and into the biggest stall. There I slid down the wall and hid my face in my hands, soaking them with my tears.

Why? Why does this always happen to me? What did I ever do to deserve all this? I thought to myself.

I didn’t know the answer to all those questions, but I did know how to end it all. I wiped all my tears away then walked over to the sinks, over them were little mirrors. I took one look at them and pictured Ben’s face in it with a sneer on his face.

‘Do it, I dare ya!’ he seemed to be saying to me.

I closed my eyes and punched it as hard as I could be shattering the mirror and sending tiny pieces of glass everywhere. Immediately, I felt pain shot through my soft skin and felt blood trickling down my arm and onto the clean, white floor. Then, I picked up the biggest shard of glass from the ground and sliced it across my veins. I closed my eyes and dropped to the ground as soon as I heard loud clicking footsteps.

I felt so happy inside then, I felt nothing for a while, but then as I was brought back to life, I felt it again. The pain, the agony, the torture. No, I didn’t die, I survived it since the cut wasn’t too deep. After that people stopped picking on me, instead they just stared at me with hate in their eyes. They were all mad at me because I ruined their perfect school rep.

After that, it all went downhill, or so I thought. Ariana decided to send me to a therapist. I protested, but she said it was the only way to fix this mess and ensure that I would never try something like that ever again. I would be meeting her at nine-thirty tomorrow, which means no school for me.

Ariana drove me to the place and then left to get to her job. I sighed and walked up the steps and into the room. That’s where I met her, my therapist. She was nice but different from other adults. She was all so peppy and happy as if nothing could get her down. Her name was Emmailia, I’ve never heard of a name like that. Emmailia had long black hair and a small fairy-like face, with a slim body and a sweet voice.

I wonder what she’ll think of me. I thought to myself.

I sighed again and walked forward.

‘Hello there, Keysaha,’ she said when she saw me. ‘Take a seat.’

I sat down on a black leather love seat across from the red one that she was seated at and stared down at my hands. I had put a skin-tight long-sleeved top and a black hoodie on to hide the bandage on my left wrist, but now as I was sitting in front of Emmailia, I felt like she knew it was there.

‘Now, I understand why you are here but do you?’ She continued.

‘Yes.’ I nodded my head.

‘I hear you’re having problems at school; you want to tell me about that?’

I didn’t know what to say, should I tell her or not? I mean, I don’t know her, and I don’t need her feeling bad for me or anything.

‘Don’t worry, I won’t tell anyone, I’m great at keeping secrets. I won’t tell a soul.’ Emmailia joked, putting her index finger to her red lips.

I sighed and stared down at the ground.

‘Take your time, sweetie, I won’t rush you.’

I smiled a little, she was really nice. Nicer to me than anyone I’ve ever met in Greensburg. She was nice to me as a friend, like Ben used to be. Ben, oh Ben, how you changed! Tears sprung from my eyes and I began sobbing silently.

‘Oh, it’s alright, dear, you don’t need to tell if you don’t wish to.’ Emmailia assured me.

‘I-I hate my life.’ I told her.

Emmailia came over to me and gave me a tight hug, for a while I sat there crying on her shoulder as she stayed still. After a couple of minutes, I stopped and leaned back on the couch. Emmailia went and got me some soda, I drank it and then handed the glass back to her.

‘Alright, then, are you ready to talk now?’ she asked me.

I nodded my head again. I began telling Emmailia about all that’s happened to me since I was eight years old and all the despair, I’ve been through till now. She listened quietly and nodded a few times as if she understood how it felt to be through all that. When I was done, I was close to starting crying again, but I swallowed back my tears.

‘Listen, sweetie, you may think there is no one in this world that is like you, but I know someone that is.’ Emmailia told me.

‘Who?’ I asked curiously.

‘My daughter, she was so much like you that she even did the same thing you tried to.’

I looked up at her and saw Emmailia looking down. She was so young and married? She didn’t look a day over twenty-eight.

‘I know what you’re thinking, how could a girl so young possibly have a child. Well, I’ve had a few problems with my life just like you,’ she said, looking up and into my eyes. ‘Anyway, I have a question for you, Keysaha.’

‘Yes, what is it?’

‘Who are you currently living with?’

‘With my f-’ I stopped in mid-sentence, thinking back to how Ben said he wasn’t my friend anymore. ‘With Ben and his parents.’

‘Why is that? Don’t you live with your parents?’ Emmailia asked softly.

‘No, I don’t know what happened to them.’ I answered her.

‘Well, then, do you enjoy living with Ben?’ Emmailia said Ben’s name as if it were an unusual name, which it was.

‘Well, his parents are really nice, but it’s really hard since Ben is no mean to me now.’

Emmailia’s face broke into a smile and I could see happiness light up in her eyes again.

‘Well, then I have a proposition for you, dear!’ she exclaimed.

‘Would you like to know what it is?’

I nodded my head quickly; I had a feeling that it would be something good just by noticing Emmailia's sudden enthusiasm. 'How would you like to come live with me now?'

'I-I would love to, but I-I don't want to be a bother.' I stuttered.

'Ah, don't worry, it's no big deal! I could always use another hand around the house!' she insisted.

'Well, I guess I could.'

'That's great, I'll pick you up tomorrow with some adoption papers for Ben's parents to sign and we'll be well on our way to California!'

I wondered why Emmailia lived in California if she had a job all the way over here in Pa, but before I could ask, a small redheaded lady came into the room to tell me that Ariana was here to pick me up.

'I'll see you tomorrow, Keysaha!' Emmailia called.

'Bye!' I called back over my shoulder.

Man, I can't wait until tomorrow! I thought

The next day, I quickly took a shower and after putting on my clothes, I went to go pack. I looked at my reflection in the mirror one last time.

Hmm, I look pretty good with no glasses and my hair wet. I thought.

I shook my head, smiling and then walked out of the bathroom. My smile broke and fell when I noticed Ben walking past my room. He stopped for a minute and saw my bag on top of my bed, then up at me. I sighed and looked down, then started walking again. I was about to enter my room when I felt Ben grab my hand.

'Where are you going?' He demanded.

'I-I'm leaving.' I stuttered.

Ben pulled me close to him and brought his face down to mine.

'Why?'

'I'm going to California to go live with Emmalia.'

Ben tightened his grip on my hand and I felt my skin starting to burn, my wound was still not healed as of yet and still really hurt.

'Ow, Ben, you're hurting me!' I cried.

'Don't leave me!' He shouted.

'But, I-I thought you didn't like me.'

Ben cupped my face with one and leaned close to me, his eyes locked on mine.

'I don't, but who should I tease when you're not here?'

'Ben, your' I cut myself off when Ben started leaning closer and closer to me.

'I hate you; I hate you so much Keysaha!' he said.

Usually, I would've felt hurt if Ben was saying all this to me right now, but right now I felt nothing. I was moving away to a new place, to a new life and I don't need something stupid getting in my way. I knew what Ben was trying to do, he's done this before. When I tried to run away one time, he made me believe that he still liked me, but it was all just a ploy.

A stupid plan to get me to stay, so he could humiliate and torture me some more with his friends. I pulled myself away from Ben and slammed the door in his face. Then, I began packing my clothes and everything else that I needed.

After I was sure that everything was packed, I grabbed my bags and headed into the kitchen, where I saw Ben eating some toast. He looked up when he saw me with an angry look on his face, but I just looked the other way.

'Mom, why is Keysaha leaving?' I heard him ask.

'Keysaha is going to California, so she can start her life afresh.' Ariana answered.

'And you're just going to let her go!'

'Yes, we actually think it's good for her.' Emma agreed.

Ding dong the doorbell rang.

‘Oh, that must be Emmailia!’

‘We’ll be back, we just have to go sign the adoption papers.’

Emma and Ariana went to go answer the door and I was left all alone with Ben. I knew what was coming and I tried my best to avoid it, but it was of no use. Ben got up and walked over to me, he raised his hand and my body tensed.

‘Don’t I at least deserve a goodbye kiss?’ he asked.

‘I-’ I cut was cut off by Ben’s lips.

He kissed me hard, but I didn’t kiss him back. I felt nothing for him now. All the love and respect I had for him is now gone and filled with hatred and disgust. I tried biting his lip to get him to stop, but he still didn’t. He finally did when he heard Emmailia’s voice from the other room.

‘I’ve always liked you, Keysaha, but I was afraid to admit it to you or to anyone. I cared more about my rep than I did for you,’ he said. ‘If you stay now, then I’ll never get my punishment, so it’s better if you just go now and never come back!’

I was shocked to hear that I stood frozen when Emmailia came into the kitchen.

‘Ready to go, Keysaha?’ She asked me.

‘Huh? Oh yeah.’ I stammered.

I took one last look at Ben before I left, and I saw his head down, but he picked it up and I saw his face red. And for the first time I knew it wasn’t because he talked, it was because he really meant it. I can’t believe it; I can’t believe Ben actually felt that way about me. And he decides to tell me when I’m leaving! What kind of person does something like that? I blushed as I felt myself forgive him.

I got into Emmailia’s sweet ride, it was a bright red Mustang, which was my dream car. Emmailia got in next to me and turned on the radio.

‘What would you like to dear, sweetie?’ she asked me.

‘Anything is fine.’ I told her.

Emmailia switched through the stations as she drove with one hand, she finally stopped on a song by Metro Station called California. I smiled as I listened and stared out the window.

‘Well, we’re going to be stuck in this car for about twenty-one hours, so that gives us plenty of time to catch up on things. So, you want to tell me what was going on with you and that Ben kid?’

Emmailia and I talked for a while and then I began asking her some questions about her, and I learned a quite lot. I even found out why she lives in California and goes to work so far.

‘Well, you see, Keysaha, I’ve left my daughter in the care of my sister and my agent told me that if I come here, I could get more money,’ she explained. ‘I wasn’t doing so great back in Cali, but now I miss my little girl and I want to get back to her.’

‘Oh. So, what’s your daughter like?’ I questioned.

‘Ah, Petunia’s had a few problems in her life, much like me, but now it’s all good. Now she has some friends who take of her and love her, what else could I ask for?’

‘Hmm, nice, Emmailia and Petunia, that sounds cute.’ I commented.

‘You know what sounds cuter?’

‘No, what?’

‘Emmailia, Petunia, and Keysaha.’

I smiled and leaned over to give her a little hug.

‘You’re going to love her, I promise.’ Emmailia said.

‘I hope so.’ I whispered.

I started out the window and looked at the great view.

I wonder what she’ll be like was my last thought before I drifted off to sleep.

When I woke up again, I yawned and stretched a little, before sitting up in my seat to get a better look at where we were. Well, I wasn’t sure if you were in California yet or not, it was really hard to tell. I turned around and looked for Emmailia, she wasn’t in her seat. I heard a small yawn from the back seat and turned to look over there, and there she was.

‘Hey, girl, how’d ya sleep?’ she asked me.

‘Fine.’ ‘You?’ I answered.

‘Great. But I think we should get back on the road.’

‘How much longer are we going to be here? I’m starving.’

‘A few more hours and don’t worry, while you were sleeping, I got us some food.’

Emmailia stepped over and plopped down on her seat and started the engine. She handed me a burger and a medium-sized soda before she started to drive again. For the remaining hours, I ate, drank, stared out the window some more, and even thought about Ben for a while. Once we finally got to Emmailia’s beautiful mansion, which I still don’t know how she got this much money from, I was so totally pooped! I was so tired, I could hardly stand, Emmailia had to practically drag me into the house.

‘Wait here, I’ll go find Petunia, alright?’ she said to me leaving me in the hall.

I nodded, at least I think I did. I looked around the house a little with my eyes half-open. All of a sudden, I found myself on the ground. I opened my eyes to see a guy right on top of me! I blushed as I realized that I must’ve looked like a total mess in front of such a cute guy like him.

‘Oh, I-I’m so sorry!’ He apologized, rushing to get off of me.

‘It-it’s fine.’ I said.

The guy held out his hand, I took it and he helped me up. I looked to the side and saw two other girls there, I assumed one of them was Petunia. Emmailia walked into the room and looked at all of us together.

‘What’d I miss?’ She asked.

‘Nothing, just the fact that Mac just squashed my new sister!’ Petunia answered.

She practically ran over to me and grabbed me in a huge hug.

‘Hi, my name’s Petunia and you are?’

‘Being hugged to death!’ I checked out.

Petunia released me, and I huffed.

'Yeah, she has the habit of doing that a lot,' the other girl added.

'My name's Susan, by the way.'

Had petunia the same long black hair and brown eyes as her mother and Susan had layered brown hair and the cutest purple eyes?

Part: 15

'Hi, my name is Keysaha.' I said.

'And this is my brother-' Susan was cut off by the guy.

'Mac.' He answered, smiling at me.

Marco held out his hand and I shook it.

'Nice to meet you all.'

'Hey, what happened to your hand?' Mac asked me.

Both girls turned to look at me and at my hand.

'Oh, I-I just...'

'Ah, Keysaha, you must be tired! Petunia, go show Keysaha to your room.'

'Alright, mom!'

Petunia took my hand and then took me upstairs to her room. Her room looked great, it was all decorated with band posters and stickers with celebrities on them. It was like Hollywood Heaven! There was only one bed though, I stared at it and soon enough Petunia had noticed.

'Oh, didn't mom tell you? You're going to be sleeping in my room tonight and then mom's going to buy you a bed tomorrow to put in your new room!' she explained.

'Oh, so where will you be sleeping?' I looked around to see if there was any space for her to sleep; there wasn't.

‘Floor.’

‘Oh, I’m so sorry, I didn’t mean to take your bed away.’ I apologized.

‘Eh, no worries, it’s only for one night.’

‘You sure there’s no room for the both of us?’ I suggested.

‘Yeah, I guess we could.’ She agreed.

For a while, Petunia and I stayed up talking and then came the subject back to my arm, I thought of a way to avoid by asking her a question.

‘So, Mac?’ I asked slowly.

‘Oh, he and his sisters are our neighbors and my best friends,’ Petunia answered. ‘And I’m kind of the reason why he fell on top of you. Sorry.’

‘Hey, it’s alright, I forgive you.’

‘Oh, we’re going to have the best time together!’ Petunia grabbed me into another hug and this time I didn’t really care how tight she was holding on to me.

I’ve never felt this loved one day by a person I just met a few hours ago. I think I’m actually going to like it here, but I really shouldn’t get my hopes up too high.

‘I hope you don’t mind; I listen to music at night, it helps me fall asleep.’

‘No, no, it’s fine.’

I’ve always wanted to do that back at Ben’s house, but Ben didn’t like my music and he didn’t want me disturbing his ‘beauty sleep.’

So, anyway, the two of us both soon fell asleep to ‘About A Girl’ by The Academy Is... When I woke up in the morning, I felt so groggy, so I decided to go take a quick shower and when I was coming back to Petunia’s room - with new clothes on, hair wet, and no glasses - I met Mac again.

‘Hey morning,’ he said, smiling sweetly.

‘Hi...’ I replied sweetly.

He was really cute and seeing him made me feel all flustered up because he was the first guy to ever talk to me in so long! Mac had the skater boy haircut and the emo-like clothes. His eyes were a light shade of blue and his lips were a rosy pink. In one hand was a can of soda and in the other was a small bag of cookies. Watching him eat, made me feel hungry, but I promised myself that I would be a better person here. I'm going to change my personality and be nothing like the person I am back home.

Anyway, after we all three girls ate breakfast together, Emmalia went mattress shopping at Sleepy's and Petunia took me out site seeing. After that, we went back home, and I got to see my new room. So far, there was not a single thing in there, well except for my bed, which seemed to have camouflaged in with all the white walls.

'So, what do you think?' Petunia asked me.

'It's so... clean.' I managed.

Petunia laughed and pulled me inside.

'Come on, I'll help you trick it out like mine.'

'Can we help too?' I heard a voice say.

Petunia and I turned around and saw Susan and Mac in the doorway.

'Hey, the more the merrier.' Petunia said.

I just nodded my head.

We sat around for a while, deciding what to do first.

'Well, I think the first thing to do would be to paint it, that way it'd be easier.' Susan pointed out.

So, it was decided, first we'd paint, then we'd pull in all the furniture and other stuff.

'So, what color would you like?' Petunia asked me.

'Hmm, blue and black.' I answered.

'Alright, so do you want like half the walls black and the other half blue?' Susan asked.

‘I don’t know, that’d look a little weird, I think.’

‘Oh hey, I have an idea! Why don’t we paint all the walls blue and then splatter black on them?’ Mac suggested.

‘Yeah, that’d be great!’

We all started and then finished an hour and a half later, when we were done, we were all starving.

‘Hey, kids, how about some ice cream?’ Emmailia asked, coming into the room with four scones of ice cream; two in each hand. ‘What flavor would you like Keysaha?’

My first instinct would be to say chocolate, but then I remembered what I had promised myself and changed my answer to strawberry since I absolutely hated vanilla. After we finished our little lunch, Mac helped haul all the furniture into the room, since he was the only guy and he was the strongest out of all three of us.

Right now, I had a little white drawer, white walk-in closet, and lots more! It looked so totally awesome and it was so much bigger and better than my old house. I was so tired that as soon as my head hit the pillow, I fell asleep. When I woke up again around eight-thirty, I went to go get a drink of water from downstairs. When I walked past the living room, I heard Emmailia and Petunia talking, I didn’t want to eavesdrop in on their conversation, but I stopped when I heard them talking about me.

‘Listen, sweetie, Keysaha is going to be going to your school in two days, so make sure you take care of her.’ Emmailia said.

‘I will mom, don’t worry!’ Petunia assured her.

‘Don’t leave her anywhere and help her find her classes, and especially don’t let Milly get anywhere near her. You remember what she did to you, and I don’t need another incident from Keysaha.’

‘I promise I won’t.’

I gasped when I heard that I had to go back to school and that too to a school with another popular girl. I went back up to my room and thought about this.

Oh, what am I gonna do? I thought.

I was about to finish the last bite of my tuna sandwich when Jai, my Korean BFF, nudged my elbow sharply on the cafeteria table. I managed to pop the remaining sandwich into my mouth and asked her, 'What?' With my mouth full.

She gave me a disapproving look. Jai always picks on me about my lack of table manners so just to piss her more, I chewed on the food deliberately with loud munching sounds. 'What?' I asked again.

'He's staring at you?' She said briefly in her halting English then turned away to look down on her own plate.

'Who?'

I was silently hoping it wasn't Mr. Vagner, our High School principal. He was monitoring me because I was behind with my school tuition all the time. He was worried if my mom was still being an irresponsible mother. What did go wrong now? Surely, the school year had just started?

I pondered on the question as I forced to swallow the suddenly tasteless sandwich down my throat. I ducked to peek over my shoulder. Well, nothing was really unusual. The cafeteria was packed with students eating their lunches. Same as all the other lunch breaks all year round.

With one exception, maybe. The day when Jai transferred to Providence High School two years ago. Everybody was curious about the new Korean girl who could hardly even speak English.

I whirled back to Jai. 'Who?'

She shrugged and moved her eyes toward the far end of the cafeteria. I followed her gaze and suddenly my heartbeat quickened as blood rushed to my face.

Therefrom the table at the far end of the cafeteria was Gabriel Sinclair. He was oblivious to his football teammates who were laughing and joking around with each other as he openly stared at me.

It was as if my stomach lurched up to my throat. It was funny my first instinct was to wipe my mouth, fearing my tuna sandwich had left a crumb somewhere.

I heard Jai stifled a laugh. My blush deepened. I wished I had listened to Jai's lessons about table manners before it was too late. Gabe probably thought how so un-lady-like I was, gobbling down my food carelessly and talking with a mouth full.

But wait. Why in the world should I care about what this Mr.?

Popular thought about me?

The deep blush was still on my face, but I was a little angry now than embarrass. I stared back at him fiercely giving him the 'okay-so-I-am-like this... so-what?' stare. He seemed to flinch from my irritated gaze as our eyes locked. He looked away abruptly.

'Why didn't you tell me?' I asked accusingly at Jai.

Her cute chancy eyes seemed to sparkle with amusement. It annoyed me even more.

'I did tell you.' She pointed out. She was right, actually.

'You didn't tell me it was Gabe.' I was still angry at her even so that I didn't want to simply just dropped the subject.

'So now it was my fault?' She hissed and rolled her eyes.

'Yes.' I snorted.

I took a careful peek again towards the last table on the far end. He wasn't looking at me anymore. I was relieved, but a pang of disappointment was mingling on my thought. What had he been thinking to stare at me like that?

I am no raving beauty at all. Being the only half-Filipino over two thousand plus of the student population, it should have been an advantage, I knew a lot of people who remarked how beautiful my olive skin was- (which I got from Mom) only if my hair didn't go as wild as it was forming a riot of Halo over my head and only if my eyes were a different color rather than black or if my lips were only a little thinner...

Seriously, what had he been thinking?

Why the sudden interest? Maybe he just thought I was funny or worse 'gross'. I really didn't care.

‘He was staring at you as if it was the first time, he laid eyes on you... that’s creepy!’

I looked back at Jai and gave her a frozen stare. She ignored me.

‘Maybe he just thinks I’m pretty.’ I made a face. Flinching from my own words. Hah!

‘Yeah dream on, Mya. He doesn’t even know you exist!’

I bit my lip from Jai’s harsh words. This was the trouble if you didn’t keep secrets with your best friend. Sometimes she knew too much to the point it was already irritating. But then I knew she was right.

Gabe and I went to the same school ever since we were Naddalin sets but I didn’t remember even once that he talked to me or called my name. Whenever I came over to their house to babysit his little brother, he wouldn’t even bother to greet me. It was like he didn’t know me. His behavior bothered me sometimes, but I have too many problems to linger on his abnormal treatment. But now, I couldn’t help thinking, something wasn’t right. Not right at all.

‘Well, maybe he does ‘now’.’ I insisted on her; I was really kind of hurt hearing the blunt truth right from someone else’s mouth. Even if that someone was your best friend who knows you inside out.

‘Yeah, yeah.’

The bell rang, signaling that lunch was over. I was glad to finally get to my feet and stomped off to our next class. Jai was right beside me. Before I finally got out of the cafeteria walls, I took one last look at the back of the room.

Gabe and his friends were still at their table with no plans of moving out. I marveled quietly at how ‘too good’ he really looked; he was like a movie star among his commoner’s friends. I sighed, careful not to let Jai heard me. Just as I was about to look away, Gabe turned his head to look at me. His blue eyes held a thousand words as it lingered on me for a few seconds.

Then he smiled.

I waved goodbye to Jai as school ended but my mind was really somewhere else the whole time after the cafeteria incident.

I couldn't take out how Gabe looked at me earlier in the cafeteria. Or how his eyes held mine for brief seconds but were enough to muddle my thinking. And there was, of course, his smile.

It was the first time in more than ten years he smiled at me. It was like he just snapped out from his snob behavior and acknowledged for the first time that we knew each other or knew each other's faces at least. I was a little nervous now.

Tomorrow, I would be spending my time at Sinclair's to babysit little Robbie. Gabe's parents were both working on a highly-paid job in the city and it was the nanny's day off, so I was too relieved her duty. I needed the job anyway, considering the situation we were in right now. I was lucky I got the job, but I guess no one else in the area needed a job as badly as I do.

It was Friday and I have another part-time job before tomorrow.

Every after school, I would go over to dear Mrs. Hendricks to walk her two labradors. Mrs. Hendricks lived alone in her little home five blocks away from school after Mr. Hendrick died. She was too lonely that she decided to get two dogs for company and for protection as well. Since she couldn't keep up with her dogs (the old lady was about over 60, I think), she paid me 40 bucks a week to walk her dogs every after school. Sometimes, I would stay with her a little while over after just to chat with her over tea and her most delicious cookies. She was too sweet, sometimes I wish mom was like her. The thought often left a hole in my chest.

It was a bit cloudy today in Providence, the dark clouds were casting shadows over the place making it looked almost like 6 P.M rather than 3:20 P.M. Every now and then a cold breeze would whirl my hair around my shoulders making it wilder than ever. I tugged at my loose hair desperately, wishing I had something to bind it with. I was silently hoping; it wouldn't rain as I quickened my steps to reach the small house I could almost see now over the hill.

Dear Mrs. Hendrick would be quite devastated if I turned around now and went straight home instead. I would be devastated as well, I hated making the old lady feel sad. Maybe I couldn't walk the dogs in this condition, but I could stay over for a while to keep her company in this condition. Hugging myself, I walked on faster as the first thunder cut across the graying sky.

The first drop of rain fell right onto my button nose. I wrinkled it and the drop trickled down to my lips. As it did that, the rest came pouring down heavily. I scrambled to my feet reeling around looking for somewhere to hide, but I saw nothing but trees and road signs. The jacket- I was wearing was thin and unable to protect me from this sudden downpour.

‘Mya!’

Somebody shouted my name from above the roaring of thunder and rain or was it just the wind? I couldn’t have distinguished. I broke into a run.

‘Mya!’ Again, the voice was calling my name. I slowed down to a half-walk half-run pace as I listened harder where the voice came from. Then out from nowhere, a blue sports car blocked my way. I froze not from the cold but by fear. I heard stories about young girls kidnapped and forced into white slavery. My teeth chattered as I braced myself. The car looked familiar though. I must have seen it somewhere.

‘Get in the car!’ A handsome face appeared on the passenger’s window. His blond hair almost golden and his eyes... they were the bluest shade of blue.

I knew I just look funny because of my jaw dropped - literally.

Gabriel Sinclair?

‘Get in the car please, you’ll get soaked.’

I blinked in disbelief. I fought hard to shake myself from the stupor and finally managed to make my legs moved towards the car door. What was he doing here? I bit the question back as I slid into his car. I was almost wet and cold, and the inside of his car was warm and smelled of leather. I couldn’t stop staring at him in disbelief. Was this a sick joke of his or something?

‘For a moment there, I thought you would just stand there and I would have to carry you.’ His blue eyes were amused as he turned to look at me. Was he really talking to me? A part of me was a bit thrilled but I stopped myself and faked watching my face in his rearview mirror and was horrified.

The wind had taken its toll on my hair and not even the dampness was able to smooth it down a little bit. I blushed with embarrassment in silence. Peering at him from my peripheral vision, I tried to smooth down the wild disarray, but it wouldn’t budge. With an inward groan, I gave up, I didn’t see the point anyway. I didn’t really care if he finds me unattractive.

‘Where are you heading to? I thought your house is in the opposite direction.’ He asked.

‘To Mrs. Hodicks.’ Surprised how my voice sounded so casual, I wish he would stop asking questions. This was very uncomfortable to me at least for I could see he wasn’t bothered at all. ‘I sort of have a part-time job. I walk her dogs every after school.’

He nodded gearing the car to life. ‘Okay. But I doubt you’ll be able to walk her dogs today, would you rather I take you home?’

‘I wanted to stay with her for a little while.’ I admitted. I was getting more comfortable. Maybe it was the warmth.

‘I’ll take you there.’

I mumbled my thanks as Gabe stepped on the gas.

Mrs. Hodrick was waiting anxiously, sitting on the front porch of her house. In her hands were two red umbrellas. My heart melted at the thought that somehow, even in this weather, she was hoping I would still come along. The poor Mrs. Hodicks. I blinked the tears as Gabe stopped the car right at the front of her house.

‘Thanks.’ I said, turning to him.

‘My pleasure.’ He was smiling at me like he was enjoying a private joke but there was tenderness in his eyes. I chased the thought away.

I saw Mrs. Hodicks stood and walked towards his car; her face was wondering. I unfastened my seatbelt and rolled down the window. Her wrinkled face lit up when her squinting eyes laid upon me. Relief and happiness rolled into one.

‘Mrs. Hodicks.’ She handed me the second umbrella she was holding when I opened the door.

‘Oh dear, why did you come in this weather?’ Her voice was soft with worries and joy at the same time.

I smiled at her. ‘I wanted to eat some of your cookies.’ So far, hers was the best I ever tasted.

That seemed to put off her anxiousness as I was hoping it would. She broke into a wide smile. ‘I didn’t forget. You can take as much as you want, and I’ll give you the rest to take home.’ She suddenly remembered the car I was riding with and peered on the window to look inside. 'And who is this young man?'

I was lost for words. I certainly couldn't count him as a friend, could I?

'My name is Gabe Sinclair ma'am.' Maybe he was sensing the hesitation, he volunteered. 'It's nice meeting you.'

'Oh, you're not coming inside?' Mrs. Hodicks pouted her lips like a little girl who was not able to get the doll she wanted.

'I-uh-m...' Gabe looked at me for help.

I looked away, unable to decide if I wanted him to stay or not.

'Would you rather be somewhere else?' Dear Mrs. Hodicks looked like her heart was broken.

Gabe shook his head instantly.

'Then there is no reason you shouldn't stay. Come along kids.' She walked ahead of me in her dragging steps and I was left out there thinking I only had but one umbrella.

When I turned to Gabe, he looked like he was fighting to stifle a laugh. I started to frown but I caught myself in time, thinking he was being such a nice person by offering me a ride. It would be so ungrateful if I scowled at him after everything he did. I slowly walked to his side of the car to let him share the umbrella.

He made sure every door and window was locked before he stomped out. 'Thanks,' He said. 'This is very nice of you.' He added as he held onto the umbrella, in the process our hands almost touched.

Making sure I left a decent gap between our bodies, I nodded pressing my lips together.

He smiled cocking his head and I felt dizzy as his unique sweet male scent invaded my nostrils. This was the first time ever that I was this close to a guy. A very attractive guy for that matter. I was having a hard time stopping myself not to sniff on him on our way in. I moved away from him as far I could the moment, we reached the covered porch. He was openly studying my reaction. One corner of his mouth curled into a soft smile.

‘Do I smell bad to you?’ He asked out loud, but he did not take a sniff on himself. He was aware that he smelled too good to me.

‘Why were you on the way here?’ I ignored him, breaking the tension that starts to set in. I was meaning to ask him this, anyway. I knew our houses were supposed to be in the opposite direction.

‘I saw you.’

My almond eyes opened wide. Baffled. ‘What?’ I blurted out a little too loud. I felt suddenly angered by his snooping on me. If he were. But in the cafeteria and nowhere... I was almost positive he was snooping on me. I didn’t like attention. Much more his. ‘You were following me?’

Again, his gorgeous blue eyes danced with amusement staring me straight in the eyes. ‘Yes.’

‘Why?’ I demanded harshly. Oh, let him get the idea that I didn’t like any more of this sudden interest in me. I wasn’t his type at all. I knew how his ex-girlfriends looked like. Blond... Perfect... Popular.

Just like him.

‘I saw you heading in the wrong direction in the wrong weather.’ He was smiling now. Too sweetly for my own benefit.

So, he thought I was stupid or out of my wits that was why he was following me?

I groaned inwardly.

Mrs. Hodicks opened the door and interrupted us. ‘What’s taking you, kids, too long? Come on in.’

I shrugged and left the umbrella on the floor as I scrambled inside.

Gabe was following me, still smiling.

My mouth watered as soon as we entered the stuffy living room. On the small coffee table near the brick fireplace sat a full plate of freshly baked chocolate cookies. Good Mrs. Hodicks. She ushered us by the fire.

‘Sit down and make yourselves comfortable. I’ll get the tea.’

‘Let me help you, Mrs. Hodicks.’ Gabe was already on his feet when he offered.

‘Oh no- no, you kids keep yourselves warm. You both look like you need it.’ She disappeared into the kitchen door adjoining the living room.

I moved closer to the flickering fire. Mrs. Hodicks was right. I was too cold inside my wet clothes, my teeth almost chattered. Spreading my palms over the fire, I heard Gabe said.

‘You have to get out of those wet clothes.’ I was thinking about the same thing, but too bad I didn’t bring any extra with me. I don’t suppose Mrs. Hodicks had something to fit me either.

‘Thanks’ but I’m fine.’ I lied. And I was a bad liar. I sat crossed-legs near the fireplace, hoping the cold would go away.

‘Here.’

I turned to look over my shoulder. He was extending an arm towards me. A gray jacket was in his hand. The same one he was wearing a moment ago. I blushed. Touched by his concern. But shook my head.

‘No, I’m fine really.’ I held my stand. Though I was dying to grab the clothing he was offering. I bet the jacket would smell just like him. I fought hard with the urged.

‘Go on, Mya. Take it.’ The hard and firmness in his velvet voice startled me.

I reached for the piece of clothing awkwardly. ‘Thanks’ I mumbled quietly.

‘Did anyone ever tell you; you suck at lying?’ When I looked up to his face, he was smiling again.

‘Many times.’ I grumbled. He laughed. I blushed even more.

‘Then don’t lie. People will know any way you aren’t telling the truth.’ He stretched his long body on the couch.

He looked really comfortable that, I thought it was unfair. I removed the thin wet jacket over my equally thin t-shirt. I replaced it with his and my mind was floating as his now-familiar scent assaulted and enveloped me.

Oh crap, now I am addicted to his smell!

Dear Mrs. Hodicks appeared on the door carrying a tray with the smoking teapot on it and three little teacups. Gabe was instantly on his feet taking the tray from her. The sweet old lady smiled her thanks and settled comfortably in an armchair beside the fireplace. As soon as Gabe placed the tray down on the table, I dove into it to get down something hot inside me and chase the cold away. Happily, I sunk my teeth into the soft chocolate cookie and drank my tea almost too greedily, it burned my throat.

‘Why, you didn’t tell me you have a boyfriend, Mya.’

I choked. Not from the hot tea and cookie. I could almost see the blood rushing through my face. My cheeks burned.

‘He-’ Darn. I was too embarrassed to even look at Gabe. What had he been thinking? ‘He isn’t--really my boyfriend, Mrs. Hodicks.’ Finally, I was able to make out the words.

Mrs. Hodicks chuckled. ‘Ow, that’s a shame.’

I anxiously nibbled on my cookie hoping she would stop there and let it drop, but to my chagrin, she added, ‘You both looked good together. You should go out like this often.’

‘Actually, he just accidentally went on my way. We were not really together. It was too kind of him to give me a ride.’ I put too much emphasis on my words and was out of breath when I finished.

Gabe was happily munching on a piece of cookie, a stupid smile on his face. I fought the urge to throw mine to him. He shouldn’t let the girl explained situations such as these to an old woman.

‘Is that it, Gabe?’ Mrs. Hodicks didn’t want to be put off.

Smiling, Gabe looked at me studying my face. I must look like a monster ready to gobble him up with any wrong move. His smile widened in amusement.

‘I sort of followed her, actually.’ He said finally. He looked away, refusing to see the horror washed my face. Don’t you dare...!

‘Because,’ I... wanted to know her better.’ His eyes turned serious as he spoke. I had a gut feeling the words were not meant for Mrs. Hodicks at all.

‘Oh, you’ll be surprised at what you’ll find. Mya is such an interesting, lovely little lady. You’ll lose your heart the moment you’ll see what she truly is.’ There was too much sincerity, too much pride in her voice I forgot all about Gabe as turned to Mrs. Hodicks.

‘Thank you,’ I choked on the emotion that was gripping me tightly. I always know, Mrs. Hodicks was an old lonely lady craving for somebody to talk to, walk her dogs for her, but knowing I was special to her like I was her own child, shook me from the very core of me.

She slowly cupped my face with one unstable, wrinkled hand. ‘It’s true dear. I always know you are special. And I love you as my own.’

I closed my eyes as my mind drifted to somewhere else. Sweet nostalgia. My mom used to be like this when I was a kid... mom... but the memories were too far away now. I opened my eyes slowly and a pair of the bluest eyes stared back at me. Gabe had moved behind Mrs. Hodicks, his eyes a liquid pool of mixed emotions.

I looked away quickly, hating him see thru me at my most vulnerable moment.

I emanated Mrs. Hodick's hand and I moved towards the fire again, turning my back on them.

Mrs. Hodicks was talking to Gabe about her dogs and how to behave and orderly they had been ever since sometimes she thought they were humans and not animals. Their quiet exchange of words was enough to calm my wracking nerves.

‘So, you go to school together?’

‘Since kindergarten.’ Gabe handed a cup of hot tea to the old lady.

‘My that was too long ago, how come you only see Mya just now, Gabe? I am very disappointed.’ Mrs. Hodicks made a clicking sound of her tongue.

I could feel a hole forming on my back, knowing they were both staring at me. Darn. I just hope they would stop talking about me like I wasn’t there at all. But for some ridiculous reason, I couldn’t make myself turn and let them know I was listening.

‘I think because I was a jerk.’ He chuckled softly as he said that. I desperately wanted to yell at him. But of course, I didn’t. Not with Dear Mrs. Hodicks around. I made a stuffy sound, closer to a groan. ‘It’s not really entirely true, you know.’

I have a gut feeling the last statement was directed to me so I slowly peek over my shoulder and closed my eyes hopelessly as I saw that he was indeed staring at me.

Would you just be kind enough to let the matter drop? I choked on the words.

‘I don’t know where this is heading,’ I frowned. Showing great disdain. ‘I think we should really talk about this privately.’

‘Will you talk to me privately?’ He wanted to know.

‘NO.’ I mouthed the word so Mrs. Hendrick couldn’t see. I was just bluffing to end the horrid conversation.

He was silent, and I was a little relieved. Mrs. Hodicks excused herself for a moment to get more tea, firmly ordering us to sit down when Gabe and I started to stand to help her.

I looked sharply at Gabe as soon as she was out of earshot.

‘Why are you being such a jerk!’ My voice was full of hurt and anger. ‘Why do you have to make up stories like that you-you,’ words failed me when I saw how serious he looked.

‘I like you.’ He said so believably I almost laughed. ‘I liked you all my life.’

I noted the word he was using. Like not love. I was glad he was careful about his words because God knew just how much my hand was aching to hit him hard.

‘Is this a sick joke? Making Ms. Nobody fall in love with Mr. Hot and Popular in a week? How much did you and your friends bet on me? You should really make a newer plot. That one sells so many times already.’

‘Mya Shantana Hope...’ His eyes a mixture of irritation and tenderness as he said my full name. I was out of breath. It was the first time in long years he mentioned my complete name and the impact it made on me was too strong I wanted to roll on the floor laughing and crying at the same time.

Sick; I was too sick for this. God help me.

We said our goodbyes to Mrs. Hodicks. I tried very hard to sound casual for the old lady. But my mind was really in a deep predicament. I knew I was always been strong but my strength crumbled to dust when Gabe put us in this situation. The humiliation, anger, and pain were too much for me to handle. And Gabe was doing too good at this I wanted to run away as far as I could from him for my own good. The knowledge that he would have to drive me home now did not offer any comfort. It only meant I had to endure all the way home trying to convince myself I was alone, and he wasn't there.

Oh, this was crap. I meant what would you call something like this?

He was so unpredictable that I hated every time he did something that was way so out of my expectation. And now that stupid smile was back on his handsome face like he didn't really care what had he done to me. Worse, whenever I peeked in the rearview mirror to quietly study Gabe, he would always catch me stealing glances at him. His smile widened. My face flushed brightly. Was it from humiliation or anger, I didn't know? Maybe it was from both.

Before I knew it, Gabe stopped the car in front of our small house. I was angry at myself for being so preoccupied with unwelcome thoughts that I forgot to give him the direction to the house. Luckily, he knew where I lived. Wondering, though how someone who ignored me for more than a decade knew where I actually lived, I silently gave him credit for that at least.

The heavy downpour of rain had subsided now into soft drizzles. I sighed as I saw that the front light of our house was already on. It was only ten minutes past five in the afternoon. Mom shouldn't be home from work then. I clutched the ripple of familiar distaste in my stomach.

My plan was to get out of the car without saying thanks or goodbye, to let him know I was really pissed at him but years of good manners prevailed on me. I mumbled my goodbye as I got out of the car and told him to drive safely. He was already in front of me when I got out, holding my arm.

'Can we talk please.'

I twisted my arm from his hold, darting him an angry stare. 'Just go home, Sinclair.' I barked.

'I will after we talked.' He insisted. His eyes, not exactly pleading but I closed mine, fearing I would get lost from the bluest depth of them if I stared too long.

I was anxious to get inside the house. I had a bad feeling mom was in trouble again. I sighed, deciding to just let him talk so this would be over soon.

'Okay... Talk.' I gave up. I forced myself to look at his perfect face.

He let go of my arm I was still twisting to free from his grip. Oddly, he looked he was out of words.

‘What I was saying at Mrs. Hodicks...’ I looked away at him as he started saying. He let out a deep breath. I steadied myself as the fresh smell of his breath dizzied me. ‘I just wanted you to know, I mean it.’

I nodded my head absent-mindedly, nibbling on my bottom lip. Of course, I was not a fool to believe him.

‘I really like you.’

My head snapped at him as he said it slowly, tenderly. His hand lifted to my face but not touching. He looked like he was in pain or something.

‘I liked you ever since we were kids.’ My mouth dropped. How much did he exactly bet on me to be this desperate? I was curious. ‘But something won’t let me tell you what you really are to me...’ He dropped his hand to his side. I just wish he would stop. ‘It’s like I feel something deep in my bones warning me to stay away from you... like something really really dark will happen if I won’t keep my distance...’ He laughed dryly. For the first time, I saw Gabe was nervous in front of me. ‘I know it sounds crazy but I wanted to be honest with you as much as I could. I don’t want to hide anything from you from now on. I am just tired of ignoring you when I couldn’t. I just want to do now what I really wanted.’ At this point, he didn’t think twice when he touched my flushed face. ‘I want to be with you, Mya.’

I blinked hard. I felt a strong pull to believe him but my rational side won the battle and I pushed his hand away.

‘Go home Gabriel.’ I hated how my voice sounded. It sounded too emotional. Too sensual.

He backed away but there was a hint of glow deep in his blue eyes.

He smiled and without me expecting, pulled me firmly against his chest. I was shocked, unable to protest but found out I was desperate to snuggle against his hard body than I ever wanted to admit. To forget for once, this was all but a dream. Too good to be true.

‘I don’t know what to do about you, Mya Shantana Hope,’ He let out a deep breath. ‘You are so hard to resist, with you I’m like a moth drawn into the fire. Burning would have been such a bliss.’

He let go of me before, I could regain my composure back. His eyes were dazzling like blue diamonds. I cringed from his gaze, sensing my humiliation.

‘Don’t-,’ I hissed. Concealing my embarrassment. ‘-ever do that again!’ I pushed him so hard but he only laughed as he caught my hands and deposited them against his hard chest. I struggled hard, but I could feel my resolve was quickly fading. I hated how the corner of his mouth curled into a triumphant smile. I hated how my body reacted to him, completely ignoring what my mind was yelling. Most of all, I hated how my heart thudded like crazy whenever he was too close for my own comfort; I hated him. He hated the effect he had on me. I hated Gabriel Sinclair for all that he was doing to me.

I hated myself for thinking that I was too close to believing him.

I hated myself for enjoying this moment with him when I should not.

With all sanity that was left in me, I scrambled to my feet and broke into a run.

She died. And that morning, I had told her that no one would miss her if she did. We always had these kinds of arguments, but I never meant what I said, and she shouldn’t have left me. Every day, I got up with a feeling that reminded me of the murder I had committed. Because if I wouldn’t have told her to disappear, God knows where she might be right now.

The worst of it all wasn’t even feeling bad about it, it was knowing that our parents blamed me too.

And so, I got up again, another day of school, but the first sister-less one. I dragged myself down the stairs and had breakfast with only my dad, mom had left early for work, he said, but we all knew she was just avoiding me.

‘Do you want me to drop you off at school?’ He asked.

He was just doing that to be polite, he wouldn’t want to be seen with the kid who killed his own sister, no one wanted that, let alone the father of both children.

‘It’s okay’ I said, but I knew he wasn’t even paying attention to me, he already knew I wouldn’t be joining him anytime soon.

Part: 16

She and I used to go by bike, together, every single day. Except for that one day, when she raged- and I yelled, and she left. She never made it to school.

So-o, I make my way to the garage, all alone, and take out my bike. Spiders have been feeling at home while I was staying home to more the loss of a loved one. They give you three weeks off nowadays, even when you are the main reason they're gone, in prison I'd get way longer.

I tear the spider's webs and homes apart because that's what the bloody truck did to mine. It's probably too soon to make jokes about how bloody it was, I have never been at the scene of the crime. I've decided to avoid it and take the high road to school. What are the odds though, that you piss off your sibling, and that she decides to leave, and ran her bike into a truck that just happens to be there right that minute? It wasn't even his fault, so we have got to apologize for the dirt on his vehicle. I'm so sorry you don't know where the fucking brakes are and killed my sister, here let me clean that up for you. Dirt-bag, at least he and his stupid ride match.

Her bike was still in the garage, I don't know why my parents insisted on taking it home, it doesn't even look like a bike. It's just a pile of metal rods and it made me feel rather uncomfortable because I swear you could smell her blood throughout the entire house, maybe that's what they aimed for, to make me feel guilty and never forget what I had done. While passing it, I kicked it really hard and had to keep myself from screaming.

The bike looked horrible, just imagine what she would've looked like. I never got to see her, because it was too bad. And apologizing to a coffin wasn't really one of the things on my to-do list, so I didn't do anything but stare right in front of me and wish the ceremony came to an end, as fast as she herself had done. It had taken the police about a week to gather all her pieces together, at least that's when my parents started taking it out on me, instead of panicking that she wouldn't be able to go to Heaven because she was missing a toe or something.

I had forgotten how long the high road was. And how hell-a boring it was to go somewhere all by yourself. I hope you're happy now, I thought. Everyone always feels sorry for the one who dies, but that's the easy way out, believe me.

It was 8 o'clock when someone rang the doorbell. There was dead silence throughout the entire house because of the argument that my sister and I had had.

She had been talking about that girl again, and she just went on and on about it, she never stopped. I had been telling her to shut up about it for about two months when she finally crossed the line. That morning, I started yelling at her. And we're so much alike, once we get into an argument, it's rather serious, so she did the same to me.

Our parents were downstairs while she started throwing with my stuff, and I grabbed her and told her she was a hideous creature, she basically called me the same names, but in the end, all that mattered is what I did.

My mother put her cup of tea down, got up and slowly made her way to the door. My dad looked at me in disgust, because I happen to yell way louder than her, he had only heard the terrible thing I had said, the one thing that made her take off.

'Yes- she did' I heard my mother say to someone who spoke very rapid and low, rather inaudible.

'About half an hour ago maybe, not more' she added.

'Yes- that's her,' her voice started trembling.

'What do you mean?' she started tearing up.

I wanted to get up and ask what was going on, but my dad did first and made me sit back down. It all seemed pretty serious, so I listened to him but also to the conversation in the hallway.

I heard him join the conversation by asking what the hell was going on. The policeman told him what he had probably told my mother just a minute ago. They were very quiet, probably because they knew I'd try and eavesdrop. But what I could hear, was more than enough to get up anyways, and run towards the front door.

Part: 17

'SHE WHAT???'

'Sir please, we're trying-'

'Finn, I think I told you to stay inside.'

'Dad, she's my sister, I should know whatever this is.'

My mother nodded- and dad lets go of me. We all looked at the man in uniform, standing in front of us.

‘I’m very sorry.’ That was all he said. Everything I heard before my mother thanked him and closed the door. But I needed more, what the hell was he apologizing for, she couldn’t just have -

‘Finn, I think it’s best if you go to your room. Now. Please.’ I had never seen my mom in this state of shock.

‘No, mom, I’m staying here, I’ve- like- like...’

‘You’ve done enough for today. Room. Now!’ Well my dad wasn’t joking around, so I backed off and went upstairs, with the intention of staying out in the corridor and listening to every single word that would leave their mouths.

‘Is that all he said?’ my dad asked, and of course my mother couldn’t properly talk, she was overwhelmed, and the man didn’t even bring her anything to drink, he just looked at her breaking down in front of him and waited for her answer.

‘He. Said. That. She-’ she paused.

Oh, come on woman hold yourself together, what did he say?

‘She wasn’t looking. She ran right into it.’ then the real breakdown happened.

Into what? Parents can’t ever just tell you what you need to know now, can they? But I had watched enough series and movies to know what just happened, and I knew she wouldn’t be coming back home. Not today, not tomorrow. And the last thing I had ever said to her was that she wouldn’t be missed if she’d ever leave.

Asshole; I’m such an asshole.

It was all I could think about because obviously, I couldn’t picture her running into anything, because of my lack of information.

I went into her room and sat down on her bed. One of the walls was entirely covered with pictures of her and her friends, and even some of me and her. The opposite wall was practically covered with books, from the floor up to the highest point she could reach when standing on her tiptoes, which wasn't really that high. I looked over at her desk. Her diary was lying in the middle of the table. What happens with all those feelings, I thought, where do her dreams go now?

I heard footsteps; they were coming upstairs. I grabbed the diary and ran out of the room, went to my own and jumped onto the bed. Not half a minute later my mom came in, and I wasn't surprised to see her eyes were entirely red and her face all covered in tears. She gestured to the bed, almost as if she was asking for my permission to come in and sit down, I made sure she had all the space she needed, and she sat down right next to me.

We stared at everything in my room. Everything but each other. We were so quiet I could hear my dad sobbing downstairs. It was heartbreaking because it always seemed as if he had no emotions at all as if his chest was filled with nothing but an ice-cold stone.

'She's not coming back tonight, is she?'

My mother shook her head.

'Nor tomorrow. Or the day after.' I added, still staring at the window in front of me. The curtains had been closed for over a week, and now all of a sudden, it made me feel claustrophobic.

'Mom.'

I waited for her to look at me, and once I knew she was, I looked back at her. I couldn't quite tell if she was still crying, because everything was blurry by now. She wanted to hug me, but I shook her off.

'What happened?'

She fake-smiled at me. As if she tried to comfort me, or herself, I couldn't even tell anymore.

'She was mad when she took off this morning. She decided to go to Mary's house, and go to school with her, I guess, because it happened on the road close to her house, and she had taken her bike so I guess she was planning on heading to school afterward.'

I really wanted to know what had happened to her, and I wanted to be able to picture it, to know what it must've felt like, but I wasn't ready to hear all about the details. Yet, I never interrupted my mother, because- I knew how badly she needed to explain to me this, in order to convince herself of the truth.

‘She was so upset, and she wasn’t looking, or paying attention to anything. And then the truck came. He didn’t even violate any laws; she was the one that should’ve stopped. But nothing we could ever do will bring her back to us. I’m so sorry Finn.’

This time I let her hug me because the story had hit me like, well, a truck. I was too upset to cry, but there was this lump in my throat and damn how it hurt. People call it a broken heart, so why does it feel like your entire body is shattered into small pieces? Breathing hurt. Feeling my mom pressed against me, our mother, hurt. What gave you the right to walk out of that door? Who gave you the right to listen to any word your stupid brother says to you? You would be missed, of course, you would be. You will be.

Dear Sam,

Today, I don’t know where you are. And I guess that’s how it’ll be from now on. Clueless guessing and hoping. Nothing but constantly wondering.

People believe in lots of things. Reincarnation, Heaven, a big black hole... Do you remember our theory? We called it ‘The Other Side.’

Just in case you don’t, it was about closure. So, when the deceased person felt as if the survivors weren’t ready to let go yet, he or she would watch over them. That’d mean that you’d be right here, next to me, watching me write and struggle, and tear apart everything right after finishing it. If you’d really be here, I mean, it’d be kind of soothing, but it could never take away the pain of what I’ve done to you.

You should know, that ever since our last fight and you’re slamming the door and running off, you’re all and everything that’s ever been on my mind. Non-stop. And I miss you. Gosh, I hate missing you, but I can’t make it stop.

Dad and Megan blame me, too, you know. Too, because so do I. Not a day will ever feel normal again, it’ll never be right. I guess they always preferred you and somehow lost the wrong child. Must be hard, considering it’s their other child’s fault and they’ll have to look at him for the rest of their days, wishing it was you.

They don't talk to me, like at all. In the beginning, Megan tried, but it's just too hard to pretend we have something to talk about. I think dad somehow convinced her not to talk to me again, you know -knew- how persuasive he can be. Especially when he's drunk and aggressive.

It's almost as if I'm dead to them. Excuse my poor choice of words, please.

Tomorrow will be my first day in school, after three weeks off. As if you can put a time limit on grieving.

Mary has tried to call, several times, but I've been ignoring her, after all, she was your friend, not mine. I haven't heard from David, so I guess it'll be one hell of a lonely day. Nothing new for that matter.

Yesterday was my first day outdoors. I went for a walk because our house is hell-a depressing these days. Dad tried to clean your room but stopped after as much as three minutes.

There was this poster at the corner of the street. Your favorite band will be in town next week. If I could, I'd buy us a ticket, I'd take you literally everywhere you wanted to go.

Oh Sam, won't you please come back to me?

I hate missing my little Hazel.

'Finn, get up, you're late again!' This had kind of turned into a routine. Somehow, I could never manage to get out of bed, even though I used to need fifteen minutes and now take over forty.

'Finn, up yet?' My dad had always given me the impression that he didn't really enjoy my company, but after my sister's death, he had done nothing but proving that statement.

'On my way, calm down.'

In this house, it was considered a crime to actually tell my dad that very thing. You don't just tell the man to calm down without a fight. He had, however, lost some of his aggression after the accident. As if something inside of him snapped, the last string that was actually holding him together.

'You have ten minutes before school starts, you do realize I'm not dropping you off, right?' Was the first thing I heard when finally reaching the kitchen, having tossed on the first thing I saw, namely the same pair of jeans I had been wearing for the last two weeks of depression and school.

‘Eat, then, please.’

I had seen him like this, once before. It was right after mom’s death. He has never fully recovered from that, started looking for solutions and affection elsewhere, and ended up marrying the far too young Megan. Sam had always liked her because they could’ve been sisters or best friends, I, however, felt kind of awkward with this sister-from-another mother walking around in my habitat. Especially when you think about her relationship with my father. Babysit: yes, mother: no.

‘Megan still not back?’ I asked with a mouthful of toast.

‘No. And it seems like she won’t be, for quite a while.’

‘What the hell, isn’t she supposed to be there for you in good and bad days?’

He gave me the glare of death, so I quit. It just wasn’t fair that she could decide to walk away from the drama, so the two of us would get sucked in even deeper. Even if she’d just be here to watch TV or make dinner, the house would already be less depressing.

‘Son, you should get going. I’ll be late tonight, by the way, enjoy your day.’ He said that while grabbing his car keys and walking off as if I didn’t know he’d be late. He had been, ever since Sam stopped coming back home.

‘Later.’

~*~

I hated these streets. And God, how I disgusted the metal bikes were made of. I wanted to burn out every single truck on the surface of the planet, watch them explode. See them die, helplessly, the way they made my sister feel when she tried to take her last breath. Or as she tried to continue breathing but had no choice but to give in.

Cars kept honking at me, all the way to school. The slow boy, the depressed boy, why his sister and not him, nobody wants him around anyway. Those horns said more than people ever dared to.

I put my bike a hundred meters away from school. The first week of my return, it got trashed four times, and the fifth time, they just hung it upside down with locks of other ‘nerds’ making it impossible for all of us to go home by bike. These people were my only chance of having an actual social life in this saddening last year of high school, but they all walked off as soon as they figured they'd be stuck with me if they wanted to wait for the principal's arrival.

My dad had been called several times and was more in the school building than I, myself, had been lately.

'It's been hard on him, losing his sister.' Was his explanation, every single time. But all the head could reply was: 'These things happen, and we're very sorry for your loss, but if Finn can't handle it, then he shouldn't be here right now.'

They gave him clear messages, in the trend of: 'send the boy to an institution if you don't feel like losing both your kids in one-month time.'

He had never told me that, but I had seen the documents they gave him. They were spread all over the house. Also, I had heard his discussions with Megan, late at night, after he finally got home. I guess Megan somehow managed to drag him home as he was drunk as f-word he doesn't want me to use, because apparently when you're the only child, you have to keep up appearances. Also due to the alcohol running through his veins, mixing with his blood in an uneven proportion, I had found out some things about his fatherly love for me.

'Do you know how embarrassing that would be? People are already watching. We've lost our daughter, the joy of this home, I can't put him in the madhouse and have all those judgmental questions asked all the time.'

'Think about him, would this be what Finn needs or not?'

'Who cares what he needs? He isn't going to tell me, and I'm tired of guessing.'

I entered my class. I was late again, but the teacher didn't even bother making a remark, as did the students. At the beginning of the semester, Nathaniel, school prick first class, used to squeak in his stupid high-pitched voice: 'Bambi has arrived, all animals should dance!' Then some of his friends would actually get up and do this weird uncool dance move that made the girls swoon, somehow. After a while, people got tired of his 'Do you get it, Bambi, because his mom died when he was there' jokes and he had no choice but to stop his lame attempts on being hilarious as hell.

As for now, the only one who might have actually even looked up as I came in, would've been David. But somehow, he just stopped caring about me. He hadn't spoken a word to me since the accident, not even a 'hey man, I'm sorry' or whatever friends do in those situations. He and my sister had always been pretty close, and he and I, we've been friends ever since the first day we met, how can you throw that all away like that?

But then again, I couldn't blame him. He was the cooler one of our duo, and I had nothing more to lose, considering my formal reputation as both a mom- and sister killer, he still had a chance on having a somehow survivable senior year.

I nodded as a thank you and opened my book on that very page. This was definitely my favorite teacher. It had been the only one asking me how I was, and even though I hated that question with passion, it made me feel respected. He gave me tasks instead of tests because he knew I was smart enough to pass his class if it weren't for the accident occupying my thoughts 500% of the time.

Oh, Sam. Time goes so slow when you feel like crap when you want it to go fast, so you can go back to your cave of misery, where no one watches you. I'd say 'care' but they don't, so that's that. Where the hell have you been and where did they take you? When will this pain in my chest, that seems to have broken my ribs and shake all of their splinters when I try to breathe in, end? Do you think it ever will?

These kids are horrible. They were at your funeral, all of them. Yet, no one even had the decency to look at me. Do I have 'I killed my sister' tattooed all over my forehead, or is it just me? How did you do it, interact? Why couldn't it be me, I would've taken your place, a million times without even thinking it over. Please come back, or at least temporarily, so you can take me with you as you go again.

She scared the hell of me when she walked in. I literally jumped up when seeing her.

'Shit, Megan. Please knock, I had no idea you were home.'

'Your father is drunk again, couldn't just let him drive himself into-'

'Don't make traffic jokes. Too soon.'

She nodded. 'What are you doing here? Shouldn't we be boxing everything up?'

I was in my sister's room. Looking for something, I don't know what, that would make her come back. Not necessarily physically, just something that would make me feel as if she was still around.

‘Don’t box it up, it’ll seem so permanent.’ I said it while hiding her diary I had found under my shirt, and making my way to my own room.

‘Look, Finn, I know you don’t want to hear this, but death sound pretty permanent to me.’

I didn’t even bother getting mad at her for saying that, I had to take care of my mission first.

‘Give us some time. Everyone looking at our every move is already exhausting enough.’

With a sigh, she walked off. ‘Don’t tell me I didn’t try.’

‘I won’t.’

I slammed the door, basically right in her face, because she wasn’t done talking. Once alone, I took the diary in both hands and just stared at it for a minute. She would kill me if she ever found out I had it, but then again, who cares, if I’d be dead, I’d be closer to her, and further away from everyone else. Actually, it’s pretty much the best thing that could possibly happen to me right now.

Falling down into my very uncomfortable chair, I opened the lock on the ugly diary. It was pink and fluffy, she must’ve gotten it when she was about a seven-year-old because, after that, my sister had been manlier than I could ever be.

The first page had a huge red triangle on it, and lots of skulls and exclamation points.

‘IF THIS IS FINN, GET YOUR HANDS OFF OF MY DIARY!!!’

Oh, sis, she knew me too well. It was almost cute of her, to think that this would’ve actually stopped me back in the days when she’d still be here to double warn me.

I turned the page, to find another threat on the second page.

‘I MEAN IT, PUT IT BACK, OR I WILL HUNT YOU DOWN!’

Good luck with that, oh evil spirit of my oh-so super dead, aggressive, scary little Sammie-sis.

I laughed at her lame attempts and started reading the third page.

Somehow, it was a relief to figure out she didn’t start with ‘dear diary’ I might’ve actually felt like slapping her if she would have.

Her first story was one of when she was eight. She got the diary for Christmas. I wasn't that far off with my gamble talent and saying seven. She got it from aunt Sarah, which explains the color and cuddliness. Her first story was about me, and how I had hidden her teddy bear. If she would've made it, survived the accident I mean, she could've perfectly become a writer, because the emotions and exaggeration were simply amazing. I almost felt guilty for something I had done when I was only nine.

'Finn?'

This was the day of the jump scare, I swear. I slammed the book in one of my slides and sat straight real fast.

'Yeah?'

Megan walked in.

'Your dad's fast asleep right now, I think I'm staying here tonight, would you mind?'

'Of course not, it's your house too.'

She didn't reply, she just made her way to my bed and sat on it. I really had to change the sheets; it was almost embarrassing. If this woman wouldn't have been doing my laundry for three years now, I would've actually apologized for it.

'Look, I just wanted to say I'm sorry, for the boxing-thing I mean.'

'It's okay, we're just- I'm just not ready to let go yet.'

She nodded. 'I know that, but I'm afraid it'll break you. One day, we'll have to face it, that she's not coming back. And if you want, I'll be there for you until you don't need me anymore.'

'Thanks, but it's just-'

How do you tell someone you wanted to see the body in order to believe the stories you've heard? How do you say such a thing without sounding like a straight on psycho- Emmah, just personalization of sadism?

'-hard, I know that. But we'll get there.'

Close enough. I decided to just nod and rest the conversation there. She made that 'I'm sorry for you'-face, emanated my knee, got up and left with the words: 'I'll let you do your homework now.'

Wow... Thanks.

You've always been a little girl. My little sister. How can someone so small leave such a huge open wound in my chest when leaving? How can you make such a big difference with that size six of yours?

Day 34 as an only child. The house smelled like pancakes as if we were throwing a birthday party for five-year old's. While making my way downstairs, and taking my usual break at your door, I couldn't keep myself from looking for balloons and surprises hidden everywhere on and around the stairs. I felt like a boy on Easter, trying to figure out where the eggs could be. The only thing this smaller version of me didn't have, was you darting around, running faster, pushing harder, grabbing all the eggs I had found and accidentally lead you to.

I have had some horrible mornings, such as the one with the officer and his bad news about you, but this one was one to add to the list. I caught Megan and dad in the kitchen, acting annoyingly mad in love. It was the first time that he was up so early on a Saturday, and to be honest, it might've felt good to know that Megan tried to live under our troubled roof again. She did choose to be a part of this family, and there's no way out of that, except for the Emmah you've taken.

'We're going to the park later today, so better eat some more than you've been for the last couple of days.'

'How are you supposed to know that, you're never around looking at it.'

'Finn, one day without a fight. Just one.'

This day better be special, I hated my dad's way of hitting the breaks of whatever conflict I would want to see breaking out.

'What day is it?'

'It's our anniversary, and you're going to, pretended or not, I don't care, love it.'

The enthusiasm in his voice made the lonely bite of pancake in my stomach feel like climbing all the way back up.

‘Why the park, it’s freaking cold outside.’

‘Because that’s where we met.’ Megan replied as if it was the most obvious thing in the entire world, hanging on board, surrounded by neon- and flashing lights.

‘Why not make it somehow romantic and go there yourselves? You don’t need me to be third-wheeling in order to feel better now, do you?’

My dad sighed. ‘For God’s sake, Finn. One day is all we ask; can you at least pretend?’

‘That she isn’t dead? That you’re not blaming me? Or that she has actually been living here and taking her oh so motherly responsibilities, deserving this celebration? If she would’ve stayed when you and I both needed her so much, then I would’ve thrown a party for the two of you, myself!’

I grabbed the plate with the pancakes, not just mine, but every single one of them, and made my way back to my room. Halfway, I paused, turned back around, took the stripe and took off.

‘He doesn’t mean any of that.’ I heard my dad trying as soon as I was out of sight.

‘You know, he’s right, we shouldn’t be doing this. It’s obviously too soon for Finn to be enjoying these things, and he had a valid point. I haven’t been acting very motherly altogether, while that might have been all he needed from the accident, until now.’

‘His mother’s death is not your fault, Megan.’

‘No, but banning her voice out of this house, is. She should’ve never been ‘prohibited’.’

I had made myself clear, good. That saved me some serious slamming with the doors and making so much noise the neighbors of our neighbors would drop by telling us to keep it down. Instead of walking into my very own room, I found myself in Sam’s.

It was stronger than me, the need to feel close to her. To touch something that had been in her grip, before she lost the possibility of latching her hands, or whatever’s left of those.

Her desk was very messy. Partly because I had been looking everywhere before actually finding her diary, and also due to the fact that she always wanted to do too much, causing her to take out every single book she had, all at once, covering the wooden table as if they had been the table-cloth.

The wall on the left side of her workspace was covered in photos. From the ceiling to the floor. I recognized some of the faces because I had seen them in school, or in our house. Mary was on almost every single one of them. She was Sam's best friend and had been, ever since they had first laid eyes on each other. That must've been when we were about three years old. In the middle, there was a picture of our family, all together. My mother looked so young. She was. Her accident had come to a shock to the entire town, as did the miracle of my surviving skills.

What is it with this family and traffic? What is with me and people dying?

I placed my finger on the picture, covered mom's face with it. I couldn't even remember what her voice sounded like. Leave alone the taste of her famous pies. Even her smell had faded, Megan had introduced a brand new one when moving in only half a year after the accident. People thought it was both inappropriate to be moving on this fast and to make two young children grow up without a mother, so dad had to choose.

I took a step back and looked at the wall again. It took me quite some time to realize some pictures were missing. As I approached and looked at the others, I noticed it was the pictures of David and me, on holidays. Why take them off? And who the hell did that anyway?

A bit confused, I picked up the pancake plate and walked through the door, straight into my man cave. I placed the food on my desk and looked at my bulletin board hanging right above it, with my planning and tasks. Never have I been so lucky to have actually put down a plate, it would've shattered into a gazillion pieces. Staring back at me are two ocean blue, shining eyes, a pair of chocolate brown ones right next to it, they're both smiling. In the background, David and I are playing ping pong. Who the hell put these in my room?

~Megan...

It's the first of November. Everyone is visiting and mourning the death. People are so stupid. You don't simply pick a date and say, 'this is the one day on which we will all think about the ones that left us, but attention: after midnight, we quit.'

Not a day has gone by -I think it's even safe to say that not a single hour has-, that I haven't thought of you. Regret is getting worse as the days go by, and I need you to give me a sign. Let me know you're okay.

Did I tell you about the pictures the other day? Weird things happen when you're living your life without even noticing you are. It's like I've been sleepwalking ever since you left me. Some people tell me to get my shit together because I've experienced from up close how fast life can pass you by, and so suddenly. I'm afraid you were the one of us that actually knew how to handle life. All I do is a struggle, hate, sleep, eat, struggle some more.

Like I said, November. No school today, and it's almost your favorite time of the year. You know I hate Christmas, but you have no idea what I'd give up for this one to be with you in it. I might even buy myself one of those horrendous themed up sweaters you used to wear.

I paused my thought about Sam, they had come to hurt so bad, I couldn't take them anymore. If I had been a girl, I would've written it all down in diaries, wait for her to come back and read them. Boys don't write, they're tough. They stay strong, at least in public. That's what my dad always told me. He had always been somehow disappointed that I wasn't and would never be able to become the strong son he wanted so badly. Boys play football, I play chess. Boys game, I read. Boys have girlfriends and friends, I used to have a cat, but he left me.

'Finn?'

In the beginning, I had been relieved to bump into Megan in the mornings. To know that she was back, dad was feeling better, and she would actually keep him off my back. But this woman had the energy of a dozen hurricanes, and who the fuck does mornings on weekends?

'It's 9 o'clock, I should get to sleep at this time of the day!'

'Lazy ass down here, you've got one minute.'

The thing I liked about her being so young, was that we could have these conversations my dad never got. We'd be talking hashtags and selfies while my dad was reading an actual book, yeah you heard me, without them in front of it.

I dragged myself down the stairs.

'You exhaust me.'

'Good morning to you too, sunshine!'

'What do you need?' my voice was heavy with sarcasm and boredom.

‘We’re visiting Sam today.’ She said it the way you tell your five-year old’s you’re going to the beach, knowing goddamn well they adore going there.

‘You say it as if it’s a good thing.’

‘It’ll be good for you.’

‘So is time, apparently, see how that’s been working out for me.’

Needless to say, she had won the argument. There we were, standing in front of stone at least as cold as Sam became, in the month of November. I had received another call from Mary, right before heading out. Megan had told me to invite her, too. I declined the call. Not talking to me for days, switching schools right after my little sister’s death and not telling me about it, not cool. She would have to try harder than this to actually ever hear from me again.

‘Heard anything from David yet?’ father asked as we were both looking down to the stone.

‘Not a word.’

‘I’m sorry for you, Finn.’

‘Don’t be, got enough people pitying me already. For something I did do.’

She shook his head, he hated it when I admitted what everybody was thinking. I had been the main reason she got into that bloody accident. And no one could take that responsibility away.

This day trip was killing me. They had put Sam right next to our mom, someone you’d almost forget wasn’t around any longer. She did leave a big hole in our lives, but not the way Sam did. We had been consoled with the thought of ‘at least she had a great life’ but my sister didn’t deserve this! Neither of them did, really, but the pain was so different.

When my mom died, I used to think ‘if I get over this, then I can handle everything.’ Never have I been so wrong in my life. Right now, I can’t even think about getting over it, there’s no way that thought would even dare to creep up on me.

‘It pains me to see this.’ My dad said as if he just held the great book with Finn’s thoughts in his hands and decided to start reading it somewhere in the middle, at random.

‘Of course, it does darling, that’s normal.’

At this specific moment, it did bother me to have a stepmother. This was clearly out of her comfort zone, and if not, it was way out of mine.

‘Why don’t you wait in the car, Megan?’

‘Finn, that’s ridiculous, let me be here for my family!’

‘I should’ve been lying there, not my little girl.’ He was completely ignoring everything around him, I had never seen my dad like this, on the edge of the unknown tear-down.

In fact, he was right. The spot right next to mom had been reserved when she passed away. We thought the cycle would be completed if dad would end up next to her one day. It was soothing at that time. And then Megan happened.

‘I can’t hear you talking like this.’ She said right when I wished she would’ve just disappeared.

‘Then don’t listen.’ She had woken up the most bitter inner feelings inside of me.

‘What, dad?’ I decided to use words instead of his hard-to-see facial expressions. He did have not to make her suspicious, but I had seen and heard enough.

‘Thank you so much for this lovely trip, but I think I’m skipping the pick-nick. You two have a great time, I’ll be in my room.’

With those words, I walked off. Straight home, always looking down at the pavement that had felt her last breaths while I didn’t even get the last laugh.

Strange things had been happening ever since our trip to death.

When I got back home, I found the pictures someone had taken from Sam’s wall and put onto mine, but they were on my bed right now. On every single one of them, David’s head had been either torn out or marked with a huge red cross.

I had asked Megan if she had been in my room again, but she denied it in every language, mainly English because she’s not really into learning other ones. My dad would never do something this subtle, he’d just hand me a gun and David’s address if he had a problem with him.

I know it's a weird thing to say, but somehow, I had hoped that it was a sign from Sam. This is ridiculous, not only because she's kind of deader than dead, but also because she actually liked David. She wouldn't try to scare me off with these kinds of hints.

Going to school had been pretty weird. Seeing David not seeing me, it was harder now than ever. Partly of course because I guess if I could've just asked him 'hey mate, ever felt like someone would actually think about killing you?' this research would be a hell of a lot easier.

Part: 18

I got home earlier and earlier every day. Because, (one) I wasn't sportsmanlike, at all, but somehow the football team had chosen me... to be their real-life box ball, I had to sprint out of class to escape them. (two) The earlier you leave, the easier it actually is, because of the mess with the bikes and having to wait for the super-popular kids who can't seem to multitask, talk while getting their bike, but always feel like doing one of those things while blocking everyone else.

And (three), dad had found a solution to my bike-problem. He had bought me a pink one, so no one would think about trashing it, as no one would link it to me. Great idea, but it made it necessary for me to get up half an hour earlier so no one saw me arriving, and skip the last ten minutes of class, rushing to get home.

'It's not even half past yet, how the hell do you get home so fast?'

'Aren't you supposed to be working? Or drinking?'

He didn't answer. This usually meant something bad, so I turned around, took a bite of the sandwich I had made in those short minutes since I had slammed the door shut and tossed my backpack away.

'I won't be going to work for another couple of days.'

'What do you mean?'

That might've sounded stupid. But in this family, you never know. He could be sick, dying, and not telling me because of all that we've been through. He could be fired, too.

'Apparently, David's dad thinks I'm a threat to the company.'

David and I had had our issues before, but they had never included my father getting hurt.

‘What are you going to do about it?’ I asked.

‘What can I do? Wait for another job, of course.’

‘Wait? Dad, I don’t think that’s how it works.’

‘Son, one thing you need to know about this family: nothing ever actually works. If it does, people find a way to ruin it. I don’t know why, but somehow they feel as if we haven’t suffered enough losses in this family already.’

I grabbed my coat and was about to leave the house to go talk to David when he stopped me.

‘Finn, they’re not worth it.’

‘How about you? You’re not losing your job over his puberty, dad.’

‘His father is a professional. He’ll have his reasons.’

‘And I’d very much like to find out which ones.’

He rolled his eyes and sat back down on his sofa. He made sure he was comfortable and took today’s newspaper in both hands, reading to show me this conversation was over and that I was wrong. But just for once, I didn’t feel as if he was right. I grabbed the doorknob and seconds later, I felt the cold wind blowing, freezing my ears. Off we go.

I knew the way by heart. Even if I would’ve looked at the pavement all the time, I would’ve found it. Here I was. Standing in front of the house that used to feel more like a home to me than ours ever did. Right after mom’s death, they had kind of taken me in. While dad was drinking, Sam ran off, to Mary’s, and my dad started insulting me on a daily basis. I used to blame the alcohol, but the things he said left me speechless. They were so accurate. So- I ran off, found myself standing at the very same steps I was right now.

Slowly, I made my way up to the door. Once I was standing there, I could simply hear the beating of my heart. It was pounding against my chest, inside my ears, like in those movies at that moment when their dream changes into someone knocking on their door.

I considered ringing the doorbell. I think about turning around and leaving. That's when I see his mother, staring at me from the other side of the window. The warm side, the side where David actually knows who you are. She doesn't really look happy to see me but makes her way up to the door anyway. Her voice is warm, as always.

'Finn, long time no see, what brings you here?'

Something must be wrong. I've been standing here for a minute, and she didn't invite me in yet. Last year, she would've literally pushed me inside in this weather.

'I don't really know, is your husband home?'

'Frank? Why would you need him?'

'Just a quick question.' I decided to keep her out of this, at least if she still was.

'Sure, I'll call him, he's still at the office. You can wait with David if you'd like, he just got back, you know the way.'

'Yes... Sure, thanks.'

I didn't move. I was afraid to breathe in too much of his air because he made it damn clear he didn't want to share it with me anymore. I wasn't sure why, though. There had been quite some rumors about us. Since we're the absolute zeros of the school, at least I am. The longest relationship I've had was one of three days. The poor girl wanted to break up with me on the very first day, but somehow forgot to mention that, and had to wait the entire weekend. I must have been a horrible boyfriend.

Anyways, because- I couldn't get any girls, people started making up these stories about me having a crush on David. It made things weird at first, but once he figured it was total bullshit, he just stopped paying attention to them. To be honest, I didn't really mind. I've had worse than verbal bullying, and in their stories, at least I had an actual love life.

David came downstairs.

'Mom, who was that at the do-?'

'Hi.'

'Finn.'

Part: 19

'I'd make an 'at last we meet' -reference. But you no longer seem to be into me or my humor.'

'Been busy.'

'Busy enough to ignore her death? Woah, I thought they'd never be able to actually brainwash you too, but they managed. If you'll excuse me,

I have to go congratulate Chad now.'

Chad was the most popular footballer in our entire school. He could get literally everyone to do basically everything he asked for. David had always been looking up to this guy, because of the number of girls surrounding him.

'Finn, he just left the office, he'll be back any minute now. Ah, I see you found David, good. Would you guys like something to drink?'

'Actually, Finn was just about to leave, weren't you?'

David looked at me as if I'd think he was scary, threatening me in my second home... cute.

'You know what, I would really much enjoy something to drink if you don't mind.'

I said that to his mother, all of us knew David did mind. He fakes smiled at me, and I smiled back, the first smile I actually meant, in some months' time now.

I sat with them and my hot chocolate until David's dad got home.

He looked exhausted. When he saw me, he smiled?

'Great to see you, lad, been quite a while, how have you been holding up. Did David give you our card?'

I said it was my pleasure, that he was right, that I'd been holding on just fine -lie- and then I had to admit he didn't. He looked at his son, surprised.

'What, David? Why not, look Finn, we gave him our card with condolences because we couldn't make it to the funeral, but David did.'

‘You were there?’ I asked David. Not his father, or his mom, I even forgot about our tug of war, or whatever this was. I didn’t see him and judged him for it, but maybe I just didn’t see him.

‘I wasn’t.’

‘WHAT?’ both parents said at the same time. Like in the movies, parents that just go together with the way vanilla ice cream and chocolate sauce do.

‘I didn’t feel like being there, all those people who don’t really care, crying. And those who do-’

He looked at me.

‘I kind of needed you to be there.’ I said. With those words, I got up, explained that my dad was waiting for me and that I really had to go, but thank you for the hot chocolate, it was great seeing you all again. I shook hands with his father, and his mother kissed me on my cheek and asked me to visit more often. I said I might. Then I faced David, he was holding out his hand. All I did was say his name, and leave.

I ran off quickly, felt like I didn’t belong here anymore. Every second in this house was one too much. However, I couldn’t have missed the red cross on the floor of the hallway, even if I’d be running like a freak because David was following me with a knife. It was the same red as in the pictures, but when I came in, I hadn’t seen it?

Outside the wind was tearing through the trees, buffeting against our cabin. The storm was building, so dark that you couldn’t see much past the front porch. Yet I strained my eyes, searching for the source of the sounds assailing my ears. Loud cackling laughter and screams pierced the night, raising chills on my skin.

‘Arielle? Get away from the door’ my mother’s panicked voice called out to me. I have pulled away, back inside the cabin as she locked and bolted the door. My father was rummaging around in some drawers, looking for something.

‘What’s going on?’ I asked weakly. The voices were so loud now. As usual, my parents seemed unable to hear them.

‘We’re leaving’ she said. Her voice was strained. None of us wanted to go, the cabin was home. One we’d had for a while. It was supposed to be safe. I fell to the floor, covering my ears with my hands; the noise was unbearable. ‘mommy’ i whispered. She ran to me immediately, hearing my small plea. I felt the cool press of her fingertips to my temples as the pain receded. The noise was now just a low hum, fading into background noise. I knew from past experiences this wouldn’t last long but at least it gave us a little time.

‘Sweetie, you remember that room? The special one?’ she asked me. I nodded. There was a room hidden behind the stove, small enough for one person. A child likes me.

‘I need you to go in there. We’re going to play a game’ she said shakily.

‘Meria! We need to hurry. It’s close’ my dad called my mom. He came over and swooped me up in his arms. ‘I love you baby’ he whispered to me. His eyes were closed tightly, his chin resting on my head.

‘I know’ I heard her reply. She sounded close to tears. ‘I’m not ready, Dorian. She’s just a child!’ she wailed.

‘I know. We have no choice. There is no other option anymore’ he turned to face my mother. I was right, she had tears streaming down her face. She pressed a kiss firmly to my forehead and looked me in the eyes.

Her silver ones were wide with fright.

‘Okay, sweetie, you remember that game we used to play when you were really little?’ She spoke softly. I nodded in response, too worried to speak.

‘Well, we’re going to play that game now. I need you to be as quiet as you can be. After a while, we’ll-’ at this point she burst into tears.

‘we’ll come to get you out’ my father finished. I’d never seen them this scared. We’d had a few close calls over the years but nothing like this. They both hugged me one last time before I was placed in the room behind the stove. Their faces were the last thing I saw before I was shut-in. I wasn’t scared of this room, it was safe. I’d played in here a lot when the weather was too wild outside or when the noise of the thunder used to scare me. Muffled voices filtered through the gap in the opening. It was so small you could only see fragments of light. I pressed my ear to it, already afraid for my parents. I was safe in my room, but they weren't here.

'...She's strong Meira... 'my father.

'...I don't want to leave her...!' My mother's panicked voice. It was hard to discern but they sounded like they were arguing.

'...It's time. Close it or we... for nothing... said goodbye... 'he was moving away from my hole. The last thing I heard was my mother's sweet voice whisper to me. 'We love you. Never forget that. Stay safe, for us baby... stay safe.'

Then my world became dark as they closed the barrier between my room and theirs.

I had no idea how long had passed. It could have been minutes or hours. It felt like forever. I knew no sound, nor sight. All I could do was wait. Then eventually, someone came. At first, all I could see was a slight flicker of light as the barrier opened. Then muted voices and footsteps.

What sounded like scraping as the door to my room was forced open.

Then I looked up and into the eyes of a woman I had never seen before.

'Arielle? Are you okay? Are you hurt?' Her voice was worried. I shook my head, no.

'Where's mommy?' I asked quietly. They'd told me they'd be the ones to get me.

'Oh sweetheart,' her features were strained as she watched me.

'They're dead'

'No' i protested. I'd seen them. They told me they were coming to get me. The strange woman reached for me. I was too weak to put up much of a fight. As she carried me outside, all I could remember between my room and the car, was red. Blood. Their blood. Shadowy shapes hovered here and there, taking pictures and talking quietly but when they saw me, all was silent. The woman held me so that I couldn't see what was happening but I heard the one-person whisper, 'What will happen to the child now?'

They really were gone. One last 'no' escaped my lips before I faded into unconsciousness.

I woke up screaming. My heart beating wildly in my chest and sweat plastering my hair to my face. It was that dream again. The same one I always had. Their faces burned in my memory. Parent's I knew but would never see again. It had been 12 years; 12 years of torturing myself with that memory, over and over again until I couldn't think, couldn't feel. The numbness was what I craved, what I needed. I knew if I closed my eyes again, I would see them, still in the aftershock of my dream, so I rolled over in bed, checking the time. 3:14 a.m. I sighed; it could be worse.

There would be no more sleep tonight so I got up. Time to go...

I glanced around the room. It had been my home for the last 2 weeks, the longest I dared stay. Any longer and I'd risk being discovered.

I flicked on the lamp beside my bed and stretched out my sore muscles.

I'd spent too long training yesterday and my body was feeling it now. Just as my mind was weary from lack of sleep.

'Toughen up, princess' I told myself. That had been my mantra for as long as I could remember. It did no good to whine and moan about something you couldn't help. The training was essential. Without it, I'd be useless if it came to a fight. I made my way to the bathroom in the small motel room. It was a run-down joint. One that wouldn't press for I.D or any other identification that I couldn't give. A fake name and a wad of cash around here goes a long way.

The room was sparse, the harsh light from the fluorescent lamp lighting the bare walls. Illuminating the ugly faded green coverlet on the bed to the dirty, stained floor. My one backpack sat on the floor beside the bed, within easy reaching distance. The bathroom was as bare as the room; and just as disgusting. Moldy tiles and I didn't even want to know what was in the wastebasket. I turned on the shower and let the hot water ease the tension in my back and neck. Let the water clean away the sweat clinging to my skin.

I stepped out and caught a view of myself in the mirror. I didn't bother with cosmetics, I never had time nor reason to wear any. I was pretty average anyway. While combing out my long hair, my mind wandered to where I could go next. There was one place I never wanted to go to. I avoided that area like the plague. Not only would there be scouts running the perimeter of the cabin, the pain of having to relive that nightmare would be unbearable.

The scouts themselves were enough to make my skin crawl. They were creatures sanctioned with the task of finding me. Monsters made of the stuff people become insomniacs over.

‘Minnesota, it is then’ I said bitterly. I hated ice. I hated the snow. I hated anything cold, unfortunately, it was the only place safe right now. I’d head to one of the big cities if I could but at this time of the year, they’d be crawling all over the place. Then again, no matter where I went there were bound to be some of them.

They amped up their search efforts around Christmas time. Mainly because they thought I’d be stupid enough to go somewhere familiar but also because all of that negative energy humming in the cities, from panic to stress or fear, is what they feed on. New Year’s Eve is absolute chaos. If the rest of the human populace could see what I see, they would be driven to insanity.

I headed back into the room to get changed into my traveling gear. I’d managed to pick up a few items the day before so I could survive the cold outside. Slipping on a pair of black jeans and a grey long sleeve shirt, I looked out the window and into the night. The motel I was staying at was located in a small town I’d never heard of. I was in Europe, in one of the native villages and most of the inhabitants didn’t even speak English.

Yippee for me. I couldn’t wait to get off this continent.

As I turned away from the window, something moved outside. I just caught it out of the corner of my eye. Ducking out of view of the window, I stole a peek from the very edge. It was there. The shadows surrounding it were what had caught my eye, shadows I knew all too well. It was a hound. One of the more experienced scouts by the way its shadows were undulating in the air behind it. You could tell how dangerous the creatures were by how dark their Aura’s showed. This one had thick black shadows, like smoke. It was strong. It fixed its red eyes on me for a heartbeat before disappearing.

‘Shit!’ I exclaimed. I bolted away from the window heading for my bag. It was about to get ugly. I’d been spotted by one of their scouts, knowing my scent had drawn them to this area. This motel in particular. If I didn’t get out now, the inhabitants staying here were also in danger, something I couldn’t allow. So- run it was.

I pulled out the bus schedule from my bag and checked the times. Nothing. 'Nothing?!' I began to panic. I hadn't been cornered for a long time; I was too careful. I'd let myself linger in one place for too long a now had to deal with the consequences. Shoving the useless paperback into my bag I sprinted out the door and downstairs. At a place like this, they didn't bother having someone on guard duty. I pressed the buzzer for attendance a thousand times until someone came out to see what the racket was.

'I need a car' I said urgently. He just stared back at me, still half-asleep. 'Now!' I all but yelled. I wasn't sure if he could understand me so I pulled out what I knew would be understood in any language, and emptied the cash onto the bench in front of him. His eyes widened, taking in the full amount. 'Car' I said again, motioning with my hands to prove my point. There was enough there to probably feed his family for an entire year. He turned around and came back out with a pair of keys in hand.

'In the shed,' he said and pointed to the motel. His accent was thick and foreign, Russian maybe? Instead of waiting around to find out, I grabbed the keys and headed for the door. I quickly did a check of the area and saw nothing but snow-capped trees in every direction. If I focused harder, I knew what I'd see. Shadows weaving in and out of the trees, growling, and keening while they waited for orders.

They were growing in numbers and soon, I knew they'd launch their attack. I sprinted for the shed now in view. I had just made it to the door when the sky darkened if that were even possible at this point, and the clouds formed shapes. To anyone else, it would just look like a storm, but I knew better.

They were coming. The hounds' high-pitched yowls and keens pierced the night. I couldn't wait any longer, another minute and the hunters would show up. The hunters were beings, formerly human, that had gone bad. As bad as you can go.

They had black eyes and fangs that would convince many a human that they were a dark angel. 'If only' I thought. At least a vamp could be staked. I didn't have the first clue of how to kill these things, let alone evade them. I'd only seen them once before and that was way back from my childhood. We'd barely escaped that time.

Their haunting laughter echoed around the valley, chilling me to the bone. I pulled the cover off the only car in the shed, a beat-up old truck. It wouldn't go as fast as I wanted but at least it was sturdy. I'd tried escaping the hounds on a motorbike last time and had ended up with claw marks raked down my back. I still had scars.

I slammed the door behind me and started the engine. Or at least I tried to. All that it got me was a short-choked sound before it cut out. I checked the gas and found it had half a tank. Plenty enough to get me out of here if I could start the damn thing. Trying again, the engine wheezed, unhealthy for a car. 'come on' I urged, my efforts coming up useless.

The engine sputtered to life just as the door to the shed flew open. There had to be at least 20 of them. 'They're going all out this time' I thought mentally. 'Of course, they are' I argued with myself, 'They've got you'. 'Shut up' I silenced that train of thought. Now was not the time for an internal argument.

I stepped on the gas, aiming to take as many of them out as I could manage. Too bad they knew how to use their legs and jumped out of the way. I drove like a bat out of hell, speeding, cutting corners, trying to put as much distance as possible between me and the enemy. I couldn't outrun them but I could lead them in the wrong direction. At least it would give me a chance to escape. Thankfully it had rained and not frozen over yet on the roads. I'd gained about a 5-minute lead on my pursuers so I decided to put my plan into action.

Pulling over I saw a lake up ahead. 'Perfect,' I thought.

I stepped out of the car, careful not to leave any tracks lest they are found. I spotted a big long branch and tested its sturdiness. 'Not bad' I thought. It could be used as a weapon in an emergency. Heading back to the car I kicked it into gear and drove it straight towards the lake, bailing out the door at the last second. Just a tip, when jumping out of a moving vehicle, always roll on landing. It takes away the sting of the impact. Although on snow like I was, that didn't change much. It still hurt like a bitch. I waited until the car sank into the waters, out of sight. Not long after that, the air bubbles stopped surfacing. The entire process had taken a little less than 3 minutes. If I ever managed to get my pursuers to stop following me, I'd have a fair chance in a career as a stunt woman. Not likely to happen though.

I took one last glance around at my surroundings. It paid to be thorough when you were being tracked. I could hear the rumbling of thunder get closer as the clouds above darkened. They'd be here any second. I knew from past experiences that they'd expect me to be on the road, driving away as fast as possible. In other words, easy pickings. The longer they chased, the faster they became. I know, unfair right?

I made my way off the road, into a snow embankment off to the side. Laying down, leaving no trace or sign that I had even stopped the car, it would appear as though the car had kept going. The only issue was my scent. They could be able to smell it only slightly. I generally change clothes a lot to avoid this very thing from happening. I couldn't do much for it at this point, except stay out of sight and pray to whatever powers were out there that I wouldn't be found.

I focus on slowing my breathing. The chill of the snow was seeping into my clothes, making me cold. 'Hang on' I told myself. It would be over soon. One way or another.

The darkening cloud made its way overhead, flashes of light illuminating its depths. Showing outlines of creatures, I wished I couldn't see. My world turned pitch black as the cloud obscured the waning moonlight. It would be dawn soon, the majority of the hunting party would have to return to their realm. The one thing they couldn't stand was sunlight. Some of the more powerful beings and solitaires were able to move about in the daylight, but as the creatures were born of darkness, that would always be their sanctuary.

The scouts were able to survive in the sun as they were originally the offspring of dark hounds and regular Rottweilers from the human realm. As the years progressed, this line evolved into the scouts that plagued my existence today. They were faster, smarter, and more ruthless in their hunt than ever. You see, there are 3 planes of existence. At least, not including those after death. I have no willingness to discover those, the ghost of my past haunted me in memory already. No need to add to that.

The first plane is the dwellers of the light. I didn't know much about them as they hardly ever interfere in the lives of humans. They avoided the depravity of this world, content to just go on existing in the paradise they created some millennia ago. It exists somewhere between the human realms of sky and earth. Where the two meets on the horizon. However, I had no idea how to transcend the barrier between their world and ours, if only I could. To laze away my days, free from worry or pain. No wonder they never leave their realm.

The third plane, that of the Underworlds, or dwellers of the dark, is my biggest problem. This human world is the fuel that feeds them, the wood to their pyre if you will. Underworlds need humans to survive. As I mentioned earlier, they feed off emotion. So, stirring up as much trouble as possible is their goal. The earth is their playground.

Then you get us poor souls stuck in between. Earth is the even ground, a place where the two can connect. Beings from the first plane cannot exist within the third plane and vice versa. So basically, we're screwed. At least, from what I've been told, the beings from the first plane aren't evil. The myth is that they are where the idea of angels and fairies came from. I highly doubt they would terrorize humans like the Underworld's, but then again, you never know.

So-o, this all leads to my current situation in the snowbank. What I wouldn't give to know anything about their world. Ignorance really is bliss.

A streak of lightning arced overhead. In that brief flash, I saw them. The scouts had arrived and passed my hiding place, moving with their inhuman speed, following the road. Not until they were out of sight did I dare to take another peek at the road behind me. Bad idea. As I did another scout came into view. It hadn't seen me and I was confident it could not but the panic still rose in me like always. It never went away in their presence.

The scout stopped dead in its tracks and I noticed, that it was different from the others. This hound was slightly larger than the others, the alpha maybe? I wasn't sure if scouts followed regular canine behavior but I knew that in most pack animals there was always an alpha. This one was black like the others, still had the same glowing red eyes and sharp, pointed teeth. What was different was its markings, or at least is lack of them. The scouts are black with white markings. When they ran, to me they looked like shadows, smoke curling through the air, but what gave them away was the flashes of white you could pick out when they moved.

This one had none. It was just plain black, and it scared the hell out of me.

And it had stopped.

Part: 21

It sat on its haunches in the middle of the road, as if waiting for something.

Someone...

Then, as if from nowhere, a man appeared, and the sky flashed ominously; the wind dying abruptly and all going quietly.

He was tall, really- really tall. He had to be over 6 feet for sure. And my god was he built. Lean muscles barely hidden beneath his black shirt beckoned you closer. I wanted to feel his skin beneath my fingers, to see if that skin was as smooth as it appeared. Too bad I couldn't see his face.

I'd bet he was gorgeous, beyond gorgeous.

Honestly...?

He looked like sex personified. And I wondered briefly what it would be like to snare him in bed. 'He's the enemy' my more rational side reasoned with me in its internal monologue. 'Yeah but for a piece of that, getting caught might be worth it' I retorted.

I dug my fingers into the snow to bring myself back to the present, nothing was worth getting caught. Not ever. But looking at him, I could almost believe it would be.

He crouched down closer to the hound. If he didn't have a long black coat on, I was sure I'd see back muscles rippling invitingly. 'Maybe he'd even have those cute little back dimples' I wondered silently. 'Arielle, cut it out' there it was, my sane side. Having different personalities had always been a problem. Usually, I'd have to concentrate to try and follow the one rational voice, but the other side was always there, owing to my more inappropriate thoughts. Thank god it didn't voice them aloud.

The man was talking, I could only catch mumbles thanks to my cover, but it looked as though he was addressing the animal. Which proceeded to take a look around.

The stranger stood back up and faced towards the lake. I couldn't check to see what he was looking at in case I moved, and the hound saw me. 'What if the car's showing?' I panicked internally. I pushed those thoughts out of my head instead of letting them run loose, panicking would only make me slip up that much faster. The hound was closer now, sniffing around some bushes near my cover. The usual chant was pounding in my head, 'fight or flight'.

If I stayed, I might be found. If I was found in my current spot I would be doomed, no way could I outrun them. There was always the chance they would tire of searching here and move on though. If I ran, they would know it was me in an instant and follow. Tough choice, but I'd never been one to sit around and wait while someone made the decision for me, I never ever had that luxury.

I didn't know if I made the right decision, but then again, second-guessing yourself if what gets people killed on a daily basis. With that thought, I sprang to my feet and sprinted away as fast as I could. I heard the hounds howl and the sound of paws hitting snow as it gave chase. I was thankful there was only one, but I had no idea what the man would do. He was the wild card.

My stamina held, and I fled into the tree line, hoping to lose them in its maze-likeness. The forests in this area of Europe were dense, and the scents of animals were everywhere; hopefully blocking mine out. Then again, mine was fresh..., I concentrated on gauging how far behind my pursuers were and then came to a halt. There was no sound. No branches snapping under heavy paws, no sharp howl piercing the night. Not anything I was expecting; which made me uneasy. They never gave up, especially not if they were this close. I couldn't risk heading back to the road in case there was an ambush set up. Then again- I didn't want to get lost in a forest, stuck in the middle of nowhere, and staying put would lead them to me eventually. What could I do?

I stood there for what felt like an eternity. Even though it was probably only a few minutes. They had me stumped. Not only that, they had me caught.

'Not yet' I reminded myself. I'd been in tough scrapes before and always came out fighting. A plan was forming in my head, hopefully, one that would work. I reasoned that they'd expect me to continue through the forest, at which point they'd have scouts ready to intercept me. Hell, they probably had a perimeter set up around the area. I wondered where the others had gone once they figured they were no longer chasing me.

With that logic, heading back the way I'd come was also out of the question. They'd started to get smarter, catching onto how I thought and adjusting their hunting strategies accordingly. They'd probably have scouts at the entrance to the forest. The sun would rise soon, and they'd have to leave. In other words, they'd start to converge on this spot. I began jogging further down the tree line. Everything was pitch black, I knew the sky would be lightening but the heavy foliage stopped any light from filtering through the canopy. I stumbled a few times, less than I'd expect for walking through a forest at night but ended up with a few scratches none the less.

At one point I even fell and jarred my knee, sending stinging pain all through my leg. What sucked was I couldn't even yell from the pain of it.

I was more careful about where I moved from then on, even the slightest bumping of my knee hurt.

I was close enough to the tree line now that I could see the sky was a pale grey. It had been cloudy for weeks but it looked clearer now like the sun might actually show. 'Not long' I thought. Not long and they'd have to leave, but they'd be getting desperate. I crouched at the end of the trees, biting my lip to stop whimpering. My eyes were tearing up from the pain in my leg.

Up ahead I could make out the shapes of the hounds. The ones watching the entrance to the tree line. They'd made a perimeter like I knew they would. A few were whining and some were snarling, but it was all the same to me. They were the enemy, no matter how animal-like they appeared. They were all monsters.

'We should have found her by now,' one of them whined. He was scrawnier than the others. Going with my theory that the scouts were bred from hounds originally, talking wasn't out of the question. Although the original hellhounds were never this Empathetic sounding. They were creatures to fear, and far less annoying. I wouldn't underestimate the scouts though; one-on-one they were a bump in the road of my day. But they had the ability to signal others, some psychic Telepathy- thing-ie that breached the barriers between our worlds and summoned the others here. As a pack, they were the full-on nightmare. Their power grew in numbers.

Looking at this one though, I'd say he was young. Probably new to the hunting scene. I wish I'd just had him to deal with from the beginning.

Too bad my luck ran out 12 years ago.

I looked further down the line, they were spread out at about 16.4' intervals and continued further than I could see in both directions. My only hope was the sun. The sky was a lighter color now, between blue and grey, soon, I hoped I would see the gold leak in. Unfortunately, before that happened, a hand wrapped around my arm, hoisting me up. The pain in my leg flared and I cried out in pain. Another hand clamped over my mouth, silencing me. The scouts were headed in this direction, investigating the noise.

'Well, well, well. What have we here?' A voice spoke softly in my ear. 'It appears I have found a stray,' he joked mockingly. The scouts reached us then and bent their heads in respect. I'd had my doubts as to who had been able to creep up on me, but not anymore. 'Just in time too,' the voice spoke.

The last thing I saw was the sun break silently over the mountain, spilling golden light into the valley... just as I faded into the darkness.

Part: 22

I was floating on a tide of blissful unawareness. It was dark, but for once, I wasn't scared. Just peaceful. I could feel a cool breeze kiss my skin and continue on its way. I could see colors flashing behind my eyelids, dancing, and spinning into shapes and words I didn't understand. I wondered vaguely if this is what dying felt like. If this was death, then I didn't mind. It seemed a lot easier than life. Life was difficult. Life was a bitch on the best of days. I wanted to stay here, just to float here for eternity. Was that so wrong? I was tired of running. Here there was no need. No worries. No sadness. Just peace. But like I said, life's a bitch.

This time, I didn't want to open my eyes. I had no idea of where I was, and I sure as hell knew there'd be no escaping. I was lying down on something soft, a bed maybe? But that seemed wrong. I'd been captured, more likely to have been thrown in a cell somewhere dark and unpleasant, but that's not what it felt like now. The sheets were silk, smooth against my cool skin. Suddenly I was freezing. The breeze returned, but this breeze was cold, frigid and icy. Adding to my discomfort. If that was even possible at this point.

'You can open your eyes you know, you're safe here.'

I knew that voice. That was the same one from the forest, the whole reason I was here instead of on the road once more. The Stranger.

'Will it make a difference if I see your face before you kill me? I don't think so. And as for safety, you're full of it' I retorted, still with my eyes shut. A bad attitude and problems with stubbornness are the result of living on your own for too long. As would happen to every other teenager in my place.

'You seriously have issues, don't you?' he replied. I liked the sound of his voice admittedly. It was sexy, rolling over your skin, leaving you wanting to hear more. Pitched perfectly between low and smooth. He sounded serious, but also like he was joking. Making fun of me. That pissed me off. Here I was about to die and he's making jokes.

‘You know,’ I said, sitting up and finally opening my eyes to glare at him, ‘You know nothing about me. So, don’t sit there and judge me, because quite frankly, I don’t give a goddamn as to what you think!’ I was finally seeing his face... bad idea. Mainly because I’d been right, he was gorgeous. Like, stop in the middle of a busy road and stare gorgeous, but also because he was grinning. Like getting me to open my eyes had been a game, one he’d just won.

He was staring at my face, my eyes in particular. If I’d been uncomfortable before; it was nothing compared to now. So, I did what I always do - I got snarky.

‘What is your problem? Am I so fascinatingly ugly that you can’t stop looking at my face?’

‘Quite the opposite actually’ he replied. I’d expected an equally sarcastic answer or even a rude comment, but that threw me off. So much that my mouth hung open before I remembered how to operate the lower half of my face.

‘Uh, thanks... good to know,’ I said. It was my usual answer whenever someone said something to me that made me uncomfortable. He was sitting on the edge of, yeah, I was right - the bed, wearing a loose black shirt with the sleeves pushed up, and long black jeans. Although I’d say they were only long due to the fact that so were his legs. And so once again I found myself drooling over the enemy. It was kind of hard not to,

I didn’t get much face time with guys my own age. Or anyone really, and I’d never seen anyone this attractive. He would have destroyed the hotness statistics in Hollywood.

I’d had a friend once when I was in Australia. She’d been my age and went to school like every other kid. I’d been around 14 at the time so ‘apparently’ (not that I’d know considering I didn’t hang out with people my age) meeting new people was the cool thing to do. She approached me while I was looking at some new clothes. ‘I like that one. It would look great on you,’ was all she’d said. She smiled, and I thanked her. For the rest of that day, we hung out, her giving me tips on what would suit me best and me asking her questions about her life. She always complained that her life was boring but to me, it was perfect. She had family, friends and went to school. Everything I’d never had.

One day the scouts managed to track me through her. She had borrowed my jumper and so, carried my scent with her. Not that she knew. I barely escaped that encounter and knew from then on, that having friends was too risky. Any sort of continuity was dangerous.

The stranger must have seen the sadness written on my face but there was no way he'd know what it was about.

Rather than say anything he smiled apologetically. Like he cared.

'What are you doing?' I asked bluntly.

'What do you mean?' he looked baffled.

'Why are we sitting here exchanging formalities when we both know you're just going to kill me anyway. What, do you like to play with your prey before ending its life? Didn't your mother ever teach you manners?' I bit out angrily. He still looked confused.

'You make me sound like a serial killer. I'm not going to kill you if that's what you mean.'

'Then why am I HERE?' I raged. 'Why have you been chasing me my whole life? I don't get to be normal, I don't get to have family or friends or even go to school, and I was okay with that because the alternative was worse. What am I doing here if not to die? What have I wasted my life trying to avoid?' I was running out of steam. I'd been angry for so long and finally had a chance to get it out. Which was exactly what I needed - to vent.

He waited until I'd finished and said only 'You done whining now?'

Part: 23

'Idiot-' That set me off.

'You- asshole!'

You don't care about anyone but yourself! You stupid, arrogant, chauvinistic-' my tirade was cut off when he leaned forward and kissed me. I would never kiss- anyone before and hadn't expected this. This rush of feeling, warmth spreading throughout my body. His lips were soft but his kiss was anything but gentle. It was demanding and hungry - claiming.

'Do you ever stop talking?' he said between kisses. At this point, I didn't care. I couldn't even remember why I was angry in the first place. Slowly, he wrapped my arms around his neck and moved his hands to my waist. I wrapped my fingers in his hair, loving the way it was the perfect length. I gave a little tug which he seemed to like, considering he groaned. I was no longer upright, and his weight pressed me back onto the bed with only clothes separating us. I meant it when I said I didn't care anymore. I was going to die anyway, regardless of what he said earlier. Why shouldn't I get to feel just once, what it is to be wanted? To feel needed for once in my life? I deserved that. So-o, I gave myself over to him completely, without inhibition.

I pulled his shirt off over his head, running my hands down his chest; over each muscle, delighting in the way they tensed beneath my hands. As if my touch drove him insane too.

I kissed his skin the way I had first wanted to when I'd seen him on the road, smiling when I encountered the little back dimples I'd imagined. He pulled me up by the nape of my neck, grasping not roughly, but tenderly now. Kissing me slower, more deeply. His kisses drugging me in their depth. The rest of my clothes fell to the floor, leaving me in just my bra and underwear. I rarely wore nice undergarments, mainly because I never needed to. thankfully, this was one of those times. My favorite pair so far, black and lacy with a small silver A in the middle (coincidence, I swear.)

He caught it and stared intently, smiling slightly before returning to my mouth. My hair had come free of its ponytail, spilling long and golden around us. The color somewhere between honey and sunlight. He ran his fingers through the strands and I realized; I was about to have sex with someone whose name I didn't even know. I pulled away only slightly so that I could look at him. His silver eyes stared back at me in question.

'I don't know your name,' I whispered.

'Taylor' he replied.

All talk was lost after that. Our mouths were busy. The rest of our clothes fell away until we were skin to skin. 'At least you're not cold anymore' the inner voice in my head said to me. The rational side piped back 'You're insane'. Pushing my thoughts away, I silenced them both.

I didn't even hesitate to wonder if what I was doing was right, or sane. I wanted this. He was the last chance I'd have to do this, so I didn't care about his motives or hidden agendas. That was assuming he wasn't just some hot-headed rake out for a good time. Which sounded about right to me. But the way he was looking at me, it didn't feel impersonal. It was like he cared. Maybe on some level, he knew that's what I needed.

We took things slowly, I let him lead. A concession on my part but then, I had no idea what I was doing. It wasn't something you needed to think about though, you just -- knew. It hurt for only a second and then was unlike anything you can imagine. Books and movies can't prepare you for it, they don't even come close. Not really. Sex is just something else. After, I fell asleep resting my head on his chest while he whispered words I couldn't understand and drew circles slowly on my back. I felt weak but in a good way. Not weary like I had been for so long. I was at peace when I let the dreams carry me away from consciousness.

I wish I could like dreaming.

I wish my dreams were the kind you could lose yourself in and wake up with a smile instead of a scream on your lips. I wished for a lot of things I couldn't have.

The first thing I noticed when I woke up was that there was no light coming from the window. I thought, 'Surely I didn't sleep that little an amount of time? Or was it that long?' I didn't know. What I did know, was that I woke up alone.

I looked around. You think he'd be around somewhere after last night. Him. 'Taylor,' I tested the name on my lips, smiling silently to myself. Looking around, I couldn't see any clothes, not even the ones that should have been on the floor, which surprised me.

I stood up, taking the sheet with me, draping the black silk around until it was held in place by my hand clutching the fabric to me.

Picking up the skirts of my makeshift dress with my free hand, I moved towards the balcony. The curtains, like everything else, were black. They were made of a gauzy material and moved in the slight breeze like a shroud, wafting around and grazing my skin. My hair blew around my shoulders, following the direction of the wind and framing my face. The balcony itself was beautiful, in a dark and twisted sort of way. As expected, it was black and made of some sort of rock. The whole thing seemed carved out of marble and polished until you could see yourself in it. I looked down at them reflected in its depths, more than a little daunted by the sheer size and opulence of this place. It seemed more like a palace than a prison.

Closer to the banister, something sparkly caught my eye. I'd always loved sparkly things, my mother used to call me a magpie. God, I missed them.

Moving towards the object, I crouched down to stare at it. It looked so fragile, as though one touch could cause it to shatter into a tiny thousand pieces, this little shard of light in all the darkness. It was the moon. A tiny pendant in the shape of a crescent moon so round, the ends almost touched to form a circle, but not quite. Picking it up carefully with the fingertips of one hand, I wondered what it was made of. Glass? Diamond maybe? If it really were diamond, it would be worth a fortune. It wasn't overly large, but the craftsmanship was incredible, approximately the size of the bottle cap.

'It's yours if you'd like,' he said. I glance back into the room, still in my crouched position and bent over the little gem, to see him stride slowly out onto the balcony. I was surprised I could see at all with how dark it was.

'There is no light here, but I thought you'd like something to remind you of how beautiful the night can be,' he spoke softly. As if afraid to ruin the moment. I could barely look him in the eye, remembering anew the events of the last night, and going more than a little shy. I kept the emotion out of my voice when I replied, 'Will I see it again then?' To which he did not reply. I sighed, 'I love it. How am I supposed to wear it?' If I was going out, then I was going out true to my style. Why not have something beautiful to go with me?

He continued his slow pace to where I was crouched on the ground and I stood cautiously. I held the little moon up to him as an offering, feeling self-conscious in the knowledge that all I was wrapped in was a silk bedsheet. He took the moon from my hands, leaving me to feel slightly deprived of its beauty and motioned for me to turn around. I did as he said and looked down as he fastened it around my neck on a little silver chain that came from who knows where. Maybe he'd had it with him the whole time. He let my hair fall back in place, sliding his fingers through the strands.

I pressed my hand to the necklace lightly, 'It's beautiful. Sure, you're not wasting it on someone like me?' I said quietly.

'Turn around and let me see' he replied. I did as he said and looked up into his silver gaze. 'Exquisite,' he breathed as he lowered his eyelids and bent his head to mine so that only our lips touched. I parted mine softly, in acceptance. I wanted as many of these moments as possible before I died, never mind that he was the cause.

He took my face in his hands and kissed me slowly. As if savoring it as much as I...?

My skin was cool in the night, but I felt myself getting warmer. His body was pressed against mine, holding me close against the breeze. I felt a shiver run down my spine, the good kind, as he kissed the bare skin of my shoulder.

‘You’re cold,’ he said, more of a statement than a question. ‘We’ll have to find you some new clothes’

‘Mmmm, that sounds nice, but maybe later,’ I said, leaning into him. I had no idea where my confidence came from. I didn’t use to be so forward, but then again, I’d never felt so comfortable with someone. I guess death is a good incentive to let go of your fears.

He chuckled quietly. ‘After that marathon last night, you’re still not satisfied?’ I shook my head no and moved past him in towards the bed. I glanced over my shoulder at him, silhouetted on the balcony he looked like something from another world. All tall, dark and dangerous. Every inch of him was divine and I needed the contact of his skin on mine to feel alive. It was like nothing else existed but the two of us at that moment. I sat on the bed still holding the sheet. I didn’t have quite enough confidence to drop it just yet. He looked a little in pain as he sauntered over to me.

‘What is it?’ I asked worriedly. Maybe I’d creeped him out with my pushiness.

‘I can’t right now,’ he said. ‘No! - No, I want to, believe me, you have no idea,’ he started at the surprised look on my face. I’d felt slightly rejected; it was not a nice feeling. ‘I just have some things to do.

I was going to ask if you’d like to come with me, but I wasn’t sure if you were okay after... well, you know,’ he looked a little sheepish. You think it would make him look less attractive but all it did was add a slightly boyish appearance to him. I was still preening over how he said he’d come to see if I was okay.

He cared, although why he should be a mystery to me. It wasn’t making sense to me. Was I going to die or not? There wasn’t really a point in making sure someone’s okay if you were just going to kill them. Which begged the question, what did he want with me? If he thought, he was getting a sex slave he was dead wrong. Although the idea had possibilities... ‘Arielle no! That is so-oo degrading,’ my rational side piped up. I’d come to call her Jane. She was the goody-goody in me so why not give her a similar name?

‘Yeah but it’d totally be worth the hit to your ego,’ my worse side reiterated. We’ll call her Carmen, shall we? Jane and Carmen continued their internal banter while I struggled to figure out what I was going to do. Honesty had always been my best and worst attribute. Apparently, some people didn’t like to be told the truth and I could be pretty blunt at times.

It may or may not have gotten me into trouble a few times in the past.

‘Taylor, are you going to kill me or what?’ I asked when in doubt, go with your gut feeling, and my gut was telling me to get it over with.

‘Didn’t we go over this already? No, I’m not,’ he responded. I felt my brows knit together in confusion. What was I supposed to do then?

‘Why did you follow me then?’ I had to know.

‘Well, that’s what I needed to talk to you about. You’re not going to like it but you’ll find out soon enough, I guess. Just trust me, when Sha-har returns you’ll know everything.’

‘Who’s Sha-har?’ I asked, curious as to this new female entering the picture, who somehow knew what was going on with me even though I didn’t. It didn’t seem fair.

‘Don’t look so annoyed, she’s a very wise, old, woman who I’ve known since childhood. She is respected by all, and that means you too,’ he said meaningfully. I could tell he meant I should behave in front of her.

‘I’m not an animal, I can control myself. So, what do we do for now then?’ I asked him. He seemed to think for a minute, staring at the floor.

‘Of course,’ he said aloud. ‘She can help,’ he was speaking to himself.

‘Uh, Taylor? Who can? What are you talking about?’ I was completely baffled.

‘Well, we do need to leave this room at some point, and unless you want to just wear that,’ he said, motioning at my sheet. I shook my head no. ‘Well, you will need clothes. I’m no good at this thing, however, I know someone who is. She used to be my little sister’s companion, but my sister is known for being a tad unruly. To put it simply, my sister was an absolute little terror and Saber had had enough,’ he explained.

‘Uh, Saber?’ she sounded scary. Who named their kid Saber?

‘It’s a nickname. Her name is actually Sabine,’ he said with a laugh. ‘I’m going to go grab her, do you need anything? There’s a bathroom through there with a shower or bath and toiletries if you need them,’ he said. I followed to where he was looking and saw the shiny black door. I was getting used to expecting nothing else at this point. ‘I’ll be back soon,’ he said, bending down and pressing a light kiss to my lips. I sighed into his embrace but held myself in check. I really did want to clean myself up a little, no doubt I looked horrible at this point.

‘Mmm,’ he breathed into my hair, ‘very soon,’ he got up and left. I laughed quietly to myself. Maybe this wouldn’t be so bad. I wasn’t running for my life anymore, so far it was a nice change of pace.

Part: 24

I stood up and headed into what I hoped was a bathroom. What I found was an entire bathing suit. Off to my left was another door I imagined was the closet but other than that, the ‘bathroom’ was huge. It was more like a completely new annex. Unlike the other room, the ceiling wasn’t several feet above my head. The bedroom was more like a chamber, with a ridiculously high roof. I’d missed it last night but the room was lit by sconces on the walls, they burned a warm glow rather than a harsh light. It was pretty relaxing.

Basically, reminding me of tiny fires. The bathroom was also lit by the fire sconces, and they illuminated everything. From the long-mirrored wall to the enormous bathtub in the middle of the room. The swimming pool was more accurate. What was it with these people and having everything huge? Well, I suppose if you have the money, why not?

The bath, of course, was black marble, and I could see myself in its reflection. I ran my fingers lightly across the surface, it was so smooth. I made sure there was no one around, not that there would have been but I’d gotten so used to having to check, and dropped the sheet to the tiled floor after turning on the taps in the bath. It filled up very quickly, bubbles and all even though I hadn’t put them in. Talk about heaven. I washed my hair and delighted in the way the water slid over my skin, the perfect temperature. I didn’t want to ever get out, however, Taylor had said he’d be back.

‘Taylor... sexy-much?’ I heard Carmen say. ‘I’ll agree on that one, even for someone who you’ve known for what, a day?’ even Jane agreed. That was a first, to my knowledge I hadn’t heard them agree in the 12 years they’d been with me. Don’t ask me what they were, I had no idea. I could just remember them always being there in the back of my mind when I thought about anything. I was pretty sure they were part of my subconscious, which could possibly make me insane. Well, everyone has their issues, mine just happen to have their own personalities.

I'd never responded to them before, more convinced than anything that they were figments of my imagination, but then again, with some of the things I'd seen, you never knew.

'Can you hear me?' I asked internally. If someone walked in, they would probably think I was talking to myself so I didn't say it aloud.

'What do you think Princess? We're in YOUR head, so, I'm thinking yes,' Carmen retorted.

'Carmen! Don't be so rude. Yes, Arielle, we can hear you, loud and clear my dear,' Jane responded.

'Then why haven't you tried to talk to me before now?'

'Because you would have freaked out and had a spaz attack. No way does any of us want to end up in a mental home,' that was definitely Carmen.

'We thought it best to let you come around on your own,' Jane.

'So, every time I heard you and told you to shut up, you really were listening? Man, this is so weird,' I told them.

'Not everything is about your sunshine, this is weird for us too.'

'Yeah, but this is her head Carmen, she has a right to be worried. Personally, I don't think it's anything to stress over. We've been here for a while as you well know.'

Yeah, 12 years to be exact. Ever since the morning after my parents died. Maybe this was just my way of dealing with it, well it was definitely out there.

'Can we pick this up later?' I asked them. I was so not in the mood to deal with this now. On top of everything, learning that I was insane was not on my to-do list.

'Sure,' they both replied in unison.

Part: 25

I got out of the bath, all clean and relaxed. I wiped a section of the mirror to see myself through the steam. A black bath towel was wrapped around me with my hair hanging long and wet down my back. Looking at myself, I thought I might look different after last night. But there wasn't anything. I was still the same, still just me. My blue eyes stared back at me. I suppose I was lucky. Even for all my years of training and running, I didn't have that many scars, excepting the ones down the middle of my back in the shape of ragged claws.

That really had been a bad week. Recovery was almost as painful as the wounds themselves had been. I wondered if Taylor had seen them last night. He must have, they weren't obvious now, but up close you could still see the silvery lines outlined on my tan skin. Sighing, I stepped away and dried off. I managed to find a toothbrush and hairbrush to groom myself a little. I still needed clothing. Taking a final derisory glance at my reflection, I decided I was as cleaned up as I was going to get decided to head for the door. I'd have to face the world eventually.

As I approached the door, someone began banging loudly on the other side.

'Hurry up in there human, I don't have all day,' they yelled. It was female but the sound was distorted through the wood.

'Saber, I told you to be nice, not to scare her,' a voice I recognized as Taylor's replied to her loud yelling.

'Being scared can be good for you every once in a while,' she replied back. 'Besides, not as if I care whether or not she likes me. I'm not here to jump to her tune you know.'

'No, but you will jump to mine and I said be nice.'

I decided I'd intervene before it got ugly. Opening the door, I met the girl head-on. 'Am I interrupting?' I asked with a grin.

She looked me over from head to toe, pursing her mouth at the towel wrapped around me, most likely in what looked like disapproval. Where Taylor was all dark and handsome, this one was all light and refined. She had platinum blonde locks that fell straight to her just past her shoulders and dark emerald green eyes framed by thick lashes.

Her make-up was precise and perfect, not too heavy and complimenting her pale skin perfectly. When he'd said her name was Saber, I was expecting tall and intimidating. Maybe with scars and even piercings, not someone who looked like they spent their weekends at country clubs. She didn't look like she could fend off hello kitty let alone a real threat, and she lived in the underworld?

Maybe...?

Maybe things weren't as bad as I thought they were. Then again, these people are the reason my parents were dead. It'd be stupid of me to underestimate her. She walked around me in a circle and I felt a moment of insecurity. Finishing her inspection, she moved back in front of me and offered her hand to me. 'Saber,' she introduced herself.

'Arielle,' my response sounded wary. And I thought she wasn't intimidating? For a small person, she was rather intense. She looked you dead in the eye when she spoke.

'Okay, well I can work with this. Taylor, go do your thing and come back later when I'm finished with her,' she turned to him and directed towards the door. I shot a confused look at Taylor; he shrugged his shoulders apologetically before turning around and wandering off to god knows where. 'Finished doing what with me?' I asked. I was a tad worried.

'Getting you cleaned up and dressed properly. You don't really seem fit for a prince at the moment. The raw material is there, you just need polishing up.' She said aloud, walking around me again. She picked up a strand of my hair, felt the texture and then let it fall again. I moved away from her scrutiny.

'What do you mean 'fit for a prince'?

'Well, what did you think he was? Do you really think any old person gets to live in the palace? No, you have to be royalty or a close friend. Or servant but you hardly ever see them around,' she said pulling out what looked like a mini handheld. She began tapping away and pressing buttons. I couldn't see so I had no idea what she was doing.

'Care to fill me in on this whole situation?' I hated not knowing things. And it was about time someone told me what was going on here.

She sighed dramatically before launching into her explanation.

'Try to keep up with me, and walk as we talk,' she said, ushering me towards the door of the bedroom.

We entered the hall when she began railing away and it took all my concentration to focus on what she was saying, I didn't notice where we were going or even who passed us, even though I know a few were brought up short when they saw me in a bath towel.

'Okay, so this is how it works. You're in the realm of Aiónia Nýchta, which roughly translated means 'eternal night'. In case you haven't noticed, which I'd say you haven't, there are no suns nor stars or even moons here.

That's because the creatures of this realm do not require them. Personally, I think they'd liven the place up a little, but then again that would be a moot point.' We turned a corner and I saw something black slide down an adjacent hallway. 'You don't want to know what that is so don't ask,' she said bluntly. Saber kept up a good pace as we talked, I was a half head taller than her and was straining to keep up while she continued talking. 'Taylor is the prince of this realm and her mother, the queen, is anxious to meet you. Why I have no idea. Regardless, you can't very well meet her in that,' she said, shooting another disapproving glance at my towel. 'It's my job to at least make you presentable. I'm doing this out of courtesy to her, I owe you nothing.'

'I don't expect you to. I didn't ask you to do this you know,' I reiterated. The last thing I wanted was anyone to owe me anything. I wasn't weak, and I could look after myself. But she was right, if I had to meet royalty, I should at least look respectable. It was Taylor's mother after all. Oh, that was so-oo weird. One day I'm running for my life, the next I'm meeting underworld royalty. Well, life had certainly become interesting.

Like I said, meaning eternal night. Most people just call it the Underworld. Basically, it's home to everything you fear when you go to sleep at night. I don't even like to deal with some of the things that reside here, but home's home, I guess. You'll get used to it... ah! here we are.'

I finally looked up from the floor to be presented with a large glass door. It was mirrored glass so I couldn't see inside, but scrawled on the mirror in red was 'Illyria.' Saber waited a moment before pushing open the door. She appeared to be readying herself for something. I decided not to ask.

She pushed the door open to reveal the first room I'd come across that wasn't black. It was done in royal tones of red. Red drapes framing large glass windows, thick, plush red carpeting, and red velvet settees and lounges. Seated on one of the settees reading what looked like a romance novel was a woman who appeared in her early 30's. She looked upon our arrival and squealed in delight at Saber, who noticeably cringed. Saber squeezed her eyes shut as the woman launched off the couch and ran to her, throwing her arms around Saber's waist and laughing happily. She was all but jumping up and down on the spot.

'Saber honey, I'm so glad you decided to visit me today. Did you hear? I'm engaged!!!' she said, pointing at the rock weighing down her left hand. That thing could take an eye out.

'Yes, I did. I'm so happy for you,' Saber said it sincerely, just without as much enthusiasm. 'And I'd love nothing more than to ask when and how he finally proposed, but we have more pressing matters.' 'More pressing than my engagement? Oh, who's your friend?' she said, turning to face me.

'I'm Arielle,' I introduced myself, needing to reassert my independence after being handed off from person to person. It got a little degrading after a while.

'She's staying in the west wing,' Taylor added, looking subtly at me before glancing back at the woman. The woman's mouth dropped open, apparently, something had shocked her.

'No way,' she breathed. 'You finally found her then? Does she know?' she asked Taylor, ignoring me completely except for a few awed looks.

'No, and we can't be the ones to tell her. It's not our place,' she replied firmly.

'You take all the fun out of this you know,' the woman began to pout.

'I'm standing right here you know,' I pointed out, even though I'd known Taylor wouldn't tell me about the big news. I'd find out later and blah, blah, blah. This sucked. And I was still in a bath towel to top it off.

What a day this was turning out to be.

'She is to meet the queen later to discuss the situation. For now, I've been told to get her at least presentable. Can you help?' she asked.

'Of course, I can hun, you came to the right place,' she turned to me then. 'Hi, sorry about that, I'm not usually so rude. The name's Illyria, but Lia's fine,' she said with a grin. Her laugh lines showed when she talked, but overall, I'd say she was a very attractive woman. She had curly brown hair, cut short to above her shoulders. I wasn't sure, but a certain way's when it caught the light, her hair looked slightly red. I think the correct term for the color was mahogany.

‘Lia was a good friend of my mothers. She is also the royal beautician and is going to help you. Play nice guys,’ she said, gliding over to a settee and dropping down to pick up the book Lia had discarded in her excitement; she began reading where Taylor had left off.

Then, the room shifted.

We were no longer in the red room, but what looked like a salon. White walls covered by so many mirrors I couldn’t count were complimented by a bright crystal chandelier in the ceiling. It rained downlight on everything, reflecting in mirrors and temporarily blinding me. I had to squint while my sight adjusted.

‘Sorry, I forgot to warn you, the initial change of a room is hard on human eyes,’ she said, Imitating me on the shoulder. I wondered what they meant when she kept saying, human. Then again, I was in another realm. She indicated a chair over to the left where a bench in front of a mirror was covered with all sorts of tools for cutting hair and doing nails. There was also an assortment of creams and masks and some vials of liquid I couldn’t identify. I swear one of them moved.

Yeah, I was definitely scared. As if on cue, an entire group of beings appeared. They were extremely small, barely reaching Taylor’s waist and extraordinarily pretty. They were male and female and all different. Some had left in their hair while some had ice crystals glittering on their eyelashes. The only thing they had in common was their eyes. They were black.

‘These are the divine. They are safe, trust me,’ Taylor said as she began rubbing some form of liquid into my hair. ‘This will go easier with some music. Kael, would you mind?’ she spoke to one of the da’veen. He had raven black hair that glistened in the light and I’m pretty sure I saw feathers near the collar on his back. he nodded once before leaving. After a moment, the most beautiful sound I had ever heard began to play in the room. I looked to see the raven-being playing what looked strangely like a flute only it didn’t sound like anything I had heard. It was soothing like nothing you would believe. I felt the leather of the chair as I lay back, letting the music calm me. I had to trust these people, what other choice did I have?

I have no idea how long I was in that place for. It felt like it had been hours. Considering there was no sun I couldn’t even tell if it was day or night. All I knew was that they’d spent a lot of time on me. I’d like to say their time was wasted, but really it wasn’t. They were good at what they did.

‘So hun, what do you think?’ Taylor spun my chair around to face the mirror. It took everything in me not to gasp.

The creature staring back at me looked as if they belonged here, an enchantress. Her skin was flawless, full of life. Her hair, spun gold, hanging to her waist in elegant spirals. Everything about her was polished to perfection. She’d even give Taylor a run for her money. Dark sapphire eyes were rimmed by thick dark lashes, her lips lush and the color of pale roses. I looked down at my hands, even the nails were buffed and polished. I’d never had nice nails because I trained too much to bother with painting them - it had always chipped off. I’d never bothered with any of these things, it was all new to me. So, I found myself staring back at the beauty in my reflection.

‘Is that me?’ I asked, then realized how stupid I sounded. Of course, it was. I raised a hand, watching my reflection copy the action, lightly grazing the skin of her neck. It was smooth and soft. Her skin - my skin.

‘Of course, it is. You look stunning,’ she said, beaming with pride at her work. ‘I must admit though; you were a bit of a disaster when you came in. It was like you’ve never even had a haircut,’ she said with a visible shudder. I looked at the ground. I knew I wasn’t much to look at.

Not exactly as if I had reason to worry about my appearance, I never went anywhere. I probably reminded them of a stray dog, rough around the edges and homeless. While my hair was long, it had been unruly and in bad need of a cut. Not to mention my skin had been lacerated by the branches in the forest, my knee was proof of that. At least I thought it was. ‘It hasn’t even bothered me these last few... whatever it’s been since I got here’ I reasoned with myself. I bent forward and lifted the hem of dress they’d put me in when I’d arrived. Narrowing my gaze, I lightly touched the skin of my knee, it was completely healed. Not even a scratch was visible on my skin from any of my cuts. ‘How?’ I asked Taylor, glancing back up to look at her.

‘How what?’ she said distractedly, still fussing with my hair arrangement. She was pulling it up and twisting the length of it, trying different styles.

‘I’m going to leave it down, somehow I think you’ll be more comfortable that way.’

She motioned to one of her assistants who held up a pair of diamond earrings. ‘No, the other ones, those are too distracting. She needs something simpler, when will you learn Niami?’ The creature huffed and walked away, returning with a small pair of what looked like tear-shaped sapphires on a bed of diamond shards made to look like a delicate web.

‘O-oh perfect!’ Taylor crooned, giving her assistant a zealous nod of approval. ‘Here,’ she said, handing them to me. ‘Put them in while I find some matching hair clips, I changed my mind about your hair, we’ll leave it down but I’ll pull back some of the weight and just fasten it around the back.’

Most of what she’d said hadn’t even registered with me, I was too busy admiring the earrings but more importantly, wondering how to put them in. I’d never gotten my ears pierced.

‘Slight problem,’ I said interrupting her. She looked at me quizzically.

‘Yes, dear?’ I pointed to my ear lobes in response.

She stared, confused for a moment until realization spread across her face.

‘Oh, well,’ she pursed her lips thoughtfully, ‘we’ll just have to do something about that. I’m sure you don’t mind now do you?’ she smiled and straight away one of the creatures, this one was slightly greenish in color with long strands of seaweed for hair, handed her what looked to me like a gun. I tensed automatically, unsure of what was going on.

‘You okay? You can relax, this will only hurt for a moment. Besides, I’m sure you’ve felt worse before...’ She readied herself by a table, picking up random objects then putting them down again. She turned around, obviously having found what she was looking for, and held up both the gun and some kind of cream in a jar. It had a label but it was written in some strange language that used a mixture of cursive symbols and images.

‘I take that isn’t a real gun, right?’ I said, I had no idea what was going on, but I was unarmed in any case. I liked Taylor, but someone that erratic was unpredictable.

‘Oh sugar, heavens no! I’m not going to shoot you, dear, it’s my job to make you flawless, why on Earth would I kill you before anyone had even had the chance to see my work?’ she shook her head, laughing at the idea. It made sense. But I still didn’t miss the fact that she hadn’t said she wouldn’t kill me, just that she wouldn’t kill me before someone had seen her work. I needed to be more careful, I didn’t know these people, any of them. They could all be serial killers, then there was the fact I still didn’t know what my purpose was in all of this. Hopefully meeting the Queen would clear things up.

‘Okay, so this is what I’m going to use to pierce your ears child. Are you going to be able to sit still for me? It’ll only take a sec,’ she continued talking while wiping my earlobes with what I assumed was disinfectant from the smell. It almost stung my eyes with its intensity.

Part: 26

‘Yeah whatever, I’ll be fine,’ relieved that it wasn’t an actual weapon, I settled back into my chair, closing my eyes to take my mind off the coming pain. She was right, I had been through much worse. Once, a few years ago, I’d been running from a scout through some tiny village in Africa made up of dirt roads and make-shift sheds. Just one scout followed my trail, a newbie who had no idea what he was doing.

However, in my over-confidence, I’d neglected to see what was straight ahead. I’d been checking over my shoulder when I fell, straight down into a ditch on the side of the road containing the wreckage of some broken-down cart. I had been in a lot of pain, most of which came from my left arm. Right where I’d landed on part of the cart with a few nails sticking out. I groaned quietly and forced myself to be quiet altogether, the scout was still around somewhere. After what seemed like an age without any sign of the scout, I’d gotten myself out of the ditch to the closest place I could find medical aid. The scout never found me, but I could still remember afresh the pain of that injury and shuddered involuntarily.

‘There we go! All done. You alright sweetheart?’ I looked in my reflection, surprised at how smoothly she had pierced my ears. I’d barely even felt a twinge of pain.

‘Wow, they’re so...’ I was at a loss for words.

‘Shiny? Beautiful? Suit you perfectly?’ she supplied. I laughed,

‘Yeah, they great. Thank you, Taylor, for everything.’

‘Oh, that’s quite alright, but we aren’t done yet. Now to find you something to wear!’ She then squealed happily like a girl who had just unwrapped her first Barbie at Christmas, and the room shifted. The beautiful were creatures gone, and we were back in what I was calling the ‘Red-room’ where Taylor was still flicking through the same romance novel.

Taylor glanced up for a moment automatically, then had to look again. This time her emerald eyes went wide with surprise. She let the book fall to the floor as she stood, appraising me from head to toe, this time without the disapproval of any kind.

‘My God,’ she whispered, ‘how did you do it? She actually looks... decent.’ I had a feeling Taylor wasn’t the kind of person who liked being outdone. I wasn’t saying I was better than her in any kind of way, just that she didn’t like the idea that I could have made such a dramatic transformation. I was a little miffed that she’d put it down to ‘decent’ though.

‘Decent? Taylor honey she looks hot,’ Taylor said with a suggestive waggle of her perfectly arched eyebrows. Taylor half-smiled, not saying anything, just continuing to shake her head as she circled me. She came to stand in front of me, ‘Time to get you out of that silly towel. Follow me,’ with that she headed straight towards the door after promising Taylor she would stop by for a real chat the moment she had time free.

Taylor waved enthusiastically after Taylor and even gave me a motherly hug and kiss on the cheek before saying, ‘Go, have fun my sugar and remember,’ suddenly her eyes turned serious and she dropped her smile, ‘whatever happens, not everything is as it seems.’ I looked at her immediately on guard, completely shocked by this change in her behavior, but as soon as it came, it was gone. Replaced by another peel of laughter and an apology while she ran off to ready herself for the night’s events. I stood, frozen, in the middle of the room trying to understand what she’d meant. Or if she’d really said it at all.

‘That woman is a certifiable bucket of crazy,’ Carmen supplied for me.

‘Well, that did seem rather odd... She was so nice though,’ Jane reiterated. I pressed two fingers to my temple and closed my eyes, this chatter was going to drive me crazy.

‘O-ooh drive you crazy? Like it isn’t bad enough I share a conscious with miss goody-two-shoes over here, but I also have to deal with your insecurities as well?’ her tone was snarky, I figured she was just warming up for an argument.

‘Carmen! Enough, without her, we wouldn’t even be alive. Not everything is about you, you know. I’m really sorry Arielle, she’s just having a bad day... ‘A separate conscious within my mind has its own bad day... sure, why not.

‘Whatever guys, listen, I don’t really know what this is, or even that you were able to communicate with me until now, so just give me some time to figure it all out yeah? I kind of have a lot on my plate right now...’ I heard Carmen huff but thankfully she stayed quiet. Jane was quiet also - but I could feel more of an apologetic feel emanating from her. Seriously, what the hell was wrong with me that I would put myself in this kind of situation. Hell, I didn’t even want to think about where that road would lead... crazy central, population me.

‘Arielle! What the hell are you doing? Let’s go!’ Taylor called out to me from outside the door, annoyance stamped across her beautiful features. I rolled my eyes and began following her through twisting hallways, the heavy question playing on my mind of what would happen to me tonight. What did Taylor’s words really mean? Whatever the case, I would need to be prepared.

Part: 27

I stood in the center of Taylor’s closet, relieved to find it was like any other closet I’d seen. In all honesty, I’d been expecting some kind of grand chandelier or her own personal wait-staff. Instead, she rummaged around through rows of clothes obviously with something in mind.

‘Ugh,’ she said with a cry of frustration, ‘I know it’s here, I only just had it made...’ I fidgeted with the hemline of my towel, afraid at what she would pull out. I prayed it wasn’t going to be some flouncy, pink monstrosity. Then again, Taylor wasn’t exactly my greatest fan and it seemed like her style of revenge.

‘Finally,’ she said, exhaling with relief. She carefully unzipped the long black garment bag to reveal a floor-length gown straight out of ancient Greece. Its color was of the deepest black, complete with matching black shoes so sharply heeled I was sure - I could use them as a weapon if needed. The dress was made of the most delicate mixture of chiffon and silk, the type material that seemed to sway even when held still. It reminded me of the shadows that surrounded the hounds. I felt a chill run down my spine at the thought and began feeling anxious. The feeling of entrapping, meant strong in my mind while I tried to fight the urge to flee entirely. I couldn’t do this, it was ridiculous. One moment I’m running for my life, the next a ball? No. Something was very wrong here.

Part: 28

So, things have changed enchantingly, not quite charmingly, I and Damen are in peace for now, to his parents, we turn with a disgraceful bow. But something doesn’t seem right or is it me, they try to get rid of might? I try to pretend it isn't true, but all along I should have known, that revenge lives with no mercy on me, and peace is my only hope, my life, and key.

Damen and I are Bound Together, no matter what happens, we have Eternity Forever...

My feet slowly stepped back, towards the exit, of their own accord. My heartbeat picking up in pace. Taylor was still checking the dress as I turned to run. I reached my hand out, grasping at the air in front of me to get to the door handle until suddenly she was right there - blocking the exit.

'Where will you run? One step outside the city, the palace even, and you'll be dead.' She didn't bother with any pretenses, all the walls between us gone. I stared her down easily but something in her gaze almost made me hesitate.

Almost. I struck out, my aim to knock her out of the way so I could escape, but she was far quicker than I realized. In an instant she ducked around me, moving like the wind and shoved me against the wall, a thin blade came from who-knows-where pressed against my jugular.

'Taylor, let me go,' I struggled against her, surprised by her impossible strength.

'Enough with this foolishness, if I had my way you would already be dead! For whatever reason, you are the key to survival for all of us,' she hissed between clenched teeth. 'If you only knew the things we have sacrificed, the people we have lost-'

'The people you've lost?' I yelled, 'And what about my parents? I have nothing because of your people,' I spite the word 'people' out, my voice was dripping with anguish and pain at the memory of everything I'd had torn away from me - everything I missed.

'You should not be so quick to judge us. You were a child when that happened, you don't know anything! I knew your parents Serena; I was there that night at the cabin. We are not your enemy - we are the only thing keeping you alive. You've been living in your own selfish dreams for far too long, it's time to wake up,' she let me go and I slid to the floor, too stunned by her heated words to think straight. My mind screamed at me to run away, but my body froze, my expression tore. Was she right? I heard the truth in her voice, she believed in what she had said.

I looked up at her, the disgust she felt towards me evident on her face as she waited for me to say something, anything. Nothing came, only silence.

‘Look, you don’t trust me, and let’s face it, I hate you. I have too much invested in you to kill you but by God, if I had the choice...’ Her eyes conveyed how much she meant those words. ‘You want answers? For everything that’s happened? Get a grip. Stand up, put the damn dress on, and prepare yourself for tonight,’ her voice began to even out as she calmed down, becoming more stern than angry. She rolled her eyes at me as I stood, ‘I know you think you’ve had it rough; no one should lose their parents.’

‘Taylor,’ I cut her off. ‘I’ll wear the dress, I’ll go through all the stupid motions you want me to for tonight, but do not mention them again,’ I warned her. I couldn’t bear the thought that all these years I’d been wrong. I hated these people for what had happened, without that hate, I almost had nothing to keep me going. If it wasn’t them, I would find out who it was and kill them.

‘Then we have an understanding?’ She met my gaze levelly, seeing the change in my resolve, the strength with which I now stood. I simply nodded in response, unable to wait to hear what this so-called Queen had to say.

‘About time.’ ‘Arielle?’ Jane’s timid voice echoed in my head... I ignored her. I ran my finger along the razor-sharp edge of my heels, hoping I wouldn’t need to use them. No more running. I wanted answers and it was now or never.

‘Where are you?’ I muttered to myself, looking for the passage to meet Giselle.

‘Who is it...?’ the wall, Jade whispered.

‘It’s Marissa,’ I whispered back and giggled.

‘I don’t know any Marissa so leave me alone,’ it whispered. I laughed.

‘Oh Jade, for heaven’s sake! Let her in,’ Giselle said, exaggerated. Jade crumbled, shook heavily and fell into pieces. I quickly stepped in and again as I looked back, it was fixed together as nothing broke. I stifled a laugh and shook my head. I remembered the way to Giselle’s chamber which at first was slightly scary. If you ever considered living inside a wall, trust me it’s not very exciting. The door to Giselle’s chamber creaked, lack of oil I suppose. Giselle smiled at me as I entered. She looked the same. Blue dress, same hairstyle, and beautiful blue eyes. I sat on my knees, facing her.

‘How’s life...?’ She teased. I eyed her.

‘And you ask me...? You already know!’ I laughed. She grinned and blushed.

‘Not my fault,’ she shrugged.

‘I know. Aren’t you going to ask me why I’m here?’ I joked.

‘I’m surprised to say I don’t,’ she said, and I knew she was serious. I didn’t blame her. She has her own life to live. Not that she does much but hey, I can’t judge someone.

‘My parents. My old home. I want to see if they are alright,’ I tapped my hand immanently.

‘What makes you think they aren’t?’ She frowned. I shrugged. I hadn’t forgotten one Rumor. A rumor about my sisters, one of them in love with a slave. I could never forget that. Especially hearing it from Damen made it true. She tilted her head, studying me in curiosity.

‘Alright. Close your eyes if you wish to,’ she said.

I didn’t. I wasn’t scared. I watched her as her eyes began to beam green and her jaw dropped as if she saw something terrifying. She snapped back to normal and shifted her hand bringing in the mist. Colors formed in the mist, painting a moving picture of Nora and Ella. I squealed at their presence. I was so happy to see them, I wanted to wrap my arms around them but all I would’ve had would be hugging myself through the mist. I calmed myself. They were in my old room, sitting on my couch.

Nora sighed but smiled gently.

‘What are you going to say to mother and father?’ Ella asked, softly.

‘I don’t know. They won’t understand,’ Nora said, bitterly.

Ella gently clasped her hand on Nora’s and gave a squeeze.

‘What’s his name...?’ Ella asked. His name...? Who can that be? I wondered.

‘I thought you knew,’ Nora’s eyes traveled on Ella again.

‘I don’t know his name,’ she returned.

‘He- his name is Jayden,’ she said and had that warm smile on her face.

‘Jayden... What’s his Sirname?’ Asked Ella.

‘That is what he won’t tell me. He’s hiding it from me. It scares me.

There could be something bad he could’ve done. I’m going to meet Captain Coral today and I’ll ask to look in Jordan’s profile,’ Nora explained. Jayden, huh. She never told me but said everything to Ella. It made me angry, hurt, and upset. Did they not trust me? My anger made my fingers curl. Calm down, Giselle’s voice mysteriously spoke in my head. I was getting annoyed with that.

I calmed myself and my shoulders relaxed. I continued watching them talk.

Part: 29

‘I’m going to meet Jayden. I’ll be back later. Take care, Ella,’ said Nora. Ella escorted Nora to the door and they said goodbyes. It hurt that I wasn’t talked of anymore. No one wished to talk about me. My face fell for a moment and I glanced back at the mist which changed and viewed Nora heading to meet Jayden. She walked past Captain Coral’s door and knocked on the door next to his. Come in, they yelled and she entered. It was quiet as everyone was in their room. She kept walking until she came to a halt on a door that said, PRACTICE ROOM 59- JAYDEN.

She knocked. There was an exhausted sigh before he said, ‘Come in,’ Nora entered and their eyes lit up. He was quite handsome but held no interest of mine. His hair was glossy black that covered his forehead, his face had a relaxed jaw, his eyes were grey, he was muscular and had a dazzling smile not that I fell for it. He was dressed in armor like he ready for battle. He jumped up at the sight of Nora and within a minute she was in his arms. They laughed. He pulled back but rested his hands on her waist.

‘Nora! I haven’t seen you in a long time,’ Jayden exclaimed. Nora laughed.

‘Sorry- I was away. Had some jobs to be done. Orders from father,’ she explained. He nodded. He kissed her forehead and hugged her again.

‘I wanted to ask something,’ Nora lowered her gaze. He pulled away and took a step back.

‘No- I can’t tell! I-I don’t remember,’ he stammered. I guess he meant his surname. What’s harmful to know that?

‘I didn’t mean to frighten you...’ apologized Taylor.

‘It’s alright,’ he sighed.

‘Why are you scared to tell? Is there something wrong?’ she frowned.

‘I can’t tell,’ he repeated firmly. I wanted to slap him. What did Taylor see in him? So- mean he was and stubborn!

‘Oh- I see. I’ll take my leave. Have a good day, Jayden,’ she said flatly and before Jayden could utter a word, Taylor had already left. The mist disappeared...

‘What happened?’ My eyes widened...

‘I- I’m not sure... I don’t know. It just vanished without my command like someone is blocking it,’ she stammered.

‘I will tell you what happened later on. Right now- I suggest you leave,’ frowned Giselle. I stood slowly and walked out from her chamber and Jade cracked and fell and I dropped out. I, without a word, marched straight to the garden and sat under the tree. It’s night already.

I leaned against the tree and watched the stars twinkle and the moon that glowed with no words to describe it. What happened in the chamber, with Taylor, Jayden...? I couldn’t take it. I didn’t want to find out like this and I never intended to. Someone blinded me with their soft hands on my eyes. I knew who it was by just his scent of forest green and mint. His breath tickled my neck.

‘Damen?’ I questioned, even when I knew it was him. I giggled. He stole his hands back and leaned forward to kiss my cheek.

‘What are you doing out here in the cold?’ he raised his brows. He looked lustrous. At night like this one, his sapphire eyes sparkled and glowed. They looked big too. He just wore a full-sleeved loose white shirt- and comfortable black trousers. I shrugged at him.

‘Felt tired of sitting in the house so I came here,’ I grinned. From behind, his arms hugged my shoulders and he looked down at me. I rose up and kissed him.

I clasped the thick metal around my wrists, hearing the loud click in the empty dressing room, matching silver bands to complement the style of the gown swaying around my figure as I moved about.

‘Please, listen to me. You don’t have to do this; I’m sure Taylor is just confused. They could be lying you know,’ she tried cajoling me.

‘Jane enough, just let her go. She needs to know the truth.’

‘What if it’s a trap? Maybe Taylor really was lying,’ I could hear the panic in her voice.

‘I’ll be ready.’ I responded; all emotion devoid from my inner voice. I was in fight-mode, no feelings, just logic, and pure instinct. Taylor was right about running, where could I go? I needed to play along with their game. At least until I could get out alive. It was like we were all in one big game of chess, I would wait patiently for my turn, hell, I might even get to take out their Queen.

‘Oh, please don’t let it come to that, Carmen, she’ll, we’ll be killed, tell her!’

‘I’m with her on this Jane. We need a way out. I don’t care what they say, I don’t trust them. What I wouldn’t give to destroy Taylor though, she’s got it coming.’ I agreed. I’d misjudged her, she was strong for her size. Deadly. And me? I’d been taken off guard, open, vulnerable to her words. I wouldn’t make that mistake again. I didn’t train every day for anything.

‘Let’s do it,’ Carmen’s resolve was strong and I drew strength from her. I’d come to depend on these two more than I’d realized for the better part of my life. Jane’s compassion and Carmen’s fierceness. They blamed me entirely; I suppose it was lucky I had them.

‘You’re welcome,’ Carmen said. I could feel Jane nod quietly, not needing to say anything, conveying her agreement with a wave of peaceful serenity washing through me. I sighed, slipping a ring on my right pointer. Someone knocked quietly at the door and I turned my head to investigate. My long hair grazed the exposed skin where my dress parted. In classic Greek style, it had a low waist, with the material held in place only by a silver clasp on either shoulder. The neck and back plunged to the waistline. I stood abruptly, startled as he opened the door and stuck his head in. I’d been expecting Taylor, hoping she was back to her icy-demeanor after our little tete-a-tete earlier. At least we knew where each other stood now.

I was instead surprised to see Taylor waltz in, striding straight across the room. Before I could even utter a hello, he’d slipped his arms around me and dipped me low, crushing his mouth to mine. I pulled back immediately, unsure if this is what I wanted now that my impending death was at least postponed. It was only then I realized something was amiss... It was his scent. I couldn’t place it right, but it definitely was different. He righted me without releasing his hold and I took the opportunity to try and pinpoint why I was suddenly feeling estranged from him.

‘That isn’t the way to greet your betrothed now is it?’ He said with a smirk. I filed the betrothed comment away for later. He tried to kiss me again and I ducked my head, breaking away from him. I turned to face him straight on and found what I’d been looking for.

‘You’re not Taylor.’ It was a statement, not a question. The eyes were the wrong color. Taylor’s eyes were green, forest green, the darkest shade of emerald. Whoever this was, his were lighter, jade green with flecks of brown that looked almost gold.

‘What are you talking about, it’s me...’ he said, moving towards me with arms outstretched.

‘Come near me again and I promise to make you infertile. Who are you?’ I stood with my back to the door and nearly jumped out of my skin when someone laid a cool hand on my back. I spun around, amazed someone could have snuck up on me. It’s like these people were dead with how silent they could be. Taylor stood before me, dressed in a silver one-shouldered gown, dripping in diamonds to match.

‘Get out,’ she ordered the stranger. He lifted one side of his mouth in a half-smile and mock bowed.

‘As you wish,’ he glanced back to me as he straightened, winked, and then disappeared, leaving nothing but a few wisps of dark smoke hanging in the air. I pinched the bridge of my nose, ‘Do I even want to know?’ I asked aloud.

‘Probably not. Regardless, I’m going to tell you. I’m surprised you knew it wasn’t Taylor, not many people can tell the twins apart. Well, at least anyone who hasn’t spent time with them.’ Oh god, twins?

‘There’s two of them?’ Carmen exclaimed I could almost visualize her excitement as if it were corporeal.

‘Oh no,’ Jane was far more apprehensive. I was on her side. This was going to be problematic. I took comfort in the fact that I could at least tell them apart up close.

‘Did he hurt you?’ Taylor asked, there was something in what she’d said, some emotion I couldn’t identify.

‘Not in so many words. He just got a little too friendly.’ I narrowed my eyes, ‘Please tell me he doesn’t play that game often.’

‘Not unless he has someone new to play it on. Let’s go, Taylor’s waiting.’ I felt my stomach clench; the betrothed comment made its way to the front of my thoughts. Maybe it was time to put a nice big stopper in whatever was between us until I figured everything out.

I took in every little detail on my way through the winding corridors, ensuring I could at least navigate this section of the palace if need be. Multiple creatures, small in stature and all the same pale shade of grey moved about aimlessly, or at least that’s what I thought. What was most frightening about them was the fact that they had no faces, it was like their translucent skin had been pulled tight across their skull, leaving only small valleys where their eyes and nose should have been. Whenever I moved past them, their socket-eyes stared at me, their head the only part of their body that followed my Emmah. I repressed a shudder and tried to ignore them while an intense feeling of unrest began to stir beneath my skin. I focused my gaze forward now, paying attention only to the back of Taylor’s dress, afraid at what else I might find lurking in the hallways. She had said I wouldn’t want to know about certain things in the palace, she was right.

It was sad that I had to break away the lovely moment but I wanted an answer. He brushed my hair behind my ear.

‘Have you heard of a soldier named, Jayden?’ I asked. He narrowed his eyes and studied me before saying, ‘Maybe’ It was my turn to narrow my eyes.

‘I want a specific answer,’ I said, firmly.

‘Why do you want to know about him?’ he tilted his head. I couldn’t tell him about Giselle. Taylor... I could tell him that since he told me the rumor.

‘Eh- hmm, remember back at my house when I was to show you around in the mansion, and you told me something about one of my sisters being in love with a slave?’ I asked. He hesitated, then nodded his head slowly.

‘Well, I just figured out his name. It’s Jayden,’ I said. He raised an eyebrow.

‘Jayden? Hmm not exactly tired, were you? ‘The house is too tiring’” he rolled his eyes. Here we go again.

‘Please. Tell me,’ I pleaded.

‘Sure, my love. But why do you want to know? What’s his life to do with yours?’ He retorted.

‘Its... It’s nothing to do with me- I can’t tell you just yet...’ I stammered. He glared at me. The deathly glare. The one that makes you kill yourself if you were to choose between death and his glare. I’d wished to die right there.

‘Fine. Don’t tell me. But as a husband I have a right to know for some man my wife seems to be so interested in,’ he got to his feet and walked in the direction of the stables.

‘Damen! No, you’ve got the wrong thought. Please come back!’ I called after him, but he didn’t stop. I bit my lip to stop myself from crying but this time it didn’t work. I whimpered, and tears slid on my cheeks.

I woke up at the sound of birds chirping above me. I massaged my eyes and saw the sun, fully risen. I had fallen asleep in the garden.

Damen... Something about Damen. The-misunderstanding about Jayden.

Damn it! You should have told him, he’s yours after all... Giselle’s voice spoke in my thoughts.

Maybe- I should have. He would have understood. He always did. I rose to my feet and ran to the stables. Laura was still asleep but a little step of mine, her eyes opened instantly and she neighed at my arrival. I jogged to her and hugged her. My beautiful Laura who I haven’t seen for a long time now. I am quickly grand on the opposite shelter. Blackwell was nowhere in sight.

He was gone... Which meant Damen hadn’t returned home last night. Fear jabbed in my chest. I immediately let Laura out and sat on her back. She galloped towards the main gates as fast as she could, which, believe me, she was very fast. The guards opened the gates and Laura galloped in the forest. I pulled her mane and she stopped. I glanced sideways of the forest and had no idea where to start. That’s when I heard it. It was a faint cry. It was a shrilling cry. Like a... Horse - a horse like... Blackwel. There was a yell and after that, Blackwel’s cry no longer echoed in the forest.

Taylor never once spoke a word to me, I didn’t even register a tilt of her head, so she must have assumed I would be behind her the whole way. I would have tried wandering off if not for the fact that she would have dragged me by my hair to our destination. I made a mental note to provoke her later, so I could get a serious gauge on her skills as a fighter.

Hell, I'd possibly try and glean some information from Taylor as well - nothing like a little stealthy digging to find out what you wanted to know.

Taylor turned right down a set of stairs that opened into a foyer. Just beyond the foyer was another balcony. Outside looked as dismal as ever. Ever-roaming clouds of black curled in on themselves, a giant blanket of deepest night spanning the never-ending sky. There wasn't even a horizon. I felt like I was staring into an ocean in the dead of night, it was unsettling like at any minute it would rain from the sky, drowning us all. It was a lost sky, belonging to a lost city in a lost world. There was nothing but death here. I didn't pause to take another look, it would only cause me to become more afraid and desperate than I already was because, in that dark void of a sky, there was no light. No light meant no way out.

The light clicking of solid silver heels on tile echoed as we walked in silence, I noted how quiet Jane and Carmen seemed to be, even they had no idea what was to become of tonight.

Suddenly Taylor stopped and turned her head towards me, barely.

'Once we go through here, you are on your own. I have done as I was asked and got you ready- but the rest is up to you. Do you want answers? Then I suggest you behave yourself and listen to Taylor. He'll be all the help you need.' She disappeared through a set of opaque curtains stretching from floor to ceiling, the only form or doorway into whatever lay beyond. I stepped forward, about to follow her when I couldn't help but pause. What was I doing?

Taylor seemed to think- I was something special, unknown. What if they were wrong? Once they figured out, I wasn't who they thought, I would be killed instantly. I was just some human girl, one with albeit the worst luck in the world, but the wrong girl none-the-less. I ran through all the possible scenarios in my head. Then again, a tiny voice whispered within, what if they were right? They could tell me the answers I had craved since childhood. The fate of my parents, my place in all this, it was only a step away.

It could also be a trap.

I took a deep breath, and made the final decision, possibly to end my life.

I stepped through because really, there was never another option.

The soft material of the curtain parted around me, and I was again amazed by how unreal this place was, it was like I'd stepped into a twisted fairy tale. I was at the top of a descending elliptical staircase. From the landing where I stood, I looked into grand hall lit by seemingly glowing icicles. They hung from the ceiling forming chandelier-like crystals, glowing somehow from within - a pure, white light. The bottom of the staircase encircled a fountain flowing with black water, and the long sides of the hall were lined perpendicularly with perfectly cut pools filled with the same liquid, each sporting its own fountain in the center. The floor was like a giant dark mirror, reflecting the light from the ceiling back in a muted, changed sort of way.

The floor-to-roof windows that made up the walls were lined by the same kind of curtains I had just stepped through and at the opposite end of the hall was a raised dais, upon which sat a very real, crystal throne. And a very real figure, whose head turned towards where I stood the second, I'd entered, even from this distance. Between us, spinning and circling in perfect synchronization were easily hundreds of people – if that's what you could call them. I moved to the balcony and placed one hand on the iced railing, surprised to find it wasn't cold, while I simply stared out across the crowd. I never believed anything like this could have existed. Monsters didn't need ballrooms; I couldn't help but feel confused.

'What do you think?' Taylor came to stand by my side, following the Emma of my vision as it swept across the room, taking in all the grandeur.

'I-It's...' I stuttered, trying to find the right words to describe what I was seeing.

He turned me towards him, placing both hands on my shoulders and I tore my eyes away unwillingly.

'...A- lot to take in?' he supplied for me, bending his head closer to mine, holding my gaze. I swallowed uncomfortably and nodded; my throat had gone dry. An army of undead soldiers and hellish creatures?

No problem. A fancy ballroom filled with glamorous beings and whimsical music? Nope, lead me to the door. I think my hands started to shake. I kept replaying a constant image of myself falling down the stairs ungracefully and landing in an embarrassing pile at the bottom while all these people turned to laughter.

-And-

‘I can’t do it.’ The words burst from my lips. I shook my head at him, ‘Seriously, it will be a mistake taking me down there.’ He smiled and rolled his eyes at me.

‘You’ll be fine. Trust me.’ He straightened and stepped back from me, offering a single hand. I eyed it warily. My independent nature demanded I walk down those stairs alone, while the other (unbelievably freaked out) part of me rationalized that it would be more appropriate, not to mention help my blame tenfold, to take his hand.

As if Laura read my thoughts, she raced towards the trees, following the sound that came no more. My heart was beating hard against my chest and all I wanted to do was run back for help. But you can’t. Damon needs you. Besides, you’re not defenseless. Remember that jonabeeb stone? The one he gave you? I hastily searched for the Jonnahas a stone in my bag. Yes! Thank goodness for that.

The Jonnahas stones are powerful enough to kill a fallen angel on sight. It was made of blue glass that preserved the rays from the sun.

Throw it directly at or by a fallen angel, and he dies. throw it a human and he burns. the stone was made by the dark angel Killers who used it as last resort to kill an evil angel. How Dame n got his hands on one of these? Well, even I don’t have the answer to that. I held the Jonnahas the stone in my hand tightly, careful not to be too hard. I could do this. I knew I could. And then everything went wrong.

A bullet whizzed past me and Laura neighed loudly. I clung tightly on her mane as she sharply turned to the Emmah of the Wolman March.

The Jonnahas stone flew from my grip and burst into flames as soon as it hit the ground. Oh no. The flames hastily incinerated the green grass, slowly spreading on to the trees. Laura ran deeper and deeper into the forest which got darker and darker because of the leafless tree branches concealing the sunshine. the branches were long and sharp, cutting my cheeks. I threw an arm over my eyes and they clawed at my dress, ripping my sleeve.

The crackling sound of trees burning roared in my ears. Black soot began to cover the trees and the smoke made Laura slow down. I too was finding it difficult to catch my breath as adrenaline pumped through my veins. My lungs coughed out the smoke I inhaled, and I was choking. No way was I going to die here. Laura had had enough. She dropped on all fours and rested her head. I got off her back. I knew I was going to regret this, but I had to leave her. Not looking back even when she neighed sadly, I ran like hell was chasing me.

I deliberated for only a moment before exhaling in a rush and grabbing his hand - before I could change my mind. He pulled me gently to his side, his larger body making me feel small and vulnerable all over again. He laced our fingers together and laid a kiss against my temple before moving ahead of me to descend the stairs - never letting go of my hand. His hands were so much larger than mine, not bulky, but soft with long graceful fingers. They fit near-perfectly with my (now) smooth skin. I wondered how long it would be until I once again had blisters and callouses from weapons training and groaned inwardly at the thought. I felt a tug on my hand and realized I'd zoned out completely, we were at the bottom of the stairs, facing a thousand pairs of eyes... eyes that weren't human.

They parted as Taylor led me forward, my own eyes determinedly set on the ground so that I wouldn't have to face their judgmental looks. I held Taylor's hand with both of mine and he squeezed them reassuringly. I looked up at him from under my lashes, the barest peek and saw his dark green eyes gazing back into mine with warmth. I looked back at the ground praying I hadn't gone red in front of this crowd. Losing my composure, what little of it I had, over a boy? How embarrassing. Taylor took a deep breath and we came to a stop. We'd reached the end of the hall and I lifted my eyes, up to the dais where she sat, eyes the color of pure, glistening snow, staring right at me.

I couldn't believe what I saw. She was unreal, porcelain skin without a single mark, long silky hair that seemed more silver than blonde and ice glittering on her lashes. Her dress fanned out behind her as she stood, giving the impression of glorious white wings as her feathery gown settled. She parted her wine-red lips to speak, the only point of color on her otherwise frosted demeanor. Taylor cleared his throat quietly and I tore my eyes away from her majesty in awe, surprise tinged with a little (sorry, a lot) of uncertainty clear across my features. He was looking at me in amusement and subtly winked at me as he bowed to the goddess before us. I followed suit, bowing from the waist as seemed the only natural before such a being. I'd managed to close my mouth when I'd stopped staring and now focused my eyes on the floor, thinking of how much of an idiot I'd just seemed. Great first impression on my part... not.

'Today we take the first step to reclaim what is rightfully ours.' Her melodic voice, strong and beautiful, echoed in the hall around us. 'My children, no more shall we hide in the shadows. They will build monuments to our memory so that one day all will know we remain forever the makers of our own destinies. Nothing will- have denied us,' at this all the creatures in the room shouted in triumph and applause, some issuing a shrill shouting like a banshee, and one bird-like being whooping and whistling in strange contemptuous. I automatically stepped closer to Taylor, my body seemingly seeking the protection of his while my mind was preoccupied with the celebrations taking place around us.

The music started up again and the crowd dispersed to dance with renewed fervor. I thought I saw Taylor for a moment before the crowd turned and she was gone. Somehow Taylor had also seemed to disappear, I hadn't seen her since she stepped through the curtain. Surely, she must be around here somewhere?

Taylor's hand closed around mine and he began leading me forward, I followed his lead as we trailed behind the Queen's retreating figure. We were being led behind the throne through another curtain.

Once through, all traces of music from the hall behind us were muted. The room was small, similar to the rest of the palace with a small balcony to the right. There was very little furniture, a glass table adorned with an elaborate black-rose flower display and various crystal wine-glasses, a settee and chaise set-up in front of the balcony and another doorway leading out of the room.

The Queen strode over to the chaise and reclined gracefully, motioning for us to sit opposite her on the settee. Wine glasses filled with the darkest ruby-colored liquid were given to us by a da'veen with black skin, the only color' coming from the rose-petals that made up (her?) it's the hair and the matching red lips. The da'veen exited through the door and I stared at the liquid, the walls, pretty much anywhere but at the Queen, whose gaze I could feel burning into my skin. She cleared her throat delicately and I reluctantly returned her gaze, afraid of what was to come.

'Do you know who I am?' she spoke quietly, now that it wasn't directed at a large crowd you could clearly hear the almost musical quality to her voice, like bells... or angels. I couldn't decide which was more likely. She actually glowed, a faint white illuminating from within her skin.

'You're the Queen,' I replied, unsure of the answer she wanted. If not for the eyes, I could almost believe she was out of place down here.

'Indeed, I am,' she paused and narrowed her eyes slightly before asking her next question. 'And who does that make you?'

I didn't answer straight away. I looked at Taylor who just nodded at me, I wasn't sure what she meant.

'I'm Arielle?' It came out sounding like a question.

'Are you? It sounds as though you aren't even sure of who you are...' Two minutes with her and already my head was in circles. What did she mean? Of course, I knew who I was.

'I am Arielle Deveraux,' I said, 'you know who I am.' I said more confidently now. She smiled, pleased with my answer.

'It's lovely to finally meet you, Arielle. We have much to discuss,' I nodded. 'Please,' she motioned to my glass. I looked at Taylor once more, and he sipped his own but looked only out beyond the balcony, offering me no aid. Looks like I was on my own with this one. I stared at the glass, watching the ripples glisten in the liquid. I took a deep breath and lifted the rim to my lips, closing my eyes briefly as the first drop touched my tongue, it was sweet, almost like perfume with its intoxicating scent. The flavor was a wine blend of fruits unknown to me, but amazing none the less. It was incredible.

'You are brave,' it was not a question, but a statement. 'I like to think so,' I responded. The Queen's face turned solemn, 'There is much I have to tell you, but I feel it will be better if I show you. She sat up straight and extended a single, white hand to me. The faint light I mentioned radiated intensely off her extended hand now, I knew something strange was about to happen. I hesitated for only a moment before I slowly reached out my own and she clasped them together.

Closing her eyes, I felt the cold from her hand creep up my arm like ice. This is what I'd been waiting for, my answers, for everything. I could feel it. Suddenly, I was blinded by a pure, white light that enveloped the room, and everything fell away...

I felt the sensation of falling, the tightening of my stomach muscles as they clenched and curled, trying to accommodate for the shift in gravity. My feet were planted firmly on the soil, but I staggered slightly; the hand still clasped tightly on my own righted me before it let go. My palm stung, and I looked to see tendrils of ice encasing my hand and forearm that seemed to connect deep within the tissue of my flesh. I shivered involuntarily; the chills traveled all the way down my spine... like frostbite was eating away at all the warmth in my body.

‘Do not be afraid, the ice can’t really hurt you.’ The Queen spared me a glance over her shoulder before walking ahead, towards the edge of a deep ravine. I stared at my palm worriedly for a moment longer before taking the opportunity to look around and try unsuccessfully to get my mind off my frozen appendage - it was a wasted effort. There was nothing here, no life, no sound; it was a barren wasteland, populated only by grey dust and dead trees.

‘Where are we?’ I asked, my voice echoing down the ravine as I approached the edge, standing by the Queen.

‘Earth. Or what was left of it...’ her demeanor had completely shifted, the look in her eyes hollow as if she was somewhere else entirely. She closed her eyes and the ground began to shake, a deep rumbling as thick smoke began to spew forth from the ravine, spreading across the land opposite us like a disease. The sky darkened and thundered, illuminating with flashes of lightning what I could only assume were creatures from the Underworld moving within the black mists. The shadows of thousands of monsters, hunters, hounds and many, many more creatures I had never seen up close; and now hoped I’d never had to.

I took a few steps back; so far, they weren’t paying attention to us, it was like we didn’t exist, but I still didn’t like what was unfurling before my eyes. I really thought that it was a good time for us to go, however, it seemed like the Queen was waiting for something. ‘Which is fine by me if that’s what their army looks like... leave her here and let’s get outta here’ even Carmen was scared, her voice trembled in fear and awe. Jane couldn’t speak, I felt her presence in my mind contract like it was trying to disappear. ‘No,’ she whispered, ‘I just can’t watch this, I know where we are...’

‘Care to share with the rest of the class?’ Carmen’s bravado was wavering, ‘you can’t fight what you don’t know’. Jane shook her head in response, ‘Just... wait. You’ll see.’ With that, she completely disappeared, somehow retreating to some corner of my mind far away from what was happening. I couldn’t say I blamed her; I was feeling the urge to run away screaming myself. I was no match for an army, I’d rather live to fight another die.

I cleared my throat, almost afraid to speak in case one of the creatures saw us. The Queen tilted her head in my direction but still seemed far away in her own little world.

‘They can’t see us, or hear us,’ she spoke softly. This is nothing but a memory. One you need to see... ‘Crack, lightning struck the ground violently, spraying sparks in all directions. The creatures bayed and screeched, the smoke forming a circle around the scorched earth as if they were afraid. More lightning struck the ground at random before a mighty roll of thunder echoed throughout the sky and across the deserted plain.

Lights fell from the sky like silver rain, I had to cover my eyes from the sheer bite force of it all. The lights were so bright my eyes watered but I couldn't force myself to look away. At first, I thought they were clouds or birds but as they crashed towards the earth at an alarming speed, they became clearer. They were from the first plane. The High plane, Heaven, Valhalla, Paradise, call it what you will, but these were the majestic creatures from centuries ago, missing from the world for almost a Millenia. I had a feeling I was about to see why.

'Don't be fooled by their appearance of valor,' the Queen turned to me and grabbed a firm hold of my shoulder, staring right at me now. She shook my shoulder, hard, 'they are not what they seem. You are witnessing a battle between our two realms on the only plane we can coexist.'

'Not what they seem? They are angels! The saviors of mankind! They are protecting us from the likes of you,' I broke away from her, confused why she would show me this memory when it only furthered my belief that they were evil and cared about nothing except the destruction of all life.

'Then you are a fool,' she hissed through clenched teeth. Her snow eyes seemed to grow dark, 'What do you think happened here? There is almost nothing left of your kind, they were wiped out by your so-called Angels who care nothing for casualties of war. They seek only the extermination of my kind, whatever the cost!'

'You're lying!' I yelled, turning back to watch the two races do battle. I had never seen such carnage, the Queen bared her teeth angrily but turned back to watch the battle unfold, I was sure she was biding her time, trying to find a way to convince me that I was wrong. What looked like a faerie was blasting a group of hounds, releasing a line of golden fire that moved of its own accord to surround the group. It contracted like a rope, a razor-thin rope, sharper than the deadliest of knives as it sliced the animals in two across the middle. I looked away, trying to remember that this is war, there has to be a losing side.

They say I killed Bobby Shipparro from down the street. They say that I was the one who drove the knife into his heart and then dumped him in the sewer. But it wasn't me, I know it wasn't. Yet still, people think I did it. Why is that? Just because I'm different. Just because I'm special.

My mom believes me, she believes me to the moon and back. My sisters, all five of them, hate me. Of course, they would believe I killed Bobby too. That's why I have to leave. That's why I will leave.

Being able to turn invisible won't make leaving town hard.

'...I wish you were here, cause sometimes- I get lonely- I guess I'm not the only, new girl in town! Mama, I promise that I'll be alright- I'll call and say I love you every night- I'm just trynna right the story of my life!...'

I sat on the bus and tried to make the shape of the blurry figures that sped by. The rain had fogged up the glass and the only thing I could see were trees. The man who sat next to me was snoring like a pig and the kid behind me kept kicking my chair. Even still, I sat through it, hoping to get as far as possible.

Tucking my legs into my chest and wrapping my arms around my shins, I leaned my head against the fogged-up window in hopes of finding sleep. However far this bus went, it would be my last stop.

~*~

A desolate place with dusty shop windows and old men on rocking chairs. That's the quickest way I can explain the town I found far enough to stop in. Dust swirled around my boots and clung onto my shirt. I did the best I could, holding two large suitcases, and walked the dirt road that led to the center of town.

I needed to find a Motel and I needed to find it fast.

'Are you ok dear?' I didn't even notice the little old lady who happened to walk up to me. I was obviously a young girl with no place to go.

'Yes- ma'am I'm fine' I lied, putting on a fake smile that I hoped would work. She saw right through it.

'I beg to differ. How old are you sweetie?'

I didn't know for sure if I should tell this woman my real age. I looked kind of old for my age, so I decided that lying would be my best bet.

‘Seventeen ma’am, fresh out of high school,’ I said abruptly, trying to make my way around her and avoid further confrontation. But old ladies don’t give up so quickly.

‘I may be old, but I’m not stupid. Now, you wait here and I’ll see how much cash I got left in my purse’ the old woman turned to walk back up her porch steps and I took the opportunity to disappear.

‘If you have a bank account, I could write you a che-e-’ the woman could no longer see me, and if I held my breath long enough, she could no longer hear me either. I watched the woman look at where I was standing with a bewildered expression on her face. She looked both ways down the dirt pettah and then shrugged, walking back up the stairs slowly.

I kept myself invisible for a while longer as I took the Emmah down into town. I tried not to draw too much attention to myself. I probably wasn’t doing such a good job, since I got curious onlookers. It seemed that this town didn’t get tourists often. I spotted a cruddy sign that read ‘Motel’ or at least tried too.

Walking in, it smelt like polished leather and mothballs. Glad that I was finally able to put down my suitcases, I trudged over to the desk and hit the rusty bell. It hadn’t been used in a while.

‘Well- how may- I help you- little miss?’ Came the strong country accent from around the back. Anybody back in the city would have called it pure hillbilly.

‘Um, I would like a room’ I said, hesitant at what they would think when they see me. I don’t think fifteen-and-a-half-year-old girls get rooms just like that.

‘Well, of course, I mean you came to a Motel didn’t cha?’ there were hoarse coughing afterward and then the sound of boots shuffling across the hardwood floor.

‘Yah,’ I tried to stand a little taller as the man came around the corner. He was what you could call your average western cowboy. He had the scruffy mustache, the ten-gallon hat, the beer gut, the boots, and the big buckled belt.

‘You can call me Chuck darling,’ he said, fixing his belt and sitting down on a stool right in front of the counter. He opened up a rather dusty binder and flipped to a fresh page.

‘Ok, I’m going to need to see ID and social security number’ ..., he said formally, twisting his big mustache. I think I nearly choked and my face turned bright red. I had forgotten all about needing an ID.

‘I- um- well- I’ I was startled as Chuck began to laugh as he had never laughed before.

‘Gets runaways every time. Wha-choo-tink- dis here is? One a dang- damn fancy hotels? I don’t need any ID. Just your name and the cash upfront’ Chuck smacked his right knee and got his pencil ready.

‘Wait, how do you know I’m a runaway?’ I said, beginning to rethink the whole idea of running away. Was it that easy to read me?

‘Young gals like you always coming in and out of displacing’ I didn’t know much about Motels, but I knew it didn’t look like people had ever set foot in that place.

‘Now, your name?’

I hesitated before saying it clear and strong, ‘Taylor, Taylor Locket’

... You know all about this dream I gotta chase, I get a little closer every day~

California’s not that far away~

I’m not that far away~

<3

Chuck folded the money I gave him and gave me a bright smile.

‘Now, let’s get you to your room.’

I went to go pick up my suitcases but was immediately stopped.

‘No, no, no, I got me a bell boy for that’ I covered my ears as Chuck let out an ear-piercing whistle ‘Ricky! Get your ass on down here boy!’

Then came Ben, a tall lanky boy who seemed bored out of his wits.

His white t-shirt was stained with grease and his jeans had plenty of holes.

His blond hair was tinted with dirt and when I shook his hand it nearly swallowed my little fingers.

‘I’ll get your suitcases Miss Locket’ he said in a tone that said, ‘I have to do this every time!’.

‘Thanks,’ I said just as bluntly.

‘Well I think you two will get along just fine, Now, your room Miss. Lovett’ Chuck interrupted, guiding me by the shoulder down the hall. Ben followed suit and as we walked down the long hallway, I took in the western atmosphere of it all. From the peeling wallpaper to the antique furniture, everything reminded me of old western movies.

‘Miss Lovett, your room’ with what I think was a grand flourish, Chuck opened a wood stained door that creaked on the hinges.

The room- that, I was scooted into was rather nice. The flower print bed sheets and cream-colored walls all held a homey feeling to them. The white curtains let in enough sunlight and the wood finished furniture was nice.

‘I like it, thanks’ I said, sitting down on the bed and watching Ben set my suitcases down.

‘Now Ben here is my son and he will be here a lot so if you ever need anything, just ask Ben here’ Chuck informed. I looked over at Ben and his face clearly held no intention of getting me anything.

‘Can I go now?’ He asked, ‘I was working on the car.’

Chuck looked a little disappointed in his boy’s behavior but finally gave him the nod to go. After getting the schedule for complimentary breakfast and dinner and getting a stern ‘This money will pay for seven days! After that, you have to pay again to stay longer!’ Chuck finally left.

After Chuck left it was kind of lonely but I kept busy with unpacking the few belongings I had. I tucked my two big red suitcases under the bed and sighed as I stood there.

I did it.

I got away.

I was free.

But where would I go afterward? I couldn't stay in this little town, paying one hundred bucks a week, my money would soon run out. I needed to find a permanent place, like that, it was easy. I dropped down on to the bed and breathed deeply. I scooped my reddish-brown hair into a bun and tried to relax.

But Relaxing is hard when you're a runaway. There are so many new faces, and beautiful places in this town~ I'm learning the ropes- on this crazy road, I'm going down.

When- I say small town, I mean it! As I look around, everyone knows everybody and when I walk down the street, I get nothing but stares. And Chuck says he gets Runaways all the time. There wasn't much to do so I walked back to the Motel. I was bored out of my mind and I can't help it if I got curious when I heard a noise coming from the back.

It sounded like a drill and I knew I probably wasn't allowed to, but I slipped behind the counter. Easing open what seemed to be a back door, I stuck my head out to find a garage. There were tools all over the place and a big blue car sat in the middle of it all. Two legs stuck out from under it and I instantly knew it was Ben, working on his car.

He had been quite rude during breakfast so I thought it would be best to go invisible. I didn't want to get kicked out of the Motel for trespassing. I closed the door silently behind me and went over to the center of the garage. Whatever Ben was doing, he didn't even notice the two cans I accidentally knocked over.

My humor got the best of me and I found myself opening the car door and getting in. After sitting behind the wheel, I reached out and did one long honk. The sound of Ben's head hitting metal satisfied me.

'Hey! Who's there?!' of course Ben couldn't see me and I loved the puzzled expression on his face.

'Must have hit the wrong thing' he murmured to himself. He went back to the car and this time when I honked the horn, I made myself visible.

'What the-' Ben came from beneath the car and looked as angry as a city rat.

'You know you're not allowed back here!' he came around to the driver's seat and pulled me out.

‘I’m sorry, I was just... Bored...’

‘I could have gotten a concussion!’ Ben held the spot on his head where there seemed to be a not on it and I started to feel a little guilty.

‘Well I guess I’ll be going now’ note to self, Ben is not so easy to slip away from.

‘Oh no you don’t’ he said, pulling me back to face him, ‘I will tell my father and you will be out of here first thing in the morning!’

‘Why do you hate me so much?’ I couldn’t help but ask.

‘Because- you runaways are all the same! You come, you make trouble, and then I have to clean up the aftermath.’

‘Well you’re in luck, cause I’m not like other runaways,’ I whispered, Ben gave me a weird look and was about to say more when Chuck came strutting into the garage.

‘Oh goody! Yah’ll are be getting along! Good for yall!’ He picked up what looked to be an old wooden pipe and then left.

‘I’m going to go freshen up for dinner’ I said quickly before Ben could ask me anything else.

I had said too much already.

I’m making my way~

No one said that it’d be easy, trust me, believe me,

I’m where I belong~

I’m wearing my favorite jeans and white flowy top with the swirly pink lines. My favorite black boots are hugging my shins comfortably. I’m waiting on the porch for Ben to come out. Ever since our little Garage talk, things have been a little different between Ben and me. He doesn’t blow me off all the time and isn’t as snappy.

He told me there was a place he wanted to show me tonight so here

I was, waiting on the porch. Finally, the door opened and there stood

Ben, but not in his grungy greasy way. Let's just say, he cleans up nicely.

'Ready to go? He asked, starting down the porch and not waiting for the answer.

'Sure, so where are we going? We didn't do the holding hands thing and I was glad.

'It's a surprise, kind of' Ben looked like this was awkward for him and I loved it.

'Mister Grumpy has a surprise for me?! Wow! I thought you hated me?' I said in a surprised happy go lucky tone. Ben gave me a look that said, 'Quit it!'

'Okay- ok, sorry I'll shut it'

'Good, you're better that way' I couldn't help but playfully punch Ben and he actually cracked a smile. It was different from our usual cold stares, but it was nice. The town looked way different at night, but I hardly got to notice as I and Ben trudge up what seemed to be a hill.

'You're not going to murder me here so that I'm finally out of your hair, are you?' I said, getting a weird look from Ben.

'Good, I was hoping not'

We walked up a little further and then suddenly Ben stopped.

'Okay, I know you've been kind of missing the city so I wanted to show you this, do you mind if I-' Ben went to cover my eyes with his hand and I let him. They were warm and smelt like diesel. We walked a little further and then stopped.

'Okay, here it- is' I gasped as Ben removed his hand and I started out at... the City.

The bright lights all molding together, the tall buildings, and flashing signs. I could just smell the excitement wafting over to me, even though it was miles away. I don't know where the tears started to well up from, but it was like all of the things I was trying to run away from, came back to me.

I tried to get as far away as possible, but it seems, my plan failed.

'Taylor, are you okay?' THEN- came Ben's voice as he looked over at me. I then remembered that the only thing he heard from me was a gasp and he was probably getting worried.

'I'm- I'm' I didn't know what I was.

‘Was this a bad idea?’ He said, coming to stand right next to me.

‘No, it’s- it’s’ I tried to croak out the words but they didn’t come.

‘It was, I’m sorry, I just thought you would like it, I thought it would make you feel better after staying in this boring town, I thought-’ I hugged Ben before he could even finish. I didn’t want him to feel bad for doing something he thought would make me feel better. At first, he was shocked by the gesture but then slowly he put his hands on my back.

It felt nice that way. It felt warm. I could hear Ben’s heart thumping in his chest and I could feel his chin grazing the top of my head. I turned my head and looked out at the view. This is what I had wanted all along.

‘Well, well, well... Look at what we got here’ came an unfair Taylor voice from behind us.

We’re miles apart- You’re, in my heart- I keep you with me everywhere I go...

I faintly heard Ben whisper ‘Oh no,’ as he pulled me behind him.

He stepped in front of me and I could faintly see the figure before us.

The only light was a flickering lamp post that was already dim.

‘Ben,’ the figure said as if regarding him.

‘Dan,’ Ben said, using the same tone. Whatever was going on here, there was definitely rivalry in the air.

‘So, you found another runaway toy with’ my insides shivered, whoever that guy was, he had a mysterious air to him. And what did he mean ‘Another Runaway to toy with?’

‘Not true Dan, just say what you’re really here for!’ Ben was getting tense. I could feel it under my fingers that laid on his back.

‘Just to fool around, that’s all’ It was then that I got a good look at this guy. He had stepped a little further into the light and I could clearly make out jet black hair and surprisingly bright blue eyes that seemed smoked over.

‘And just what does that mean?’ Ben asked, backing up a little, it was obvious that he was scared of this Dan guy. I don’t know why but I went invisible. I took my hands off of Ben’s back, I assumed that he would just think I ran away or something.

I wasn’t asking for what came next.

Dan looked right at me. I mean RIGHT at me, but I was invisible. I tried not to gasp and held my breath as best as I could. Even though he was talking to Ben he continued to look at me.

‘Oh look, I think I made the Runaway do what she likes best. Runaway - maybe she caught on to my warning’ Dan was covering for me, but why?

‘What are you talking about?’ Ben turned around suddenly and a frown formed on his face. He couldn’t see me, but I could see him. He scratched the back of his head and turned to walk back down the hill. ‘Where are you going, Ben? Don’t you want to talk some more?’ Dan teased as Ben pushed past him.

‘I’m going to go find Taylor, what does it look like I’m doing?’ I felt kind of bad for tricking Ben like that, but I panicked.

Ben disappeared into the blackness and me, still invisible, slowly made my way towards this Dan guy. I needed to sneak past him.

‘It’s no use keeping yourself invisible’ he said after a while, he shoved his hands into his pockets and looked in my direction. I concentrated and made myself visible again, shocked that this guy could see me.

I mean really see me.

‘How- How could you-?’ He cut me off with a light chuckle that made me shiver.

‘How could I see you? Well, I didn’t see you, I sensed you’ he said with a smirk, suddenly he was walking closer and closer towards me.

‘You, sensed me?’ I was starting to feel queasy inside and all of a sudden, I didn’t know how to use my legs. Dan lifted his hand to my face and I stayed frozen still as his big warm hands explored my face.

‘What color are your eyes?’ Couldn’t he see what color my eyes were?

‘How could you sense me?’ I asked, ignoring the question, I had never known anyone who could see right through my invisibility.

‘There are people like you Taylor’ Dan said, dropping his hand to his side, ‘They may not have the same ability as you, but they aren’t normal either’.

‘What exactly are you trying to say?’ I breathed, wrapping my arms around me.

‘You’re not alone- Taylor, come with me.’

‘Because you know I’d walk a thousand miles if I could just see you... Tonight...’

Taylor - (thousand miles)

I don’t know what compelled me to follow Dan. Maybe it was the part where he said- ‘There are others like you’. Whatever it was, it had me following right behind him. The first thing I noticed was that Dan walked a little bit differently than most people. He would kind of stare off into the distance and walk on, stopping suddenly in front of things he seemed to just realize was there.

Then it clicked, was Dan blind? It made sense. He had touched up my face and then he asked me what color my eyes were. But it still didn’t explain the fact that he could walk perfectly fine without a cane or some seeing-eye dog.

‘I can smell fear and confusion all over you’ he said suddenly, breaking the silence that had developed. We were walking down an Emmah that seemed to lead to a woodsy area. Where was this dude taking me?

‘That’s not strange at all’ I don’t know where the sarcasm came from, but it made Dan laugh.

‘If you were wondering, I am blind. Does that clear up some of the confusion?’ Dan swerved around a barrel and kept walking in our given direction.

‘Kind of, it still doesn’t explain how you seem like you can see where you’re going’ I prodded, folding my arms and shivering over the cool night air.

‘I can sense things...I sensed that barrel and then moved out of the way in the nick of time’

‘But that still doesn’t expel.’

‘You never told me what color your eyes were’ Dan continued, signaling that the other conversation was over.

‘Green, my eyes are green’ I sighed. This guy was persistent.

‘And your hair?’ Dan reached out and grabbed a piece of my hair between his fingers. I took it away from him and answered bluntly.

‘Reddish-brown, brownish red...’

‘What a beauty you must be if only I could see you...’

I couldn’t help but blush and was glad Dan didn’t see me. I didn’t want to give him the satisfaction of getting to me.

‘I can smell the sudden nervousness on you, a blush maybe’ I silently cursed his strange abilities and tried to mask the nerves with anger.

Dan chuckled lightly, and we continued our hike to nowhere.

~*~

I only saw stuff like this in movies or comics that lined the stands in the big city. Never in my days did I expect to see it up close and personal. Dan had finally led me to a rundown shack with a door falling off its hinges. I was furious to see that this is where Dan had to lead me and was hoping he hadn’t dragged me here so he could bust a move.

‘You have got to be kidding me, right?’ I had said, walking through the doorway and from the corner of my eye, a rat ran by.

‘Not at all,’ Dan walked in and after asking me if anyone was coming this way, he tapped five times on a wood panel in the corner and poof! A door swung open. That’s when I took the ladder that leads down to what seemed like a basement. What I saw when I landed firmly on the floor made me gasp.

People, lots and lots of people walking around, hanging out, going in and out of doors and doing extraordinary things. From what I could see, each person had a different ability and it was cool to see everyone so used to the unnatural. I was standing in a big command area that had two stairs in the back leading up to a balcony that seemed to have more halls.

On my right was a door and, on my left, was another door.

‘Those are the other ways to get in, on the right is an elevator and on the left his tube slide. Both in different locations around town,’ great and we got the ladder.

Dan’s hand reached my back as we walked through the crowd that seemed to split an Emmah when they saw us coming. I guessed that they all knew Dan was blind. We took one of the stairs and I found myself on what seemed to be the second floor. There were doors lining the hall as far as I could see.

Dan lead me down the hall and I could hear different sounds coming from each room. Parties, a bunch of boys watching football, soap opera, Brittany Spears and other sounds that shouldn’t be repeated.

‘Here’s your room’ I found myself facing a door with the crooked numbers ‘64.’

Dan opened it to a small room with contemporary furniture, a nice sized bed, Minnie fridge, a bathroom, a good-sized closet. It was as I looked at the bed that I realized how tired I was. I sat down on the bed and Dan turned to leave when reality hit me.

‘Wait- wait- wait, you can’t just take me in the middle of the night to some unknown place and then drop me at a room.

‘Isn’t that what you did just a few days ago?’ Dan asked, walking up to my bed, ‘You came to an unknown town and then dropped yourself off at a room in some cruddy Motel.’

I hated how great Dan was in psychology and even though he was blind I scolded him.

‘What do you want from me?’ I said, feeling tired and just about ready to give up.

‘I want for you to realize where you belong,’ I shuddered as Dan looked my way. Even though he was blind I felt like he was staring into my soul.

‘How long did you expect to pay for your Motel room anyway? Listen, I already have people getting your things for you. You just wait and see; this place will feel like home soon.’

Dan didn't let me ask any more questions. He strolled out of the room and closed the door, leaving a silence that teased me. Since I didn't know what way was out of this place and because I was so tired, I slipped under the covers and quickly fell asleep.

I woke up feeling dazed and unsure of where I currently was. I was laying on my stomach and there were sheets tangled around my legs. I tried to pry my eyes open and take a look around. I noticed that I was wearing my favorite jeans. That's when all of the memories from last night came rushing back to me at full force.

Ben, Dan, this secret place. I began to wonder if it was such a good idea to follow Dan to this strange place. I sat up and tried to rake through my disheveled hair, peering at the clock on the nightstand, it was seven o' nine in the morning. Groaning, I pushed my legs up and over the bed and pushed my feet into my boots.

I didn't know what I was planning to do. I walked over to the bathroom and rinsed out my mouth before going over to the door and opening it a crack. From what it looked like, these people were bleachers, staying up all night and then crashing in the morning. I tiptoed out into the hall, closing my door quietly behind me.

Walking down the hall felt kind of strange, it was so quiet that you could have heard a pin drop. I finally made it to the stairs and cringed when a step creaked. I didn't hear movement coming from one of the other rooms, so I continued, taking each step one at a time.

I finally came to the ground area and shook my head at the mess these people left. There were beer bottles, tissues and crumpled up pieces of paper. Jackets and pair-less shoes all over the place, soda cans. The place looked like a ransacked fraternity home or sorority house.

I saw a whitewashed door on the other end of the second set of stairs and decided to check it out. I needed out of this place. Ben was probably worried that he had gone and got me kidnapped. If only he knew.

Continued:

The door looked like the kind you just push open, so I pressed lightly and peered inside. It looked like a kitchen of some sort. There was a large stove with ten burners, a large fridge that looked like one you might find in a restaurant, a long counter and a big island in the center surrounded by stools.

There was a lot of paper cups lying around with flat soda and beer in them. At the sight of the fridge, my stomach rumbled greedily, and I couldn't help but open it. I took out the milk carton and sniffed its contents. Nothing smelled funny, so I poured it into a bowl I found in one of the cupboards up top. I got a box of cereal from the counter and took a seat on one of the stools.

It wasn't the best breakfast in the world, but it was the quietest. I needed it to stay that way until I found a way to get out.

'You're the new girl, right?'

Too late...

'Um, yah' I turned around to see a strawberry blond girl with a tank top and some pajama pants standing in the doorway. She went to the fridge and prepared herself a bowl of cereal too. She took the seat across from me and started to eat.

'You got here last night, right?' she asked in between bites.

'Yah, Dan brought me' this girl didn't seem to mean or anything but something about the people who lived here crept me out. The atmosphere here was filled with energy.

'Dan huh? Was he a jerk?' The question was random but appropriate at the same time.

'Yup pretty much' the girl began to laugh, and her laugh made me laugh too.

'The names Adrienne' she stuck out her hand and I gladly shook it.

I was beginning to like this Adrienne character.

'Taylor,' I said.

'So, what's your ability?' she asked me, scooping out the last of her cereal. I was surprised by the question, but I remembered- what Dan had told me, 'There are others like you...'

'I can turn invisible' I confessed, getting up and putting my bowl in a sink that seemed a little small for such a big place.

‘Really? Wow! That’s pretty good.’ I smiled at Adrienne’s compliment. No one had ever said my ability was ‘good,’ back in the city if someone found out they called me a ‘freak’ or ‘devilish...’ Never had I been called ‘good.’

‘So, what’s your ability?’ I asked in return, going back to the stool and watching Adrienne wash her bowl.

‘I can shapeshift,’ she said, and then suddenly, in the blink of an eye, she was Dan.

‘Wow!’ I said, hopping off my chair, ‘you could totally trick someone with that.’

Adrienne slash Dan smiled at me and I was amazed. Everything down to his smoked over bright blue eyes was copied. It was amazing.

‘Your ability is great too, I’m sure you liked to do pranks with that one’ Adrienne said, shifting back to her own self again.

‘Well, you’re- kind of right. I tried not to use my ability to often, people didn’t really like it,’ I confessed, sitting back on the stool.

‘Well don’t worry about them, you’re with us now. Go on! Show me your ability!’

I shut my eyes and concentrated. Finally, I felt the tingly feeling that came with turning invisible and I watched as Adrienne’s face broke out into a wide smile. Her brown eyes were glimmering.

‘That’s amazing you like totally vanished,’ I giggled and she jumped a little.

‘Okay show yourself now...’

I went back to my regular self just as someone walked through the whitewashed doors. It seemed that people didn’t sleep too late in this big place, which was a surprise.

‘Hey Adri’ a deep voice hollered, coming around the table I noticed was a husky boy with brown hair and hazel eyes. He turned to me and nodded.

‘And who’s this?’ he asked Adrienne, going to the counter and pulling a granola bar out of a box.

‘This is Taylor, our newest member’ I knew I couldn’t leave now; people were already calling me a member.

‘The names Sean, Taylor, it’s nice to meet you’ he said, leaning on the counter and chewing away.

‘Um, you too’ I murmured looking over at Adrienne.

‘Well, I’m going to go introduce Taylor to some other people, see yah later Sean!’ soon Adrienne was dragging me out of there and into the vast area of couches and party mess. ‘Thanks, it felt kind of awkward in there’ I said, rubbing my arm.

‘It’s ok, I know Sean could look intimidating sometimes but he’s a real softy.’

I followed Adrienne up the stairs and down the halls.

‘How old are you anyway?’ She asked, slowing down to keep pace with me.

‘Uh, fifteen’ I admitted feeling kind of embarrassed.

‘I’m sixteen, trust me don’t worry about your age, the oldest person here is Merry-Kate and she’s nineteen. The youngest person is Blake and he’s twelve. Sean is eighteen and Dan is sixteen like me’ Adrienne babbled on, making me feel a little better about my age.

I wondered how the Blake boy survived in a place like this.

I had met a lot of people in such a short amount of time that I have already forgotten the first one hundred names. On the outside, this town seemed small but in reality, it wasn’t. It had a colony of people living beneath its grounds. It was fun going on a tour with Adrienne. She was a very smart and funny girl who always made sure I was never left out of anything.

We finally circled back to my room and Adrienne turned to me with a wide grin.

‘My sources tell me that Dan is going to visit you today, ‘seeing the worried expression on my face she continued quickly, ‘You don’t have to worry though! He’s just coming as orientation protocol’.

‘Orientation Protocol?’

‘He’ll explain it to you, don’t worry,’ I watched Adrienne stroll down the hall and then shuffle down the stairs. I felt vulnerable without her and quickly ducked into my room. I instantly recognized my two big and red suitcases. Strung across the dressers were most of my things and I even found stuff that I had left at home. How these people got them, I’ll probably never know.

Going over to the bathroom I found my toothbrush, hair things, fresh towel, washcloth, and even my fuzzy slippers and robe. Laughing a little to myself I rubbed the stain where my sister Janice dropped coffee on my robe and then tried to cover it up with nail polish that was the same color.

My eyes started to brim with tears. Even though it always seemed like my sisters hated me, there was a little part, a small fraction, that knew they loved me. I was their sister, there was no running away from that.

‘I can smell sadness on you,’ I nearly jumped out of my skin as I heard the calm and collected voice of Dan. He was standing in the bathroom doorway, leaning on the doorframe and staring off into space.

‘Damn it! Could you be any more- creepier!’ I said in surprise carefully wiping away my tears without smudging my eyeliner. I knew Dan could hear the wavering in my voice even though I was trying not to snifle in front of him.

‘Why were you crying?’ He asked, folding his arms over his chest. I had no intention of spilling my guts to this guy so I took it easy.

‘I was just remembering something’ I answered, walking past him, and going into the room. The bathroom had suddenly gotten smaller.

‘Remembering what?’ he prodded, turning around to face me.

Straightforward much?

‘None of your business,’ I snapped, sitting on the edge of the bed Indian style. I played with a piece of thread on the sheet, hoping Dan would just get on with the Orientation.

‘Fine, I guess I’ll do what I came here to do’ Dan said, with such poise that it scared me.

‘We are in district ten. There are exactly twenty districts in all of the united states that make up an organization we like to call ‘The Colony’. We recruit, train and take care of people with what you could call 'Special abilities.' Anyone who was shunned by the outside world or just wants to learn to control what they can do can come to The Colony. We believe that all man's rights should be equal no matter what that man can or cannot do. We fight for that belief and that belief only. I am Co-leader of District ten and Merry-Kate Douglas is Leader of District ten' Dan stopped for a second, probably to smell how I feel about all he just said.

What he smelled was most likely 'Overwhelmed.'

'Your training is organized and formatted to your needs and ability. Each person is allowed a trainer and will partner with their trainer when it comes to combat and/or war' I dropped my mouth wide open when he said war, I mean come on!

'Training is every day at noon and school is something you do on your own time and your own schedule. All of your belongings from your previous home, except for furniture, will be brought to you in a matter of time. You will be meeting with Merry-Kate to talk about your history and previous whereabouts, activities, and/or preferences' Dan stopped and took one deep breath.

'Any questions?' I think I was going to blow up with all the information I had to remember. And what did he mean to talk about the previous history? I couldn't tell these guys that I'm charged with murder and probably have wanted papers posted all over the city.

'Well, I might have one-'

'No questions? Good... We're basically done here,' I glared at Dan's rude attitude and crossed my arms furiously.

'You reek of anger, maybe you should spray on some happiness...' with that Dan left and I just glared at him. He was worse than Ben.

Ben...

He was probably still wondering where the heck I was. I didn't want him to feel guilty like he lost me or something. I hoped he didn't call the police cause if he did, I would never be able to leave this place. The police would find out that I'm the wanted girl from the city and then I would be done.

I groaned and threw my face into my pillow.

I hoped that everything would go alright with Merry-Kate tomorrow.

When you hear the name Merry-Kate, you think of sweet, frilly, girly, cute and cuddly. The Merry-Kate I stood before was none of the above. She was beautiful but call her 'pretty' and she just might snap your neck.

Tomboys paled in comparison. She is the definition of brute force.

'Don't just stand there, come in!' Merry-Kate hollered. Adrienne had walked me to her office and gave me a good pep talk before heading back to her room. I was just standing in the doorway when Merry-Kate called me in.

I strolled into what I assumed was an office. There was a big oak desk in the middle. A large bookcase that mostly held a stereo, music, magazines, trinkets and three books. There was a mini-fridge off to the side and two chairs in front of the big desk. The walls were painted a light green and had some posters on them. I stopped in front of the desk that had an intimidating Merry-Kate seated behind it.

Her chair was leaning back, and her feet were firmly propped on her desk. Her dark red hair was in a ponytail behind her and her three piercing on each ear glimmered in the lamplight. Dan stood on her right by her desk as she sucked furiously on her red lollypop.

'What can I say? I'm nineteen,' Merry-Kate said, gesturing to her teen office and a glossy lollypop.

'Right' I murmured, glancing at Dan and then at my fingers.

'What is that supposed to mean?' Merry-Kate asked suddenly, leaning forward in her chair and throwing her lollypop in the garbage.

'Nothing! Nothing, I was just-' Merry-Kate didn't let me finish.

'Cool your Jets I'm just testing your nerves! Have a seat...' Merry Kate took her feet off her desk and folded her hands over a binder on the table. She was ready for business.

Cautiously, I sat down, finding my feet more interesting than anything else in the room.

'Geez, the kid would you at least look at me?' I quickly jerked my head up into the direction of Merry-Kate, she nodded approvingly.

‘Now, you may have already heard of me around here. The name’s Merry-Kate, but you can just call me Merry. I don’t take any backtalk, kiss assign or any other form of flattery. I stand by the belief and the belief only, which I’m sure Dan already explained to you,’ I looked over at Dan who, as usual, was staring off into space. I mean where else can you look when you're blind?

‘Okay, your history. You obviously know why you’re here right?’ She asked, taking a piece of gum and popping it in her mouth. ‘Want to piece?’

‘No thank you...’

‘Fine...’

‘Yeah, I’m here to talk about my history,’ I said, answering her question.

‘So-o, you know why you’re here, good for you. Now spill it!’ Merry leaned back in her chair and propped her feet up again. Her office had grown extremely silent as both she and Dan looked my way.

‘Um-mm,’ I was still unsure if I should be telling these people this.

‘Look kid I’m sure your life’s more interesting than that,’ Merry whined, snapping her gum and screwing up her face.

‘Yes but-’

‘Butt stinks!’ She said suddenly, making me jump in my seat.

I took a deep breath and then found myself spilling everything- ‘I used to go to a normal school, I used to have a normal family. I had five sisters and we all lived with my mom. My dad walked out on us and ever since then money was always tight. My abilities.... I always had them.

My mother said that when I was born the doctors went frantically looking for me and thought it was a miracle when I suddenly appeared in the basket again. Like I said, money was tight and because of them... advantages I got from my abilities I began to steal. Nobody would ever catch who was doing it on camera because well, I was invisible.’

I looked at Merry and Dan to see their take on all of this. Merry was now leaning both elbows on her desk, intrigued. Dan had pulled up a seat and leaned one elbow on Merry’s desk.

'I was only twelve at the time and even though my mother knew how I was doing it, my sisters were suspicious. See my parents and I had never told them but they knew something was up. I continued to go to regular school, but the kids started to realize, I wasn't normal. I wasn't the best at controlling my powers and the other kids caught on to what I was. They called me a 'freak' ... 'devilish' ... 'sick' ... they said- I should be handed over to the government, but my mother refused...'

I stopped to catch my breath before continuing. Here it goes, to tell them the truth.

'Just three weeks ago, on a Thursday afternoon, I was doing homework at the dining room table. It was like any other regular day, my sisters were hanging out with their friends outside and of course, I was alone. There was a knock at the door and since my mom hadn't been feeling good lately, I decided to answer it. I looked through the peephole and was surprised to see men dressed in all black with serious looks on their faces. I called mom anyway and she came to the door, also wondering who they could be. Finally, she opened the door and what they explained to her made both me and her very upset.'

I could tell Merry was fully engrossed in my life story. Dan just kept the same face that he had since I got here- jerk.

'They said... They said that I had committed murder' ... Merry's eyebrows shot up to her hairline and Dan crossed his arms. I knew he was probably really interested but just didn't want me to see it. Well good for you jerk cause it's working.

'They said that I had killed a boy from my class name Bobby Shipparro. He lived down the street and often rode his bike every afternoon. They said that one afternoon Bobby went out and he didn't come back. His mother had called the police and for one whole week they searched everywhere for Bobby.'

Merry's eyes were glazed over, probably trying to imagine it all.

'They found him alright. In the sewer,' Merry cringed and Dan blinked.

'And guess who they blamed?' The room fell silent and Merry's eyes seemed to beg for the answer.

'Me,' a small gasp escaped from Merry and finally Dan's brows furrowed.

‘Taylor Lovett, we have record that you have some special abilities’ they said, ‘We have had witnesses confirm that you can disappear and reappear at will’ they said, ‘Taylor Lovett, you are under arrest for the murder of Bobby Shipparro’ THEY SAID’ my voice was starting to rise and I took a deep breath to calm down.

‘What did they do?’ Merry asked, speaking for the first in a long time.

‘What did they do? They tried to arrest me, but my mother wouldn’t have it. She told them that I deserved a lawyer and a chance in court. The guys dressed in black finally left after negotiating with my mother and when the doors closed, she started to cry,’ my own eyes began to fill up with tears as I picked at my fingers.

‘I felt like a monster. If only I didn’t have this stupid ability my mother wouldn’t be kneeling on the floor crying. I ran upstairs and began to pack two large suitcases. I didn’t know where I was going but I knew I had to leave soon. I didn’t tell my mother; I didn’t tell my sisters and I told no friends where I was going. I had no friends’ anyways’ a tear fell on my lap and I furiously wiped it away.

‘If I concentrate, I can make other things turn invisible too so sneaking out of the house wasn’t so hard. I caught the next bus and rode it as far as it could go. That’s how I ended up in this town,’ I sniffled and looked up at Merry, ‘I got a motel and was just starting to get along with this boy named Ben when mister mistereo over here decided to interrupt’

Dan let off two fake coughs into his fist.

‘He brought me here and that’s where it- ends,’ I let out a big breath and closed my eyes for a second. Everything I had buried deep down in the nooks and crannies of my brain was resurfacing.

‘Taylor, I can tell you this’ Merry started, looking more serious then I had ever seen her, ‘Your story is by far the most heartbreaking one I’ve ever heard.’

She went to her desk and pulled out a green lollypop while spitting out her gum.

‘You have my respect’ she waved me away and opened up her binder, scribbling things down that was most likely to me. I got up quickly and made a mad dash for the door. I felt the tears coming and needed some alone time to cry like a baby. I tried to make a run for my room but who intercepted me?

Dan...

'You smell- so depressed too' he whispered, tucking his hands under his arms. I took two steps back and tried to think of a way around him. Why was he talking to me anyway?

'When really you should be grateful' my mouth dropped open as Dan said that and I was sure he was smelling 'Shock...'

'What?'

'What I mean is that you're lucky you ran away before those equal rights hating jerks who tried to take you to prison. What I mean is that your lucky I saved you from those think they can run some motel hillbillies who play with their guests,' I folded my arms and looked away from Dan's smoked over bright blue eyes. He probably couldn't see my head turn and eyes brimming with tears, but he could probably smell it.

'The Colony is your family now. The other family you left behind didn't even like you. Didn't you say in there that your sisters began to dislike you just because you were different? A family who doesn't love you is overrated!' I couldn't believe what I was hearing. Was his heart made of stone?

'How could you say that? My mother loved me and even though my sisters hated me deep down inside I knew... I knew they loved me! A family isn't something you can replace, copy or create. It's genuine! For you not to see that, for you...'

I was walking up to Dan now and I could feel the heat wavering off his body by now.

'For you do not know that is... Is... Crazy!' tears were streaming down my face now and I just couldn't understand why I was so frustrated with Dan. I could have just walked away but something inside of me wanted to convince him that family matters.

'Stupid, that's what it-,' Dan didn't get to finish because I tried to slap him but he caught my hand in midair. The force his big hand had on my little wrist hurt and I knew it would leave a bruise. His eyes held a mysterious yet determined look that I still had to figure out.

'Call me crazy then Taylor because I don't know what it's like to have a family... a Genuine one.'

I think that the only reason why Dan left was that he didn't want me to see that lone tear slips down his face. When he released my hand, I crumpled to the ground and stumbled to get back up. I wiped the stray tears from my face and rubbed my burning eyes. I needed the warm bed waiting in room '64.'

I needed that- and much more.

~*~

A knock on my door made me pry my sticky and wet eyes open. I wiped the crust away and peered at the clock on the nightstand next to me. Eleven twenty-eight. I had slept in.

I groaned- as I tried to sit up but the blood rushed to my ears and my temple started to pound. Holding my head, I shoved the sheets off of me but stopped noticing a blue and purple ring around my wrist.

Releasing my head, I lightly touched the bruise, grimacing as pain shot up my right arm. Dan was a jerk. I was shaken out of last night's memories when the knock came again, a little louder this time.

I wiped off the makeup that had streaked my face last night and stood to go answer the rapping door. It was more like hobbling since one of my legs had fallen asleep. I knew I would answer the door looking like a mess wearing my shorts and shirt from yesterday, ruffled hair streaked makeup and bruised wrist.

'Uh... Hello?' Sean questioned more than said as I answered my door. He looked me up and down and furrowed his brows.

'What do you want?' I grumbled, knowing I probably sounded rude but at that point didn't care.

'Well, Adrienne was going to do this but she had to go to training early, so she asked me to escort you to the training grounds to meet your trainer' ...Sean explained, looking at me funny and not at all paying attention to what he was saying.

'But if you want to skip training today.'

'I'll be ready in fifteen minutes' I closed the door and went straight to the bathroom after grabbing some clothes out of my drawer. I brushed out my hair, putting it into a ponytail and washed my face, reapplying my makeup. I put on the tank top and stretch pants from my drawer and left the bathroom in search of shoes.

I found some comfortable running shoes and slipped those on.

After glancing in the mirror, I opened the door to a surprised Sean.

‘You clean up good’ was all he said as he led me down the hall and down the stairs. We made a right at the last step and walked down the halls of the bottom rooms going all the way to the back wall. Surprisingly, there was an elevator there and after pressing the down arrow the metal doors swung open.

The elevator was fairly big but again I was reminded of how big Sean was. Which again led me to wonder what his ability was.

‘Sean?’ I said, massaging my aching wrist. I tried to rotate it a bit, but it was starting to swell.

‘Yah?’ ...He answered, whistling a tune that had no words.

‘What’s your ability?’ I asked, giving up with the wrist and putting my hand to my side. I began to wonder if I could make the swelling invisible. I didn’t want people to worry about me.

‘Interesting that you ask, but I’m afraid I can’t show you in here unless you want the elevator to break down,’ Sean threw a smile my way and I willingly shook my head ‘no.’

Whatever his ability was, it makes him able to break down one hundred-ton elevator.

The elevator dinged at our stop and the metal doors reeled open. Following close behind Sean, I walked into a vast area that I assume was the training grounds. It was a wide-open area, stretching as far as the eye could see, it seemed that that whole level was for training. The floor was a plush blue carpet and the walls had been painted a metallic grey. There were tons of black mats spread in rows on one side and on the other held workout equipment of all kinds. There were water bottles and bags lined up all against the walls as people grunted and jabbed with their trainers.

I instantly began to wonder who my trainer was going to be. I hoped it was someone as nice as Adrienne. I couldn’t handle any more intimidating colonials.

Sean led me past rows and rows of mats until finally, he stopped, telling me to wait by this vacant mat. He told me he was going to go get my trainer who was on the other side working out. I stood Patiently waiting, concentrating on my wrist to see if I could make the swelling invisible. I was cut short as I notice Sean coming my way.

-And-

Who he had fallen close behind made my blood boil?

Dan...

Coincidence, I think not! My spirits dropped, and I could tell Sean noticed the tension too. I don't know if I have a distinctive 'smell' but as he got closer to me Dan's eyes went wide as if he knew who his student was.

My face was flushed as Sean introduced me to the jerk I already knew.

'No need for invitations Sean, I already know him' I gave up on my wrist and said bye to a confused Sean.

'Look, I understand things didn't go so-o well last night but I'm your trainer now and you need to treat me with respect'

'Why'd Merry pick you?' I couldn't help but ask, glaring up at him.

'So much for the respect', he murmured, getting down on the mat and starting to stretch. I followed. 'She picked me because I'm blind'

'And?'

'Your ability is invisibility since I'm blind, I can't see you anyway which makes it more challenging for you because I'm used to fighting people without seeing them'

I looked down at my swollen wrist and understood. Somehow Dan was able to block my hit even though he couldn't see me. I didn't want to talk to Dan but there was something I needed to ask him.

'How did you do it?'

‘Do what?’

‘Block my hit.’

Dan was silent for a moment as we stretched our hamstrings, ‘well I could sense your hand coming at me. All my sensoria are advanced except for my sight. I can also smell people’s emotions.

I nodded but then said ok out loud, remembering he couldn’t see.

‘What do you smell on me right now?’ I asked, getting up as Dan stood.

‘Well it’s kind of hard to find in such a big crowd but your smell is kind of ...unique,’ I wrinkled my brow on this discovery, I had a unique smell?

‘Confusion,’ he said finally handing me some gloves that let my fingers point threw but protected my knuckles and palms, ‘You’ve been smelling like confusion ever since you got here.’

‘Well your right, I am confused’ I said, hitting Dan’s open hands like he instructed, ‘This whole place confuses me, Merry-Kate confuses me, my life confuses me, you... confuse me.’

I looked up at Dan to see him staring off into space. It was hard reading his face since he often left it blank.

‘I confuse you?’ He asked, signaling for me to punch harder.

‘Well, yeah. But it’s nothing, I mean I don’t want to talk about it’ when your training you kind of end up speaking your mind and right then and there I felt like I was babbling.

‘Whatever,’ Dan replied bluntly, keeping his hands steady as I punched away. Only lightly punching when it came to my right hand. I was so mad at his attitude though.

‘Jerk!’ I grunted, hitting hard with my left hand. Dan’s foot moved a centimeter backward from the punch, he raised one eyebrow.

‘Excuse me?’

-And-

‘Don’t act like you didn’t hear me, you’re a jerk and everybody knows it. You put on this hardcore shell and then verbally attack everyone. Do you even have any friends? I’d be surprised if you do. You make me so frustrated you know that? Why do you have to be so rude all the time? You seriously need an attitude check!’

I hit Dan’s open hand as hard as I could and was surprised as he stumbled backward. Before I could even congratulate myself through a stream of pain traveled up my right arm making me collapse to my knees.

‘Oww,’ I moaned, clutching my wrist that was beginning to throb, my eyes were beginning to water but I didn’t dare cry. I tried to get back up and shake it off before Dan noticed but it was too late.

‘Taylor...?’ Dan called, kneeling down next to me and probably trying to read my emotions.

‘Why do you smell like ‘pain.’

...?...

He asked, looking in my direction.

I squeezed my eyes shut and then opened them again, ‘It’s nothing it’s just-’ I couldn’t finish because a wave of pain overcame my wrist again.

It hurt so bad!

‘Just what?’

‘You jolted up my wrist that’s what!’ I snapped, standing up and walking past rows and rows of mats. I needed to take the elevator out of here and to my room, so I can get some ice.

‘Taylor! Taylor waits...!’ Dan called, jogging after me. I ran onward, reaching the elevator and frantically clicking the up button.

‘Taylor!’ Dan called, weaving around mats with scary accuracy.

‘Leave me alone!’ I yelled, making heads turn. Ignoring the stares, I boarded the elevator, clutching my wrist and praying for it to stop throbbing. The doors to the elevator started to close shut but were stopped by a gloved hand.

I cursed under my breath as Dan stepped inside, sweating at the brow and looking in my direction. It still feels weird to me how he doesn’t look you in the eye when he talks.

‘What’s wrong with your wrist?’ He asked, panting and wiping his forehead. He probably had to concentrate a lot just to catch up with me. I slid to the corner of the elevator and knelt down in a sitting position.

Standing suddenly felt too hard.

‘It’s bruised and swelling really bad-’ I said finally, giving up on the ‘Get the hell away from me!’ charade. Dan came over to me and helped me to my feet.

‘It’s because of last night, isn’t it?’ He asked, touching my wrist lightly and jerking his hand away when I cringed.

‘Yah,’ I whispered, trying my best to stay up, I felt faint and weak. Dan held my shoulder firmly while grasping my left arm. The elevator finally dinged and we sped out unto the bottom floor.

We started to walk towards the stairs but I couldn’t do it. I just couldn’t.

‘Whoa, Taylor, why can’t you stand up?’ Dan asked, steadying my shoulder and helping me along.

‘I don’t know’ I confessed, talking barely above a whisper, Dan put his hand to my forehead and sighed.

‘You’re burning up really bad, it’s probably a fever’ before I knew it, Dan was placing his hand under my knee and lifting me into his arms.

‘Dan... put me down’ I murmured, clutching my head and resting my wrist on my stomach.

‘I’m afraid you might faint if I do that’

‘But... but...’

‘But what?’

‘But what will people think if they see us?’ I whispered, looking up at a focused Dan. We were already up the stairs and walking to my room.

‘I think your health is more important than what people think’ Dan answered, opening my door and carrying me in sideways. It reminded me of the groom carrying the bride home.

‘I guess you’re not a jerk after all...’

Dan smiled.

‘Where am I?’ looking through the haze that had become my vision I saw a figure sitting on my right side.

I tried to sit up but felt pain and heaviness overcome me. A firm but gentle hand eased me back down into laying position. My vision was coming back a little and I could vaguely see what I assume is my room. ‘You’re in your room’ came a voice that seemed to belong to the figure. I recognized him as Dan. I cleared my throat as I tried to talk some more. Talking had become hard and my throat felt hoarse.

‘Because...’

‘Because you fainted remember? You have a really bad fever and yours... the wrist isn’t looking too good’ Dan sounded really tired and I wondered what time it was. In hopes of seeing my clock I looked to my left coming face to face with tubes, wires and cords all hooked up to my left wrist. A big metal stand with a fluid bag was hooked up to it.

I lifted my right arm to scratch my hair when I realized my right hand was securely bandaged. What happened while I was asleep?

‘I’m so stupid,’ I turned my head to where Dan was sitting, he was staring at the wall and looking awfully guilty.

‘Why? Being blind doesn’t make you see and stay.’

‘No not that. Trust me I’ve already gone through the ‘I hate being blind!’ stage. I’m talking about your wrist. I was so stupid to have been so rough on you. I should have just let you slap me in the face. I mean it wouldn’t have even left a mark on me’ I didn’t know how to take that comment.

‘But you...’ Dan slid his hand along my arm, probably trying to find my right wrist. I was surprised at how much I liked the feel of his fingers on me, ‘I hurt you really badly and how could I fight for the colony’s belief if I’m taking advantage of my strength?’

Dan finally found my wrist and laid it in his big hands. I didn’t have to have the ability to smell emotions to know how Dan was feeling.

‘Dan-’ there was a knock at my door making Dan gently put my wrist back on the bed.

Dan opened the door to a skinny little girl with black pigtails. She scuttled inside, smashing a white clipboard into her chest. Dan mumbled a couple of words to her; the girl glanced at me and then came scurrying to my side. She reminded me of a field mouse.

The scrawny girl pushed her red-rimmed glasses further unto her head and she emitted down one of her jet-black pigtails. Her tanned skin gave me a clue to her probably being Spanish. She set the clipboard on the dresser and started to check the fluid in the sack hanging on the metal pole by my bedside.

I watched with confusion as she picked up my unharmed wrist, holding it in a way and looking down at her watch at the same time. She did a little nod of her head, picking up her clipboard and scribbling something down.

‘Excuse me but what are-’ the girl cut me off with a fierce ‘shush!’

I sighed as she picked up my wrist again and began to adjust the needles that were inserted into it. Finally, she took a vile full of who knows what and inserted it into the tube connected to my left wrist.

Whatever it was, it made me feel drowsy.

‘Now,’ began the girl, talking for the first time, ‘when she dozes off, she’ll probably sleep for a good ten hours and that should get you the rest you deserve to Mr. Harbor.’

The girl seemed to be talking to Dan and I made a mental note of Dan’s last name.

Harbor...

‘Alexandra, you don’t have to call me Mr. Harbor, Dan is fine to remember?’ Dan said bluntly as if he had been telling the little girl this all her life.

‘And I keep telling you don’t call me Alexandra, Alex is fine’ the girl retorted, pushing up her glasses and scribbling one last note on her clipboard.

‘Yah, yah whatever,’ he said, crossing his arms in that defiant way.

Part: 30

‘Well, I guess I’ll be going now. Call me if she has any more complications’ then the girl was scurrying out of the room going to who knows where.

‘Who was that?’ I whispered, suddenly feeling very drowsy.

‘Oh, that was Taylor an- I mean Taylor. She’s a thirteen-year-old girl packed with a lot of attitudes’ Dan answered, sounding pretty tired himself.

‘What’s her ability?’

‘She’s a child prodigy. A genius if you will? She’s the only person around here who’s medically capable of taking care of us.’

‘Oh...?’

I was about to ask Dan something else when someone- bursts through the room door. Talk about no privacy.

‘Dan we need you ASAP! Someone’s fooling around in the decoy run-down shack!’ Like- so that’s what that dingy shack was called. The intruder was a short Asian guy who seemed to spend many hours in the gym.

‘Are you sure it isn’t just a forest creature?’ Dan was standing now, looking more alert than ever.

‘We’re certain sir, definitely human’ the Asian dude answered, he looked about ready to fight.

Dan sighed, rubbing his eyes and then looking up at the ceiling. He took one deep breath through his nose and then exhaled loudly. Then just as my eyes drooped to a heavy close....

‘Ben...’ Dan whispered before I heard the thudding of retreating footsteps.

Walking down the hall I heard voices. Not just regular talking but harsh whispers that seemed to be about something highly important. Going invisible, I went up to Merry-Kate’s cracked door. I was supposed to be recuperating but that was going to have to wait.

‘Are you sure you left no tracks, Dan?’ Merry-Kate whispered fiercely, pacing back and forth.

‘I’m positive! You know I don’t leave an obvious trail Merry-Kate!’ he answered, looking more stressed than I had ever seen him before. From what I could see, there was someone else sitting in one of the chairs that faced Merry’s desk. The chair had ropes laced around it.

‘I can hear you guys, you know!’ then came another rather annoying voice. It sounded fumed, almost like...

‘Shut up Ben!’ Dan said suddenly.

Ben!

‘Dan what are we going to do with him now?! He has no abilities!’ Merry said frantically, sounding more worried than her usual self, ‘If the other districts find out he’s here we are done for!’

‘Well first, Taylor, come in and stop eavesdropping’ Dan said, looking my way. If I were visible, they would have seen my face deepen three shades redder. I eased open the door and made myself visible as I stepped into the tension-filled room.

‘Second, we need to find out exactly what he knows’ Dan finished, waving me to a seat. I walked over to a chair, as Ben kept his eyes on me.

‘Taylor?’ he asked, squinting and un-squinting his eyes.

‘In the flesh,’ I mumbled, playing with a piece of my hair.

‘What were you doing up there Ben?’ Dan asked, making Ben turn to him, ‘Why were you snooping around out there!’

‘I was just walking around ok?! I saw the shack and was wondering if I could probably fix it up for my own personal uses when you people showed up...!’ Ben sounded like he was telling the truth, but Dan slit his eyes.

‘You were looking for Taylor, weren’t you?’ He said, getting in Ben’s face.

‘I don’t know what you’re talking about!’ Ben looked away from us all and sighed deeply. ‘I knew you were a freak Dan’ he mumbled.

Dan moved so fast that all I felt was a breeze. His hands were at Ben’s throat now, squeezing but not causing damage.

Part: 31

‘What did you say?’ He said through clenched teeth and I couldn’t watch any further.

‘Hey! Let him go, Dan!’ I grabbed Dan’s arm and pulled it away from Ben’s neck. Ben let out two raspy coughs.

‘Didn’t you hear what he just called me?!’ Dan asked furiously, I wasn’t expecting Dan to just walk out of the room like that.

‘Well, that went well,’ Merry-Kate said sarcastically, clapping her hands together. Going around the side of her desk she took a dramatic seat in her chair.

‘What am I supposed to do with Ben?’ I asked, regretting ever eavesdropping.

‘Bring him to the containment room’ Merry-Kate decided, placing a CD in her stereo.

‘Where’s that?’

‘Down the hall... I’m sorry Taylor but it seems he’s your responsibility now. Dan wants nothing to do with him’ I sighed, releasing

Ben from the chair and giving him an apologetic look as I tied his hands.

Walking out of Merry’s room as pop music blared, I tried not to make eye contact with Ben, but that was proving to be difficult.

‘I thought you ran away,’ he said finally, as we reached a room marked ‘containment room.’ I didn’t know how to respond to that so I took him in and began to untie him.

‘Aren’t you going to say something?’ He asked, rubbing his wrists and looking at me. I made the mistake of looking up at Ben. He looked genuinely confused but I didn’t know what to say to him. Ever since Dan brought me to this place I had never really sat down and thought of Ben finding me... but now he had.

‘I don’t really have anything to say-’ I confessed, taking the rope and heading for the door.

‘Of course, you don’t.’

I didn't know exactly what Ben meant by that, but it made me feel like - I had done or said something wrong.

Closing the metal door, I turned the lock and watched through the foggy mirror as Ben took a seat on a metal chair. I thought I would never see him again...

Part: 32

But there he was.

I didn't know where I was going as I walked the halls. I guess I was looking for Adrienne's room, or you could say I wanted to say hi to Sean, but to tell you the truth I was looking for Dan. He looked really mad earlier and I didn't want his fierce attitude to get in the way of my training ... or you could say I wanted to make sure he was ok.

I bumped into Taylor though and after hearing her scold me about walking around when I should be resting, she told me where his room was. So, on I went to go find Dan's room which I was told to be number '94,' climbing the stairs to the top floor- I finally stood facing a door identical to mine just with a different number.

It was so silent that I assumed nobody was even in there but after mustering up enough courage, I knocked.

'Who is it?' Called, Dan and I hesitated- before answering.

'It's me... Taylor' if there were ever a time, I wanted to go invisible, that was one of those times.

'What do you want?' Dan opened the door now and again I was met by smoked over bright blue eyes.

'I want to talk,' I said, trying to rub the sweat on my palms away.

'About Ben huh?' He asked, opening the door a little wider now.

'Yah,' after a moment of silence, Dan opened the door all the way and motioned for me to follow him inside. I don't know what I was expecting to see in Dan's room. I don't if I was expecting to see the same furniture as mine or some cool fighting gear. I didn't know what to expect.

But what I saw was definitely, something- I didn't expect.

Flashlights. Thousands and thousands of flashlights. All hanging from the ceiling, pasted to the wall, sitting on the dresser, everywhere. Yet still, they were all turned off.

'Dan?' I started, trying to find my words, 'What are all these flashlights for?'

'They were just a phase,' he said, going over to his bed and taking a seat on the edge. Dodging hanging flashlights and glancing at random objects, I finally made it to Dan's bed and took a hesitant seat.

'That's it? That's all your willing to say about them?' I pushed, gesturing to thousands of flashlights that stared back with their lifeless bulbs.

Part: 33

'As I said, they were a phase. When I first became blind everything was so dark. I just wanted to finally see the light again and I thought that if I bought a whole bunch of flashlights... I would. Of course, I grew out of that stage and now they just sit around lifeless. Any more questions you came to hammer me with?'

'Oh... Why do you hate Ben so much?' I asked, clasping my hands together. Dan rubbed his eyelids and sighed.

'Is that really what you came to talk about?' He asked.

'Well... Yah'

'Well I and Ben used to be friends,' I think something of a gasp escaped my lips as Dan said this. I would have never expected them to be friends. When Dan looked at Ben all I saw was hate in his eyes.

'Yup... friends, but apparently he had his own way of thanking me when I saved him from that bus that almost ran him over. He found out I had abilities and decided I was a 'freak' I sighed, realizing what truly happened.'

'I'm sorry that happened?'

‘Well it wasn’t your fault, so you don’t have to be sorry-’ Dan shrugged, looking in my direction. It still amazed me how much more skilled he was than me even though I can see.’

‘Dan, does it ever bother you that you don’t know what people look like?’ I asked. Dean scrunched his eyebrows together and placed his hand on his chin.’

‘It used to... But I have other ways of imagining what people look like’

Part: 34

I looked over at Dan and took the time to really look at him. His jet-black hair was cut in a neat sleek way making his hair streamline.

His misted over light blue eyes that seemed to be mystical pools of magic. There was just something so enchanting about him in the glow of the lamp that I didn’t even notice that I was staring at him.

‘Do I have something on my face?’ I guess Dan noticed that I was staring at him because I turned ruby red at his question.

‘Uh- No sorry I just thought I saw something’ I lied, playing with my fingers. Suddenly though, Dan was lifting his fingers like he did that night when I first saw him, and he began searching my face. It wasn’t as weird as I thought it would be, but it gave me chills to feel Lane’s warm but firm hands caressing the curves and dimples in my face.

‘Why are you nervous?’ He asked smirking under his breath. I think my mind froze as the room grew silent, Dan’s face growing closer to mine.

I was definitely surprised as Adrienne came flying in, cheeks flushed without warning.

‘Dan! What are you doing here! Didn’t you hear?! The anti mutation shots have been released!’ Dan jumped up so fast that I was sure he was going to knock down one of his flashlights and me as well.

‘It can’t be! But the treaty-’ Adrienne cut him off quicker than he could finish.

‘If there ever was a treaty there isn’t one now! Hurry! Merry-Kate needs you!’ Adrienne ran over to Dan and grabbed him by the wrist dragging him out the door in such a hurry, I don’t even think she noticed me. I watched the door slam shut and I let out a sigh, my face returning to its normal color. Whatever was about to happen, it didn't and I don't know if I should be happy or sad about it.

'I guess we'll have to finish our talk later.'

'So, you finally come back,' Ben sighed, getting up from his chair as I opened the metal door. I had come to bring him some food and I set the tray down, turning to leave.

Part: 35

'What? You're just going to leave?' Prodded Ben... I turned around slowly and just stared.

'Oh, I see. They turned you into one of them so now you can't talk to me,' I marched across that room so fast that I think I surprised myself.

'I was born with my abilities and being one of them isn't so bad!' I was up in his face now, our chest barely touching.

'Is that so? Seems more like freaksville to me' I hissed pushing Ben only to bump my chest into him again.

'I am not a freak and I can't believe you would say that!'

'I know you're not...'

'What did you just say-! Wait.... What?' I didn't know if I had heard right. It had come as just a bare whisper and I didn't even realize he had said it.

'I said I know you're not a freak' He whispered, staring down at me, looking deep within my eyes. I think I froze, my breath coming out in short rasps.

'Then what am I?' I asked quietly, looking at every detail on his face.

'Your-' I twirled around quickly as Dan entered the room and stumbled backward as I realized how to close me, and Ben was standing. Dan wasn't looking directly at us, I mean he can't look at us, but I could tell he knew what was up.

'Is everything ok in here? I heard yelling' he crossed his arms in that defiant way and I sighed.

‘Nothing... it’s nothing,’ I whispered, stepping over the tray and quickly squeezing past Dan. I slipped out the door and let out a whoosh of air as I turned the corner down the hall. That was just too awkward. Going the rest of the way to my room I went invisible not really wanting to engage in conversation with anybody.

I went to my room and closed the door behind me, flinging myself onto my bed. Having Ben here was going to make ‘Glad you could make it Taylor!’ Adrienne yelled over the pounding music. I was at one of the colonies' annual Saturday night parties and I honestly had no idea why I came. It was just a party that was being held on the bottom floor, kind of like how I had found everyone hanging out when I first came to the colony. Even when I went to school, I wasn’t much of a party person. I wasn’t much of a people person to even get invited to a party for that matter.

Yet there I was. The music pounding, people gathered in small groups all across the plush blue carpet. Beers, wine and I’m-sure-it’s-not-punch littering each hand and also the floor. It felt like a real high school party, and I was a part of it.

‘Yah! Glad you finally broke out of that shell you call a room!’ Sean practically had to holler, and I punched him lightly on the arm. We laughed but it could hardly be heard over Paramore.

‘I’m going to go get some of whatever she’s having’ Adriane said, pointing at some girl who was using her fire to make swirls of flaring fire breath curl in the air. She had gathered a crowd and they were all rooting for her. I watched my strawberry blond friend head for the kitchen and Sean followed after. I was tempted to go to but I thought the best of it.

I had noticed the way Sean had been looking at Adriane all night and it seems like he really likes her. Whatever little moments they can get together shouldn’t be intruded by me. Even though I was being a good friend I felt kind of lonely in that big crowd with people bumping against me and grinding on each other. I felt out of place... until someone tapped me on the shoulder.

I was half expecting it to be Adriane, half hoping it was Dan but I had turned around to a completely new face.

Well not entirely new because it had seemed like I was introduced to this guy before, but I couldn’t remember his name. He was tall, had brown hair that fell in his face a little and his eyes! That boy had eyes! Those were the first things that struck me as I looked into those hazel eyes with gold flecks.

The boy smiled sheepishly and scratched the back of his head.

‘I saw you across the way... and I just wanted to know if you want to dance,’ the boy stuck out his hand and I took it with a smile. He pulled us out into a better dancing spot and soon I was doing dance moves I didn’t even know I could do.

‘What’s your name?’ I had to ask three times over the music before the boy could hear me.

‘Noah!’ He shouted, coming closer to me so that his lips brushed my ear.

‘Taylor!’ I shouted back, grasping his shoulder. I was surprised at the DJ decided at that moment to switch to a slow song but I was grateful for my ears to have a break.

‘So, what’s your ability?’ Noah asked, grabbing my waist and pulling me into him. He did a little drum beat as I talked.

‘I can turn invisible, you?’ He gave me a charming smile as I wrapped my arms around his neck.

‘It’s pretty lame but I can shoot lasers from my eyes’ I smiled reassuringly.

‘That’s pretty cool actually, better than mine.’

‘Hey at least yours doesn’t give you headaches twenty-four-seven,’ I shrugged, giving up on our little banter.

‘Your cute when you do that’ Noah whispered and I felt a warm tingle start from my toes and work its way up. It was natural for me to blush at a compliment like that but it felt different from Noah. With Dan, he couldn’t see me blush but Noah saw everything. It made him chuckle and I turn invisible.

‘Ah come on, I’m sorry,’ he cooed, holding me tighter as if to make sure I was there.

‘I’m sorry I guess it was just a reflex,’ I said, going back to normal.

‘Keep that up and you’ll make me look like I’m dancing with myself’

I laughed, ‘You would have kept dancing, though right?’

‘Of course, but I need you to stay visible or else - I wouldn’t be able to do this...’

Before- I knew it, Noah was kissing me. I mean full-on kissing me. He pulled me into him closer and I was into it more than I thought I would. But there was something off. Something that didn't seem right. As I had my eyes closed, Noah's warm lips sliding over mine, I wasn't picturing myself standing in the middle of the floor with him.

No, in my head I was with Dan.

I pulled away from Noah suddenly at this realization and he gave me a quizzical look.

'It's been a long time but I know I'm not that bad of a kisser' he chuckled, steadying my elbow as I almost fell on someone.

'No- it isn't you, it's me' I said quickly, staring up into his gold-flecked eyes. There was definitely something I liked about Noah... But he wasn't Dan...

Or Ben...

Taylor leaned in and Kissed me lightly this time and I just smiled.

'You want me to walk you to your room, you seem like you need an early night' I nodded my head a fog. Had I just pictured myself kissing Dan?

Taylor intertwined his fingers with mine and slightly rubbed the back of my knuckles as we walked past the crowd of people. He was being awfully sweet and I felt kind of bad for thinking about someone else while I was kissing him.

We passed by Sean and Adrianne who were whispering something in each other's ears. Adrianne gave me a thumbs' up and a wink and I smiled back. Walking up the stairs it was kind of dark and quiet, it seemed like everyone was down at that party. We finally made it to my room door and I turned to Taylor with a sigh.

'Sorry about earlier' I said, hoping another apology would have some effect.

'No worries Taylor, I had a great time. I'll see you tomorrow?' It was more of a statement then a question as Taylor bent down and kissed me lightly on the lips again.

'Yah, tomorrow' I turned around and opened up my room door saying another bye to Taylor and then closing my door with a thud. What a night!

I had a great time... but I felt weird not seeing Dan the whole entire day. my days long and tiring.

We were bouncing along a dirt-packed road in Dan's jeep, the trees scattering shadows across our faces. I was in a car... alone with Dan. It wasn't how I had dreamed it to feel though because we weren't on our way to a date or anything. No, this ride was all business.

Dan's face showed that.

I had tried to start a conversation the whole time, but all Dan would do is grunt in reply and it was starting to piss me off. We were on our way to the city, a place I had never expected to set foot in again. Apparently, we're going to get more information on what people around the colony are calling 'The Death Shots'. The shots don't really kill you, but they make you normal and to people in the colony it's a death threat.

I don't know how I feel about the shots yet. All my life there was a small part of me that wished to be normal, but then there was the other part that was proud of who I am. Coming to the colony had fueled that pride and made me feel more at home than ever?

I looked over at Dan to see if his facial expression had changed... it hadn't.

'Dan, please talk' I don't know where the pleading came from, but it worked.

'They released Ben last night,' he murmured, swerving around a pothole. I turned so that I wasn't looking at the dashboard but at him.

'What?'

'They released Ben last night' he repeated, more slowly this time. I didn't know how to feel about that statement. I didn't even get to tell Ben bye.

'Oh,' was all I had to say as I rested my elbow on the car door, smashing my cheek into my palm.

'You wouldn't mind though since you already have a boyfriend'

I looked at Dan funny even though he couldn't see me. What did he just say?

'You heard me' he said, sensing my confusion. I breathed in and took a deep breath out.

‘Dan, do you mean Taylor?’ I asked, twisting my body so that I was fully facing him. Dan frowned.

‘Maybe’

‘And how would you know about Taylor?’ Um good, I had him where- I wanted him.

‘Things never stay a secret in the colony Taylor,’ was all he had to say about it. I sighed, was Dan actually... Jealous. But he didn’t like me, did he?

‘Are you Jealous Dan?’ I asked, knowing he heard the smile in my voice. Dan turned a shade of pink beneath his cheeks.

‘Who said?’ I laughed, and this surprised him a bit. ‘What? What’s so funny?’

‘It’s just... it’s just I’ve never seen you blush before; we should really have talks like this more often’ I mused, slapping his knee, he shook his head with a smirk.

‘We’ll live it up because it won’t be happening often’ ... and just like that, the blush was gone.

‘Look, Dan, I don’t know why I’m explaining this to you but Taylor was kind of, the umm... the heat of the moment if you know what I mean’ oh jeez now a blush was creeping onto my face!

Dan looked over at me, but then faced the road again. It’s still weird driving with him, I know he won’t crash but it makes me nervous. ‘Heat of the moment huh?’ He asked, his teeth flashing white in the sunlight that made it through the trees.

‘Yah, is that too hard to believe?’ I asked, glad the road had turned to asphalt. We were nearing the city.

‘I wouldn’t know’ there was a mystery in Dan’s words, but I took them anyway. There was still a lot I didn’t know about him, but it didn’t bother me too much. My stomach tightened up as a sign flew by, saying the city was only ten miles away. I grabbed the car door frame and clutched my middle. When Dan had chosen me to come with him out of all the other colonists, I was hesitant. But then I thought, going into the city with Dan could be fun. Now I’m having a second thought.

Suddenly- Dan’s broad hands were reaching over and imitating me on the knee, his hand resting there for a second longer. ‘Don’t worry Taylor, maybe people have forgotten by now.’

You have just witnessed the magic of Dan, which can make a girl feel better by a tap on the knee and words money couldn't buy.

'Thanks, Dan-'

I and Dan were sharing a hotel.

I was in the bathroom, hyperventilating with a paper bag. Not necessarily about the whole Dan thing. No, I'm just overreacting even though I'm in the city that could arrest me for murder. I sat on the toilet seat trying to catch my breath, Dan's magic words only lasted until the sign saying 'Welcome to The City!'

Using the counter as a boost I forced myself to stand up. Looking in the mirror, I looked pale with a tinge of green. I just hoped I wouldn't puke in front of Dan.

'Taylor! Are you alright!?' Dan called from outside. I had probably been in there an hour.

'I'm fine, coming out now' I put the paper bag under the sink and fixed my hair before opening the door. Dan gave me a quizzical stare before going to the bathroom. I looked around the simple hotel. Two beds, a nightstand in between, a mini-fridge, a small table and two chairs, closets etc. It was a very bland place, nothing special.

I took the bed closest to the bathroom in case of an... emergency. I laid back on the bed and thought about everything in general. I was in a hotel room, along with a very cute boy, and I was near the point of puking.

Of course, the relationship between me and Dan was strictly business for this trip. At least that's what I think. I just wish I could read Dan. I wish I knew what he was thinking, he seems so closed off sometimes that it's hard to talk to him much less read him.

Dan came out of the bathroom and went over to his bedside, taking stuff out of his pocket and putting them in the draws by the nightstand. I just watched silently, knowing that just a couple of months ago my mother would have never allowed me to be alone with a boy in a hotel room.

'We scout tomorrow,' was all Dan said before brushing his teeth and going to bed. He just slept in some shorts and it made me nervous seeing him shirtless. The man did that boy have abs! I got ready to go to bed too and it made me giggle when I thought of this as a sleepover. The silly things that run around in my head.

I tucked myself in and turned so that I was facing Dan's bed. He didn't even sleep under the covers and I could clearly see the rise and fall of his chest. His face looked so peaceful when he wasn't scrunching it up into a frown.

Oops! I jinxed it.... He just made a frown in his sleep.

I'm standing on a vast white plane. Nothing but nothingness stretching out before me. Wait... what is that? It sounds like squeaking, the squeaking of wheels. I turn my head just slightly and let a gasp escape my breath at what I see. Slowly, very slowly, as if his wheels are rusted over, Bobby Shipparro rides by on his bike. He's as pale as a ghost, his eyes caressing dark circles, a black crimson red hole where his heart should be....

I fall down unto my knees, only a whimper escaping my throat and Bobby turns to me. His lips are cracked white and peeling and I see him mouth the words 'Murderer'. I try to scream out 'NO!' but no words leave my lips. I clasp my throat, forcing it to work. Then Bobby begins to dissolve right in front of my eyes, melting like the wicked witch and suddenly there is a drain in the whiteness. Bobby's liquid form slips into that drain never to be seen again. I crawl furiously towards the drain, trying to pull him back out, but he's gone, gone to the sewers.

Portion

I look up and I'm shocked to see my living room. Everything, from the rickety old table I did my homework at, to the blood-red door my mother answered that fateful day. I'm surprised to see the door open, slowly at first and they stand before me, the two men in black and they're pointing straight at me. I hear my mother's sobs. I can't see her, I can't feel her, but I hear her sobs racking my brain. No matter how hard I cover my ears, I can still hear them.

She hates me, she was always disappointed in me and I don't deserve to be her daughter.

~*~

I shot straight up in bed and was surprised to feel my body collide straight into Dan's. Feeling his skin in contact with mine, me only wearing a tank top, made a wave of shock surge through me. Dan held my arms steady; I hadn't even realized they were shaking and began to rub them slowly.

‘Taylor... Taylor are you alright? You were murmuring and thrashing in your sleep’ he said, wiping the sweat from my forehead and brushing away the hair that clung to my face.

‘I’m- I’m...’ I didn’t know how to explain everything I had dreamed. I had had similar dreams before but none this vivid and detailed. Coming to the city had shocked some nerve in my brain forcing these nightmares on me. I didn’t want them.

I began to cry.

It was the first time- I had actually sobbed in front of Dan. Yah, I cried that time when we fought in the hallway but this time I was sobbing. I think Dan was shocked too because he just pulled me into his chest and let me wash him with my tears. It was an all-out Niagara Falls.

‘Taylor, it’s okay... I’m here... sh-h’ it was weird hearing Dan whisper those comforting words into my ear and I think that’s what made me stop crying. Or it was probably the fact that I could feel every flex and muscle from Dan pressed against me.

I sniffled, ‘I- I had a bad dream,’ When the words left my mouth, I then realized how babyish they sounded.

‘About?’ ... Dan whispered, he sounded tired and it made me feel like I was a burden suddenly. Dan had chosen me to come with him and now he had to wake up in the middle of the night to comfort me like some baby.

‘It’s- It’s nothing, I’m fine... Go back to bed, get some rest, you don’t have to-’ Dan cut me off with a deep sigh.

‘Taylor, why do you always feel that I don’t want to listen to what you have to say?’ Dan asked, his eyes actually looking into my eyes for the first time. It almost made me forget he was blind. I was too dumbstruck by his question to answer.

‘Well I do’ ... he said, seeing as how I couldn’t answer him at the moment, ‘Tell me about your dream’.

So-o I did, and the words came spewing out just as the tears had. Dan frowned at some parts, most parts actually, but he didn’t talk. He let me do all of the yappings and it felt good to actually be able to tell someone all of this.

‘It’s my fault,’ he concluded finally after I was done talking and we just stared at each other.

‘No, it’s not...’ I said quickly, wiping my nose with the back of my hand.

‘Yes, it is, I should have never brought you back here, you’ve already gone through enough and now I’m bringing you back to the people who want to through you in jail’.

I laid my hand on Dan’s chest, feeling his heart pulsating beneath my fingers. It sent a wave of warmth all the way up my arm. Dan looked my way anxiously, waiting for me to say something.

‘Even though I still don’t think it’s your fault, I forgive you. If it makes you feel better, I forgive you’ Dan smiled and I loved how it looked on him. It wasn’t a frown, it wasn’t a smirk, it was a genuine smile.

Genuine...

I started to laugh, and Dan scrunched up his eyebrows and looked my way as if to say, ‘Are you crazy?’

‘I’m sorry, it’s just... Look at me!’ I giggled and began to laugh harder realizing Dan couldn’t look at me. But then it made me feel sad and guilty for laughing at him being blind. I was just an emotional wreck!

‘I wish I could see you’ he said, his big hand caressing my cheek and his thumb running along my eyebrows, the length of my nose, my lips that let out silent gasps of air. My heart racing.

‘Why are you so nervous?’ He whispered, just like that time I came to talk to him.

Then Dan leaned in, smoothly and silently as if she were on a forbidden mission, and he kissed me. The passion, the lust, his warm lips sliding back and forth, back and forth, back and forth.

Dan...

He was everything at that moment. Everything- I ever wanted, everything I ever hoped for, more than I could have imagined. It was Dan... And I wanted him to be mine.

I grabbed Dan’s face in my small hands and he leaned in further, our kisses drowning out the darkroom and making it seem to burst with light. Not just light but life also. Instantly I forgot the nightmare, instantly I was transformed and breathing deeply I continued to kiss the person who seemed to be my whole world at that moment.

Dan reluctantly pulled away, catching his breath and me the same. His body, pressed against mine, was heated and his heart pounded with fire. I looked up into his eyes. I looked up into Dan's eyes that used to always seem so misted over. They weren't smoked with blindness at that second thought, they were burning. Burning with a desire, a want, a need I had never seen before.

'Finally-' he whispered, his voice cracking a little, 'Finally, I see the light.'

Waking up to Dan's face so close to mine in the morning is something I would have never thought happen to me. I relished in the events of last night. I and Dan didn't do anything, we just cuddled and made out. We decided to play it safe.

Dan suddenly tensed in his sleep and I quickly placed a comforting hand on his chest. He visibly relaxed and I sighed a sigh of relief. Dan had been doing that a lot all night, he seemed to be tormented by bad dreams. I was tempted to ask him what they were about when he woke up but I didn't think it was the right time yet.

Portion

I snuggled into Dan's chest and loved the pulsating beat his heart gave off. It warmed my cheek and gave me a sense of happiness. Dan's breathing began to change and I realized that he was no longer sleeping. I felt his hand slowly stroke through my hair and I wondered if he knew that I was awake.

'Good morning' ... he mumbled, and I guessed that was a yes.

'Good morning' ... I murmured, turning my face in a way so that I was looking up at him.

I shivered as Dan slide his hand from my waist and up to my face. Caressing the curves and details of my face. He smiled, pressing his lips to mine and then rolling out of bed. I held onto his hand but finally let go. 'Scouting today!' ... Dan called from the bathroom, peeking his head from around the corner, toothbrush in his mouth.

'I know, I know' ... I mumbled, getting out of bed myself. Dan came out of the bathroom so I went in, brushing my teeth and doing my hair.

‘It may get a little rowdy. We might have to go into places not so appealing. We have to find the source of these shots and that may include run-down areas, probably alley clubs’ ... Dan called from the room. I peeked my head around the corner as he was pulling on a shirt.

‘You think I’m a helpless little girl, don’t you?’ ... I asked, fixing my hair into a ponytail and walking over to him.

‘I never said that exactly.’

Walking over to my duffel bag, I pulled out a shirt and some jeans. Changing my clothes in front of Dan was easier than I thought it would be. He couldn’t see me anyway.

‘Well, It felt like you were implying it’ ... Dan shrugged. I walked over to him and slipped my hands around his waist.

‘But you’ll be there, to protect me, right?’ Dan smiled as he slipped his arms around my waist too. I stood on my tippy-toes as he met my face, his lips sinking into mine.

‘Now that’s how you say good morning’ ... I sighed, releasing myself from Dan and going over to my shoes. He chuckled and began lacing up some boots that I was sure to be steel-toed.

‘Dan; you say we’re going to go to all of these dangerous places. How exactly do we get in?’ I don’t think I was as surprised as I should be when Dan pulled out fake IDs.

‘This is how-’

Have you ever walked a full two blocks with black heels on? I was wearing a green dress that Dan had magically wiped out. It fits tightly around my form only ending just above my knees. My hair flowed around me silhouetting my small face. Sensing my shocked face when I put on the dress Dan said, ‘We have to look older.’

‘Dan are we almost there?’ I asked, pulling on the side of my dress and peering at Dan. He wore black jeans and a snazzy dress shirt.

‘Oh- quit winning. We’re almost there,’ he grabbed my arm and gave me one of those winning smiles that I had come to hunger for.

‘So-o, is this some kind of nightclub’ I asked, as we passed flickering streetlamps being swarmed by moths. The night air was cool and I probably would have frozen if it weren’t for Dan. The streets were starting to become grungier and I realized we were heading into dangerous territory.

‘Yup, Taylor if you want to go back, I can get you a cab and I’ll just do the scouting on my own,’ Dan seemed to be really worried about me lately.

-And-

Let your dance with a bunch of desperate girls! I think not!’ Dan laughed and that’s when I realized we had reached a line snaking up the side of the sidewalk.

-And-

‘You’re nervous,’ Dan informed as if I didn’t know myself. The line moved faster than I thought and soon we were in front of a thick red rope. A burly dark-skinned man with a striped dress shirt on glared at us behind dark sunglasses.

‘ID,’ he grumbled, letting out a couple of raspy coughs. Dan let go of my hand to dig in his pocket. He pulled out two shiny pieces of plastic and handed it over.

‘Your clear,’ the man rasped, practically throwing the cards back at us.

The red velvet rope was pulled back and quickly snapped back into place as we crossed over. That’s exactly what it was like, it was like crossing over... To another world.

Strobe lights, pounding music, the smell of cigarettes and what I was pretty sure to be drugs, filled the air. It also smelled heavily of alcohol and the place was thick with people. I didn’t know how we were supposed to scout. Sensing all the people, Dan squeezed my hand tighter.

‘Yah!’ ‘Get it, girl!’ ... ‘Wooo- hoo sexy!’ Where the vulgar yells and shouts that I got as we squeezed through the crowd. A colony party was nothing compared to this. I glared at a drunk bastard when he slapped me squarely on the butt.

‘Are you ok Taylor?’ Dan asked, coughing on the thick smoke in the air.

‘Yeah,’ I lied.

‘I know your probably not going to like this but we need to split up so we can scout better,’ I looked at Dan like he was crazy.

‘You’ll be fine’ he started, sensing my fear, ‘I can pinpoint your emotions out of the whole wide world’. He leaned down and kissed me slowly and firmly on the lips. My mouth-watering when he pulled away. ‘Stay safe,’ he whispered in my ear as he backed out of my vision, getting swallowed up by the crowd.

I instantly felt a hollow pang in my chest. How was I supposed to scout in such a horrible place? Feeling the hungry eyes of grown men watching my every move, I made myself go invisible. I felt more secure that way.

The nightclub was what you could call a warehouse, fluorescent lights that had stopped working ages ago looked like vacant eye sockets. Instead, strobe lights had been placed strategically around the club, looking like they were actually pulsating to the beat of the music on their own accord. The warehouse had a tall ceiling that made the sound escalate into hollow echoes.

Pushing through the crowd with a determined demeanor that I probably put on to mask my nervousness, I didn’t even notice the person I nearly knocked down.

‘Hey watch where your go-’ the boy stopped, realizing that there was no one there. When really, I was standing right in front of him. I was about to dart away from his searching eyes when I realized something.

This boy looked really firmly, Taylor.

Then it clicked...

Waiting for the strobe lights to provide a second of darkness I made myself visible.

‘Scotty?’ ..., I squeaked, not really fully grasp the concept of running into my ex-boyfriend. He was a little taller than I remembered. His hair a thick scruff around his head. But he was Scotty, it was all there. His thick black eyebrows, penetrating forest green eyes that were, even more, enduring than mine, one of a kind smirks that made it look like he was doing a full smile.

‘Taylor you know I prefer ‘Scott’ better’ he teased, surprising me as he hooked a lean arm around my waist and pulled me into a hug. I rocked back a little bit at the force of his hug but his arms steadied me. I was about to pull away when Taylor’s head all hit me.

Scotty was wearing his signature Axe. Somewhere mingled in with that scent were aftershave and chlorine water. Scott was our school's star swimmer and I remember the days when I would go to all of his meets.

We finally pulled away from our hug and my mind still felt fuddled.

‘Well, aren’t you going to say something?’ ... He asked, his thick eyebrows snaking up like caterpillars into a worried arch. I remembered those eyebrows, the very one I used to smooth down whenever he got mad with my small fingers. Too many memories were coming back all at once and I took a hesitant step back.

‘Um-mm, why are you talking to me?’ I knew it sounded rude. Probably something you shouldn’t say to someone you haven’t seen in almost half of a year. It’s just that Scotty broke up with me, ripping out my heart and dragging it with him when he left me dumbstruck in the hallway that heartbreaking afternoon. He had heard the rumors about me. Ability and it was only a matter of time.

‘Why am I talking to you? Taylor, I haven’t seen you in like... forever’ the smile came back and I sighed, looking around me for some possible escape. Why did I have to go and make myself visible?

‘I thought you thought I was a freak’ I said clear and firm, my face blank, not showing the fluttery feeling I felt inside.

‘About that...’ I was again caught by surprise as Scott grabbed my hand and started leading me through the crowd, pushing aside people who wouldn’t move. We reached a corner with a small café like a round table and two metal chairs. I took a seat and watched as Scotty followed.

‘About that...’ he started again, doing that thing where he rests his elbow on the table and fiddles with the front of his hair, ‘I didn’t want to break up with you’. If I said I was fuddled before, that was just an understatement to how I feel now.

‘What?’ Was all I could muster.

‘I know it sounds immature but, everyone else was telling me these... things about you. How you were sick, weird a freak if you must and I didn’t believe them. You were my girlfriend; I knew you better than they did and knew you were none of those things but then.’ He seemed to be thinking of a way to explain further.

‘But then...’ I prodded.

‘But then my father’s voice came to a low whisper as he said these words. I shuddered as the memories of Scott’s father came back to me. He was a firm, brutish man with hair and brows like Scotty’s but was sprinkled with grey. He had a squares stance to him that made you want to almost bow in his presence.

‘Your father didn’t like the idea of you going out with a freak,’ I finished, my nose began to burn and so did my eyes. I rubbed them furiously before a tear could fall. Here I thought I was finally over this boy, now he was shoved back into my face and I was on the verge of crying.

‘Taylor you know my father was always a science man. Always up for a new discovery, spending long hours at the lab in the college he worked at. He welcomed the unknown, but to him, your ability was not only unknown but unnatural,’ I cringed as Scott said those words.

‘Are you trying to say that peer pressure and your father’s criticism is what made you force me to give back the necklace you got me on our first date?’ everything was starting to get blurry and I lifted my eyes to the ceiling, forcing the tears to slide back in.

‘I’m sorry Taylor, I really am, but dad wouldn’t accept me going out with someone who had abilities, it would go against his new project’ Scott tried to slide his hand unto mine but I jerked away.

‘And what was this new project?’ My voice faltered and cracked under the pressure of sitting there with him.

‘The anti-mutation shots...’

‘Mr. Avery created the anti-mutation shots?’ I squeaked, peering through the thick darkness and trying to make out Scott’s face through the glow of the streetlamp. Usually, a party dies down after a few hours but that jungle in there was going strong and even stronger so we decided to talk outside. It felt good to unclog my lungs that seemed to be drowning in smoke.

‘Yes... he did,’ Scott said, dusting off the side of his shoe as we sat on the curb. If it weren’t for the fact that my mind was on one hundred things at once I would probably have noticed how eerie the alley seemed.

‘He’s the reason why people with abilities are losing the one thing that makes them special?’ I asked again, my voice taking on a sharper tone.

‘Taylor, I know it’s wrong but-’ I cut him off with a flash of my eyes.

‘Wrong Scotty...? It’s inhumane to take away a piece of someone’s identity’ the words were tumbling out and I found myself speaking my mind to the first boy I had ever had feelings for and trust me there had been many. That one kid, who after Scotty, pretended to like me but really just wanted to see if he could get powers by kissing me. Then there was Ben, but I’ve realized now that I just didn’t feel the same as he felt for me. We can’t forget Dan, who has been there for me in this scary little field trip.

(Please know that Taylor was just the heat of the moment.)

Scott began to talk again, as I thought about all of this, ‘I know Ro’ he started using the nickname I hadn’t heard in ages, ‘but I can’t go up against my father, he’ll always have the upper hand, I’m just the loyal son who saved his dad money on a swimming scholarship’.

‘You got the scholarship, huh?’ I smirked, giving a small smile and picking my cuticles. It didn’t make sense for us to keep going back and forth like that. This was probably our last conversation and I didn’t want it to end badly.

‘Yah... fastest in the state,’ he attempted a smile to but it mostly came out as a grimace. His mind was somewhere else, at the moment and time he didn’t care about a school scholarship, he cared about...

‘So, what brings you to a nightclub? I would have never imagined bumping into Taylor Lovett at a nightclub-’ he leaned back, probably taking in my skimpy dress for the first time but I knew as he stared at me that he was looking at the Taylor he dated back at the beginning of ninth grade.

‘Just business,’ I started, avoiding his gaze, ‘What brings you here?’

‘I’m here on a whim. Some of the guys dared me to come here. They said I wouldn’t even last one night. But here I am, no body parts were strewn across the alley- floor,’ he chuckled, imitating his body as if checking to see, that all his bones were there. For the first time that night, I laughed.

‘Wow, except for your height you haven’t changed a bit Scotty. Still crumbling under peer-pressure and still cracking jokes,’ his eyes sparkled at the sound of my laugh. I was smiling then but my smile dropped as a sudden look of sadness took over Scott.

‘God, I miss your laugh’ he whispered, taking a rock and scratching against the cold floor. A wind blew by making me grasp my bear arms and watch a newspaper blow in the wind.

‘Scotty...’ was all I could say. After all, he was the one who broke up with me. He threw the rock and turned to me suddenly, a question forming in his eyebrows.

‘Do... Do you remember the Gazebo’ It was either the question or the second wind that sucked the words out of me?

‘Yah,’ I finally stuttered. After Scott had left me dumb-struck in the hall, staring down at the linoleum floor as it blurred with my tears I vowed to destroy, lock away, and bury any reminder of him.

The Gazebo... but the Gazebo is a place you can never forget.

‘I’m sorry Taylor, I should have never brought it back up, I-,’ I placed a hand on his arm which seemed to catch him by surprise. I took that same hand and slowly placed a piece of my hair behind my ear.

‘No, it’s fine,’ I whispered, taking a deep breath and feeling myself practically transporting back to that day.

‘Danny!’ I squealed, wrapping my arms around his shoulders as he tickled me again. Finally, he stopped and I just fell into him on the grass. It had been one whole month since we went out and as we hung out after school, sitting under an old tree at the park, we wondered what we should do to celebrate.

‘I got nothing Ro, it seems like we’ve already been everywhere from our other dates’ Scott said, hooking his arm behind my neck as we laid on the grass under the tree.

‘Not every,’ I whispered, the words leaving my mouth before I could take them back. Danny rolled over so that he was over me now. He wasn’t putting all his weight on me but I could still feel his body pressed to mine. A knowing look was in his eyes as he searched my face.

‘Are you sure Ro, or did you say that just to say it’ me and Scott rarely ever had serious talks. He was such a goofy guy that it never ever crossed our minds to sit down have a serious talk once in a while.

‘I... I’... Looking into Danny’s eyes I knew he was ready, but he wanted to make sure I was ready. He wanted to make sure I was emotionally up for it. He was being a good boyfriend, but I didn’t want to keep him waiting. If he got tired of me? What if he decided I was an immature baby that couldn’t hold her own?

‘Taylor?’ Scott asked, wondering why it was taking me so long to answer.

‘Of course,’ I answered my voice sounding surer than my body.

The sun was dipping lower in the sky as we reached the Gazebo probably every ninth grader at my school has visited at least once. Even though I was confidently leading Scott to the steps of the Gazebo... Butterflies were doing backflips in my stomach. Was I ready for this?

Was I really ready for this?

‘Are you sure?’... Danny asked again, as he pulled out two packs of something you become very harsh like when you take a health class. My mouth was denying the pounding of my heart as I sat down on the wooden benches, feeling the carvings of past couples as I said...

‘Yes!’

Another cold breeze blew back my hair, dragging me to the here and now of things. Scott was calling my name, snapping his fingers in front of my eyes.

‘Earth to Taylor? I know you’re an angel but you need to come back down to earth’ I laughed at the saying he used to whisper to me in math class when I would zone out.

Too- many, memories.

‘Sorry I was just...’

‘Remembering?’ He finished for me, side glancing at me. That night was full of so much emotion, so much intimacy that I didn’t even go to school the next day. Scott was worried that he emotionally scarred me for life but I came to school the next day and we had a nice.... Long... talk.

‘Yah, remembering...’ I wasn’t expecting Scott’s arm to snake around my waist and pull me closer to him. I wasn’t expecting my head to fit naturally in the nook of his neck and place my arm around his waist too.

‘I hope this isn’t too awkward for you Ro,’ he chuckled, his breath warm against my cold scalp.

‘Surprisingly... no,’ I admitted, telling myself over and over and over again that this was just a friendly hug.

‘I’m guessing you came here with a dude?’ It was the first time Scott had implied that I had probably found someone else by now. I was kind of wondering if he found someone else too.

‘Yah his name is-’ but I wasn’t able to finish as someone cleared their throat behind us. I wasn’t surprised to turn and see smoked over blue eyes staring over the top of our heads. I instinctively moved away from Scott.

‘Yeah, she did come with a dude. And he happens to be me’ Dan said.

‘Taylor?’... Dan said in a tone that was more like ‘Start explaining.’

‘Hey Dan, I bumped into...’ I didn’t know how to explain that I had bumped into my ex so- I winged it, ‘a friend from my old school, we were just talking.’ I jumped up from the curve and took a step toward him.

‘His name is Danny- I mean Scott... his name is Scott,’ I let out a sigh of relief for not barfing all over the alley floor.

‘Dan, is it?’ Scott said, sticking out his hand as if he and Dan had met before. I thought I would have to explain the fact that Dan couldn’t see his hand when he stuck it out and placed it in Scott’s.

‘Nice to meet yah,’ he said, but by spending a few months with Dan I knew he didn’t sound so... nice.

‘So, you Ro’s date to this crazy place?’ Scott asked, trying to fill the silence with small talk.

‘Yes, I’m Taylor’s date,’ Dan answered, putting emphasis on my full name. I wasn’t the least surprised when he stuck out his arm and hooked it around my waist, pulling me into his chest. Scott didn’t take his eyes off of my face as he continued to talk.

‘Your eyes are quite unusual; do you have abilities like Taylor?’ Dan tensed under my fingers as Scott asked this.

‘I’m blind and I have highly trained senses so yeah... I guess you can say I have abilities right then and there was the perfect time to go invisible. I tried to look anywhere but Danny’s penetrating green eyes.

The entrance to the club which happens to be a rusted metal door. The stairs that stepped up to the door ending in a flat landing. The street light that was being fussed over by a lone fly. The high-heels that hadn’t broken a heel yet. Dan’s arm clutching my waist.

But then I looked up and met those eyes again.

‘Cool... cool...’ Scott said, obviously running out of words to say. My mind was reeling with the possibilities of what could happen next. Dan would fight Scott. Scott would fight Dan. The possibilities were endless.

‘Um... Dan, can I talk to you for a sec?’ I asked after one whole minute of them burning holes into each other with their eyes.

‘Sure,’ he grabbed my hand and I lifted a finger to Scott telling him ‘One sec’ and walked a little bit away from the curb.

‘Who’s that?’ Dan asked, not holding back as soon as we were out of earshot distance.

‘I already told you, he’s a-’

‘Save it, Taylor, I may be blind but I’m not stupid’ I felt like he had just slapped me in the face. He was obviously mad but it hurt to see him this way, knowing that he could be the sweet Dan from last night. We were only teenagers, why did life have to be so difficult?

'I never said you were stupid Dan' I mumbled, pulling my hand away from his and wrapping my arms protectively around me. The wind made me shudder.

'Well telling me lies makes it seem that way' he crossed his arms and stood, waiting for me to start explaining.

'He- He's my ex-boyfriend,' something that felt like a golf ball was lodged in my throat as I explained this simple fact to Dan. I felt like a dirty cheater just saying the words. I and Dan had basically told each other last night that we really like each other and there I was, hugging my ex-boyfriend.

'Taylor- you can't hide anything from me so why even bother lying' I looked up as Dan continued, 'I sensed how you were feeling and it was a mixture of a lot of things, but the one that stood out the most is the confusion you feel for him'. Dan pointed his finger in the direction of Scott who was kicking the curb, shoulders drooped, head down, just standing there.

'So- you knew from the beginning?' I asked, raising one eyebrow.

'Yeah,' he sighed, taking both of my hands in his and kissing my knuckles. A wave of heat coursed through my veins making the tips of my ears tingle.

'Dan there's something else though,' I said quickly before I would forget.

'What is it?'

'I think- Well I know who created the shots,' Dan's eyes went wide as I whispered this. I looked over at Scott to see if he could hear me. He wasn't looking so I leaned in closer to Dan.

'Scott's father,' I whispered so softly I almost didn't hear myself, but I knew Dan heard. He knitted his eyebrows and seemed to be contemplating all of what I said. I felt dirty for just blabbering about something Danny confided in me but it was for the good of the colony.

'Come on,' Dan said finally, leading me back to where Scott stood.

He obviously already had a plan.

'That was more than one sec I'm afraid' Scott joked, spinning on his heel as we walked towards the curb.

'Sorry,' I said, flashing him a quick smile.

‘Yeah, we were just talking about how we were going to get back to the hotel’ Dan said bluntly, a little smirk forming under his words. The look on Scott’s face was one I had never witnessed. First, it was surprising, then it was confusion, the next anger and finally, he was trying to compose himself.

‘Um... Hotel, Huh?’ He said, directing the question to Dan but looking dead at me.

‘Yah,’ I murmured, finding the speck on my shoulder more interesting as I brushed it off.

‘Well... um... don’t you think a hotel’s a little ...inappropriate?’ ... Scott implied, pulling on the collar of his shirt. I saw Dan smile again and knew that Danny was falling shamelessly into his trap.

‘Yeah, but hey, there’s nowhere else for us to stay,’ Dan shrugged as if he was really bummed about having to stay in a hotel when trust me, he wasn’t.

‘You know...’ Scott started, Dan looked up, from staring at the floor, hopefully, ‘My dad does have some guest rooms and maybe I could call him up and ask if you guys could stay a couple of days?’

Dan shrugged his shoulders as if to say ‘Whatever’ and I said, ‘That would be great’. As Scott went over to the other side of the alley to make the call, Dan turned to me and smiled.

‘That was too easy,’ he gloated, and I punched him lightly on the arm.

‘Just remember Dan he doesn’t have abilities to take it easy on him’ I lectured, wagging my finger up and down.

‘I know, I know’ he said, grabbing by wagging my finger and swallowing up my hand with his. I took a step closer to him and loved the way the moon shone down into his eyes, reflecting pools of glimmering grey. He pulled my hand unto his chest and I felt the thumping of his heart. I wasn’t surprised when Dan’s face began to descend to mine, his eyes closing and mines closing too. I began to tilt my head up in his direction when Danny said from behind us...

‘My dad said yes-’ Dan cursed under his breath, opening his eyes and standing up straight. I sighed and just turned to look at Danny. He knew we were going to kiss.

‘Great,’ Dan murmured in reply.

‘Here we are’ it still took me by surprise when we pulled up to Danny’s house, scratch that, Estate. The tall gates opened up to a gravel road that crackled under Scott’s car. It was an original Mazda Taiki. The orange lights that lit up the front of the house-made it look like a showcase instead of a home. The garage, as if sensing our presence, immediately rolled up allowing Scott to glide in. That’s exactly what it was like, gliding.

‘Whoa, you actually cleaned up the garage Danny?’ I gasped, looking at the neatly organized racks and wide-open area for the cars. The last time I was in this garage it had two old bean bags, a torn computer chair, Emmaio chair, musky rug and an old guitar and drums from when Scott was trying to start a band.

Dan cringed at the use of Scott’s nickname coming out of my mouth and we all got out of the car.

‘I sure did, it took a little help from the guys but...’ he shrugged, and we walked up to the garage door inside leading to the kitchen. Our bags hung on our shoulders- (we picked them up from the hotel.)

‘I see one place hasn’t changed-’ I said, as we stepped into the warm and welcoming kitchen. It was silent as a lone light glowed over the stovetop. The huge refrigerator made a low humming sound as we walked past. Dan and Scott continued on to the foyer but I found myself frozen in front of the massive kitchen with its polished marble tops.

I found myself squinting and almost seeing shadows of me and Danny playing around with cupcake batter. Throwing it at each other, getting it stuck in our hair, wiping it on each other’s noses. Then Scott was sucking some icing off my finger and then we were kissing and...

Too- many, memories.

‘Taylor come on!’ Dan called, snapping me out of the past. I heard them shuffling up the stairs and hurried to catch up.

‘There are two empty rooms close to the stairs and two empty rooms close to the back. Pick away’ Scott said as if he said this to every person who wanted to spend the night. I and Dan looked at each other probably asking, ‘Separate rooms?’

‘If you were wondering, my father said you guys have to be in... separate rooms,’ Dan couldn’t see it but I saw the smirk on Scott’s face.

‘Right-’ was all Dan said as I saw him make his way all the way to the back of the hallway and turned to the right. For the first time that night, it felt awkward just standing there with Scott.

‘Well, I guess I’ll take a room close to the stairs,’ I said timidly, turning around and heading for the door, I was about to drop my bag when Scott touched me lightly on the shoulder. A jolt went through my arm almost making me fall.

‘Tomorrow my dad meets Dan’ he taunted, making his hand slide off my shoulder and turning to go down the stairs.

‘Yaa-any-’ I said in mock joy.

I have to admit. Ben’s silk sheets with satin lacing are way better than the slept in sheets at the hotel. I woke up with a trail of drool following me and I wiped the side of my mouth sleepily. Been said he wanted us to at least say hi to his dad and then we didn’t have to affiliate with him for the rest of our stay. We had to wake up early because of Mr. Avery wakes up really early to go to the Lab.

I swung my legs over the side of the bed and squinted my eyes against the glare of the sun shining brightly through the silk curtains. I rubbed my eyes vigorously and did a deep stretch. I almost forgot all of the events that happened last night but just like a bad dream it eventually comes rushing back to you.

I got up and slumped towards the giant bathroom that I probably didn’t deserve. The tile was cool beneath my feet and I slapped some water on my face and brushed my teeth. After rummaging around in my bag, I found my hair tangled brush and swiped my mane up into a ponytail. I heard movement on the other side of the house and assumed Dan was awake too. I quickly grabbed some loose jogging sweats and a white tee hoping to catch Dan before he went downstairs.

There were some things left unsaid last night and we needed to talk. I grabbed the shiny brass knob and pulled open the door just as Dan was walking down the hall. He raised his one eyebrow as I came flying down the hall, ran into him, grabbed him and pulled him into an unused guest room. He looked at me in surprise.

Portion

‘Dan, we need to talk’ I said, already having everything that I was about to say mapped out.

‘Really?’ ... He said as if he didn’t see this coming.

‘Yes Really,’ I mocked, ‘I need to know... I need to know how you feel about Danny- I mean Been?’ I asked, feeling insecure under Dan’s blind eyes for the first time.

‘Ben...’ he said, as if tasting his name on his tongue, ‘I think he’s just like any other normal guy out there’. I let out a sigh of relief, at least he was being neutral.

‘Well that’s-umm- ...good,’ I stuttered, switching from one foot to the next.

‘Spit it out, Taylor.’

‘I think we should take things easy for right now,’ I blurted, slapping my hands over my mouth. I didn’t know whether I should have said it, yet, but Dan had forced it out of me.

‘What do you mean?’ He said, taking a step closer.

‘What I mean is that this trip was supposed to be strictly business but then we... kissed and Dan it’s obvious that I like you okay but I feel like our emotions are getting in the way of what we really came here for so I guess you can say that-,’ I wasn’t able to finish as Dan grabbed my waist and pressed his lips unto mine. His mouth began to move slowly and so did mine, mimicking his wave-like patterns. All the thoughts that I had so pain-snakingly planned out in my head went down the drain.

He pulled away and rested his head on my forehead. I took two deep breaths and put my arms lightly on his shoulders.

‘You are one sneaky little boy you know that?’ I whispered, out of breath and completely out of mind. Dan chuckled and pulled me even deeper into his chest.

‘Now what were you saying?’ He teased, taking his head off of me and kissing my cheek, right at the corner of my mouth.

‘As I can remember-’ I sighed, as he kissed my jaw and then my neck and then my shoulder. A wave of heat coursed through me making my voice stop in my throat.

‘I think I’m helping,’ he grinned, kissing down the length of my arm and finally my palm, leaving my fingers on fire.

‘Actually, you’re not’ ... I saw the confused look on his face as I pushed lightly away. I gemmated down my hair that had gone awry and smoothed out the shirt that suspiciously lifted above my navel. Dan leaned on the door behind me and waited.

‘Dan I’m serious, we can sort all this out back at the colony but here... here we need to take things seriously,’ he stayed stone still and completely silent as if reading my emotions to see if I was telling the truth.

‘You’re confused, aren’t you?’ He inquired after what seemed like an hour.

‘Excuse me?’ ... I had just never sounded so sure in my life and Dan was asking if I was confused?!

‘Look it’s obvious you still have feelings for a fish boy who so kindly gave us rooms only because he knew you were going to be here, so maybe I should get out of your way until you’re not confused anymore’ Dan leaned off of the wall and turned for the door. I grabbed his arm so fast that it surprised him.

‘Why whenever I try to make things better you assume, I’m trying to make things worse?’ tears were stinging my eyes and it felt like a sock was in my throat but no tears fell. Dan looked back at me and frowned. ‘Because,’ he started, turning so that his head was facing the door again, ‘what’s better for you isn’t always better for me’.

I waited two minutes after he left before heading out the door myself.

‘Dad this is Dan,’ Dan stuck out his hand as Scoot said his name.

Ben’s father shook it.

‘And you remember Taylor...’ Ben’s father just nodded at me and I followed. He kept appraising me and Dan like we were a specimen under his microscope.

‘You know Taylor, my lab’s always open if you will consider being my subject’ his voice was gravel deep and his thick eyebrows made him look serious all the time. I took a deep breath and tried to answer as politely as possible.

‘Thanks for letting us stay here Mr. Avery, but I’m not a test subject’ the room got quiet as I said this and everyone seemed to be just staring at each other.

‘Very well then, have a nice day,’ then he was gone, his white lab coat swooshing at his knees as he closed the front door. We just stood in the foyer, continuing our stares when Danny spoke up.

‘Well, that went well!’ He said, clasping his hands together, ‘I thought he’d never leave.’

I just smiled and Dan acted like he was bored.

‘You guys deserve a tour. Up for it?’ Ben’s feet were muffled on the cool marble as he walked towards a sitting room.

‘I think I’ll pass on your tour... I can explore on my own’ Dan excused himself and I couldn’t help but think ‘please Dan, don’t do anything risky.’ I just knew he was going to snoop around the house to find out more about the shots.

‘What about you Ro?’ Ben asked, raising his eyebrows into a question. I couldn’t believe Dan was leaving me alone with Danny. He was definitely mad at me, probably trying to prove something. I walked over to an eager Ben who seemed to be hanging on every word I said. ‘I’ve already seen your house Danny’ I reasoned, watching a disappointed frown form on his face. Then he smiled.

‘Yeah but I bet you haven’t seen ‘The Shack,’ I found myself following Ben out the door and around the side of the house.

‘The Shack?’ I questioned, wondering what was so exciting about a shack anyway.

‘Yeah, it’s a cool little hangout spot me- and the boys made. Usually, it’s no girls aloud but I think I can make an exception,’ we walked across the massive backyard of the estate towards a little white house. It looked like a regular-sized house but paled in comparison to the estate.

‘This is the Shack?’

‘Yeah, too hard to believe?’ I shoved Ben playfully from behind as we stepped inside. What I saw made me burst out laughing. The Shack looked like an elegant regular house on the outside but inside...

Inside it was a mess.

Comic books cluttered a wooden table that was set in the middle of the old bean bags, office chair and Emmaio chair I thought Danny got rid of. Posters of rock bands clustered the wall and a set of steel ladders led up to a makeshift loft. A big TV with multiple game systems hooked up to it sat amongst it all.

I couldn't stop laughing as I held my middle, pointing at a half-eaten hoagie.

'You... You basically picked up the garage and dropped into this nice-looking place... Then... then called it 'The Shack', ' I managed to say. Ben sighed and picked up one of the comics to the only drop back down again.

'Ok, ok I know it's funny' he said after a while. I wiped a few stray tears and smiled.

'You've really outdone yourself this time Danny,' I fingered the cool metal of the flat screen.

'It's Ben...'

'Danny...'

'Ben...'

'Danny...'

'Ben...'

I stayed frozen still as I felt Ben's uneven breath right by my ear. I wanted to shudder at the shiver that just ran down my spine but didn't want to give him the satisfaction. I felt his warm hands rub the side of my arms. I could only lightly feel him standing behind me.

'You know I'm always going to call you Danny,' I said, trying to focus on the cover of a comic instead of his hands on me and his breath in my ear.

'I know, it's just that I love hearing you call me that. No one's called me that in a long time,' I let out a deep breath as Ben dropped his hands and seemed to hesitate before stepping away from me. He walked over to the steel ladder and put one foot on it, turning to me.

'Want to see where this leads to?'

'Sure,' I answered after looking the ladder up and down.

We reached the top of the ladder, and my assumption that up here was a loft was correct. It was more than a loft though; it was a view. My breath caught in my throat as I stepped onto the hardwood floor and walked slowly towards a large window that wrapped around the whole top of the house. The crest that Ben's estate sat on made it the perfect view of the city. I let my fingers trace the tall buildings and bustling cars that sped out and into sight. Was I really seeing this? Was I really witnessing this? Could the place I dreaded so much be so beautiful? The sunrise in the distance only answered that question for me.

'It's nice, huh?' ... I had almost forgotten Ben was there and jumped as he appeared beside me.

'Nice? It's amazing,' I breathed, letting my hand drop to my side and peering down at the people who were oblivious to my wondering eyes.

'When I got this little house built, I thought it would be cool to have a view' he continued, resting his hand on the window too.

'It was an awesome idea,' I admitted, lowering myself into a sit.

'Yah... I remember we used to always come up with the wackiest ideas' Ben chuckled and laughed into his hand. I drummed the floor.

'Like that time- we took that old wagon and tried to ride it down the hill' I added- 'Or when we taught our class parrot how to curse,' he put in.

'When we spied on Miss. Baker, and caught her in her pantyhose' by now I had my forehead pressed against the glass laughing.

'What about the time we put chocolate fudge on one of my dad's slides and he thought he found a new strain of plant species' now we were both laughing hard, looking at each other only made us laugh harder.

'That time I ruined my dress for the Halloween dance- so you tore your tux and we went as zombies' Ben just looked over at me and smiled, his green eyes twinkling. He scooted towards me a little until our shoulders were brushing. I felt the urge to move away... But didn't.

'Our first kiss,' it wasn't an accident as the words left Ben's lips. He meant to say it, as he looked over at me, I could see that he meant to say it. Then his face was coming towards me.

'No,' I said suddenly, stopping him by his shoulder, 'we can't.'

‘Who said?’ He taunted, the ways his eyes danced made me want to just move in.

‘My conscience, the little voice deep down inside telling me this is wrong’ my voice didn’t waver but stayed clear and strong, making it seem like I knew what I wanted when really... I didn’t. Danny grabbed my hand and squeezed as it laid on his shoulder.

‘Ro,’ he whispered, his eyes pleading. For what? I don’t know.

‘Danny,’ I whispered back, trying so hard to fight the urge. What about Dan? I couldn’t just be another statistic. The girl who falls for him that broke up with her because she can’t handle being alone with him. I couldn’t betray Dan like that, I couldn’t prove that what he said right. He was wrong about me still having feelings for Ben, he was wrong.

Yet despite all of this, I leaned in for the kiss.

I don’t know why I began to kiss Ben. Maybe it was because I’m a weak sucker for love. Probably because I wanted to see if Dan was right and that I still had feelings for him. Or maybe I just missed the feeling of his lips slightly grazing mine. A vibrating warmth spread through my body making me shudder as I leaned backward, and Ben followed. He grabbed my face in his hands and continued to kiss me but deeper and longer this time. I felt like I was reliving the events of the gazebo as his tongue came sliding into my mouth making my cheeks burn.

The adrenaline took over my thoughts as I began to unbuckle his belt and felt myself undoing his button. I unzipped his zipper and began to pull on his pants when Ben pulled away from my eager lips and looked at me straight in the eye, his breath uneven as it warmed my lips.

‘I shouldn’t be doing this to you,’ he whispered, grabbing my hand that laid on his zipper. He curled his hands into a fist at my sides and rested his head on my bare stomach.

‘What do you mean?’ I asked, my head still fuzzy from what almost happened. I took his head in my hands as he just laid there.

‘I mean... it shouldn’t be this way. I shouldn’t have seduced you like that’ he murmured, his hair tickling my bare skin.

‘I’m such a slut,’ I heard myself whispering. I grabbed my forehead with my hand and turned my head away from him.

‘Taylor doesn’t say that’ I began to cry into my hands as Ben stroked my hair, ‘Ro, come on...’

‘Just... don’t touch me!’ I scrambled away from his grasp, groping for the top of the ladder.

‘Taylor wait!’ I didn’t wait, I lowered myself unto the metal rods and went down one clang at a time. Boys always made me feel special and whenever I got a chance to kiss them, I took it. But now I was tired of playing the role ‘easy to get.’

‘Ro wait! I’m sorry!’ Ben started to follow me down and I tried to go down as fast I could with blurry vision.

‘Don’t call me that’ I whispered, finally reaching the bottom floor and running towards the door. I darted across the backyard and ran towards the back door, opening it in a hurry and slamming it shut. I heard Ben open the back door too as I sprinted through the den, two sitting rooms and then finally the foyer.

‘Taylor I’m sorry!’

I ran up the stairs and was aiming for the guest room I was staying in but instead ran straight into Dan’s broad chest. His face showed confusion as I stumbled to the floor and tried to get back up.

‘Taylor?’ He asked, grabbing my hand and pulling me up.

‘I’m sorry Dan, I’m so sorry’ I gasped, crying as I said it.

‘What happened Taylor?’ His voice was cold. I grabbed his forearms.

‘I didn’t mean to kiss him it just happened and I’m sorry Dan, I am, I-’ I stood shocked as he took my hands and brushed them off of his forearms. His face was stone hard as he glared behind smoked over eyes.

‘As I said before, what’s better for you is worse for me. I hope you enjoyed your little make-out session,’ I still couldn’t grasp the fact that he was mad as we heard footsteps running up the stairs.

‘I’m sorry but this is your fight,’ he whispered as Ben appeared at the top of the stairs. I wanted to call out but only a squeak escaped my lips as Dan walked away and back to his room.

‘Taylor, we should talk,’ Ben said quickly, grabbing my arm but I backed away.

‘No Ben’ I said firmly, ‘I’m leaving tomorrow’.

‘I don’t know,’ I whimpered. The wrinkled lady looked at me behind blue beady eyes and peered over her thin glasses. The clock ticked loudly in that silent room and my mind raced faster than my heart.

‘What do you mean child?’ She asked, crossing her legs and resting her notepad on her knee. I sucked in a deep breath and squeezed the pillow that I clutched in my hand.

‘I mean... I don’t know why I do the things- I do,’ I whispered. The lady, Evelyn Pauper her desk plague said, nodded her head slowly and then looked straight at me.

‘And that makes you feel...?’ she leaned forward in her chair.

‘Scared,’ I finished. A giant teardrop escaped from my eye and plopped unto the sheer white coach I was curled upon. Evelyn scribbled some more notes vigorously with pruned hands. My eyes wavered over to the window that was misted over with dew.

‘This... the scared feeling you get. Would you describe it as... anxiety?’

There were a light glow and mist on the windowpane, signaling the return of rain. I wiped my moist face and stretched out my sleepy legs. ‘I don’t know. I just...’ I was looking for the right impossible words to explain to a normal person like Evelyn Pauper.

‘I’m usually the girl who’s invisible to the world’ I started, and excitement stirring in me suddenly, ‘I’m that one girl that people seem to look through unto the other side. Lately, though, there’s been... people... who can see me? The real me. See me as I’ve never been seen before.’ Evelyn nodded her head the whole time I talked and finally when I finished, she slipped off her glasses and seemed to stare blankly out of the window like me.

‘Do you care to tell me who these people are?’ She asked after a long silence. I kept staring out the window. At the alley below. The kids playing in the puddles. The people blocking their heads with newspapers as they walked along the sidewalks. Watching them from my perch at the window I didn’t want to answer Evelyn.

‘There are these two boys,’ I whispered. Evelyn looked away from the window to study my crestfallen face.

‘Can’t decide between the two?’ She asked. I finally pulled away from the window to see the small smile on her face. She was good.

Portion

‘I thought I did. One is different from me. I and he have been through some stuff and it’s like he can see right through me. The other is what you could call.... An old flame. I and he have had our fair share of firsts and every time I’m around him I feel like...’ my words finally failed me - and I went back to staring out the window. Anywhere was better than looking at the face of the wise.

‘A match made in heaven and an old flame? You definitely have a problem with your hand’... she inquired while scribbling on her little pad.

I gulped and fiddled with my fingers.

‘I guess...’

Evelyn took off her glasses and tossed her pad unto her desk. She made it over to the couch and took a cautious seat next to me. She smelled like roses, rain, and prune juice.

‘I guess’ isn’t just it. It’s a means of surrender. In this situation, it’s saying ‘I give up’,’ She rubbed her hands down her skirt and scrunched her eyebrows together, ‘Surrendering is something you can live with. You can run, run far away from your troubles. Or you can fight. Fight for what you know is right and what you know will make everything ok again.’

I folded my legs together and looked at her with new eyes. She made it sound so... Easy.

‘It’s that easy?’

‘Only you can make it easy’ her wise old face answered, and if it wasn’t improper, I would have hugged her right there and then.

My feet thudded rapidly as I ran across the slippery pavement. It took all of my might not to lose my balance and fall into the murky rainwater. People looked at me with puzzling expressions as I sped past them and nearly knocked them over.

‘Slow down girl!’ a woman with three kids and a grocery bag yelled at me. I didn’t stop though, I ran faster. My chest thumped loudly with the beating of my overworked heart.

This was something I had to do because, if I didn't, it would be a mistake I would regret forever.

'Ah!' I said, slipping and nearly falling on the cold pavement. I caught myself in time and stumbled to a stand as I stared up at the big house coming up. The one with the graveled lawn and perfect view of the city. The city I grew up in and the city that I feared.

I kept running and felt the cold air whipping at my lungs, making my throat burn.

'Wait!' I called the tall figure packing up the army green jeep parked in the driveway. 'Wait!'

I charged up the incline just as the faint figure shut the trunk. He turned around at the sound of my voice.

'Please! Just wait for one-' I tripped on the slick gravel again but got right back up as little pieces of rock embedded my hands and knees. The figure crossed his arms over his broad chest and kept the solid rock stare he was wearing unchanging.

'What do you want?' He said bitterly, his tongue lashing like a viper. My fingers felt numb as I wiped the tears from my eyes with a shaking hand. I took two steps over the wet gravel so that I was right in front of him.

'Dan' I started, my voice wavering only a little, 'You may be blind... but you can see me. See me more than anyone ever could. Dan- I...'

'Get on with it- Taylor' He snapped, surprising me.

'Dan, I love you,' I said confidently, a single raindrop falling on my nose, 'I love the way you hold me and reassure me and kiss me when I least expect it'. Dan was about to say something but I continued. 'Dan I've finally realized that you mean a lot to me. I'm sorry about what happened to Ben. It wasn't supposed to happen, Dan. I know now that-'

'Taylor stop-!' He said louder now. My voice stopped but my mouth stayed open. 'How do you think I felt when you rushed up those stairs with that guilty look on your face. Do you know what it feels like to be on the side that was played?'

'Dan-'

‘No! You don’t know.... Because you never been the player... just the player.’

‘Dan!’ I said louder now, surprise filling my voice. This couldn’t be happening; Dan was supposed to forgive me and love me. Everything was supposed to be forgotten.

‘Your special Taylor, your pretty too, but that’s not enough for me to just forgive you,’ he walked away from my shocking form and got into the driver’s side of the frosted jeep.

‘My love should be enough Dan!’ I yelled, tears stinging my eyes and making them burn like never before. ‘It should be enough!’

‘Just get in the car unless you plan on moving in with Ben!’ he yelled back, the engine roaring to life. My breath came out in small puffs in front of me. My tears freezing on my face. I got in the car and felt like I was going to throw up as I buckled my seatbelt and tried not to look at Dan. My breath made frosted crystals on the window glass as we pulled out of the driveway. The rain started to fall harder on the moving Jeep. It felt like something had been ripped out of me.

‘Dan-,’ I tried again, my voice barely a whisper.

‘Not now Taylor...’

I stepped out of the elevator and didn’t stop to talk to anyone. I made no eye contact and even went as far as turning myself invisible. A couple of people were already waiting for Dan at the elevator and hammered him with questions as soon as the door opened. Me, I climbed the much-used stairs and began searching for my room number.

I just knew my eyes were puffy and red from crying and I just knew how sick I felt at the moment. I’ve only been heartbroken once in my life but this is by far the worst. As soon as the wooden door banged against the wall, gaping open, I slowly walked in and threw myself on my bed. My bag dropped with a thud to the floor as I curled up into a tight ball.

Dan had rejected me. He didn’t want anything to do with me. He didn’t love me back.

‘Because you’re disgusting,’ a sinister voice whispered inside of me. My eyes went wide with fear as I looked over at the figure standing on the other side of the room.

‘He hates you, and he’ll never love you’ it hissed. Shaking, I sat up and peered over at the short pale boy with cracked grey lips. Bobby Shipparro...

‘You’re not real!’ I yelled, grabbing the side of my head and squeezing my eyes shut.

‘Oh, I’m really alright. As long as sadness, abandonment, and fear live inside of you, I will always exist,’ his unearthly voice jeered, a smile creeping onto his face and making his lips crack, spilling blood.

‘No! You can’t! I did nothing wrong! I didn’t kill you!’ I yelled louder; my voice was hoarse with tears. This didn’t faze the ghost-like Bobby.

He just took one step closer and smiled wider.

‘Face- it Taylor. You are alone... And you always will be.’

I didn’t stop my fury as another hoarse scream left my throat and I grabbed the vase on the nightstand, flinging it across the room. It flew through the haunting figure and smashed into the wall behind. Water and shards went flying as tears blurred my vision.

‘Always alone... Always alone... always, always, always...’ then the voice disappeared, taking its unwelcome form with it and I pulled my knees to my chest. This couldn’t be happening. Why was this happening to me? I didn’t deserve any of it.

Yet my mind started to wonder at something else. What if the voice was right? I would always be alone, forever alone in a world, no human being could face by themselves.

Head jerking sobs started to escape from my throat and I clutched my stomach in agony. I didn’t belong in this place anymore. Maybe running was my only solution and it was my fate to forever run.

‘Taylor! Taylor are you in there?’ Someone called on the other side of my door. I recognized it as Adrienne’s voice but I didn’t dare leave my huddled position in fear I might break to pieces.

‘Taylor? What’s wrong?’ Adrienne called. She sounded really concerned for me, almost worried for my wellbeing. But I knew better, I would forever be alone. No one cared about me.

‘Taylor open the door!’ Adrienne yelled, her fist banging on the door.

‘Just leave me alone!’ I yelled back, making her banging stop, ‘I don’t need you or anybody!’

‘Taylor!’ Adrienne said shocked, her voice alight muffle.

‘Just go away!’ I screamed louder, rocking in the curled-up position I sat in. There was a long pause in front of the door.

‘Fine, have it your way,’ Adrienne said coldly and started walking down the hall, footsteps disappearing from earshot.

‘Just everyone leaves- me- alone,’ I murmured, salty tears falling into my mouth and soaking my knees.

‘Just everyone- go- away!’

~*~

I needed to find Dan and fast. Taylor wasn’t acting like this when she left and as her friend, I knew she needed my help. When I heard the loud crash come from her room I rushed over immediately. I could hear her crying inside and knew she needed help but she wouldn’t open the door. It wasn’t like Taylor to seem so depressed.

‘Dan!’ I called, banging on his room door hard. ‘Dan! Open up!’

There was a long silence before finally Dan swung his door open and glared at me from his post at six feet tall. I took a deep breath and placed my hands on my hips.

‘What’s wrong with Taylor?’ I asked bluntly. Dan blinked and didn’t even twitch in the hard-core expression he was giving me.

‘It’s none of your concern Adrienne...’

I think I was close to exploding.

‘None of my concern... She is my friend! Now tell me what you did to her so I can slap you in the face... Hard,’ even I knew Dan wasn’t fazed by that statement but he did look on the verge of exploding himself.

‘What I did to her? Adrienne, she kissed me, me and Taylor kissed and then she went off making out with her ex-boyfriend!’ He yelled; I hadn’t seen Dan so steamed since...

‘Dan... her ex-boyfriend?’ I said in disbelief. Dan leaned away from my face and seemed to deflate a little.

‘Yes...’

‘Did she say sorry Dan? Did she say anything to you?’ I asked, searching his face as his eyebrows furrowed and he straightened up back into his defiant stature.

‘She...’ I nodded, urging him on, ‘She told me she loves me.’

I think you could have heard a pin drop in that doorway. I looked down at my feet that were crossed nervously on the blue carpet, and then back up at Dan’s blind eyes, that seemed to see so much.

‘And you rejected her’ my statement hung in the air as I peered in at Dan. His face was like that of someone trying to figure out a hard puzzle.

‘I did, but she deserved it,’ he said finally, moving to close the door but I stopped him.

‘She’s not Natalie you know? Taylor’s different,’ I persisted, Dan’s eyes showed surprise and then flickering back to a dark void.

‘I thought the same thing, but you didn’t witness what I did.’ There was a pain in his words and I wanted to comfort him but didn’t know-how. I tried one more tactic though, I needed him to at least talk to her.

‘And you didn’t hear what I heard’ I said, getting a questioning look from him, ‘Taylor isn’t handling all of this so well. She’s been through a lot, Dan. I... I heard her throwing things and sobbing in her room. Dan, she really does love you.’

He stood in the doorway, face unchanging.

‘Fine, don’t believe me but believe this. There is a girl sobbing and carrying on in her room, thinking that she will forever be alone in the world. I know one thing, and that’s Merry Kate won’t be too happy to have the blood of another on her hands if Taylor does something drastic.’

My eyes parted open gingerly as peeks of early morning light tried to filter through. For a second I forgot everything. My confession to Dan, his rejection, and the ghost-like Bobby.

Sadly though, the horrifying reality came back to haunt my soul and a shiver went down my spine as I sat up in bed. Crust caked the sides of my eyes as I swung my legs over the side of my bed to stand. I stopped suddenly at the shards of glass glimmering in the sunlight. I sighed and retracted my legs to the comfort of my bed. I had forgotten all about my wild rage and the vase that went flying from my hand.

Grabbing the magazine on my side table I scooped up the shards nearby and took a hesitant step toward my slippers. I forced myself not to look to the other side of the room where the crude Bobby Shipparro once stood.

I finally retrieved protection for my feet and stifled the tears that were overwhelming my senses. I felt like I could break at any moment and that if I didn't splash some water on my face I might puke.

Rushing over to the bathroom sink I stared at the girl in the mirror. Her once jubilant green eye was dull and void of life. Cheeks once flushed with life were now pale with a touch of death. Her hair that was once her most beautiful asset was now limp and tangled.

Shaking my head furiously I dunked my hands in the running water and quickly splashed the refreshing liquid on my face. But not even the colonies fresh tap water could make me forget the events of yesterday.

Still shaken up I jumped when a loud knock came from my room door. Peeking around the bathroom door I watched the shadow block the stream of light beneath my door.

'I just might betray you so you might as well leave!!!' I yelled stubbornly, pulling my head back into the bathroom and drying my face on a towel. My snark comment didn't stop the knocker from knocking. 'I'm serious! I just might confess my love to you and you still won't forgive me.'

In a weird and twisted way, I needed to joke my way out of the hurt.

I didn't want the person on the other side of the door to know that I was about close to tears and likely go through the brush in my hand on their face when they opened the door.

The knocker persisted yet still and I finally found myself walking towards the door. Why couldn't people get the hint that I just wasn't up for socializing today?

'Do I need to spell it out for you? I don't-,' I stopped suddenly as my palm lingered on the doorknob. The door stood wide open but I didn't utter a single word to the figure in front of me.

‘Taylor, I think we should talk’ said the painful smocked over grey eyes that continued to stare at my strained expression.

‘Sure,’ I choked, ‘Dan.’

‘Can I come in?’ Dan asked after a long and tedious silence. I was compelled to slam the door in his rather- handsome face but thought the better of it as I opened the door wider. He nodded and took the last two steps inside.

I walked gingerly over to the side of my bed and took a hesitant seat. Dan was here, in my room and the atmosphere was definitely different from the other times he visited. I fiddled with my fingers as he stared in the direction of the leftover shards of glass on the floor.

‘I was able to snag a sample of the death shots’ he said absentmindedly, leisurely walking around the room and picking up stuff from my dresser only to put it down again.

‘Really?’ I asked, wondering at his casual conversation starter.

‘Yes really, the colonies lab is examining it right now; there could be a breakthrough’. I watched as Dan picked up a picture of me and my sisters. What did he wish to see when he touched a picture frame? I had the look of death on my face while they smiled cheerily, and I was only three.

‘That’s... good,’ I felt like there was a thick brick wall of tension between me and Dan as he explored the room. I visibly cringed as he stopped in the same spot the translucent Bobby Shipparro stood in, his haunting voice still racking my brain. Dan looked over at my now ashen white face and frowned.

‘What’s wrong?’ His face was calculating, ‘You’re turning pale.’

I shook my head vigorously, my reddish-brown hair slapping my face. ‘Nothing, it’s nothing, Dan. Just tell me, what exactly did you come for?’

There, I said it, the one question that had been nagging at the back of my brain since he stepped into the room. Dan finally moved away from the foreboding spot in the room and stood in front of me.

‘Adrienne came and talked to me yesterday,’ he said slowly as if waiting for my reaction. I was a little surprised but, yet, still, a part of me knew Adrienne would do something like that.

‘What did she say?’ I stuttered. Dan looked over the top of my head and seemed to be choosing his words carefully.

‘She said you weren’t well... she said you needed me,’ if he could see my face, he would have probably seen my bottom lip trembling and the way I shook my head vigorously. I didn’t need anyone anymore.

‘Well,’ I started, standing up to face a towering Dan, ‘She’s wrong. I don’t need anyone, not anymore.’ Dan’s eyebrows wrinkled in concern and he missed over eyes flashed that of worry. Was it possible that he could forgive? My mind didn’t linger on that hope.

‘Taylor doesn’t say that. Everyone needs at least someone in their life. No one can ever face life like that of us gifted alone,’ he said. As he talked, I just shook my head even more. I wouldn’t fill my head with dreams of something better anymore. Something better was n’t down my alley.

‘Don’t try to feel sorry for me Dan. I get it ok. I was stupid to think you loved me back’. Dan moved to say something but I quickly cut him off. ‘As I said, it’s ok, I except what I was meant for. It’s my fate to run. Which is why I’m going to leave and forget all about you, the colony and...’

Dan grabbed me by the sides of my arm fiercely and zoned in on my face. ‘You are not going anywhere you hear me!’

I continued to talk as if I hadn’t heard him. ‘...Just forget the memories - I’ve made here because memories only make it hurt more.’ I don’t know where the tear came from, but I couldn’t wipe it away because of Dan’s hard grip on my arm.

‘Taylor, I don’t want you to leave,’ he said softly. I had never seen Dan so vulnerable in all of the time I’ve known him. ‘I want you to stay here, with me.’

I looked down at my feet. ‘You made it clear yesterday that you don’t want me here.’

Dan’s eyes seemed to glaze over as he softened his grip on my arm.

‘I think I should tell you about Natalie’.

~*~

‘Natalie?’ I said, looking up into his clear water eyes. Dan nodded slowly and nudged me to sit down. I did and watched as he took a seat next to me. He had this faraway look in his eyes as if saying this girl’s name transported him to another world. ‘Who is Natalie Dan?’

‘She was everything’ he started, startling me a little. A sad smile formed on his lips. ‘She was everything you could want in a girl. Hair and eyes fit for a goddess. Attitude fit for a queen. Not to mention the fact that she was the strongest mind reader the colony had’. Dan chuckled as if remembering some inside joke.

‘She was everything, and then... I lost her...’ I think my stomach twanged and a pang coursed through me. Natalie died?

‘She died?’ I asked out loud. Dan looked at me in surprise.

‘No, no, no, that’s not how I lost her,’ he said quickly. I sighed and he continued to look at the wall in front of us. ‘I lost her to someone else.’

A guilty realization slapped me in the face. Natalie had hurt Dan the same way I did, breaking his heart forever. It’s why he was so upset with me. It’s why he wasn’t so ready to forgive, and even though I was jealous of how much he seemed to love this Natalie girl, I wished things would have worked out better for the heartbroken Dan in front of me. Dan cleared his throat and opened his mouth to say something, but nothing came out.

‘Dan, you really cared about her, didn’t you?’ I asked, my voice sounding like a sock was stuck in my throat. He only nodded and it felt kind of awkward sitting there with him in the still silence. I started to think about the boy sitting next to me who always had a shell built up around him, and how now this very same shell was crumbling right before my eyes. I couldn’t help but almost feel how helpless Dan felt when he knew he couldn’t stop Natalie from leaving him. I could almost imagine him blaming himself for the heartache he had to go through.

I could only help but think that I had done the same thing Natalie did.

‘Dan I’m so sorry’ I knew the words were empty, void of meaning but I still said them... ‘I wish I could take everything back.’

Dan buried his face in his palms as if secretly wiping the tears away that were about to fall. 'I'm no better. I shouldn't have... I shouldn't have yelled at you back in the city. I really hurt you, Taylor. I'm sorry.'

A guilty wave spread- through my bones. Why was Dan saying sorry? Why was he being so selfless for an undeserving me?

'Why would you throw the vase?' he asked suddenly, breaking me from my guilty torment. I looked over to see Dan staring at me now and then I looked at the remaining pieces of glass on the floor. My eyes focused over to the spot Bobby Shapparro's deceased form stood and I shivered.

'I saw... I heard something I didn't like. I was just upset. People tend to do the unthinkable in rage'. Dan could probably sense the tears coming to my eyes because he put his arm around my waist, surprising me.

'What did you hear? What did you see?'. They were simple questions but I wasn't too ready to answer them. Not without reliving the moment.

'I- I don't think I can tell you-'

Dan sighed making strands of my hair quiver. 'It's ok. I understand.'

He pulled me closer to his side and a longing overcame my senses. Was Dan just being nice? Did he still have feelings for me? I tilted my head so that I was looking up into his grey eyes and face hiding grief. I wanted him so bad right then. I wanted to him to lean down and meet my face in the most wonderful kiss imaginable. I wanted Dan to want me and I had never felt so desperate and needy like this before.

Dan seemed to sense all of the emotions I had so carelessly broadcasted and moved his eyes in my direction. They were the eyes of a teenage boy hesitant at any chance of love. Someone who had his heart broken more than once to know he wouldn't leave himself vulnerable again.

A gasp escaped my throat as Dan lifted his hand to my chin, anchoring it as he traced a thumb across my bottom lip. How was it possible that this boy could make me feel so special by the little things he did? My heart ached at the thought of not kissing him.

‘Please, Dan. Don’t do this to me. I love you too much to just sit here and not want to kiss you’ I found myself saying, leaving my emotions bare and raw for Dan to easily sense.

He smiled only a little and his eyebrows arched in the way of someone going through a painful and hard process.

‘I want to know for sure Taylor. I want to know for sure that you aren’t going to hurt me again’ he said finally, the words leaving his lips and brushing my face. I shivered as he caressed the side of my face.

‘I love you, Dan. I couldn’t imagine ever again doing something to hurt you’ I placed a shaking hand on his chest. ‘I promise in my life.’

I was surprised as Dan suddenly swooped me up into his arms and placed me on his lap His strong arms braced my hip as he looked up at me now, my green eyes showing surprise.

‘I was hoping you’d say that,’ he breathed.

I wished I had a magic bottle to capture the kiss that came next.

‘Glad you two could finally join us,’ Merry-Kate smiled, her glossy red hair in a lazy side ponytail.

Portion

I and Dan quickly found a seat at the table. I spotted Adrienne across the way and she smiled, seeing that I and Dan finally worked things out. We were in a large room with light blue walls and a dark plush blue carpet. The giant polished wood round table we sat at could hold a good twenty people.

It was the meeting room and Merry-Kate had called us in here for business.

It was me, Dan, Adrienne, Sean, Taylor, Merry-Kate and fourteen other ground dwellers I didn’t recognize. I have to say it was weird sitting in the same room as Taylor with Dan right beside me but it didn’t bother me too much.

‘We’re all here today to talk about the anti-mutation shots, aka the death shots,’ Merry announced, getting right to the point. Everyone held their breath for what she would say next. ‘As you all may already know, our lab experts are dissecting the sample Dan and Taylor were able to snag.’

Every person at the table turned to look at us and I inadvertently turned invisible.

‘There is a very slim chance but I have been informed that there could be an antidote,’ she finished. A loud sigh was released from every person sitting there and Dan loosened his grip on my hand.

Merry pressed a hidden button under the table and we all watched as a part of the top of the table slid away to reveal a hologram projector. A fuzzy image of a DNA strand appeared in the air and Merry-Kate started to talk again.

‘This is an image of how those of us with abilities’ DNA strands look,’ she pointed to the purplish segments covering parts of the DNA, ‘what the anti-mutation shots do is dissolve these purple segments, thus making us ‘normal’ again.’

Everyone stared at the blinking image until suddenly it vanished as Merry-Kate clicked the button again. ‘So, then what do we do until we wait for the antidote?’ Dan asked, breaking the silence that had enveloped us.

‘We retaliate,’ the redheaded nineteen-year-old started, ‘we convince others like us to rebel against these... death shots and help those who have had the shots forced on them.’

‘Forced...?’ I asked, my voice hard. Could the government do that?

‘Yes forced,’ Merry sighed. Suddenly she lifted her watch to her mouth and called into it, ‘bring him in.’

The shiny wooden door swung open immediately, and everyone stared at a young boy who was brought into the room. He looked no older than nine and hid behind Merry-Kate as soon as he was brought in.

‘This is Timothy guys, he’s only ten years old and used to have abilities just like us... until...’ everyone held their breath as Merry-Kate tried to find the right words, ‘he was taken away from his parents and the shot was forced on him.’

We all gasped and a colonist who looked around the same age as Merry-Kate stood up. ‘And what exactly do you plan on doing with the boy?’ the girl asked Merry, her dark black hair curtaining her face. ‘Keep him safe, watch over him and, when the time comes, give him the antidote to the shots.’

The table broke out in conversation and I watched as the boy hid further behind Merry-Kate. He was definitely scared but he had this look on his face as if he didn't want anyone to know just how scared he was. His dark brown hair fell into his dark brown eyes that seemed to be void of life. The shots had definitely messed him up.

'What was his ability?' I asked Merry-Kate, the room going silent with my question.

'One look from his eyes, and he could make you do whatever he wanted.'

My eyes wavered back to the boy and I saw his eyes dart to my face and quickly move away. I felt a tingle as if his powers were supposed to do something to me, but then it vanished. The shots had taken away every last drop.

'If the antidote doesn't work?' Sean's loud voice boomed, 'what if it has side effects, the kid's not a guinea pig.'

More conversation erupted at that possibility and I could see Merry-Kate losing her tolerance. 'Quiet!' she yelled, and everyone's mouths clamped shut. It wasn't on their own though, Merry-Kate had done it, and I marveled at her ability.

'Now,' she said more sweetly, 'who would like to take care of the boy until I can work this whole shot thing out?'

She dug into her pocket and pulled out two sticks of gum, handing one to the boy and popping the other in her mouth.

No one raised their hands and everyone stayed glued to their seats.

It was sad actually. How could people be so selfish?

'Well, I guess the little booger is going to have to-'

'I'll take him,' I said abruptly, raising a determined hand high in the air.

'Are you sure you'll be able to handle this Taylor?'

Dan and I stood quietly outside my room door as timid timothy got settled inside. Looking up into Dan's mystical orbs, I tried to find the right words for his question. Who knows? Maybe I'm not cut out for the whole 'taking on a kid,' thing.

Dan was still giving me a questioning look as I peeked in on Timothy who was eyeing my pictures and trying to find a good place to put his bags.

‘I’ll be fine,’ I assured him, a warm smile slipping onto my face, ‘How hard can taking care of a ten-year-old kid be? I was ten once.’

An unconvinced Dan still looked at me with an uneasy expression. He sighed though and planted a swift kiss on my forehead. ‘Hope you’re right. The kid’s been through a lot so it might not be as easy as you think.’ I let my petite fingers travel up his chest until a single finger lingered on his chin. ‘No faith in me huh?’

He chuckled and surprised me as his broad hands caught my waist and pulled me into him. ‘I never said I didn’t have faith in you. I’m just stating the possibility that you might not be able to handle this.’

His hair was looking so messy and cute at the moment, his eyes a deep-sea of mystery, that I didn’t even focus on the words leaving his mouth. I had Dan. I finally had Dan.

-And-

I felt like the luckiest girl in the world.

‘Taylor, are you listening to me?’

If it weren’t for the fact that Dan had raised a single eyebrow, breaking the fixated trance I had on his face, he would have never gotten an answer from me. ‘Oh... um sorry, I was just...’ A blush leaked onto my face and Dan smiled broadly.

‘Get back to the kid. He needs you.’

I nodded and moved away from him only to be pulled back. ‘A kiss for the night?’ he asked slyly.

‘You read my mind,’ I retorted, tilting my face upward.

‘What are you doing?’

If it were possible, I probably jumped ten feet backward. Dan was barely able to catch me and steady my swaying body as a curious Timothy stared up at us. I blushed deeply and flickered in and out of visibility. Dan sighed and I had to take several deep breaths so that I could face the confused ten-year-old.

‘It was nothing Tim, do you mind if I call you Tim?’ He nodded his head yes, ‘It was nothing, I’ll be in shortly. Go unpack, you can have the bottom drawers.’

The kid couldn’t catch a hint though because he crossed his arm defiantly. ‘That didn’t look like ‘Nothing.’ It looked like he was going to kiss you... on the lips.’

If there was ever a moment to turn redder, it was then. I frowned over at Dan who actually seemed kind of amused at all of this. Whatever emotions he was sensing, they had him on the verge of cracking up.

‘I’ll catch you later Taylor,’ he chuckled, giving me a quick peck on the cheek, ‘Have fun!’

It didn’t take a genius to know that the last part was pure sarcasm.

~*~

‘So, welcome to my humble abode!’ I announced, spreading my arms wide as Timothy looked hesitantly around the room. His thick brown hair shielded any emotions his eyes were showing as he slowly took unsure steps around the space. While he got familiarized with everything, I piled a bunch of sheets, that Merry Kate had given me, on the floor and tried to make it as comfortable as possible.

‘Here’s your bed Tim, hope it’s comfy enough,’ I sighed, rising to a stand and looking over at an exploring Timothy. He happened to be standing in the same spot the eerie Bobby Shipparro had stood and it made me shiver. ‘Come on Timothy, check it out and tell me what you think.’

He made his way over to the bed, kicking off his shoes, and slipping underneath the wool blanket. He smiled a small smile, ‘It’s better than where they had met before.’

This made me frown but I quickly smothered it with a smile of my own and went over to my drawer for pajamas. ‘Where are you going?’ Timothy asked urgently, sitting up in his makeshift bed. His hair had fallen to the side giving me a good look at his scared brown eyes. Again, I felt a tingle but nothing happened.

‘It’s ok Tim, I’m not going to leave you, I’m just going to the bathroom to change.’

He didn't look convinced but nodded his head slowly and finally laid back down. He had serious abandonment issues, I noticed.

This kid would need a lot of love.

'Um... Taylor? Taylor are you awake?'

Small hands were shaking me awake as I turned over in my sleep, wiping the crud out of my eye. 'I am now,' I muttered, trying to peer through the darkness. For a second my eyes went wide when I saw a boy at the edge of my bed. The first thing that came to my mind was Bobby Shipparro. Then, I remembered that I had taken in a ten-year-old named Timothy.

'Tim is everything okay?' I whispered.

He seemed hesitant. 'I just- I kind of can't sleep and I was wondering if I could probably sleep at the end of your bed or maybe-'

'Come on in Tim-my-boy,' I mumbled, lifting the covers and scooting over a little. Tim seemed about ready to protest, but soon he was crawling under the covers. I lowered the comforter and tucked him in nice and tight. I could feel him smiling in the darkness.

'Sorry I woke you up,' he whispered, guilt lacing his words.

'It's ok, you were scared and that's understandable,' I whispered back, ruffling his hair.

'I wasn't scared I just said I couldn't sleep,' he seemed to have to clarify.

'Sure,' I murmured, my eyes drifting to a close. Whatever he said afterward was lost to my ears. Sleep took hold once again.

~*~

'Tim?' I shot up in my bed and looked around the now sunlit room.

Something in my head woke me up saying 'you've got a kid to look after! Can't sleep in late!' Rubbing my eyes, I looked over to the empty spot next to me in bed and opened them wider. There was supposed to be a ten-year-old boy in that exact spot.

I began to panic.

‘Tim?’ I called again, stumbling out of the bed and heading for the bathroom door. ‘Timothy?’ I thought that maybe he went to use the bathroom, knowing kids and their weak bladders. Yet when I knocked on the door and went as far as peeking inside there was no one in there - at all.

Pushing the bathroom door all the way open, I hobbled inside because of my sleeping foot and began brushing my teeth. I needed to find the kid before Merry Kate found him hanging out with some hungover telematic blond.

I quickly swept my hair up into a ponytail, pulled on a cotton grey shirt and some faded blue skinnies. Dashing out of my door, I ran down the stairs at the end of the hall and looked around at the trashed lobby area. There were plastic cups everywhere. I even saw a few people crashed out on some of the couches.

This place didn’t go one night without a party.

Suddenly, I heard chuckling and giggling coming from the kitchen and jogged towards it, pushing open the swinging whitewashed door. ‘Tim!’ I called, face flushed. The door swung shut behind me as I looked across the granite island to see Dan wearing a floury apron and Tim mixing a batter of something gooey.

‘Hi Taylor, we’re making pancakes,’ Timothy said calmly, flour all in his thick brown hair. ‘Dan says he can’t really make pancakes all that good because he can’t see well so he asked me to help him.’

I blinked twice, three times, before walking slowly over to them.

‘But you should have told me where you were going.’

Dan’s murky blue eyes moved towards the sound of my voice, his mouth smiling. ‘Sorry we didn’t wake you up Taylor, you just looked really tired and Tim had been- up for a while. He said he was bored and hungry- so-o, I asked him if he wanted to help me make pancakes.’

I suddenly felt guilty. The poor kid was up for forever and I just slept away. My cheeks flushed red. Dan made his way to Tim and planted a soft kiss on my cheek. ‘It’s okay,’ he whispered in my ear, ‘you don’t have to feel guilty, it’s your first day on the job.’

‘Hey Dan, can I pour it into the pan now?’ Tim spoke up, his hair moving aside enough for me to see his eyes brighter than ever. To see him happy.

‘Sure,’ answered Dan, ‘Just be a careful buddy.’

I watched them as they talked with each other and couldn’t help smiling. The way they were talking was like they’ve known each other for a long time. I knew that Dan, no matter how blind he was, could make his own pancakes. But the fact that he made Tim feel needed was just plain cute to me. As Tim concentrated on pouring the batter into the pan, I planted a quick kiss on Dan’s soft lips. ‘You’re the best,’ I whispered.

~*~

‘Finally, you brought the little booger in,’ Merry-Kate murmured to the clear vile she was holding up to the light as me, Dan and Tim walked in. She looked like a mad scientist with a long white coat, blood-red hair in pigtails, and that crazy smirk on her face.

We had walked into a stark white lab I didn’t even know The Colony had. Tim went to touch a bubbling vile but I gently smacked his hand away. ‘We got your message from Adrienne,’ spoke up Dan, his body rigid with all the chemicals flowing through the air. All of the different smells were probably making his senses whirl.

‘Yes, and you couldn’t have been any slower, could you?’ The feisty red-head snarled, only a slight playfulness in her voice. She was definitely serious about that vile in her hand.

Merry-Kate turned to them and snapped a big pair of goggles off of her head. Placing the vile down gently, she began delicately taking off thick blue latex gloves. ‘Is that the cure for the shots?’ I spoke up, unable to contain my curiosity.

Merry shrugged and wiped the beads of sweat from her forehead.

‘Who knows? I’ve been in here with my little lab geeks all night and this little vile of blue stuff is all we’ve got so far.’ It wasn’t until then that I noticed her red-rimmed eyes.

‘You’ve been here all night?’ Tim’s small voice spoke up, the question dying down to a whisper as Merry-Kate’s blue eyes fell on him.

‘Yes,’ she answered simply, ‘Told the lab rats to leave around midnight, but I just couldn’t go yet. Every serum we came up with led to another breakthrough. Then I was finally met with this and I think it might be a dead end. I can’t find the missing link.’

‘Have you tried it yet?’ I asked earnestly, my hands resting on Tim’s shoulders. That’s when I saw Merry-Kate’s eyes land on his floppy brown head and knew what she was thinking. ‘I see. So that’s why you called us down here.’ It wasn’t a question, more of a statement, and Merry let her glossed mouth coil into a smirk.

‘There’s no other way. Unless you know how to give guinea pigs powers so that I can give them the shot and then this serum then we’re out of luck.’

I looked over to a weary Dan. Timothy grew stiff under my touch, sensing what was going on. The only thing that was running through my head was the many side effects that were possible when it came to an unmarked vile. I only had the kid for one day and already I was putting him in possible danger.

Suddenly, I felt warm broad hands taking my small ones off of Tim’s shoulders. I looked behind me up into Lane’s blank stare as he said,

‘We’ve got to do what’s best for The Colony.’

MISSED ME...?

Continued:

This was normal...

Merry Kate told us that the serum would induce Timothy into a sleepy state. So then why was I worrying so much?

‘You should head back to your room Taylor,’ Dan leaned down to whisper in my ear. It was getting late and I hadn’t left Tim’s side since he fell asleep. ‘Merry said that he has to sleep in the lab so that she can keep track of his vitals. She’ll look out for him. You need sleep.’

I sighed, squeezing Timothy’s small hand before letting go. What if he woke up, expecting me to be by his side, and found no one?

‘Fine,’ I muttered, pushing out of the seat and facing a standing Dan. His own pale eyes were beginning to grow bags under them as well. He refused to leave my side just as much as I refused to leave Tim’s.

We began the short distance back to my room and I was again reminded of how annoying Dan's abilities could be. 'Don't worry Taylor,' he said, grabbing my hand. 'Tim's a tough kid. His vitals were stable so there's nothing to be scared about.'

I rolled my eyes, trying and failing to pull my hand free. 'Who said I was scared?'

Dan chuckled and somehow managed to pull me closer. He kept his arms around me the whole way to my room. 'Are you mad- at me?' He asked suddenly, as we stopped by my door.

I looked up at him, in all of his glory, a little surprised at the abruptness of his question. Though he annoyed me sometimes with his keen sense of emotions, I wasn't feeling any amount of anger towards Dan. In fact, I was finally starting to see him as... my boyfriend.

'Why do you ask?'

At that, Dan's wondering gaze locked onto my face with scary accuracy. 'Because of what I said yesterday,' he replied earnestly. 'I basically told you that the Colony was more important than Timothy and I didn't have the right to-'

Dan's next words were never heard as I stood on my tip-toes to reach his lips. They were hesitant and startled, but a few seconds later they were pressing back. 'I'm not mad at you,' I whispered, leaning away from his mouth. 'Worried, but definitely not angry.'

Dan's hands caressed my face as he pushed away hair that was hindering him from feeling every inch. 'Don't be,' he smiled, and kissed my forehead.

Sighing, I grabbed his hands and lowered them from my face. 'I better get to bed now. I want to be able to wake up bright and early just in case Tim wakes up to no one.'

Dan nodded- 'Right.' His eyes wandered once again.

'Goodnight,' I whispered, letting go of his hand. 'Remember I'm not mad.'

Dan chuckled. 'I know,' he whispered back, watching as I opened my door. 'If you need me you know where to find me.'

I smiled. 'Always.'

~*~

‘What do you mean he still hasn’t woken up yet?!’

Merry Kate gave me a stern look and placed a ruby nail on her lip. ‘Quiet!’ she whispered harshly. ‘If you startle him out of his sleep his heart rate might spike!’

I huffed, crossing my arms stubbornly. Dan, Merry Kate and I were all standing outside of the lab. There was a sleeping Timothy inside with Blue liquid racing through his veins, and he still wasn’t up.

Dan took my hand. ‘Everything’s going to be ok, Taylor.’

‘Listen to your boyfriend,’ Merry Kate snapped, causing me to turn red and flicker in and out of visibility. ‘Tim’s body needs rest. His whole DNA structure is being repaired and that takes time. His immune system will be down for a while.’

‘Fine,’ I conceded.

Merry Kate visibly deflated and turned to the white double doors. ‘Good, now scram. I’ve got a lot of work to do and I can’t have you smothering me with your motherly instincts.’ She removed a cherry lollipop from her coat and placed it in her mouth before disappearing.

I playfully stuck out my tongue in her direction and pulled on Dan’s arm. ‘Come on,’ I announced. ‘Let’s find something to do.’

Dan followed along and placed a hand on his chin. ‘A date?’

My feet froze. ‘What was that?’

‘A date,’ he repeated, smiling slightly. ‘We haven’t really gone anywhere or done anything together since... we made up. Don’t you think a date would be nice?’

I shrugged even though he couldn’t see it. ‘I don’t know... I guess so. It’s just that...’

‘Are you afraid of going outside?’ Dan asked, detecting my hesitation.

‘No,’ I answered truthfully. My reddish-brown hair suddenly seemed so interesting.

‘Then what is it?’ He asked, ‘There’s no harm in-’

‘What are we?’ I suddenly asked. My green eyes quickly flicked to Dan to observe the shocked expression on his face. ‘I mean it seems pretty obvious, but I don’t want to delude myself. I want to hear you say it.’

Dan’s arm reached out and pulled me into him. I found my hands instinctively clutching at his shirt. ‘Taylor if having a title means that much to you then yes, we’re boyfriend and girlfriend, but does that really matter? I love you and I know you love me.’

I looked up at him, feeling slightly guilty for forcing him to explain... us.

‘Don’t feel guilty,’ Dan said, reading my feelings.

I smiled and pushed away from him. ‘Well, it’s hard when you’re always right.’ ‘It’s a date then?’ His hand reached for mine once again and we found ourselves walking towards the elevators that led to outside. Merry Kate and Dan were right. For now, Timothy was fine. If I kept worrying instead of having hope, I’d end up being the one in critical condition.

‘Let’s have fun for once... boyfriend.’

...And then the dream snapped to nothing but black like film ripping away from her and her mind, both linked together in this dreamlike state, of showing past present and further.

Taylor- ‘whoa- I feel like I just went through my most if not my whole life... in one dream... with you for this...’ She said this to Naddalin who was taking it all down in her notebook.

The way I was Remembered

Continued:

‘Small towns are funny places; everybody thinks they know everybody.’

They bought, they sold, live in fear of getting old getting cold. Life to death, it is all a myth just a wish, only to walk in the dark, to make their mark, in the life they embark.

Yet, they know what is so, nowhere to run nowhere to go, they come and go, with nothing to show. With some that are high and some low. However, they always know narrow minds never change, only to rearrange, in the exchange.

Memories never fade, and the ones that make their lies get paid. It is all slipping away from day today. There is always someone with something to say. Whatever come whatever may, it is just another day... in a small town, with dreams going in the ground, with only names on rocks to be found.

Were one person runs it all and is crowned, we dance like fools we are her clowns. That's just life bowing down to a small town, it is just the words going around. With so much doom and gloom, I suppressed that crowned witch, not on her broom.

Following behind like the moon, or busy making drama in a room.

Sounds just like me- how about you?

~Naddalin~

(Back to now, and at the weeks end before the week of the dream study.)

I was daydreaming to think there is nothing cuter than seeing your girlfriend, riding a dildo in front of you just so you can see her give her self-pleasure SEEING LOVING HER DOING JUST THAT ALSO PLEASING. I love Emmah!

‘The dream assignment was over- for the most part.’

Jinger moaned and for some moments then glanced up at her- ceiling.

‘And it looks like it’s going to rain.’

‘What’s that got to do with our homework?’ Said Emmah, her eyebrows raised.

‘Nothing,’ said Jinger at once, she ears reddening.

At five to five Naddalin bided the- other two goodbyes and set off for Scott’s office on her- the third floor. When she- knocked on the- door she would- called, ‘Come in,’ in a sugary voice. She- entered cautiously, looking around. She- had known the office under three of its previous occupants.

In the- days when Mr. Hilliard had lived there, it had been plastered in smiling portraits of herself. When Lupin had occupied it, it was likely you would meet some fascinating Dark creature in a cage or reservoir if you came to call. In the- impostor Moody’s days it had been packed with various instruments and artifacts for the- detection of doing, entertainment and disguise.

Now, however, it looked totally unrecognizable to me and them. the- surfaces had all been draped in lacy covers and cloths.

There were several vases full of dried, dead flowers, each one residing on its own doily, and on one of the- walls was a collection of ornamental plates and dishes, each decorated with a large colorized kitten all different colors with ribbons around their neck.

These were so foul that, Naddalin stared at them, gored until Professor Scott spoke again.

‘Good evening,’ Mr. Naddalin started looking around... at the wonder around her, she- had not noticed her at first sight, because she- was wearing an explicitly flowered set of robes that blended only too well with the- tablecloth on the- desk behind her.

‘Evening, Professor Scott,’ Naddalin said stiffly.

‘Well, sit down,’ she’d- said, pointing towards a small table draped in lace beside which she’d- had drawn up a straight-backed chair. A piece of blank parchment lay on the- table, apparently waiting for her to pen.

‘Er,’ said Naddalin, without moving.’ Professor Scott. Er- before we start, I- I wanted to ask you a... a favor.’

Her bulging eyes narrowed her nose.

A feeling of great gloom in the castle, Naddalin pulled she- door open.

On the- threshold stood Aunt Marge. She'd- was very like Uncle Read: large, beefy, and all shit-faced, she'd- even had a fuzziness in places you don't want fuzz-ie-ness-NESS-ness, though not as bushy as she.

In one hand, she'd- held an enormous suitcase, and tucked under the- other was old and evil-tempered, that held a beast, that was turned into just that over the fact that he was mean, nasty, and greatly to all young girls in the land- think they were not good enough for him, this was done- by one of the fallen angels- whom study dark witchcraft, 20 years ago- back or so, for not wanting her hand, like the others that were sweet and innocent young ladies, or for not going to the ball with her, was the real reason, all us girls still tease him and one another about.

Dariez came waddling down the- hall, with her blond hair plastered flat to her forehead, a bow above just visible she forgot to take out before showering- she was baring as the day she was born, show all that makes her a girl. We all slapped our hand to our forehead hard, saying she's a girl- is she not, all- it was anonymous- even if pre-pubescent.

Aunt Marge thrust the- suitcase into Naddalin's old room dragging this girl body with her, knowing she- wind up just running out, all the same, Dariez in a tight one-armed hug, rain from me, and planted a large kiss on my cheek, 5 minutes or so after being in my old room.

Naddalin knew perfectly well, that Dariez only put up with these hugs because, she knew what it was like reading about sisters, that did not get along, in her studies, and with Karly, and her past, and sure enough, when they broke apart, Dariez had note clutched fist, saying add this to your story. It said- 'I want to be one of you...'

...And Jennath!

Aunt Marge, then shouted, saying get off her and get dressed, striding past Naddalin as though she- was the coolest girl she every new, like a hero.

Aunt Marge and Aunt Jennath kissed us, in our rush, for bed, as we all dispersed the room, Dariez bumped her small jaw against, my chin, saying see yah.

Uncle Read now came in, smiling enthusiastically as he- shut the- door, saying, night kids.

(They did have their good moments I'm thought.)

...And Tea for me, Marge, they said in the nook together, in soft light, stars out the windows.
And she- said, how she loved him and all those things that sound romantic.

~*~

And the kitten can have some milk out of my saucer, here...

Then said Aunt Marge as they all proceeded into her- for a midnight snack around 3:00 a.m into the kitchen, leaving Naddalin alone in the- hall with the- suitcase, she wants to be there, for the night- remembering all that is the past.

Nevertheless, Naddalin wasn't complaining; any excuse not to be with Aunt Marge was fine by her- when she knew that she was all cuddle with him, 'yuck-ie'- she thought, so she- began to head back into the- case doorway under the stairs her spare bedroom, taken as long as she- could, peeping at them all yet trying her not too.

In her room under the stars... I think about Emmah... I start thinking about all the PDA she and I have had, I LOVE HER- we love feeling our-selves pleased by and one another pleasure well-making lust-love. (I love licking pussy.) I am rolling around, in bed nude, feeling the sheets, holding myself as if it was to her, mumbling- in the thought of my knotty... mind.

She slips her hands under her blue rob, under her see throw panties with the bow in the front, and her body spasms and slackens and she cups her small, breasts with her nipples start to point upward, in her hands and feels the hard pearls of her nipples, like tiny mysteries- long to be played with by in her mind

Emmah hand and tongue, against the barked palms of his hands.

She puts her hands under her knees and maneuvers carefully, so that her bottom rests on the edge of the bed. She slips her fingers underneath the worn elastic of her panties that are strung across the points of her hips and lower lips, she feels the slow winding down of her dying heart and can see a bluish tinge thriving on her skin of her through her thin robe, and smoothed hair, as she goes in. then, slips them to her ankles and softly draws apart her knees and feels again a watery ardor... in her eyes, she starts tearing up... It is exactly as he imagined it - the hair feeling, the lips feeling, the whole feeling - and she slips her hands under her butt after, saying- I MISS HER, now I feel gross and need a shower I's all sweaty- o-wh-a, as she looks at her hand cover in cummie.

‘I wanted to kiss her in my mind forever- though in my moment. I blocked out all thought that was not about her, what it might mean, what further mess I might create for myself... knew, And I kissed a pillow like it was her until reason seeped out through my pores, and I became a living throb with-in throbs, mindful only of what I wanted to do to her and myself if it would be her doing it... And suddenly we were crashing around the little railway carriage in my mind... and this is where my fantasy took place, all hands and lips and, oh, God, the scent and taste and feel of her. It was like tiny fireworks going off all over me, as I gushed, bits of me... looking for her to find the same way. -I- I’s enjoy her so much with we are together in lusting love and just finding a new thing to discover with each other- mind-body- and fallen soul too.’

By the- time I’s- got back to the- kitchen, Aunt Marge had been slurping up all tea should takedown, and very sleepy she could not even speak clearly, with the cat napping noisily in her- corner. Naddalin saw Aunt Jennath wince slightly as specks of tea and dribbled clean floor, from her mouth. Aunt Jennath hated animals, like our kitten Buttons, who is the cutest lovable thing ever.

Uncle Read asked, why I was tip-toeing through the kitchen- afterward, in a see-through robe- that was so sharp I don’t even know why- I’s bother putting it back on- well that what he said- anyways- why even bother when you can see it all. ‘Oh, Jeez-us...’ I said holding myself- like a girl... in a moment of shyness. I was not expecting anyone to be here at this hour.

-And-

Buttons began to snore again as Naddalin sat down, looking through her notes that she was editing for the upcoming classes- in her blue night rob. She directed Aunt Marge’s attention to Naddalin for the- first time, as she was wheezing as well, and then jolted to alertness, the lantern over there head was dancing with its flickering flame, it was an old railroad 1909 Pa. lantern that Uncle read live light to set a feel and ambiance, this one works- the one that is in my room is on that I fund next to the tracks years ago, walking the abandoned line back into the woods going north, it’s all bent and missing some glass, yet, I love it for I knew, that it was here’s- the girl from the story, and something that has been passed down through the years. ‘Sometimes, I don’t like coming back here and then, sometimes I do to remember...’

He looked at me dragging on his pipe looking far too familiar to me in my mind, yet I could not remember why- then he said: ‘I remember summer mounts were always- like this... nothing ever really changes.’ I started feeling sad, and was tearing up... I was seeing a vision of the past of what looked like grandfather, who was a railroad worker, in cast of gold replacing him, with a halo light around him in glowing lights, saying- 'don't forget about me- too,' he was in his 1920's hat that was always tilted to the one side, and that white smile, so vivid it was eerie.

-And-

So... I thought- what does it mean?

And she'd- meowed... and it snapped me out of the trance, that I was in, and still in there, are parts of you, even now, as I held a note, of his and now her too, part of life never changes there just passed on and down to new- ones just like you. So, the moral of this always that we're not that far apart in how we look act and do things, even if... 100- years of Rhetoric was spacing us apart more than me, we still all together, linked by handwritten text.

All just notes, yet have so much meaning, just a memory, of life to some would not matter to me it's everything.

-And-

(Fare of in another small village is Emmah- feeling the same ways.)

Emmah- "I am a hopeless romantic," and then I thought about that, and she said to me - 'you're not hopeless anymore, you have me, to show your sweet romantic too without the hopelessness.'

This is why... I love- Naddalin so-oo much.'

(Back)

Yes, said Naddalin of course, they have to care about me all along, even if gone.

And do not you say- 'yes' in that ungrateful tone?

I can do this... I will add to the story; I will do that... I'm well- DO- THAT!

(For a girl that knows nothing about nothing- I's sure did something!)

~*~

And It is damn good to Reading and Jennath to keep you, I thought too and them knowing all that I just did, yet I am a girl, I feel so guilty in all that I do- even feeling like a woman- not a little girl as they think, even Dariez needs to feel like a woman every now and then- more like every other day, and us seeing yet you get my drift.

Why?

Why... did I always feel guilty for feeling good?

Wouldn't have it myself any other way then this- is what makes me creative.

He said to me- 'You'd have gone straight to an orphanage if you'd been dumped on my doorstep, you- little cute fuzzball of girlie-ness, how could- I- say- no, and he was squeezing my left cheek?'

(Like- I said, there were some good moments.)

-And-

Naddalin was overflowing full, on cookies and milk, to say that she'd rather live here than back the orphanage that Kristen was once in, with the- Sleyashs she was safe and warm, but she- thought of she- Claepsiara, Skoufyceol of Wizardry form years not- stopped so they- said 'okay-' and that was your girlfriend is so-o for you to be happy then okay, sorry for what you go thought- he said. She- forced a face into a painful smile, saying thanks, I think he meant it. It was a nice long talk- in the we-eee hours in the morning.

I thought about and assumed- 'I would be happy to play with her all my life, in a way why are best of playmates, aren't we?'

I was smirk at me, in the mirror as I do to her face to face, I was standing bare! And then Aunt Marge, looked in at me and shut the door fast see my butt cheeks, and the look on my face reflecting back, in the mirror she could see Emmah the same way looking at her love stuck.

~*~

And, just like that a week went by and I was snapped back to the old train station where I was back at the school... ripped from reality...

This was happening while- Then the door to my room busted open yet again, one of the girls, that I have to share the house with- kind of like a sister yet not, that shall remain nameless- saw me just like fade into an ashy dust, and magical vague of wispieness, as I vanished before her eyes. 'Besides, I can see you haven't improved since I last saw you, is what he said to me. I hoped your mental school would knock some manners into you, that what they think- in more ways than one.'

Did not even get to say goodbye to Aunt and Uncle, who was still sipping on their tea out in the kitchen, as I was being ripped into this distortion of time, I could hear the large gulp of tea, whispers, about me and the other girls in the house yet most about me.

Good things... more than anything- yet, it made me sad.

~*~

Besides she'd- took a look and blinked- and blinked yet, once more-, and said- shit... and then went back out into the dim flickering light that's making a soft warm glow in the kitchen, where she asked if they were sending Naddalin away yet again. And if so if she was gone or not yet, and if she had a full-size poster in her room of herself, 'why do you ask me this, child?'

I think I just saw her disappear... if that was not a photo of her... it makes no sense.

-And-

St. Brutus's, said Uncle Read promptly- said 'if she not here then she is there- little one.'

And- It's a first-rate institution for hopeless cases.

-And-

I see, said Aunt Marge. Do they use these at St. Brutus's, girl, and she held up with looked like quail feather in the little hand, and a wand in the other, with a sapphire stone that was heart-shaped at the holding side? She must not have needed it or left it for- Dariez who wants so much to be just like her, she tried to snap it over her knees yet, it would not break.

'Go give it to her now then...' he said austere, as it started to glow and change color in the stone, and read her name within the crystal of the wand that was silver.

She thought it across her wood desk, to her while up in her room, in the home.

‘I remember her saying that this was not needed yet some cool to have to show your cleverness, skill, ability, and talent levels along with power, and a story for a young girl like me...’ said Dariez, and her eyes sparkling with wonder and the possibilities of phenomenon if her mind could just unlock it using magic, and this start girl wound, or become a girl that has fallen too.

-Then-

I- Dariez, was looking through, her room I was- me myself and I that is, and I wound found it- I knew that she would have one of these, I just knew it, a glass sprier small that was big for her small hands- crystal ball- that would show all my days, it leads me to find this book in the restricted parts of the abandoned town 1898 built library... that is next to caving in... I knew that I would have to go in find sneaking out late at night, tonight- looking in the glass I saw, the story of a girl, that looks all too alike to me, it was showing a very dark past of a young girl’s life, like a video- showing a hanging and bullying, of a girl that was a copy of me, it looks... yet, the question I had was- WHY? And it was saying that death was the only way out... was it me- was it... I am the girl in the glass its showing... I need to find more... and this book was it like it had a bewitching power over me I had too, it the copy. It also said I have everything I need to be a fallen angel if I believe- if I believe in the power of white magic.

Looking in the book of all her day’s past, here is something that just seemed to appear right in front of my eyes, hidden text between the lines, of the lines, on the old tattered yellowing pages, there read a line of words reviling hidden secrets of her life and home village. It was faint in color gray in the style of her gorgeous script penmanship; around the text was magical whiskers- that would glow in shades of gold- sparkly- about and around the lettering, it said as I read aloud: ‘Nevaeh hometown was the longest little town in the Earthy world, this was a clue- for those that need to know, and to see only if they should- or believed in her of was someone like her.’

-And-

Then, I looked even deeper and say a girl- it was me with white wings... blink at me, ever so sweetly- and angelic.

Er - Uncle Read nodded curtly behind Aunt Marge’s back, saying- ‘oh no- another one.’

As she ran to her room whooshing it around, saying nonconical worlds... hoping for it to do something, need like lighting her daddy- Read’s shorts a-flam, or give him two heads, or get out of chores and homework, know ideas of yet what magic could really do and how dark it could be.

And Yes, And said Naddalin, on the phone to her saying- 'shh don't say anything and next year, I can bring you here, yet a girl that is not like me-' 'BUT' she said- trying to understand her dark side deeper with curiosity in her voice, Naddalin was looking down on her and knew along she was in her old room, and again she said- 'sh-h, don't become like me- stay good, magic is more playful that way.'

-And-

Excellent... she screamed, And Aunt Marge rushed in the room thought she was being murdered. A good spanking is what this girl needs for what they thought was a good beating in her room with her things, is what's ninety-nine days out of a hundred, without TV and fun or seeing others, for being in her doing things that little girls should not. Have you been beaten by something or did you do this to yourself, look at these cuts' slashes on her like fang marks? And in this room under the steps, she was looked too just like Naddalin for being bad.

-And-

Oh, yeah, said Naddalin, she loads of times, she said this to Emmah saying this girl needs out of this environment and some girlfriends, that are normal. Unanimously she agreed.

Aunt Marge narrowed her eyes, saying- 'you bastard, you don't need to be that cruel about a little girl being a young woman.'

'Oh, is that what you call it, he said.'

'She's just a little girl...'

'She is playing around with her stuff... like that evil wand looking for sinful, that is enough, magic she calls it, I call it sick temptations, that I like the holy further would banish her to hell for, if she did not confess too, and she will not then I will look her in there with it until she sees the real evil she is looking for, as the holy further said to do.'

'She's just a little girl...' she said, throwing her hands up walking away... and like - her, I feel it not evil, and it is just magic, and even not so as you with your dirty mind - there no harm in what she is doing in there, if so-o.

‘And I still do not like your tone, little girl,’ he said, hold the holy book - that he never read yet wants to think he has, saying this is what you need to know - ‘she looked up saying - I do know it more than you - unlike you and what you think of me, I can read, and I was chosen and you were not...’

Blink - Blink, is what he did... at his child.

‘What the hell - does that mean?’ He said, slamming the door in the girl’s face.

She glanced down at the glass once more and it said - ‘TRUST -

IS FOR SMALL GIRLS AND GOD!’

Yet she trusted her...

She trusted Naddalin...

Lakemont

Naddalin - then she’d - said like - like, if you can speak of your beatings, to other or they will get worse and the mom has no say in at all its all power by the daddy, in that casual way, they clearly aren’t hitting you hard enough, to understand that, said Emmah, then Naddalin said that is why - the of why, no question in it, I am bringing her back with us next year, she can take any more of this abuse.

Both walked down all the spiral staircases, with all these pips that follow up and round to make the sounds, that leads to the vast entryway to the castle, main door - were the largest player piano, was pumping out tunes, from the 20’s made of wood, also charmed, it has glass doors and drum and things playing to the beats.

Like in the hall, as I said there is this ornate pipe organ, and in the basement, I have been down there, there all these room that looks nuts that runs it all, with air ballot’s, old belts, next to old medieval things, like more artillery then I have ever been near - nickelodeons, old cone operated fortunetelling machines, and things like that - more than - like - I have ever seen, and haunted dancing bones, on chains hanging from chain, form the accused in the past, in the dungeons rooms after room, that tunnel after pass away, all light with gas torches, drip-p-y and wet are the stone walls cold to the touch, a mass grave in one that, is restricted to girls like me even, yet I have seen.

-Then-

Jennath overlooking us- jumping into the conversation late, I'd write if I were you, I did more than that, I want you to 'please' make it clear that you approve of this little girl- along with all the other older girls, and younger to that she needs friends, love, and understanding more than anything, she's is not used to girl's, that do that, along with falling in love with the wonders of all that is magic.

Perhaps Uncle Read was worried, that Naddalin might forget their bargain; in any case, she - changed the- subject abruptly, for the little girl, she was in her mind, like a haunting eerie whisper saying- 'sh-h and stop,' this was never- ever part of the bargain to still his child away, yet she was going to do just that, it doesn't pay she thought to be a- meanie- to girls that can't stand up for themselves, over being too young- yet this girl has a voice, yet no authority yet, that will change- it well.

Have you heard the- news this morning, Marge? What about that escaped individual? Eh- more of the same she said, softly, in a low tone of voice.

As Aunt Marge started to make herself at home, with all drama of young little ones, no- longer in a rebellion anarchism to her say, and not getting along among themselves- when it was just down to the one, and the other was staying over at friends' homes within the villages, Naddalin caught herself thinking almost unrequitedly of life in dorm number four-teen without them, with her Emmah and the 4 other's, that would be in this room with her, this year duration, Naddalin made the request - very early to share a room with her- her being Emmah of course.

Uncle Read and Aunt Jennath usually encouraged the little girl to stay out of there way, in times of play and times of not, which Naddalin was only too happy to do for her using a spell to stay linked into her mind as long as she felt the need too, until the day she could getaway, and stay with them.

Aunt Marge, on the- another hand, wanted this girl under her eyes at all times, so that she'd- could boom out suggestions for the improvement, without getting slapped about, in my thought that not better than. Her dad's word was law... all this over just having some things in my room that find sinful, and her being a wondrous girl.

She'd- delighted in acquiring, her magical background with Naddalin the sooner the better, Dariez is, Naddalin even took huge pleasure in buying Dariez expensive presents while getting glaring, when they were sent back home for a home to open in front of them.

As though daring her mom and dad to ask, the girl to say- to them all why they hadn't got a present, saying I am the chosen one. She'd- also kept throwing out dark hints her studies in all that is enchanted, magical, fairy-tale and charmed, and about what made them all such unsatisfactory entities to her now.

You mustn't blame yourself for the- way the- girl turned out, Read, after all, she is so looking up to her, and we took her in after all, and she is making our children bad, with her sinful ways of looking for darkness. And If there's something rotten on the- inside of this child for the I well beat it out before she sees to doing herself, there's nothing anyone can do about it, I will punish her for this sin...!

Dariez, asked if she could have a girlfriend over for a sleepover, and if she would- stay over, for lunch on her- third day of this week if she stopped all the madness and went back to looking emotionless, Dariez thought that she was falling too them and what they wanted, when really it was all my plain, for her to back down, as I took over her mind, she has everything she needs now, with inside of her to be a brilliant magician, and then a white angel, and from there I have a feeling, yet that is only if she believes in herself- more then I believe in her- and them too.

-And-

Naddalin tried to concentrate on her food, in the large hall with the many stain glass arch windows, but her hands shook and her face was starting to burn with anger, saying this little girl can't keep going on.

Remembering the- form, she- told herself, to get them to autograph, and that it was not for her, it was giving up the welfare of Dariez, and he did- to me, I am taking her, the moron did not remember that I was brought to him from here, think about Emmah- The Claepsiara, Hayvannahol for younger girls and Skoufyceol for the older girls of both Wizardry and Fallen Ange'l's. Do not say anything, there was a whoosh- as they did a teleport spell, and they were both there... standing before them in the living room.

Do not rise, she said along with - 'I AM HERE FOR THE GIRL, TO KEEP!'

Aunt Marge reached for her glass of wine. 'It's one of the - basic rules of breeding, and she - said, to keep your child, and teach your child as you feel fit.'

'What gives you the right, after we took your filth in?'

It all played out like this to the rest of the world, yet when really, I was taking here...

Dariez- I am running- running- through the park, at night, misty fog, haunted like an amusement park, and I am at a place called Lakemont, it's somewhere in Pa, and was the place to be, for all that was cheap thrills...

I got the idea from a book I read that is called: LAKEMONT, I am standing at the top of 1902 the Lep the Deeps 60' Roller Coaster- the oldest in the world, that if you miss step you'll fall to your death, it's all wood and rickety, white and splintery, rusty chains, and old heavy wooden cars lush padded ripped of leather seats, that have not moved in years and big rusty cogs, raining hard, everything eerie having green cast, and all the light the sky is thunderbolts, see all the rides...

I walked through the hunted like- old Noah's ark- now stopped just rocked to the one side. I would say this is not what you would call holly place of fun- even if that what was intended, more like a nasty sin, the floor completely gone, had to jump from place to place; yet no one was stopping me, from doing so-o there were no signs up stopping me.

Yee- and whooping sound no longer. Yes, I could recall them in my consciousness, Noah is at the top look more sadistic than ever, most of all the cars on the Ferris wheel is rusted and just hang, on one pin.

Ah- the large carousel, that once played sweet soothing music seems to be playing in my mind as I pass the ride- seeing young faces with amusement, now most of the houses are total, entirely, fully, and wholly gone or tagged with race and slurs, or ingrates- on the eyes or the house was absolutely stabbed out.

The crock skew stands naked and eerie in the dense fog hugging low, and the right high lost color. The water park looks like a swamp, the water slides from hell, like that one at Disney, yet you would really make that jump. There are many ways, that I could kill myself on... many... the light bulbs smashed on the ride singes, chipped animal rusted, faded, yet in my mind there bright and flashing. The train sets, never to steam again... track missing in some places where it used to snack through the tree cover and over rivers, old buildings now really falling down, even if they were made to look like that before.

The whip-ride had its roof blown on in a tornado, years back.

The costar has a dibble dip, and the cars live the station from the first hill on like any before it. There is a jail over the way, where you could pretend, were they would sell Harlan, back in the days when I was just a child. 'The Rollo Costar' had killed a 3-year-old boy- and to the life of a boy, that wanted to live on like I- Dariez, the boy was sitting on a younger girl's lap, and they said, that was all they need to shut this park down forever- to never- ever- ever be opened once more.

The Swan boat's all half sunk- looking like shout ducks, in the swamp, that is yellow in color, that was a once a crystal-clear lagoon. Um- it was said the park was hexed, over the years with all the deaths, that took place here, on the rides one ride unparticular the Skyliner COSTAR. The log ride stationary forever, parts of it laying on the ground beneath. Storybook forest, looking like the bible stories from hell. The paratrooper ride is locked to the lift, rusty, red, white, and blue. The white picket wood fence is no-longer, the walkway mud.

The Caterpillar ride, I remember as a kid covering me over, and I was afraid of the dark. Along with the chair swing ride, the wooden seats gone, the metal oxidized, corroded, and eroded chains sawing in the breeze, like haunted arms- of something satanic. The trolley still sitting in the main street, street light, with cracked glass... dead trees, dark brown, with what look to be arms hanging down want to pick you up and eat you... that were beautiful at one time- all whipping willow-ies.

Falling apart like me on the inside, it all the same forgotten, all the old buildings, falling down, I saw when trespassing to get up here to my child hold happiness, and like the coaster, I am feeling the same. It is so hard to talk when you want to kill yourself, over losing a girlfriend.

That's in the air and beyond the whole shebang else of things, and it's not a mental complaint that I have, it's a physical thing like it's physically hard to open your mouth and make the words come out, and they will not.

They don't come out smooth and in unification with your brain the way normal people's words do; I don't get why, they come out in chunks as if from a crushed ice machine, like a piss snow- can you know the lemon one that no one likes, yet, if you dump like me you get for you can make up your mind on anything but the girl you can never-ever-never-ever have; you blunder on them as they gather behind your lower lip with your upper teeth.

So-o you just keep silent, hushed, and soundless, yet your brain never-ever- ever shut the fuck up.

‘Have you ever saw how on all the ads on TV, people are watching TV?’ My friend is like. ‘Pass it, child,’ my other acquaintance is like. ‘No, yo-o- yo, that’s true,’ my other - another friend is like- like- um- ah- and- uh. ‘There’s always somebody on a coach unless it’s an allergy ad and they’re in a field... blah- blah- hem and hum- poop- fart, and giggle.’

‘Or on a horse- with a creepy man looking too sexy for a man or a donkey- going He-ha- or some dip-shit biting a winey in the middle, or some re-tard-ed pig going we-eeeeee.’ This would be the year of 2019 on Earth, funny now I want a pinwheeled too. ‘Those ads are always for herpes, then the men- man, and the woman with the burning itchy feeling down under, that has- vagina-night-us.’

Amusement, and joy. ‘How do you even tell somebody you have that, and it all for crap?’ That’s Kristopher... It’s his house. ‘That must be such a weird tête-à-tête: ‘Hey, before we do this, you should know...’

‘Your moms didn’t mind last night?’ ‘Oh-ha!’

‘Girl!’

NO- NO- NO...

(One week back)

(Week back)

...Before Dariez turned 14...

Kristopher lobs a punch at her, the antagonist. Richard is small and wears jewelry, some like me think he is gay, and will not say. He once told me, Dariez, when a man puts on his first piece of jewelry, there’s no turning back, with all that is Fagg-sh, yet that is live her in the halls.

Richard shakes his wrist and turns his attention to the pot. He punches back with his hand with the big limp silver bracelet on it; it hits Kristopher’s watch, clanging. ‘Son, what you trying to do with my gold, yo?’ Balm streaks outline his light switch, and his bedsheet is pocked with black circles. There’s always a pot at Kristopher’s house; he has a room with a totally separate ventilation system and a lockable door that his parents could rent out an additional apartment.

There are stains on there, too, shimmery stains which show certain activities, that take place between Kristopher and his girlfriend. I personally for one look at them (the stains, then the duo). I’m jealous... yah- nah-some- But then again, I’m beyond jealous, more than enough- of it all.

‘Dariez?’ ‘You want?’

I’m seeing if maybe pot is the problem; maybe that’s what has come in and mugged me. I do this every so often, for a few weeks, and then I smoke a lot of pot, just to test if maybe, like the nonexistence of it is what has stolen from me. It’s passed to me, enfolded up in a concise conveyance scheme, nonetheless, I pass it on. I’m doing a trial with my brain- like have a 3-some with it.

‘You, all right?’

This should be my name. I could be a superhero: You All Right girl.

‘Ah...’ I stumble.

‘Don’t bug Dariez,’ Richard is like. ‘He’s in the Dariez zone.

He’s Dariez-ing out.’

‘Yeah.’ I move the muscles that make me smile. ‘I’m just... kinda - you know...’

Do you see how the words work? They betray your mouth and walk away.

She has big eyes... ‘Are you okay?’ Emmah asks, oh by the way that was her name. Emmah is Kristopher’s girlfriend, here on here on Earth so there is no weird of how it looks. She’s in bodily contact with Kristopher at all times Emmah I know is Bi-curious. Right now, she’s on the floor next to his leg, wrapped around her and I know that Naddalin is not liking it- by the grin she has to force on her face.

‘I’m fine,’ I tell her- about this. The blue glow of the flat-screen TV in front of us ricochets off her eyes as she turns back to it. We’re watching a nature special on the deep ocean, about a 14-year-old girl lost in a boat she made to become remember, after a boyfriend dropped her, and is eaten by sharks.

I was really engrossed in the story holding behind their backs- Emmah's hand that is behind him that were holding hands in front.

Emmahlyn

(The narration started saying-)

I am just a girl...

My age: 14-

My name is Emmahlyn Marilee,

I have been called the small girl and also just called Emmah as a nickname, yet I am just a girl, but even so-o, I had a crazy thought, and dream to be the first girl younger than a woman to do what I set off to do and at something that has never done.

There I was day after day making my ship- nothing big, yet it was what I thought was right to make this journey, I have lived mostly on the water growing up- in my home-town next to the port.

'Yes- how's it coming my day asked looking at me like I was the nuts girl.'

'Good!'- I say, not even looking up at him, to see that he was just wearing those - whole-ie underwear that- are like yellow from age wiped at the elastic. who was sipping on his coffee, he no I was doing this with or without his okay?

I remember taking a bite of my PP and J sandwich and having half of it running down my tank top, that was pink, that smalt of kiddie girl perfume. The kind that all the young girls spray too much of in the locker rooms after the Liz-bo teacher wants to look at you run laps. There goes the dog running after my sister who is 2 years young then I, and then the dog, that missed the step and hit the wall, yet I did not even look up I was working on my wooden boat for my sea trip I was going to make all by myself!

Hometown too... they- or no one was going to stop me from making my make in the world. I wanted fame! And to be the strong girl!

I battle my way off the coastline- on a clear day, there is no motor, no life jacket, no nothing just me in a small boat doing a big dream.

Yah, I am normal, this is what a girl does on her summer break...

Lost at sea in a small yeah- where I end up in one of the worst events of my life, tossing and turning over waves, I think I am going to die, 30-foot waves on I go under, and over the boat was never made to stand be crashed, and bobbing like a cork in the 5,000-foot waters of the sea.

Black is all I see, for 24 nights as I try to make it a- coursed the Pacific alone, a dumb thing I just want to see if I could do- to make history, lost at sea it's day 5 after I left the port of my small town- I have no clue what was to come- some would say it was poor planning- others say it was just dumb. I had nothing but a camera to talk to- and I did I documented my story- I was taunted by sharks- they were nipping at my feet.

Happiness, I can even think of the good thought other than the flashbacks of the life I had and let go for this trip- to become someone- when I was... somebody there- with them- I think of all them in my mind- and I get even more broken hatred adrift lost in the ocean? nothing is something I do not have at this time I feel that not seeing my mom and dad is slowly killing me more than living her bobbing in the water having sharks swimming around me just looking at me with the intent to eat.

My happiness was being home, and being with my girlfriend on the weekend, and spending time with my young boyfriend too, whom I broke up with me right before this trip, I miss - oh so much. He was everything to me... maybe that is why, I did this... to show him that I am a strong girl, and don't need him- yet right now lessons am so sure that I do.

My greatest fear is as of now, being eaten alive by them swimming around me. Not getting back home never seeing my friends and family, never doing something like homework, or reading a book or texting on my phone, things that we take for granted.

Things that you don't even think of in every day- things like being warm and dry. Things like sitting with your dad- eating like a pig and farting well looking at the TV, waterfall-like mom saying you're not nice to your sister who looks up to you those things- there. I fear everything out here in this dark water- that is so cool and become, hot as hell, the sun has my skin- pilling and red, then at night it feels like there are knives hitting all the open wounds that their sharp teeth have made on my legs and feet, passing by.

Death- I feel that I am eating my own body away, as they nibble away at it too... I see the light get odd and stranger... too. The Loneliness', is getting to me, there is no one for miles... there is not one soul to take to- and all my photo- phone- and life has washed away in the boat that is not at the bottom of the sea.

A while That is now like green from the blonde, color. My eyes are red from the saltwater running in as I have high waves crashing over my head. I know I am seeing things, that are not even there, I feel dazed.

What is the trait you most deplore in others? Him the only thing right now that I could think of hating the most right now is him... everything, I dislike the world for me ending up this way even God too... why did this big storm have to come, why did I have to sink, why? bit

Pounding the nose- hit- hit- slap- and she went off, yet getting one of my toes, the big one... I can see fragments of my little boat around me yet nothing to keep me from going under to hold on too. Um- I remember the first date we went on to a fast food place, not much of it was what he had, his mom and dad did not get- US! I NEVER HAD A ring he did not have the money- yet no looking back on slowly sucking in my saltwater then I can handle, I feel he was never- ever the real one.

Oh him- so dreamy- yet so- uncaring about me- the person, I would admire the most more than my dad would be- the boy I love- and yet also said for me to grow up, and be someone, other than a whiny little b*tch, and find someone else to love, even if... is the? Him for loving me - always him- my boyfriend for being my first... and taking me- and taking me wherever I wanted to like the mall and to school and to a football game, to the park for rides and more, or in his car for loving, and even hooking up and making out he was the one for me. With his dark hair and perfect smile, lips and face, green eyes. I was his short blonde, slim, and slender, hopping into his arms when he said when, or to jump and - I said - like 'how high,' we feed off of each- other's feeling and caring.

My greatest extravagance was going to be this and make to the other side where he would be there for me to jump into his arms- it was not even three days, and my body was not even consumed complete, by these sharks he was with: Amy Pierre- the girl that was cuter than me- and better than me in everything? He could care less that I became shark poop, and that not fun because that is true, these were my last thoughts, pin and left to float out in see in a bottle. Funny a day at the beach three weeks after they gave up looking for me his new girlfriend, read this... and freaked!

Part: 1

I am- Going-

Cr-a-zzz-y- crazy- CRAZ-YYYY!

My short life is running past me- and I can help but to have foggy thoughts of all the days in the past and thought of a life with my boyfriend that not going to have- or working, or job, or dances, or car... or sweet 16. Even babies- and that white dress! I am just treading water- eating- whatever just to sub-stain life- and keep from shriveling up... to black dust in the hot sun- too really cool 17th nights.

If a boat is close, I would star call out yet there was nothing but my cold breath echoing back in my face, to show my I WAS ALL ALONE- facing death, but then more loudly, I played myself out until I had no power left in my voice, I lost, and I was a cheerleader in school, for 2 years, the lost lonely thoughts of cold- no one is come to get you.

Trying to stay as still as possible, and while waiting, trading, yeah- no- there going to pull you under and rip you apart... I was there a new toy- the shark was my pet- should I pet it or let it eat me? - as long as the shark is not actively attacking you - and get into the boat as quickly as possible once the boat reaches you. 'This life expectancy that I have lived is full of trials with misfortunes, yet I only 14- so-o you have to capture humor whenever and wherever you can find it.' And mine was to have this... I recall the first three hours in the boat before all the lights went out it was nice and I thought, I had it in the bag. Maybe it's important to open up I people, other than a boy and some really close girlfriends- people who are right there with you, not some thousand miles away in another life. Or maybe it's something else. Maybe, I should just settle for not knowing, that I would not be for anything. Maybe it's just good to know that you're not the only one who doesn't know, what she perfect wanted.

I made the boat myself; I was something that I was most proud of... blue and white- it was made to have no power on board- just to make the 100-day journey for one cost to the other- from Norfolk to Freeport- and over the triangle. That was also called dumb- knowing the stories- of what if. 90 mph and more, with the winds... I thought this was it- I say my good buys- I have nothing but the camera to say this all too.

My current state of mind? Irrational, there goes my other leg, I feel down, and there is nothing- nothing- nothing- my mind can't take this... I shriek- yell- scream, and cry- and there is no sound- just more water coming from my eyes, and I am gushing blood and the choppy waves are now inflamed with color of ruby red, I will never feel what it's like to have a boy there either the dirty thought run in my crazing mind, that my hip was hardly hanging on the rest of me. But do you feel sorry for me- know you should not- I was over my head... from the first five moments. All over a dumb boy- and his- mean.

What do you consider the most overrated virtue? Thinking they care about me my friends are they, my friends, why did I have to do this alone, why has no one found me, these are all question asked after the first five hours into this trip, I did not plane long enough. Was there a plan not really more just a spite Victoria Secret...?

And- like a dumb girl going for something never done. Have I been a liar and a cheat? I would sneak out with the girls, and blame my sister for what I did, that being a teen... and I would play with the skittle too is that why I am her for loving myself... and say that I did not- is that God says don't, why I end up this why- he made me feel that I need to touch myself down there and I did more than six times one day it that wrong? He would get me, to do him like every other day, yet a teen girl wants more. Like I remember the first time he grabbed my boobs, oh that was so nice, now I feel that I will never feel love... again even if I do make it out- alive- I have no lower half...!

I remember last year my nose was bigger than them- I just got an ass and now a shark has come and bit it off- just my luck... I was going crazy... Always to cover for what was right, even if it was wrong it was to make sure the other person was not said. I also kissed another boy on the lips in front of him think I would get him back, is God paying me back for it now?

I was always prep type- even appearance, with the little poof on my head and wavy heavy blonde hair; everything I was a girl in high school there was nothing about me that I thought was right, I wanted it all fixed like my nose and that was done 2 years back like my teeth and when I started wearing way too much makeup to cover it all up- yet I one of the top looking girls in my class or so they said.

5 days in all I have is a- bit of wet candy bar... and I take the last bite of my favorite snake food. The boat was going under fast; my electronics have all gone. It was not long until; I say now- that not testing my work in small boat making was not up to ship shape. I could say that now...

‘There is a magnificent intensity in life that comes when we are not in control but are only reacting, living, surviving. I am not a religious man per se... but for me, to go to sea is to get a glimpse of the face of God. At sea, I have reminded of my insignificance of all men's insignificance. It is a wonderful feeling to be so humbled.’

My dilemma has given me a strange kind of wealth; I will always be remembered for the dumb a*s girl that did this... the most important kind of remembrance there is was dumb in life. You do something so dumb you be remembered, maybe that was why I tried this... he said I was that dumb, so I lived up to it! I value each moment that is not spent in pain, desperation, hunger, thirst, or loneliness.

Sometimes, I try to stop speculating about the future or what's out of my existence, and other times I just lean back and run with it because maybe it's for the best, to think of what might not have been that what could have been.

Larger days into my trip and I lost at sea, so far out in the back seat, at night, Sharks are playing with my feet- not taking bits, yet, but like rubbing me as they pass... were - ‘I’m just confused. Everything’s confusing. Everything beautiful is far away, or maybe everything far away is beautiful. It’s like how the grass is greener on the other side. Grass just looks nicer from the other side; you know? The grass where you’re standing looks like dirt with hair.’

Well anyone finds me or will I die?

‘A strange thing happens when you interview a robot. You feel an urge to be profound: to ask profound questions. I suppose it’s an inter-species thing. Although if it is, I wonder why I never try and be profound around my dog. 12:07 am lost at sea- in the green-sh blue in the drink- ‘Like a planet around a star,’ looking up, I see the shooting one and no that is my death coming.

I am weigh surrounded by a display of natural wonders, all glowing in the with the moonlight. All sparkly- In calculation, to the little ecosystem developing around me was taking skin and more of me my- and my top and underwire was taken off by me, so it would not weight me down- so-o here I am, bobbing in the drink just nude as I was with my boyfriend the first time, I have the same turn-in upside-ie- down-ie feeling in my little belie. Look down and it’s amazing all the colors and life- yet tariffing all at the same time- so wonderful and yet so unkind to me.

The acrobatic dorados perform beneath ballets of fluffy white clouds. Then the sunsets were just like the one I would sit and stare at with him making me sad and happy too. Or the time I went for ice-cream with my dad, and he gives me money for my first, bike... when I was five. Or the time, I was with my mom and sister, Gracie, walking out to the waterfall in the state park, at ten. And the time with my boy, over a table overlooking the sea- at belief restraint place that his mom paid for.

The clouds glide across the sky until they join at the horizon to form whirling, flaming sunsets that are slowly doused by nightfall. Then, as if the sun had suddenly crashed, thousands of glistening galaxies are flung out into the deep black night. There is no bigger sky country than the sea. But I cannot enjoy the incredible beauty around me. It lies beyond my grasp, taunting me. Knowing it can be stolen from me at any time, by a Dorado or shark attack or by a deflating raft, I cannot relax and appreciate it. It is beautifully surrounded by ugly fear. I write in my log that it is a view of heaven from a seat in hell.'

I was thinking of a song that I loved, an oldie from my dad's way-way back in them their days, back in the 1990's back when the dinosaurs roamed the planet and the year or so when my older sister- Kaylie was born so 1993- me I was born in 2002 and Bryan Adams - 'Please Forgive Me,' was the crap, when my sister was young, that was so-o good, I am thinking about here like crazy too. Like- that was one that I would hum to pass the time, from time to time, the pop charts, of 2015. Funny it was slated wounds- by SIA!

The person despises the most is my freaking Boyfriend, as I see the sun come up on a story day lost at sea, lightning cracking next to me, I thought, I was going to be fried... (Boom!!) In addition, the hot feeling of the wave hit my face smacking firmly. despising someone I have two in mind right now it would be him, and God- sorry to say I was never on to do that coming from my family life, of doing what was right.

The greatest love of your life would be him, silly! I feel anyways... What I loved in him- and the boys' that I liked- 'Hmm, I like a smart funny guy :) like him, I don't like him to be super serious all the time! from basically a smart clown that's laid back (: What is the quality you most like in a man? I like guys that try in school. They have to be cute and make me laugh. Also, I like guys that can carry on a conversation, and that is athletic. If you like a girl, do not talk about other girls with her, either, because that makes them think that you are not interested. I like smart, athletic kids, and they have to have good clothes! I love it when a man wears sweater vests, it's so sexy... I am lost in my last sexy thoughts' ... and also a plus is- can read and write- yet- boys today- that may be asking too much. Also, make sure you smell good!!

That's such a big turn-on.'

When and where were you happiest? I was the happiest in life, when I was rushing to his arms and he would hold me, or when the school day was at end and he was there to take me places, and working on this trip I was the hippest just or that all to die in a heartbeat, like I am having less of those too, and it's getting harder to breath. Which talent would you most like to have? My talent was swimming and being in the water like I said I have been swimming now for a week, in the middle of the sea. I would say that I have lasted longer then, I should have. Being a good lover, girlfriend, and student... also- and caring for all!

'Every time you look up at the stars, it's like opening entry of my days of the past and thinking. I could be anyone, anywhere right now. Yet, know- I am here in the Pacific... I was wonder well looking up at that star-filled sky if he was too thinking of me- I now know that not to be true.

Things, things that- I wanted to do this summer was- Camping out in the backyard with your best friend, with my sister's eleven years old friends who are mine too- a- lot of them were younger than me but still my girlfriends. driving lessons with my older sister, stopping at the edge of the city, looking up at the same stars. Walking a wooded path, kissing in the moonlight, look up and you're eleven again. Boys in a tiny town, like I did when I was ten and up, to eat candy and think of getting fat as I did then. You're in a sea-boat, and you flipped, that was me... You're staring out the back of a car. Out here where the world begins and ends, it's like nothing ever stops happening.'

'It's not a remarkable note except for one thing- doing this- and being a young girl, there is nothing to remember me by, and my name you may have forgotten, already like them. Even if the shark swims away, you're not truly safe until you're out of the water, yet that's not going to happen, now is it? Sharks may leave temporarily and then come back to continue the attack. Get back to shore or back on the boat as quickly as imaginable. If you could change one thing about yourself, it would be everything- I never like anything about me, I am 14 what can I say, that is why I did this to make me - into something, if I could I would have colored my hair maybe light brown... and use different contacts, yet that is not something that is life-changing.

SHARKS- Sometimes, they swim right up and have at it, sometimes they circle for a-while before lunging, and sometimes they sneak up from behind for a surprise attack. To be able to defend against the shark, you must know where it is, so make every effort to watch the animal, even as you're working out your escape, I try to stay calm and don't make sudden movements. When you first spot the shark, chances are it will swim away without bothering you.

You cannot out-swim a shark, so trying to sprint to safety may not be your best option, unless you're already very close to shore. It's important to keep your wits about you so you can continuously appraise the situation and figure out how to get to safety. I thought this one thought, what I consider your greatest achievement, I have never done it.

Part: 2

I love- love- love- long painted nails, in all colors, long pony tells, and my style like it- honestly, has not changed much from last year. Basic pieces are the best because you can wear them in many different ways! I would get plenty of plain t-shirts and sweaters, so you can wear them with scarves and jewelry. A basic pair of dark jeans is probably a good idea, as are leggings and maybe yoga pants. For shoes, Sperry's are really popular at my school. People are also wearing Converse, Crocs, Nikes, Uggs, and any kind of girl-ie boot! Tight jeans... and Victoria-Secret undies!

My, iPhone was my life... my most treasured possession? My favorite TV shows were? Pretty Little Liars, The Secret Life of the American Teenager... and anything on MTV, as yours where also in 2015 I am sure. If you were to die and come back as a person it would be like my sister who was perfect at everything. So, I would know how it feels to be the head girl.

All the shark, I knew a leg was now gone, I was hitting them all in- in the face and gills. Playing dead won't deter an aggressive shark. Your best bet if attacked is to make the shark see you as a strong, credible threat. Usually, a hard blow to the shark's gills, eyes or snout will cause it to retreat; these are really the only vulnerable areas on a shark.

Get into a defensive position, I thought like laying on top of the waves I did that too and go so sunburnt that when back in the water I screamed- for my mother, and that is something a girl my age never will do...

I am pretty sure most shark attacks happen all the time yet not to a girl swimming trying to stay above the chasing waves, I never gave much thought to sharks- not this for inland out even to the fact my boat would go under in a larger storm, the storm Hurricane

Patricia was a Duration May 28 - June 4 Peak intensity 145 mph (230 km / h) (1-min) 937 mbar (hPa,) I know that my mom and dad were going nuts to look at this storm, on TV knowing that I am out there yet they thought I was strong... that what matters here, they believed I could do this... yet they never go to say go by either to me. My boyfriend was quoted saying- 'That he didn't even care...'

There are many opinions out there and you should look around the internet for different sources and articles about attacks and sharks. 'The genuine understanding of one's inconsequentiality profits a calming sense of being entirely connected to the greater whole. As a tiny part of the world and humanity, I now felt more at peace, at losing life than at this moment, and yet I never- ever felt so alone.' And I went under and was eaten, never to be seen- or hear from again.

Just a girl like you at age 14- lost at sea- that was me- and how, I would be remembered!

Part: 3

-Then- Next show-

There's an octopus on the screen with giant ears, translucent, flipping through the water in the cold light of a submersible. 'Holy shit, look at that, son!' Richard is like, blowing smoke, I don't know how it got back to him previously.

I have a secret: I wish I was Dumbo the Octopus. I smile to myself. 'Scientists have good-humoredly named this specimen Dumbo,' the TV narrator says. I'd flop around down there at peace, yes oh so-o modified to freezing deep-ocean temperatures. The big concerns of my life would be what sort of bottom coating slime to feed off of, that's not so dissimilar from now, desirable I wouldn't have any natural predators; then again, I don't have any now, and that hasn't done me a whole lot of good. But it suddenly makes sense: I would like to be under the sea, like an octopus.

'I'll be back,' I say, getting up from my spot on the couch, which Scruggs, a friend who was relegated to the floor, immediately claims, slinking up in one fluid motion.

'You didn't call one-five,' he's like.

‘One-five?’ I try.

‘Too late.’

I shrug and climb over clothes and people’s legs to the beige, apartment-front-door-style door; I move through that, to the right:

Kristopher’s warm bathroom.

I spend a lot of time on them.

I have a system with bathrooms.

When I pop into Kristopher’s, I continue my normal routine of wasting time. I turn the light off first.

They are sanctuaries, public places of peace spaced throughout the world for people like me.

Then I sigh... and think about all the things I can have like her...

Then I turn around, face the door I just closed, pull down my pants, and fall on the toilet, I don’t sit; I fall like a carcass, feeling my butt quarter the rim.

Then I put my head in my hands and breathe out as I, well, ya’ know, piss.

I bury my face in my hands and wish that it could go on forever because it feels good. You do it and it’s done. It doesn’t take any effort or any planning.

I always try to enjoy it, to feel it come out, and understand that it’s my body doing something it has to do, like eating, although I’m not too good at that.

I wonder if anyone does this?

You don’t put it off. That would be really screwed up, I think. If you had such problems that you didn’t pee. Like being anorexic, except with urine. If you held it in as self-punishment.

I finish up and flush, reaching behind me, my head still down.

Then I get up and turn on the light.

(Did anyone notice I was in here in the dark? Did they see the lack of light under the crack and notice it like a roach? Did Emmah see?)

Then I look in the mirror- I do that.

I look so normal.

I look like I've always looked like I did before the fall of last year.

Dark hair and dark eyes and one snuggled tooth. Big eyebrows that meet in the middle. A long nose, sort of twisted.

Pupils that are naturally large, it's not the pot- which blends into the dark brown to make two big saucer eyes, holes in me.

Wisps of hair above my upper lip.

This is Dariez...

And- and- and I-a always looks like I am about to cry.

In a few seconds, I am going to have to go back and face the crowd.

But I can sit in the dark on the toilet a little more, can't I?

I put on the hot water and splash it on my face to feel something.

I always manage to make a trip to the bathroom to take five minutes.

I- Dariez, lived right next to the park, see and I have been trespassing in there for years.

At the school for kids like me, that feel they're going to hurt themselves...

'How're you doing kid-o?' Dr. Ross asks.

Her office has a bookshelf that runs floor to ceiling, like all shrinks' offices, and I think that is what she is yet I don't really know- I don't know much of anything if you want to know something- about me.

I- Dariez, used to not want to call them shrinks, but now that I've been through so many, I feel authorized to it. It's an adult term, and it's rude, and I'm more than the two-thirds adult and I'm pretty bad-mannered, so what the hell.

Very thick book...I don't have a whole lot of what's in there - I just have one big thing, um- but I know all about it from skimming.

There's great stuff in there. Like all shrinks' offices, anyway, it has

The Bookshelf was full of required reading. First of all, there's the DSM, the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual, which lists every kind of psychological disorder known to man- that's fun reading.

There's a disease called Ondine's Curse, in which your body loses the ability to breathe involuntarily. Can you imagine? You have to think 'breathe, breathe' all the time, or you stop breathing.

Most people who get it die.

I don't think you can find a DSM II. It came out in 1963 or something. It takes like ten years to put one out, and they're working on VI. Jeez, I could be a shrink. If the shrink is classy, she'll (mostly she'll, occasion-ally he'll) have a bunch of DSMs, because they come in different editions- III, IV, and V are the most common. Now, in addition to the DSMs, there is an assortment of specific books on psychiatric disorders, things like The Freedom from Depression Workbook; Anxiety and Panic Attacks: Their Cause and Cure, and the 7 Habits of Highly Effective People.

Always hardcover. No paperbacks in a shrink's office.

Usually, there's at least one book on childhood sexual abuse, like The Wounded Heart, and one shrink I went to catch me looking at that and said, 'That book is about child sexual abuse.'

And- I was like, 'Uh-hum?'

And she said, 'It's for folks who were abused.' And I nodded like it was over my head.

'Were you? You lost in space-'

She had a little-old-lady face, this one, with a shock of white hair, and I never-ever saw-ed her once more. What kind of question was that? Unquestionably, I wasn't ill-treated. If I were, things would be so simple. I'd have a motive for being in shrinks' offices, now is it?

I'd have an explanation and something, that I could work on.

The world wasn't going to give me something that tidy.

'I'm fine. Well, I'm not fine- I'm here.'

'Is there something wrong with that?'

'Absolutely.'

'You've been coming here for a while.'

Today she has a red sweater and red lipstick that is exactly the same red. It's as if she went to the paint store to match them up. Dr. Ross always has such amazing outfits. It's not that she's particularly sexy or beautiful; she just carves herself out well.

'I want to not have to come here.'

'Well, you're in a process. How're you doing?' This is her prompt question. The shrinks always have one prompt question. I've had ones that said 'What's up?' 'How are we?' And even- 'What's happening in the world of Dariez?' They never change. It's like their jingle.

'I didn't wake up well today.'

'Did you sleep well?'

'I slept okay.'

Maybe they're the ones who win all the money on TV. Then they have the gall to charge my mom $150 / hour. Maybe they do... They're very greedy. She looks completely stone, staring ahead. I don't know how they do this: the psych-poker face.

Psychologists should play poker.

'What happened when you woke up?'

'I was having a dream- I dream all the time, just like the park I loved as a kid, I share that too with it.'

I don't know what it was, but when I woke up, I had this awful realization that I was awake. It hit me like a brick in the groin.'

'Like a brick in the groin, I see.'
